PREFACE.

SINCE Poetry affords young persons an innocent pleasure, a taste for it, under certain limitations, should be indulged. Why should they be forbidden to expatiate, in imagination, over the flowery fields of Arcadia, in Elysium, in the Isles of the Blest, and in the Vale of Tempe? The harmless delight which they derive from Poetry, is surely sufficient to recommend an attention to it, at an age when pleasure is the chief pursuit, even if the sweets of it were not blended with utility.

If indeed pleasure were the ultimate object of Poetry, there are some who, in the rigor of austere wisdom, would maintain that the precious days of youth might be more advantageously employed than in cultivating a taste for it. To obviate their objections, it is necessary to remind them, that Poetry has ever claimed the power of conveying instruction, in the most effectual manner, by the vehicle of pleasure.

There is reason to believe that many young persons of natural genius would have given very little attention to learning of any kind, if they had been introduced to it by books appealing only to their reason and judgement, and not to their fancy. Through the pleasant paths of Poetry they have been gradually led to the heights of science: they have been allured, on first setting out, by the beauty of the scene presented to them, into a delightful land, flowing with milk and honey; where, after having been nourished like the infant at the mother's breast, they have gradually acquired strength enough to relish and digest the solidest food of philosophy.

This opinion seems to be confirmed by actual experience; for the greatest men, in every liberal and honorable profession, gave their early years to the charms of Poetry. Many of the most illustrious worthies in the church and in the state were allured to the land of learning by the song of the Muse; and they would perhaps have never entered it, if their preceptors had forbidden them to lend an ear. Of so much consequence is the study of Poetry in youth to the general advancement of learning.

And as to morals, "Poetry," in the words of Sir Philip Sydney, "doth not only show the way, but giveth so sweet a prospect of the way, as will entice any man to enter into it; nay, the Poet doth, as if your journey should be through a fair vineyard, at the very first give you a cluster of grapes, that, full of that taste, you may long to pass farther. He beginneth not with obscure definitions, but he cometh to you with words set in delightful proportion, either accompanied with, or prepared for, the well-enchanted skill of music;—and with a tale;—he cometh unto you with a tale, which holdeth children from play, and old men from the chimney corner. Even those hard-hearted evil men, who think virtue a school-name, and despise the austere admonitions of the philosopher, and feel not the inward reasons they stand upon, yet will be contented to be delighted; which is all the good fellow Poet seems to promise; and so steal to see the form of goodness; which seen they cannot but love, ere themselves be aware, as if they took a medicine of cherries."

Thus Poetry, by the gentle, yet certain method of allurements, leads both to learning and to virtue. I conclude, therefore, that under a few self-evident restrictions, it is properly addressed to all young minds, in the course of a liberal education.

It must be confessed, at the same time, that many sensible men in the world, as well as in the schools of philosophy, have objected to an early study of it. They have thought that a taste for it interfered with an attention to what they call the MAIN CHANCE. What Poet ever fined for sheriff? says Oldham. It is seldom seen that any one discovers mines of gold and silver in Parnassus, says Mr. Locke. Such ideas have predominated in the exchange and in the warehouse; and, while they continue to be confined to those places, may perhaps, in some instances, be proper and advantageous. But they ought not to operate on the mind of the well-educated gentleman, or the man of a liberal profession; and indeed there is no good reason to be given why the mercantile classes, at least of the higher order, should not amuse their leisure with any pleasures of polite literature. Nothing perhaps contributes more to liberalise their minds and prevent that narrowness which is too often the consequence of a life attached, from the earliest age, to the pursuits of lucre.

That mere men of the world object to the study of Poetry as a part of education, is not to be wondered at, when it is considered that many, from want of natural sensibility, or from long habits of inattention to every thing but sordid interest and vulgar enjoyment, are totally unfurnished with faculties for the perception of poetical beauty. But shall we deny that the cowslip and violet possess a vivid colour and sweet fragrance, because the ox who fattens in the meadow tramples over them without perceiving either their hues or their odors? The taste of mankind, from China to Peru, powerfully militates against the few and narrow-minded despisers of Poetry.

Young minds, indeed, have commonly a taste for Verse. Unseduced by the love of money, and unhacknied in the ways of vice, they are, it is true, pleased with simple nature and real fact, though unembellished; because all objects with them have the grace of novelty: but they are transported with the charms of Poetry, where the sunshine of fancy diffuses over every subject the fine gloss, the rich coloring, of beautiful imagery and language. "Nature" (to cite Sir Philip Sydney again) "never set forth the earth in so rich tapestry as divers poets have done, neither with so pleasant rivers, fruitful trees, sweet smelling flowers, nor whatsoever may make the earth more lovely. The world is a brazen world—the poets only deliver a GOLDEN; which whoever dislike, the fault is in their judgement, quite out of taste, and not in the sweet food of SWEETLY-UTTERED KNOWLEDGE."

It will be readily acknowledged, that ideas and precepts of all kinds, whether of morality or science, make a deeper impression when recommended by the vivacity, the colouring, the melody of poetical language. And what is thus deeply impressed will also long remain; for metre and rhyme naturally catch hold of the memory, as the tendrils of the vine cling round the branches of the elm.

Orpheus and Linus are recorded, in fable, to have drawn the minds of savage men to knowledge, and to have polished human nature by Poetry. And are not children in the state of nature? And is it not probable that Poetry may be the best instrument to operate on them, as it was found to be on nations in the savage state? Since, according to the mythological wisdom of the ancients, Amphion moved stones, and Orpheus brutes, by music and verse, is it not reasonable to believe, that minds which are dull, and even brutally insensible, may be penetrated, sharpened, softened, and vivified, by the warm influence of fine Poetry?

But it is really superfluous to expatiate either on the delight or the utility of Poetry. The subject has been exhausted; and, whatever a few men of little taste and feeling, or of minds entirely sordid and secular, may object, such are the charms of the Goddess, such her powerful influence over the heart of man, that she will never want voluntary votaries at her shrine. The Author of Nature has kindly implanted in man a love of Poetry, to solace him under the labours and sorrows of life. A great part of the Scriptures is poetry and verse.

The wise son of Sirach enumerates, among the most honorable of mankind, SUCH AS FOUND OUT MUSICAL TUNES, AND RECITED VERSES IN WRITING.

With respect to this Compilation, the principal subject of this Preface (but from which I have been seduced into a digression, by giving my suffrage in favour of the art I love)—if I should be asked what are its pretensions, I must freely answer that it professes nothing more than (what is evident at first sight) to be a larger Collection of English Verse, FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS, than has ever yet been published IN ONE VOLUME. The original intention was to comprise in it a great number and variety of such pieces as were already in use in schools, or which seemed proper for the use of them; such a number and variety as might furnish something satisfactory to every taste, and serve as a little Poetical Library for school-boys, precluding the inconvenience and expence of a multitude of volumes.

Such was the design of the Publication. The Editor can claim no praise beyond that of the design. The praise of ingenuity is all due to the Poets whose works have supplied the materials. What merit can there be in directing a famous and popular passage to be inserted from Shakspeare, Milton, Pope, Gray, and many others of less fame, indeed, but in great esteem, and all of allowed genius? Their own lustre pointed them out, like stars of the first magnitude in the heavens. There was no occasion for singular acuteness of vision, or for optical glasses, to discover a brightness which obtruded itself on the eye. The best pieces are usually the most popular. They are loudly recommended by the voice of Fame; and her eulogy, when long continued, becomes an infallible guidance.

Utility and innocent entertainment are the sole designs of the Editor; and if they are accomplished, he is satisfied, and cheerfully falls back into the shade of obscurity. He is confident that the Book cannot but be useful and entertaining; but he is at the same time so little inclined to boast of his work, that he is ready to confess, that almost any man willing to incur a considerable expence, and undergo a little trouble, might have furnished as good a collection.

As taste will for ever differ, some may wish to have seen in it passages from some favourite, yet obscure poet, and some also from their own works; but it was the business of the Editor of a school-book like this, not to insert scarce and curious works, such as please virtuoso readers, chiefly from their rarity, but to collect such as were publicly known and universally celebrated. The more known, the more celebrated, the better they were adapted to this Collection; which is not designed, like the lessons of some dancing-masters, for grown gentlemen, but for young learners only; and it will readily occur to every one, that what is old to men and women, may be, and for the most part must be, NEW to boys and girls receiving their education. Private judgement, in a work like this, must often give way to public. Some things are inserted in this Volume, entirely in submissive deference to public opinion; which, when general and long continued, is the best criterion of merit in the fine arts, and particularly in Poetry. Whatever was found in previous collections, which experience had pronounced proper for schools, has been freely taken and admitted: the stamp of experience gave it currency. The freedom of borrowing, it is hoped, will be pardoned, as the collectors, with whom it has been used, first set the example of it.

It is unnecessary, and perhaps might be deemed impertinent, to point out the mode of using the Collection to the best advantage. It is evident that it may be used in schools either in recitation, transcription, the exercise of the memory, or in imitation. It furnishes an abundance of models, which are the best means of exciting genius. Such Arts of Poetry as those of Gildon, Bysshe, Newbery, and their imitators, effect but little in the dry method of technical precept; and the young Poet, like the Sculptor, will improve most by working after a model. It is evident that this Collection may be usefully read at ENGLISH SCHOOLS, in the classes, just as the Latin and Greek authors are read at the grammar-schools by explaining every thing grammatically, historically, metrically, and critically, and then giving a portion to be learned by memory. The Book, it is hoped, will be particularly agreeable and useful in the private studies of the amiable young student, whose first love is the love of the Muse, and who courts her in his summer's walk, and in the solitude of his winter retreat, or at the social and domestic fire-side.

In the latter part many little pieces are admitted, mere lusus poetici, chiefly for the diversion of the student, which almost require an apology. They are, it must be confessed, no more than flowerets at the bottom of Parnassus; but it is hoped, that their admission will be approved, as they may gradually lead the scholar to ascend higher up the hill, who might have been deterred from approaching it, if he had seen nothing, in the whole prospect, but the sublime, the solemn, and the sombrous.

The reader will have no cause to complain, if, instead of Extracts, he often finds poems inserted entire. This has been done whenever it seemed consistent with the design, and could be done without injustice. In this matter, the opinion of those who must be supposed best qualified to give it, was asked and followed. The wish was to take nothing but what seemed to lie on the common, relinquished or neglected by the lord of the manor.

Though the Book is divided into Four Parts, yet the formality of regular and systematical arrangement of the component pieces, has not been observed. Such compilations as these have not unfrequently been called garlands and nosegays: but in a garland or nosegay, who would place the tulips, the lilies, the pinks, and the roses in separate compartments? In a disposition so artificial, their beauty and fragrance would be less pleasing than if they were carelessly mingled with all the ease and wildness of natural variety. I hope the analogy will hold: if not, I must throw myself in this, as I do in all other circumstances of this Publication, upon my Reader's indulgence. I expect not praise; but I confide in receiving pardon.

Perhaps the Reader will be the more inclined to extend it towards me, if I do not weary him with apologies. I will then conclude my preface with the ideas of Montaigne:—"I have here only made a nosegay of culled flowers, and have "brought nothing of my own but the thread that ties them."

POETICAL.

BOOK THE FIRST.

SACRED AND MORAL.

§ 1. An Address to the Deity. Thomson.

FATHER of light and life! Thou GOOD SUPREME!

O teach me what is good! Teach me THYSELF!
Save me from folly, vanity, and vice,
From every low pursuit! and feed my soul
With knowledge, conscious peace, and virtue
Sacred, substantial, never-fading bliss! [pure;

§ 2. Adam and Eve, in a Morning Hymn, call upon all the Parts of the Creation to join with them in extolling their common Maker.

Milton.

THESE are Thy glorious works, Parent of good,
Almighty, thine this universal frame,
Thus wondrous fair; thyself how wondrous then!
Unspeakable, who sitt'st above these Heavens
To us invisible, or dimly seen
In these thy lowest works; yet these declare
Thy goodness beyond thought, and pow'r divine.
Speak, ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
Angels; for ye behold him, and with songs
And choral symphonies, day without night,
Circle his throne rejoicing; ye in Heaven,
On Earth, join all ye creatures to extol
Him first, him last, him midst, and without end.
Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,
If better thou belong not to the dawn,
Sure pledge of day, that crown'st the smiling morn
With thy bright circlet, praise him in thy sphere,
While day arises, that sweet hour of prime.
Thou, Sun, of this great world both eye and soul,
Acknowledge him thy greater, sound his praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st.

Moon, that now meet'st the orient sun, now fly'st
With the fix'd stars, fix'd in their orb that flies,

And ye five other wand'ring fires that move
In mystic dance, not without song, resound
His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light.
Air, and ye Elements, the eldest birth
Of nature's womb, that in quaternion run
Perpetual circle, multiform; and mix
And nourish all things; let your ceaseless change
Vary to our great Maker still new praise.
Ye Mists and Exhalations that now rise
From hill or steaming lake, dusky or grey,
Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,
In honor to the world's great Author rise,
Whether to deck with clouds th' uncolor'd sky,
Or wet the thirsty earth with falling showers,
Rising or falling still advance his praise.
His praise, ye Winds, that from four quarters blow,
Breathe soft or loud; and wave your tops, ye Pines,
With every plant in sign of worship wave.
Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise.
Join voices, all ye living Souls; ye Birds,
That singing up to Heaven's gate ascend,
Bear on your wings and in your notes his praise.
Ye that in waters glide, and ye that walk
The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep;
Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
To hill or valley, fountain, or fresh shade
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise.
Hail, universal Lord! be bounteous still
To give us only good; and if the night
Have gather'd aught of evil, or conceal'd,
Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark.

§ 3. Hymn on Gratitude. Addison.

WHEN all thy mercies, O my God,
My rising soul surveys;
Transported with the view, I'm lost
In wonder, love, and praise.

O how shall words with equal warmth
 The gratitude declare
 That glows within my ravish'd heart?
 But thou canst read it there.

Thy providence my life sustain'd,
 And all my wants redress'd,
 When in the silent womb I lay,
 And hung upon the breast.

To all my weak complaints and cries
 Thy mercy lent an ear,
 Ere yet my feeble thoughts had learnt
 To form themselves in pray'r.

Unnumber'd comforts to my soul
 Thy tender care bestow'd,
 Before my infant heart conceiv'd
 From whom those comforts flow'd.

When in the slipp'ry paths of youth
 With heedless steps I ran,
 Thine arm unseen convey'd me safe,
 And led me up to man.

Through hidden dangers, toils, and deaths,
 It gently clear'd my way,
 And through the pleasing snares of vice,
 More to be fear'd than they.

When worn with sickness, oft hast thou
 With health renew'd my face,
 And when in sins and sorrows sunk,
 Reviv'd my soul with grace.

Thy bounteous hand with worldly bliss
 Has made my cup run o'er,
 And in a kind and faithful friend
 Has doubled all my store.

Ten thousand thousand precious gifts
 My daily thanks employ,
 Nor is the least a cheerful heart,
 That tastes those gifts with joy.

Through every period of my life
 Thy goodness I'll pursue;
 And after death in distant worlds
 The glorious theme renew.

When nature fails, and day and night
 Divide thy works no more,
 My ever grateful heart, O Lord,
 Thy mercy shall adore.

Through all eternity to Thee
 A joyful song I'll raise,
 For O! eternity's too short
 To utter all thy praise.

§ 4. Hymn on Providence. Addison.

THE Lord my pasture shall prepare,
 And feed me with a shepherd's care:
 His presence shall my wants supply,
 And guard me with a watchful eye;
 My noon-day walks he shall attend,
 And all my midnight hours defend.

When in the sultry glebe I faint,
 Or on the thirsty mountains pant,
 To fertile vales, and dewy meads,
 My weary wand'ring steps he leads;

Where peaceful rivers, soft and slow,
 Amid the verdant landscape flow.

Though in the paths of Death I tread,
 With gloomy horrors overspread,
 My steadfast heart shall fear no ill,
 For thou, O Lord, art with me still;
 Thy friendly crook shall give me aid,
 And guide me through the dreadful shade.

Though in a bare and rugged way,
 Through devious lonely wilds I stray,
 Thy bounty shall my pains beguile:
 The barren wilderness shall smile,
 With sudden greens and herbage crown'd;
 And streams shall murmur all around.

§ 5. Another Hymn, from the beginning of the 19th Psalm. Addison.

THE spacious firmament on high,
 With all the blue ether'ial sky,
 And spangled Heavens, a shining frame,
 Their great Original proclaim:
 Th' unwearied sun, from day to day,
 Does his Creator's pow'r display,
 And publishes to every land
 The work of an Almighty hand.

Soon as the evening shades prevail,
 The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
 And nightly to the list'ning earth,
 Repeats the story of her birth:
 Whilst all the stars that round her burn,
 And all the planets in their turn,
 Confirm the tidings as they roll,
 And spread the truth from pole to pole.

What though in solemn silence all
 Move round the dark terrestrial ball!
 What though nor real voice nor sound
 Amid their radiant orbs be found!
 In reason's ear they all rejoice,
 And utter forth a glorious voice,
 For ever singing as they shine,
 "The hand that made us is Divine."

§ 6. Another Hymn. Mrs. Rowe.

THE glorious armies of the sky
 To thee, Almighty King,
 Triumphant anthems consecrate,
 And hallelujahs sing.

But still their most exalted flights
 Fall vastly short of thee:
 How distant then must human praise
 From thy perfection be!

Yet how, my God, shall I refrain,
 When to my ravish'd sense
 Each creature every-where around
 Displays thy excellence!

The active lights that shine above,
 In their eternal dance,
 Reveal their skilful Maker's praise
 With silent elegance.

The blushes of the morn confess
 That thou art still more fair,

When in the East its beams revive,
 To gild the fields of air.
 The fragrant, the refreshing breeze
 Of ev'ry flow'ry bloom
 In balmy whispers own, from Thee
 Their pleasing odours come.
 The singing birds, the warbling winds,
 And waters murmur'ing fall,
 To praise the first Almighty Cause
 With diff'rent voices call.
 Thy num'rous works exalt thee thus,
 And shall I silent be?
 No; rather let me cease to breathe,
 Than cease from praising Thee!

§ 7. Another Hymn. Mrs. Rowe.

THOU didst, O mighty God! exist
 Ere time began its race;
 Before the ample elements
 Fill'd up the void of space:
 Before the pond'rous earthly globe
 In fluid air was stay'd,
 Before the ocean's mighty springs
 Their liquid stores display'd;
 Ere through the gloom of ancient night
 The streaks of light appear'd;
 Before the high celestial arch,
 Or starry poles were rear'd:
 Before the loud melodious spheres
 Their tuneful round begun;
 Before the shining roads of heav'n
 Were measur'd by the sun:
 Ere through the empyrean courts
 One hallelujah rung;
 Or to their harps the sons of light
 Ecstatic anthems sung:
 Ere men ador'd, or angels knew,
 Or prais'd thy wondrous name;
 Thy bliss, O sacred Spring of life!
 Thy glory, was the same.
 And when the pillars of the world
 With sudden ruin break,
 And all this vast and goodly frame
 Sinks in the mighty wreck;
 When from her orb the moon shall start,
 Th' astonish'd sun roll back,
 And all the trembling starry lamps
 Their ancient course forsake;
 For ever permanent and fix'd,
 From agitation free,
 Unchang'd in everlasting years,
 Shall thy existence be.

§ 8. Another Hymn, from Psalm 148th. Ogilvie.

BEGIN, my soul, th' exalted lay!
 Let each enraptur'd thought obey,
 And praise the Almighty's name:
 Lo! heaven and earth, and seas and skies,
 In one melodious concert rise,
 To swell th' inspiring theme.

Ye fields of light, celestial plains,
 Where gay transporting beauty reign,
 Ye scenes divinely fair!
 Your Maker's wondrous pow'r proclaim,
 Tell how he form'd your shining frame,
 And breath'd the fluid air.

Ye angels, catch the thrilling sound!
 While all th' adoring thrones around
 His boundless mercy sing:
 Let ev'ry list'ning saint above
 Wake all the tuneful soul of love,
 And touch the sweetest string.

Join, ye loud spheres, the vocal choir;
 Thou dazzling orb of liquid fire,
 The mighty chorus aid:
 Soon as grey ev'ning gilds the plain,
 Thou, moon, protract the melting strain,
 And praise him in the shade.

Thou heav'n of heav'ns, his vast abode,
 Ye clouds, proclaim your forming God,
 Who call'd yon worlds from night:
 "Ye shades, dispel!"—th' Eternal said:
 At once th' involving darkness fled,
 And nature sprung to light.

Whate'er a blooming world contains,
 That wings the air, that skims the plains,
 United praise bestow:
 Ye dragons, sound his awful name
 To heav'n aloud: and roar acclaim,
 Ye swelling deeps below:

Let every element rejoice:
 Ye thunders, burst with awful voice
 To him who bids you roll;
 His praise in softer notes declare,
 Each whispering breeze of yielding air,
 And breathe it to the soul.

To him, ye graceful cedars, bow;
 Ye tow'ring mountains, bending low,
 Your great Creator own;
 Tell, when affrighted nature shook,
 How Sinai kindled at his look,
 And trembled at his frown.

Ye flocks that haunt the humble vale,
 Ye insects flutt'ring on the gale,
 In mutual concourse rise;
 Crop the gay rose's vermeil bloom,
 And waft its spoils, a sweet perfume,
 In incense to the skies.

Wake, all ye mounting tribes, and sing;
 Ye plummy warblers of the spring,
 Harmonious anthems raise
 To him who shap'd your finer mould,
 Who tipp'd your glitt'ring wings with gold,
 And tun'd your voice to praise.

Let man by nobler passions sway'd,
 The feeling heart, the judging head,
 In heav'nly praise employ;
 Spread his tremendous name around,
 Till heav'n's broad arch rings back the sound,
 The gen'ral burst of joy.

Ye whom the charms of grandeur please,
Nurs'd on the downy lap of ease,
Fall prostrate at his throne :
Ye princes, rulers, all adore ;
Praise him, ye kings, who makes your pow'r
An image of his own.

Ye fair, by nature form'd to move,
O praise th' eternal Source of love,
With youth's enlivening fire :
Let age take up the tuneful lay,
Sigh his bless'd name—then soar away,
And ask an angel's lyre.

§ 9. Psalm 4th. Merrick.

DEFENDER of my rightful cause,
While anguish from my bosom draws
The deep-felt sigh, the ceaseless pray'r,
O make thy servant still thy care.
That aid, which oft my griefs has heal'd,
To aid again, entreated, yield.
How long, ye sons of pride, how long
Shall falsehood arm your impious tongue,
And erring rage your breast inflame,
My pow'r to thwart, my acts defame ?
To God my heart shall vent its woe,
Who, prompt his blessings to bestow
On each whose breast has learn'd his fear,
Bows to my plaint the willing ear.
Him wouldst thou please? With rev'rend awe
Observe the dictates of his law :
In secret on thy couch reclin'd
Search to its depth thy restless mind,
Till hush'd to peace the tumult lie,
And wrath and strife within thee die.
With purest gifts approach his shrine,
And safe to Him thy care resign.
I hear a hopeless train demand,
“Where's now the wish'd Deliv'rer's hand?”
Do Thou, my God, do Thou reply,
And let thy presence from on high
In full effusion o'er our head,
Its all-enlivening influence shed.
What joy my conscious heart o'erflows !
Not such the exulting lab'rer knows,
When to his long expecting eyes
The vintage and the harvests rise,
And, shadowing wide the cultur'd soil,
With full requital crown his toil.
My weary eyes in sleep I close,
My limbs, secure, to rest compose ;
For Thou, great God, shalt screen my head,
And plant a guard around my bed.

§ 10. Psalm 5th. Merrick.

THE words that from my lips proceed,
My thoughts (for Thou those thoughts canst
My God, my King, attentive weigh, [read),
And hear, O hear me, when I pray.
With earliest zeal, with wakeful care,
To Thee my soul shall pour its pray'r,
And, ere the dawn has streak'd the sky,
To Thee direct its longing eye :
To Thee, whom nought obscur'd by stain
Can please ; whose doors to feet profane

Inexorable stand ; whose law
Offenders from thy sight shall awe.
Let each whose tongue to lies is turn'd,
Who lessons of deceit has learn'd,
Or thirsts a brother's blood to shed,
Thy hate and heaviest vengeance dread.
But I, whose hope thy Love supports,
(How great that Love!) will tread thy courts,
My knees in lowliest reverence bend,
And tow'rd thy shrine my hands extend.
Do thou, just God, my path prepare,
And guard me from each hostile snare ;
O lend me thy conducting ray,
And level to my steps thy way.
Behold me by a troop inclos'd,
Of falsehood and of guilt compos'd :
Their throat a sepulchre displays,
Deep, wide, insatiate ; in their praise
Lurks flatt'ry, and with specious art
Belies the purpose of their heart.
O let the mischiefs they intend
Retorted on themselves descend,
And let thy wrath correct their sin,
Whose hearts thy mercy fails to win.
May all whose trust on Thee is placed,
Peace and delight perpetual taste,
Sav'd by thy care, in songs of joy
Their ever grateful voice employ,
And share the gifts on those bestow'd,
Who love the name of Jacob's God.
To each who bears a guiltless heart,
Thy grace its blessings shall impart ;
Strong as the brazen shield, thy aid
Around him casts its cov'ring shade.

§ 11. Psalm 6th. Merrick.

O SPARE me, Lord, nor o'er my head
The fulness of thy vengeance shed.
With pitying eye my weakness view,
Heal my vex'd soul, my strength renew ;
And O, if yet my sins demand
The wise corrections of thy hand,
Yet give my pains their bounds to know,
And fix a period to my woe.
Return, great God, return, and save
Thy servant from the greedy grave.
Shall Death's long-silent tongue, O say,
The records of thy pow'r display,
Or pale Corruption's startled ear,
Thy praise within its prison hear?
By languor, grief, and care oppress,
With groans perpetual heaves my breast,
And tears, in large profusion shed,
Incessant lave my sleepless bed.
My life, though yet in mid career,
Beholds the winter of its year,
(While clouds of grief around me roll,
And hostile storms invade my soul.)
Relentless from my cheek each trace
Of youth and blooming health erase,
And spread before my wasting sight
The shades of all-obscuring night.
Hence, ye profane: My Saviour hears;
While yet I speak, he wipes my tears,

Accepts my pray'r, and bids each foe
With shame their vain attempts forego,
And, struck with horror from on high,
In wild disorder backward fly.

§ 12. Psalm 8th. Merrick.

IMMORTAL King! through Earth's wide frame
How great thy honor, praise, and name!
Whose reign o'er distant worlds extends,
Whose glory, heav'n's vast height transcends.
From infants thou canst strength upraise,
And form their lisping tongues to praise:
By these the vengeance-breathing Foe
Thy mightier terrors taught to know,
In mute astonishment shall stand,
And bow beneath thy conqu'ring hand,
When, rapt in thought, with wakeful eye
I view the wonders of the sky,
Whose frame thy fingers o'er our head
In rich magnificence have spread;
The silent Moon, with waxing horn,
Along th' ethereal region borne;
The stars with vivid lustre crown'd,
That nightly walk their destin'd round.
Lord! What is Man, that in thy care
His humble lot should find a share;
Or what the Son of Man, that Thou
Thus to his wants thy ear shouldst bow?
His rank awhile, by thy decree,
Th' Angelic Tribes beneath them see,
Till round him thy imparted rays
With unextinguish'd glory blaze.
Subjected to his feet by Thee,
To him all Nature bows the knee;
The beasts in him their Lord behold;
The grazing herd, the bleating fold,
The savage race, a countless train,
That range at large th' extended plain,
The fowls, of various wing, that fly
O'er the vast desert of the sky,
And all the wat'ry tribes, that glide
Through paths to human sight deny'd.
Immortal King! through Earth's wide frame,
How great thy honor, praise, and name!

§ 13. Psalm 23d. Merrick.

Lo, my shepherd's hand divine!
Want shall never more be mine.
In a pasture fair and large
He shall feed his happy charge,
And my couch with tenderest care
'Midst the springing grass prepare.
When I faint with summer's heat,
He shall lead my weary feet
To the streams that still and slow
Through the verdant meadow flow,
He my soul anew shall frame,
And, his mercy to proclaim,
When through devious paths I stray,
Teach my steps the better way.
Though the dreary vale I tread
By the shades of death o'erspread;
There I walk from terror free,
While my ev'ry wish I see

By thy rod and staff supplied;
This my guard, and that my guide.
While my foes are gazing on,
Thou thy favoring care hast shown:
Thou my plenteous board hast spread;
Thou with oil refresh'd my head;
Fill'd by thee my cup o'erflows;
For thy love no limit knows.
Constant, to my latest end,
This my footsteps shall attend,
And shall bid thy hallow'd dome
Yield me an eternal home.

1.
THE festal Morn, my God, is come,
That calls me to thy honor'd Dome
Thy presence to adore:
My feet the summons shall attend,
With willing steps thy Courts ascend,
And tread the hallow'd floor.
2.
Ev'n now to our transported eyes
Fair Sion's tow'rs in prospect rise;
Within her gates we stand,
And, lost in wonder and delight,
Behold her happy Sons unite
In friendship's firmest band.
3.
Hither from Judah's utmost end
The Heav'n-protected Tribes ascend;
Their off'rings hither bring:
Here, eager to attest their joy,
In hymns of praise their tongues employ,
And hail th' immortal King.
By his Command impell'd, to Her
Contending Crowds their cause refer;
While Princes, from her Throne,
With equal doom, th' unerring Law
Dispense, who boast their birth to draw
From Jesse's favor'd Son.
5.
Be Peace by Each implor'd on thee,
O Salem, while with bended knee
To Jacob's God we pray;
How blest, who calls himself thy Friend!
Success his labour shall attend,
And safety guard his way.
6.
O mayst thou, free from hostile fear,
Nor the loud voice of tumult hear,
Nor war's wild wastes deplore:
May plenty nigh thee take her stand,
And in thy courts with lavish hand
Distribute all her store.
7.
Seat of my Friends and Brethren, hail!
How can my tongue, O Salem, fail
To bless thy lov'd abode?
How cease the zeal that in me glows
Thy good to seek, whose walls inclose
The mansion of my God?

§ 15. An Hymn to the Supreme Being. An Imitation of the 104th Psalm. Blacklock.

*Quid prius dicam solitis Parentis
Laudibus? qui res hominum ac deorum,
Qui mare et terras, variisque mundum
Temperat horis?* Hor.

ARISE, my soul! on wings seraphic rise!
And praise th' almighty Sov'reign of the skies;
In whom alone essential glory shines,
Which not the heav'n of heav'ns, nor boundless space confines.

When darkness ruled with universal sway,
He spoke, and kindled up the blaze of day;
First, fairest offspring of th' omnific word!
Which like a garment cloth'd its sov'reign Lord.
On liquid air he bade the columns rise,
That prop the starry concave of the skies;
Diffus'd the blue expanse from pole to pole,
And spread circumfluent æther round the whole.

Soon as he bids impetuous tempests fly,
To wing his sounding chariot through the sky.
Impetuous tempests the command obey,
Sustain his flight, and sweep th' aerial way.
Fraught with his mandates, from the realms on Unnumber'd hosts of radiant heralds fly [high,
From orb to orb, with progress unconfined,
As lightning swift, resistless as the wind.

In ambient air this pond'rous ball he hung,
And bade its centre rest for ever strong;
Heav'n, air, and sea, with all their storms in vain
Assault the basis of the firm machine.
At thy Almighty voice old Ocean raves,
Wakes all his force, and gathers all his waves;
Nature lies mantled in a wat'ry robe,
And shoreless billows revel round the globe:
O'er highest hills the higher surges rise,
Mix with the clouds, and meet the fluid skies.
But when in thunder the rebuke was giv'n,
That shook th' eternal firmament of heav'n;
The grand rebuke th' affrighted waves obey,
And in confusion scour their uncouth way;
And posting rapid to the place decreed, [mead.
Wind down the hills, and sweep the humble
Reluctant in their bounds the waves subside;
The bounds, impervious to the lashing tide,
Restrain its rage; whilst, with incessant roar,
It shakes the caverns, and assaults the shore.

By him, from mountains cloth'd in lucid snow,
Through fertile vales the mazy rivers flow.

Here the wild horse, unconscious of the rein,
That revels boundless o'er the wide champaign,
Imbibes the silver surge, with heat oppress'd,
To cool the fever of his glowing breast.

Here rising boughs, adorn'd with summer's
pride,
Project their waving umbrage o'er the tide;
While, gently perching on the leafy spray,
Each feather'd warbler tunes his various lay:
And, while thy praise they symphonise around,
Creation echoes to the grateful sound.
Wide o'er the heavens the various bow he bends,
Its tinctures brighten, and its arch extends:

At the glad sign the airy conduits flow,
Softens the hills, and cheer the meads below:
By genial fervor and prolific rain,
Swift vegetation clothes the smiling plain:
Nature, profusely good, with bliss o'erflows,
And still is pregnant, though she still bestows.

Here verdant pastures wide extended lie,
And yield the grazing herd exuberant supply.
Luxuriant waving in the wanton air,
Here golden grain rewards the peasant's care:
Here vines mature with fresh carnation glow,
And heav'n above diffuses heav'n below.
Erect and tall here mountain cedars rise,
Wave in the starry vault, and emulate the skies.
Here the wing'd crowd, that skim the yielding
With artful toil their little domes prepare; [air,
Here hatch their tender young, and nurse the -rising care.

Up the steep hill ascends the nimble doe,
While timid coney scours the plains below,
Or in the pendent rock elude the scenting foe.

He bade the silver majesty of night
Revolve her circles, and increase her light;
Assign'd a province to each rolling sphere,
And taught the sun to regulate the year.
At his command, wide hov'ring o'er the plain,
Primeval night resumes her gloomy reign:
Then from their dens, impatient of delay,
The savage monsters bend their speedy way,
Howl through the spacious waste, and chase their frightened prey.

Here stalks the shaggy monarch of the wood,
Taught from thy providence to ask his food!
To thee, O Father, to thy bounteous skies,
He rears his mane, and rolls his glaring eyes:
He roars; the desert trembles wide around,
And repercussive hills repeat the sound.

Now orient gems the eastern skies adorn,
And joyful nature hails the op'ning morn:
The rovers, conscious of approaching day,
Fly to their shelters, and forget their prey.
Laborious man, with moderate slumber blest,
Springs cheerful to his toil from downy rest;
Till grateful evening, with her argent train,
Bid labour cease, and ease the weary swain.

"Hail sov'reign goodness! all-productive
On all thy works thyself inscrib'd we find: [mind!
How various all, how variously endow'd,
How great their number; and each part how good!

How perfect then must the great Parent shine,
Who with one act of energy divine
Laid the vast plain, and finish'd the design!"

Where'er the pleasing search my thoughts pursue,

Unbounded goodness rises to my view;
Nor does our world alone its influence share;
Exhaustless bounty and unwearied care
Extends through all th' infinitude of space,
And circles nature with a kind embrace.

The azure kingdoms of the deep below,
Thy pow'r, thy wisdom, and thy goodness show.
Here multitudes of various beings stray,
Crowd the profound, or on the surface play:

Tall navies here their doubtful way explore,
 And ev'ry product waft from shore to shore;
 Hence meagre want expell'd and sanguine strife,
 For the mild charms of cultivated life;
 Hence social union spreads from soul to soul,
 And India joins in friendship with the pole.
 Here the huge potent of the scaly train
 Enormous sails incumbent o'er the main,
 An animated isle! and, in his way,
 Dashes to heaven's blue arch the foamy sea;
 When skies and ocean mingle storm and flame,
 Portending instant wreck to nature's frame,
 Pleas'd in the scene, he mocks, with conscious
 pride,

The volley'd lightning, and the surging tide;
 And while the wrathful elements engage,
 Foments with horrid sport the tempest's rage.
 All these thy watchful providence supplies,
 To thee alone they turn their waiting eyes;
 For them thou open'st thy exhaustless store,
 Till the capacious wish can grasp no more.

But, if one moment thou thy face should'st
 Thy glory clouded, or thy smiles deny'd, [hide,
 Then widow'd nature veils her mournful eyes,
 And vents her grief in universal cries:
 Then gloomy death, with all his meagre train,
 Wide o'er the nations spreads his dismal reign;
 Sea, earth, and air, the boundless ravage mourn,
 And all their hosts to native dust return.

But when again thy glory is display'd,
 Reviv'd creation lifts her cheerful head;
 New rising forms thy potent smiles obey,
 And life rekindles at the genial ray;
 United thanks replenish'd nature pays,
 And heav'n and earth resound their Maker's
 praise.

When time shall in eternity be lost,
 And hoary nature languish into dust,
 For ever young, thy glory shall remain,
 Vast as thy being, endless as thy reign.
 Thou from the regions of eternal day,
 View'st all thy works at one immense survey;
 Pleas'd thou behold'st the whole propensely tend
 To perfect happiness, its glorious end.

If thou to earth but turn thy wrathful eyes,
 Her basis trembles, and her offspring dies:
 Thou smit'st the hills, and at th' Almighty blow
 Their summits kindle, and their inwards glow.

While this immortal spark off heav'nly flame
 Distends my breast and animates my frame:
 To thee my ardent praises shall be borne
 On the first breeze that wakes the blushing morn;
 The latest star shall hear the pleasing sound,
 And nature in full choir shall join around.
 When full of thee my soul excursive flies
 Through earth, air, ocean, or thy regal skies,
 From world to world new wonders still I find,
 And all the Godhead flashes on my mind;
 When wing'd with whirlwinds, vices shall take its
 To the deep bosom of eternal night, [flight
 To thee my soul shall endless praises pay:
 Join, men and angels, join th' exalted lay!

§ 16. Another Hymn. Anon.

How are thy servants blest, O Lord!
 How sure is their defence!
 Eternal wisdom is their guide,
 Their help omnipotence.

In foreign realms, and lands remote,
 Supported by thy care,
 Through burning climes I pass'd unhurt,
 And breath'd in tainted air.

Thy mercy sweeten'd every soil
 Made every region please;
 The hoary Alpine hills it warmed,
 And smooth'd the Tyrrhene seas.

Think, O my soul, devoutly think,
 How with affrighted eyes
 Thou saw'st the wide extended deep
 In all its horrors rise!

Confusion dwelt in ev'ry face,
 And fear in ev'ry heart,
 When waves on waves, and gulphs in gulphs,
 O'ercame the pilot's art.

Yet then from all my griefs, O Lord,
 Thy mercy set me free;
 While in the confidence of pray'r
 My soul took hold on thee.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung
 High on the broken wave,
 I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
 Nor impotent to save.

The storm was laid, the winds retir'd
 Obedient to thy will;
 The sea, that roar'd at thy command,
 At thy command was still.

In midst of dangers, fears, and deaths,
 Thy goodness I'll adore;
 And praise thee for thy mercies past,
 And humbly hope for more.

My life, if thou preserv'st my life,
 Thy sacrifice shall be;
 And death, if death must be my doom,
 Shall join my soul to thee.

§ 17. Another Hymn. Anon.

WHEN, rising from the bed of death,
 O'erwhelm'd with guilt and fear,
 I see my Maker face to face,
 O! how shall I appear?

If yet, while pardon may be found,
 And mercy may be sought,
 My heart with inward horror shrinks,
 And trembles at the thought:

When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclos'd
 In majesty severe,
 And sit in judgement on my soul,
 O! how shall I appear?

But thou hast told the troubled soul,
 Who does her sins lament,
 The timely tribute of her tears
 Shall endless woe prevent.

Then see the sorrows of my heart,
Ere yet it be too late;
And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
To give those sorrows weight.

For never shall my soul despair
Her pardon to procure,
Who knows thy only Son has died
To make that pardon sure.

§ 18. A Hymn on the Seasons. Thomson.

THESE, as they change, Almighty Father, these
Are but the varied God. The rolling year
Is full of Thee. Forth in the pleasing Spring
Thy beauty walks, thy tenderness and love.
Wide flush the fields: the softening air is balm;
Echo the mountains round; the forest smiles;
And every sense and every heart is joy.
Then comes thy glory in the Summer months,
With light and heat refulgent. Then thy sun
Shoots full perfection through the swelling year:
And oft thy voice in dreadful thunder speaks,
And oft at dawn, deep noon, or falling eve,
By brooks and groves, in hollow whisp'ring gales,
Thy bounty shines in Autumn unconfin'd,
And spreads a common feast for all that lives.
In Winter awful Thou! with clouds and storms
Around Thee thrown, tempest o'er tempest roll'd,
Majestic darkness! On the whirlwind's wing,
Riding sublime, Thou bidd'st the world adore,
And humblest nature with thy northern blast.

Mysterious round! what skill, what force di-
Deep-felt, in these appear! a simple train, [vine,
Yet so delightful mixed, with such kind art,
Such beauty and beneficence combin'd;
And all so forming an harmonious whole,
Shade, unperceiv'd, so softening into shade;
That, as they still succeed, they ravish still.
But wandering oft, with rude unconscious gaze,
Man marks not Thee, marks not the mighty hand
That, ever busy, wheels the silent spheres;
Works in the secret deep; shoots, steaming, thence

The fair profusion that o'erspreads the Spring;
Flings from the sun direct the flaming day;
Feeds ev'ry creature; hurls the tempest forth
And, as on earth this grateful change revolves,
With transport touches all the springs of life.
Nature attend! join every living soul
Beneath the spacious temple of the sky,
In adoration join; and ardent raise
One general song! To him ye vocal gales
Breathe soft, whose spirit in your freshness
Oh talk of him in solitary glooms, [breathes:
Where o'er the rock the scarcely waving pine
Fills the brown shade with a religious awe!
And ye, whose bolder note is heard afar,
Whom shake th' astonish'd world, lift high to heav'n
Th' impetuous song, and say from whom you rage.
His praise, ye brooks, attune, ye trembling rills;
And let me catch it as I muse along.
Ye headlong torrents, rapid and profound:
Ye softer floods that lead the humid maze
Along the vale; and thou majestic main,
A secret world of wonders in thyself,

Sound his stupendous praise, whose greater voice
Or bids you roar, or bids your roaring fall.
So roll your incense, herbs, and fruits, and flowers,
In mingled clouds to Him, whose sun exalts,
Whose breath perfumes you, and whose pencil paints.

Ye forests bend, ye harvests wave to Him;
Breathe your still song into the reaper's heart,
As home he goes beneath the joyous moon.
Ye that keep watch in heav'n, as earth asleep
Unconscious lies, effuse your mildest beams,
Ye constellations, while your angels strike,
Amid the spangled sky, the silver lyre.
Great source of day! best image here below
Of thy Creator, ever pouring wide,
From world to world, the vital ocean round,
On nature write with every beam his praise.
The thunder rolls: be hushed the prostrate world;
While cloud to cloud returns the solemn hymn.
Bleat out afresh, ye hills; ye mossy rocks,
Retain the sound: the broad responsive low,
Ye valleys, raise; for the Great Shepherd reigns;
And his unsuffering kingdom yet will come.
Ye woodlands, all awake: a boundless song
Burst from the groves! and when the restless day,
Expiring, lays the warbling world asleep,
Sweetest of birds! sweet Philomela, charm
The listening shades, and teach the night his praise.

Ye chief for whom the whole creation smiles;
At once the head, the heart, the tongue of all,
Crown the great hymn! In swarming cities vast,
Assembled men to the deep organ join
The long resounding voice, oft breaking clear,
At solemn pauses, through the swelling base;
And as each mingling flame increases each,
In one united ardor rise to heav'n.
Or if you rather choose the rural shade,
And find a fane in every sacred grove:
There let the shepherd's flute, the virgin's lay,
The prompting seraph, and the poet's lyre,
Still sing the God of Seasons as they roll.
For me, when I forget the darling theme,
Whether the blossom blows; the Summer ray
Russets the plain; inspiring Autumn gleams;
Or Winter rises in the blackening east:
Be my tongue mute, my fancy paint no more,
And, dead to joy, forget my heart to beat.

Should fate command me to the farthest verge
Of the green earth, to distant barbarous climes,
Rivers unknown to song; where first the sun
Gilds Indian mountains, or his setting beam
Flames on th' Atlantic isles, 'tis nought to me:
Since God is ever present, ever felt,
In the void waste as in the city full;
And where He vital spreads, there must be joy.
When even at last the solemn hour shall come,
And wing my mystic flight to future worlds,
I cheerful will obey; there, with new powers,
Will rising wonders sing: I cannot go
Where universal love not smiles around,
Sustaining all yon orbs, and all their suns:
From seeming evil still adducing good,
And better thence again, and better still,

In infinite progression.—But I lose
Myself in Him, in light ineffable!
Come then, expressive silence, muse his praise.

§ 19. Hymn to Humanity. Langhorne.

PARENT of virtue, if thine ear
Attend not now to sorrow's cry;
If now the pity-streaming tear
Should haply on thy cheek be dry;
Indulge my votive strain, O sweet humanity!

Come, ever welcome to my breast!
A tender, but a cheerful guest.
Nor always in the gloomy cell
Of life-consuming sorrow dwell;
For sorrow, long indulg'd and slow,
Is to Humanity a foe;
And grief, that makes the heart its prey,
Wears Sensibility away;
Then comes, sweet nymph, instead of thee,
The gloomy fiend, Stupidity.

3.

O may that fiend be banished far,
Though passions hold eternal war!
Nor ever let me cease to know
The pulse that throbs at joy or woe.
Nor let my vacant cheek be dry,
When sorrow fills a brother's eye;
Nor may the tear that frequent flows
From private or from social woes,
E'er make this pleasing sense depart:
Ye Cares, O harden not my heart!

If the fair star of fortune smile,
Let not its flattering power beguile;
Nor, borne along the fav'ring tide,
My full sails swell with bloating pride.
Let me from wealth but hope content,
Remembering still it was but lent;
To modest merit spread my store,
Unbar my hospitable door;
Nor feed, for pomp, an idle train,
While want unpitied pines in vain.

5.

If Heaven, in every purpose wise,
The envied lot of wealth denies;
If doom'd to drag life's painful load
Through poverty's uneven road,
And, for the due bread of the day,
Destin'd to toil as well as pray;
To thee, Humanity, still true,
I'll wish the good I cannot do;
And give the wretch, that passes by,
A soothing word—a tear—a sigh.

Howe'er exalted, or deprest,
Be ever mine the feeling breast.
From me remove the stagnant mind
Of languid indolence, reclined;
The soul that one long sabbath keeps,
And through the sun's whole circle sleeps;
Dull Peace, that dwells in Folly's eye,
And self-attending Vanity.

Alike, the foolish and the vain
Are strangers to the sense humane.

7.

O for that sympathetic glow
Which taught the holy tear to flow,
When the prophetic eye survey'd
Sion in future ashes laid;
Or, rais'd to heaven, implor'd the bread
That thousands in the desert fed!
Or, when the heart o'er friendship's grave
Sigh'd—and forgot its power to save—
O for that sympathetic glow
Which taught thy holy tear to flow.

8.

It comes: it fills my labouring breast,
I feel my beating heart oppress.
Oh! hear that lonely widow's wail!
See her dim eye! her aspect pale!
To heaven she turns in deep despair,
Her infants wonder at her prayer,
And, mingling tears they know not why,
Lift up their little hands, and cry.
O God! their moving sorrows see!
Support them, sweet Humanity!

Life, filled with grief's distressful train,
For ever asks the tear humane.
Behold in yon unconscious grove
The victims of ill-fated love!
Heard you that agonizing throe?
Sure this is not romantic woe!
The golden day of joy is o'er;
And now they part—to meet no more.
Assist them, hearts from anguish free!
Assist them, sweet Humanity!

10.

Parent of virtue, if thine ear
Attend not now to Sorrow's cry;
If now the pity-streaming tear
Should haply on thy cheek be dry,
Indulge my votive strain, O sweet Humanity!

§ 20. EPISTLE II.

To William Langhorne, M.A. 1760.

LIGHT heard his voice, and, eager to obey,
From all her orient fountains burst away.

At Nature's birth, O! had the Power Divine
Commanded thus the moral sun to shine,
Beam'd on the mind all reason's influence bright,
And the full day of intellectual light,
Then the free soul on Truth's strong pinion borne,
Had never languish'd in this shade forlorn.

Yet thus imperfect form'd, thus blind and vain,
Doom'd by long toil a glimpse of truth to gain;
Beyond its sphere shall human wisdom go,
And boldly censure what it cannot know?
'Tis ours to cherish what Heav'n deign'd to give,
And thankful for the gift of being live.

Progressive powers, and faculties that rise
From earth's low vale, to grasp the golden skies,
Though distant far from perfect, good, or fair,
Claim the due thought, and ask the grateful
care.

Come, then, thou partner of my life and name,
From one dear source, whom Nature form'd the same,

Ally'd more nearly in each nobler part,
And more the friend, than brother of my heart!
Let us, unlike the lucid twins that rise
At different times, and shine in distant skies,
With mutual eye this mental world survey,
Mark the slow rise of intellectual day,
View reason's source, if man the source may find,
And trace each science that exalts the mind.

"Thou self-appointed lord of all below!
Ambitious man, how little dost thou know?
For once let Fancy's towering thoughts subside,
Look on thy birth, and mortify thy pride!
A plaintive wretch, so blind, so helpless born,
The brute sagacious might behold with scorn.
How soon, when Nature gives him to the day,
In strength exulting, does he bound away;
By instinct led, the fostering teat he finds,
Sports in the ray, and shuns the searching winds.
No grief he knows, he feels no groundless fear,
Feeds without cries, and sleeps without a tear.
Did he but know to reason and compare,
See here the vassal, and the master there,
What strange reflections must the scene afford,
That shew'd the weakness of his puling lord!"

Thus sophistry unfolds her specious plan,
Form'd not to humble, but depreciate man.
Unjust the censure, if unjust to rate
His pow'rs and merits from his infant-state.
For, grant the children of the flow'ry vale
By instinct wiser, and of limbs more hale,
With equal eye their perfect state explore,
And all the vain comparison's no more.

"But why should life, so short by Heav'n ordain'd,

Be long to thoughtless infancy restrain'd—
To thoughtless infancy, or vainly sage,
Mourn through the languors of declining age?"

O blind to truth! to Nature's wisdom blind!
And all that she directs, or Heav'n design'd!
Behold her works in cities, plains, and groves,
Or life that vegetates, and life that moves!
In due proportion, as each being stays
In perfect life, it rises and decays

Is man long helpless? Through each tender hour,

See love parental watch the blooming flow'r!
By op'ning charms, by beauties fresh display'd,
And sweets unfolding, see that love repaid!

Has age its pains? For luxury it may—
The temp'rate wear insensibly away,
While sage experience and reflection clear
Beam a gay-sunshine on life's fading year.

But see from age, from infant weakness see,
That man was destin'd for society;
There from those ills a safe retreat behold,
Which young might vanquish, or afflict him old.

"That, in proportion as each being stays
In perfect life, it rises and decays,
Is Nature's law—to forms alone confin'd,
The laws of matter act not on the mind.
Too feebly, sure, its faculties must grow,
And Reason brings her borrow'd light too slow."

O! still censorious? art thou then possesst
Of reason's power, and does she rule thy breast?
Say what the use—had Providence assign'd
To infant years maturity of mind?
That thy pert offspring, as their father wise,
Might scorn thy precepts, and thy pow'r despise?

Or mourn, with ill-match'd faculties at strife,
O'er limbs unequal to the task of life?
To feel more sensibly the woes that wait
On every period, as on every state;
And slight, sad convicts of each painful truth,
The happier trifles of unthinking youth?

Conclude we then the progress of the mind
Ordain'd by wisdom infinitely kind:
No innate knowledge on the soul imprest,
No birthright instinct acting in the breast,
No natal light, no beam from Heav'n display'd,
Dart through the darkness of the mental shade.
Perceptive powers we hold from Heav'n's decree,
Alike to knowledge as to virtue free;
In both a liberal agency we bear,
The moral here, the intellectual there;
And hence in both an equal joy is known,
The conscious pleasure of an act our own.

When first the trembling eye receives the day,
External forms on young perception play;
External forms affect the mind alone,
Their different pow'rs and properties unknown.
See the pleas'd infant court the flaming brand,
Eager to grasp the glory in its hand!
The crystal wave as eager to pervade,
Stretch its fond arms to meet the smiling shade!
When Memory's call the mimic words obey,
And wing the thought that falters on its way;
When wise experience her slow verdict draws,
The sure effect exploring in the Cause,
In Nature's rude, but not unfruitful wild,
Reflection springs, and Reason is her child.
On her fair stock the blooming scyon grows,
And brighter through revolving seasons blows.

All beauteous flower! immortal shalt thou shine,

When dim with age yon golden orbs decline;
Thy orient bloom, unconscious of decay,
Shall spread, and flourish in eternal day.

O! with what art, my friend, what early care,
Should wisdom cultivate a plant so fair!
How should her eye the rip'ning mind revise,
And blast the buds of folly as they rise!
How should her hand with industry restrain
The thriving growth of passion's fruitful train,
Aspiring weeds, whose lofty arms would tow'r
With fatal shade o'er reason's tender flow'r!

From low pursuits the ductile mind to save,
Creeds that contract, and vices that enslave;
O'er life's rough seas its doubtful course to steer,
Unbroke by av'rice, bigotry, or fear!
For this fair Science spreads her light afar,
And fills the bright urn of her eastern star.
The liberal power in no sequester'd cells,
No moonshine-courts of dreaming schoolmen dwells;

Distinguish'd far her lofty temple stands,
Where the tall mountain looks o'er distant lands,

All round her throne the graceful arts appear,
That boast the empire of the eye or ear.

See favour'd first, and nearest to the throne,
By the rapt mien of musing Silence known,
Fled from herself, the Pow'r of Numbers plac'd
Her wild thoughts watch'd by Harmony and Taste.

There (but at distance never meant to vie),
The full-form'd image glancing on her eye,
See lively Painting! on her various face,
Quick-gliding forms a moment find a place;
She looks, she acts the character she gives,
And a new feature in each feature lives.

See Attic ease in Sculpture's graceful air,
Half loose her robe, and half unbound her hair;
To life, to life, she smiling seems to call,
And down her fair hands negligently fall.

Last, but not meanest, of the glorious choir,
See Music, list'ning to an angel's lyre.

Simplicity, their beauteous handmaid, drest
By Nature, bears a field-flower on her breast.

O Arts divine! O magic Powers that move
The springs of truth, enlarging truth and love!
Lost in their charms each mean attachment ends,
And Taste and Knowledge thus are Virtue's friends.

Thus nature deigns to sympathize with art,
And leads the moral beauty to the heart:
There, only there, that strong attraction lies,
Which makes the soul, and bids her graces rise,
Lives in those powers of harmony that bind
Congenial hearts, and stretch from mind to mind:

Glow'd in that warmth, that social kindness gave,
Which once—the rest is silence and the grave.

O tears, that warm from wounded friendship
flow!

O thoughts, that wake to monuments of woe!
Reflection keen, that points the painful dart;
Mem'ry, that speeds its passage to the heart;
Sad monitors, your cruel power suspend,
And hide, for ever hide, the buried friend:
—In vain—confest I see my Craufurd stand,
And the pen falls—falls from my trembling hand;
E'en death's dim shadow seeks to hide, in vain,
That lib'ral aspect, and that smile humane;
E'en Death's dim shadow wears a languid light,
And his eye beams through everlasting night.

Till the last sigh of Genius shall expire,
His keen eye faded, and extinct his fire,
Till time, in league with Envy and with Death,
Blast the skill'd hand, and stop the tuneful breath,
My Craufurd still shall claim the mournful song,
So long remember'd, and bewail'd so long.

§ 21. The Universal Prayer. Pope.

Deo Opt. Max.

FATHER of All! in ev'ry age,
In ev'ry clime, ador'd,
By Saint, by Savage, and by Sage,
Jehovah, Jove, or Lord!

Thou great First Cause, least understood,
Who all my sense confin'd

To know but this, that Thou art good,
And that myself am blind.

Yet gave me, in this dark estate,
To see the good from ill;
And, binding nature fast in fate,
Left free the human will.

What conscience dictates to be done,
Or warns me not to do,
This teach me more than hell to shun,
That more than heav'n pursue.

What blessings thy free bounty gives
Let me not cast away;
For God is paid when man receives,
T' enjoy is to obey.

Yet not to earth's contracted span
Thy goodness let me bound,
Or think Thee Lord alone of man,
When thousand worlds are round.

Let not this weak, unknowing hand
Presume thy bolts to throw,
And deal damnation round the land
On each I judge thy foe.

If I am right, thy grace impart,
Still in the right to stay;
If I am wrong, oh teach my heart
To find that better way.

Save me alike from foolish pride,
Or impious discontent,
At aught thy wisdom has deny'd,
Or aught thy goodness lent.

Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault I see;
That mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me.

Mean tho' I am, not wholly so,
Since quicken'd by thy breath;
O lead me wheresoe'er I go,
Thro' this day's life, or death.

This day, be bread and peace my lot:
All else beneath the sun,
Thou know'st if best bestow'd or not;
And let thy will be done.

To Thee, whose temple is all space,
Whose altar, earth, sea, skies!
One chorus let all Being raise!
All Nature's incense rise!

§ 22. Messiah, a Sacred Eclogue. POPE.

YE Nymphs of Solyma! begin the song;
To heavenly themes sublimer strains belong.
The mossy fountains and the sylvan shades,
The dreams of Pindus and the Aonian maids,
Delight no more.—O Thou my voice inspire,
Who touch'd Isaiah's hallowed lips with fire!
Rapt into future times, the bard begun:—
A Virgin shall conceive, a Virgin bear a Son!
From Jesse's root behold a branch arise,
Whose sacred flow'r with fragrance fills the skies;
Th' ethereal Spirit o'er its leaves shall move;
And on its top descends the mystic Dove.

Ye heav'ns! from high the dewy nectar pour,
 And in soft silence shed the kindly show'r!
 The sick and weak the healing plant shall aid,
 From storms a shelter, and from heat a shade.
 All crimes shall cease, and ancient fraud shall fail,
 Returning Justice lift aloft her scale;
 Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
 And white rob'd Innocence from heav'n descend.
 Swift fly the years, and rise th' expected morn!
 Oh spring to light, auspicious Babe, be born!
 See Nature hastes her earliest wreaths to bring,
 With all the incense of the breathing spring:
 See lofty Lebanon his head advance,
 See nodding forests on the mountains dance;
 See spicy clouds from lowly Saron rise,
 And Carmel's flow'ry top perfumes the skies!
 Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers;
 Prepare the way! a God, a God appears!
 A God, a God! the vocal hills reply;
 'The rocks proclaim th' approaching Deity.
 Lo, earth receives him from the bending skies!
 Sink down, ye mountains, and, ye valleys, rise!
 With heads declin'd, ye cedars, homage pay;
 Be smooth, ye rocks; ye rapid floods, give way!
 The Saviour comes! by ancient bards foretold;
 Hear him, ye deaf! and, all ye blind behold!
 He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
 And on the sightless eye-ball pour the day:
 'Tis he th' obstructed paths of sound shall clear,
 And bid new music charm th' unfolding ear;
 The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch forego,
 And leap exulting, like the bounding roe.
 No sigh, no murmur, the wide world shall hear:
 From ev'ry face he wipes off ev'ry tear.
 In adamant chains shall death be bound,
 And hell's grim tyrant feel th' eternal wound.
 As the good shepherd tends his fleecy care,
 Seeks freshest pasture, and the purest air,
 Explores the lost, the wand'ring sheep directs,
 By day o'ersees them, and by night protects;
 The tender lambs he raises in his arms,
 Feeds from his hand, and in his bosom warms;
 Thus shall mankind his guardian care engage,
 The promis'd Father of the future age.
 No more shall nation against nation rise,
 Nor ardent warriors meet with hateful eyes,
 Nor fields with gleaming steel be cover'd o'er,
 The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more;
 But useless lances into scythes shall bend,
 And the broad faulchion in a plough-share end.
 Then palaces shall rise: the joyful son
 Shall finish what his short-liv'd sire begun:
 Their vines a shadow to their race shall yield,
 And the same hand that sow'd, shall reap the field.
 The swain in barren deserts, with surprise,
 Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
 And starts, amidst the thirsty wilds to hear
 New falls of water murmuring in his ear.
 On rifted rocks, the dragon's late abodes,
 The green reed trembles, and the bulrush nods,
 Waste sandy valleys, once perplex'd with thorn,
 The spiry fir and shapely box adorn:
 To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,
 And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed.

The lambs with wolves shall graze the verdant
 And boys in flow'ry bands the tiger lead: [mead,
 The steer and lion at one crib shall meet,
 And harmless serpents lick the pilgrim's feet.
 The smiling infant in his hand shall take
 The crested basilisk and speckled snake,
 Pleas'd the green lustre of their scales survey,
 And with their forked tongue shall innocently play.

Rise, crown'd with light, imperial Salem, rise!
 Exalt thy tow'ry head, and lift thy eyes;
 See a long race thy spacious courts adorn;
 See future sons and daughters, yet unborn,
 In crowding ranks on ev'ry side arise,
 Demanding life, impatient for the skies!
 See barb'rous nations at thy gates attend,
 Walk in thy light, and in thy temple bend;
 See thy bright altars throng'd with prostrate
 kings,

And heap'd with products of Sabeen springs!
 For thee Idume's spicy forests blow,
 And seeds of gold in Ophir's mountains glow.
 See heav'n its sparkling portals wide display,
 And break upon thee in a flood of day.
 No more the rising sun shall gild the morn,
 Nor ev'ning Cynthia fill her silver horn,
 But lost, dissolv'd in thy superior rays,
 One tide of glory, one unclouded blaze, [shine
 O'erflow thy courts: the Light himself shall Reveal'd, and God's eternal day be thine!
 The seas shall waste, the skies in smoke decay,
 Rocks fall to dust, and mountains melt away;
 But fix'd his word, his saving pow'r remains:
 Thy realm for ever lasts, thy own Messiah reigns!

§ 23. The Prize of Virtue. Pope.

WHAT nothing earthly gives or can destroy,
 The soul's calm sunshine, and the heart-felt joy,
 Is Virtue's prize: a better would you fix?
 Then give Humility a coach-and-six,
 Justice a conqueror's sword, or Truth a gown,
 Or Public Spirit its great cure, a crown.
 Weak, foolish Man! will Heav'n reward us there
 With the same trash mad mortals wish for here?
 The boy and man an individual makes,
 Yet sigh'st thou now for apples and for cakes?
 Go, like the Indian, in another life
 Expect thy dog, thy bottle, and thy wife!
 As well as dream such trifles are assign'd,
 As toys and empires for a godlike mind;
 Rewards, that either would to Virtue bring
 No joy, or be destructive of the thing:
 How oft by these at sixty are undone
 The virtues of a saint at twenty-one!

To whom can riches give repute or trust,
 Content or pleasure, but the good and just?
 Judges and Senates have been bought for gold;
 Esteem and love were never to be sold.
 Oh fool; to think God hates the worthy mind,
 The lover, and the love of human kind,
 Whose life is healthful, and whose conscience
 clear,
 Because he wants a thousand pounds a-year.

§ 24. An Elegy, written in a Country Church-Yard. Gray.

THE curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea,
The plowman homeward plods his weary way,
And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

Now fades the glimm'ring landscape on the sight,
And all the air a solemn stillness holds,
Save where the beetle wheels his drony flight,
And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds;

Save that, from yonder ivy-mantled tow'r,
The moping owl does to the Moon complain
Of such, as wand'ring near her secret bow'r,
Molest her antient solitary reign.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's shade,
Where heaves the turf in many a mould'ring
Each in his narrow cell for ever laid, [heap,
The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.

The breezy call of incense-breathing morn, [shed,
The swallow twitt'ring from the straw-built
The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn,
No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed

For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn,
Or busy housewife ply her evening care,
Nor children run to lisp their sire's return,
Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield;
Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke;
How jocund did they drive their teams afield!
How bow'd the woods beneath their sturdy stroke:

Let not ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys and destiny obscure;
Nor grandeur hear with a disdainful smile,
The short and simple annals of the poor.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of pow'r,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await, alike, th' inevitable hour;
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Nor you, ye proud, impute to these the fault,
If mem'ry o'er their tomb no trophies raise,
Where thro' the long-drawn aisle and fretted vault,

The pealing anthem swells the note of praise.
Can storied urn, or animated bust,
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can Honor's voice provoke the silent dust,
Or flatt'ry soothe the dull cold ear of death?

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid
Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire;
Hands, that the rod of empire might have sway'd,
Or wak'd to ecstasy the living lyre.

But Knowledge to their eyes her ample page,
Rich with the spoils of Time, did ne'er unroll;
Chill Penury repress'd their noble rage,
And froze the genial current of the soul.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
The dark unfathom'd caves of ocean bear;

Full many a flow'r is born to blush unseen.
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Some village-Hampden, that with dauntless breast
The little tyrant of his fields withstood;
Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest.
Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood.

Th' applause of list'ning senates to command,
The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
And read their hist'ry in a nation's eyes,

Their lot forbade: nor circumscrib'd alone [fin'd;
Their growing virtues, but their crimes con-
Forbade to wade through slaughter to a throne,
And shut the gates of mercy on mankind;

The struggling pangs of conscious truth to hide,
To quench the blushes of ingenuous shame,
Or heap the shrine of Luxury and Pride
With incense kindled at the Muse's flame.

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
Their sober wishes never learn'd to stray;
Along the cool sequester'd vale of life,
They kept the noiseless tenor of their way.

Yet ev'n these bones from insult to protect,
Some frail memorial still erected nigh,
With uncouth rhimes and shapeless sculpture
Implores the passing tribe of a sigh. [deck'd,
Their name, their years, spelt by th' unletter'd
The place of fame and elegy supply: [muse,
And many a holy text around she strews,
That teach the rustic moralist to die.

For who, to dumb forgetfulness a prey,
This pleasing anxious being e'er resign'd,
Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
Nor cast one longing, ling'ring look behind?

On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
Some pious drops the closing eye requires;
Ev'n from the tomb, the voice of nature cries,
Ev'n in our ashes live their wonted fires.

For thee, who, mindful of th' unhonour'd dead,
Dost in these lines their artless tale relate;
If, chance, by lonely Contemplation led,
Some kindred spirit shall inquire thy fate.

Haply some hoary-headed swain may say,
"Oft have we seen him at the peep of dawn,
Brushing with hasty steps the dews away,
To meet the sun upon the upland lawn:

There at the foot of yonder nodding beech,
That wreaths its old fantastic roots so high,
His listless length at noon-tide would he stretch,
And pore upon the brook that bubbles by.

Hard by yon wood, now smiling, as in scorn,
Muttering his wayward fancies, he would rove;
Now drooping, woeful wan, like one forlorn,
Or craz'd with care, or cross'd in hopeless love.

One morn I miss'd him on the custom'd hill,
Along the heath, and near his fav'rite tree:
Another came; nor yet beside the rill,
Nor up the lawn, nor at the wood was he;

The next, with dirges due, in sad array, [borne ;
Slow thro' the church-yard path we saw him
Approach and read (for thou canst read) the lay,
Grav'd on the stone beneath yon aged thorn."

THE EPITAPH.

Here rests his head upon the lap of earth,
A Youth to Fortune and to Fame unknown,
Fair Science frown'd not on his humble birth,
And Melancholy mark'd him for her own.
Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere,
Heav'n did a recompence as largely send ;
He gave to Mis'ry all he had, a tear ; [a friend.
He gain'd from Heav'n ('twas all he wish'd)
No farther seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
(There they alike in trembling hope repose)
The bosom of his Father and his God.

§ 25. Death. Dr. Porteus, Bp. of London.

FRIEND to the wretch whom every friend
forsakes,

I woo thee, Death ! In fancy's fairy paths
Let the gay songster rove, and gently trill
The strain of empty joy. Life and its joys
I leave to those that prize them. At this hour,
This solemn hour, when silence rules the world,
And wearied nature makes a gen'ral pause ;
Wrapt in night's sable robe, through cloysters
And charnels pale, tenanted by a throng [drear
Of meagre phantoms shooting cross my path
With silent glance, I seek the shadowy vale
Of Death. Deep in a murky cave's recess,
Lav'd by oblivion's listless stream, and fenc'd
By shelving rocks, and intermingled horrors
Of yew and cypress shade, from all intrusion
Of busy noontide deam, the Monarch sits
In unsubstantial majesty enthron'd.
At his right hand, nearest himself in place
And frightfulness of form, his parent Sin
With fatal industry and cruel care
Busies herself in pointing all his stings,
And tipping every shaft with venom drawn
From her infernal store : around him rang'd
In terrible array, and mixture strange
Of uncouth shapes, stand his dread Ministers.
Foremost Old Age, his natural ally
And firmest friend ; next him Diseases thick,
A motley train ; Fever, with cheek of fire ;
Consumption wan ; Palsy, half warm with life,
And half a clay-clod lump ; joint-tort'ring Gout,
And ever-gnawing Rheum ; Convulsion wild ;
Swoln Dropsy ; panting Asthma ; Apoplex
Full-gorg'd. There too the Pestilence that walks
In darkness, and the Sickness that destroys
At broad noon-day. These, and a thousand more,
Horrid to tell, attentive wait ; and, when
By Heaven's command Death waves his ebon
Sudden rush forth to execute his purpose, [wand,
And scatter desolation o'er the Earth.

Ill-fated Man, for whom such various forms
Of mis'ry wait, and mark their future prey ;
Ah ! why, all-righteous Father, didst thou make

This creature, Man ? why wake th' unconscious
To life and wretchedness ? O better far [dust
Still had he slept in uncreated night,
If this the lot of Being ! Was it for this Thy breath divine kindled within his breast
The vital flame ? For this was thy fair image
Stamp'd on his soul in godlike lineaments ?
For this dominion giv'n him absolute
O'er all thy works, only that he might reign
Supreme in woe ? From the blest source of Good,
Could Pain and Death proceed ? Could such foul ills

Fall from fair Mercy's hands ? Far be the thought,
The impious thought ! God never made a creature

But what was good. He made a living Soul ;
The wretched Mortal was the work of Man.
Forth from his Maker's hands he sprung to life,
Fresh with immortal bloom ; no pain he knew,
No fear of change, no check to his desires, [stood Save one command. That one command, which
'Twixt him and Death, the test of his obedience,
Urg'd on by wanton curiosity,
He broke. There in one moment was undone
The fairest of God's works. The same rash hand,
That pluck'd in evil hour the fatal fruit,
Unbarr'd the gates of Hell, and let loose Sin
And Death, and all the family of Pain,
To prey upon Mankind. Young Nature saw
The monstrous crew, and shook thro' all her frame.

Then fled her new-born lustre, then began
Heav'n's cheerful face to low'r, then vapours choak'd

The troubled air, and form'd a veil of clouds
To hide the willing Sun. The earth, convuls'd
With painful throes, threw forth a bristly crop
Of thorns and briars ; and Insect, Bird, and Beast,
That wont before with admiration fond
To gaze at Man, and fearless crowd around him,
Now fled before his face, shunning in haste
Th' infection of his misery. He alone
Who justly might, th' offended Lord of Man,
Turn'd not away his face ; he, full of pity,
Forsook not in this uttermost distress
His best lov'd work. That comfort still remain'd
(That best, that greatest comfort in affliction)
The countenance of God, and thro' the gloom
Shot forth some kindly gleams, to cheer and warm
Th' offender's sinking soul. Hope sent from
Heav'n

Uprais'd his drooping head, and show'd afar
A happier scene of things ; the Promis'd Seed
Trampling upon the Serpent's humbled crest :
Death of his sting disarm'd ; and the dark grave,
Made pervious to the realms of endless day,
No more the limit but the gate of life. [ground
Cheer'd with the view, Man went to till the
From whence he rose ; sentenc'd indeed to toil
As to a punishment, (ev'n in wrath,
So merciful is Heav'n) this toil became
The solace of his woes, the sweet employ
Of many a live-long hour, and surest guard

Against Disease and Death. Death, tho' de-
Was yet a distant ill, by feeble arm [nounc'd,
Of Age, his sole support, led slowly on.
Not then, as since, the short-liv'd sons of men
Flock'd to his realms in countless multitudes ;
Scarce in the course of twice five hundred years,
One solitary ghost went shiv'ring down
To his unpeopled shore. In sober state,
Through the sequester'd vale of rural life,
The venerable Patriarch guileless held
The tenor of his way ; Labour prepar'd
His simple fare, and Temp'rance rul'd his board.
Tir'd with his daily toil, at early eve
He sunk to sudden rest ; gentle and pure
As breath of evening Zephyr, and as sweet,
Were all his slumbers ; with the Sun he rose,
Alert and vigorous as He, to run [strength
His destin'd course. Thus nerv'd with giant
He stemm'd the tide of time, and stood the shock
Of ages rolling harmless o'er his head.

At life's meridian point arriv'd, he stood,
And, looking round, saw all the valleys fill'd
With nations from his loins ; full-well content
To leave his race thus scatter'd o'er the earth,
Along the gentle slope of life's decline
He bent his gradual way, till, full of years,
He dropp'd like mellow fruit into his grave.

Such in the infancy of Time was Man ;
So calm was life, so impotent was Death !
O had he but preserv'd these few remains,
The shatter'd fragments, of lost happiness,
Snatch'd by the hand of Heav'n from the sad wreck

Of innocence primæval ; still had he liv'd
In ruin great ; tho' fall'n, yet not forlorn ;
Though mortal, yet not every-where beset
With Death in every shape ! But he, impatient
To be completely wretched, hastes to fill up
The measure of his woes.—'Twas Man himself
Brought Death into the world ; and Man himself
Gave keenness to his darts, quicken'd his pace,
And multiply'd destruction on mankind.

First Envy, eldest born of hell, embrued
Her hands in blood, and taught the Sons of Men
To make a Death which Nature never made,
And God abhorr'd ; with violence rude to break
The thread of life ere half its length was run,
And rob a wretched brother of his being.
With joy Ambition saw, and soon improv'd
The execrable deed. 'Twas not enough
By subtle fraud to snatch a single life,
Puny impiety ! whole kingdoms fell
To sate the lust of power : more horrid still,
The foulest stain and scandal of our nature,
Became its boast. One Murder made a Villain ;
Millions a Hero. Princes were privileg'd
To kill, and numbers sanctified the crime.
Ah ! why will Kings forget that they are Men ?
And Men that they are brethren ? Why delight
In human sacrifice ? Why burst the ties
Of Nature, that should knit their souls together
In one soft bond of amity and love ?
Yet still they breathe destruction, still go on Inhumanly ingenious to find out

New pains for life, new terrors for the grave,
Artificers of Death ! Still Monarchs dream
Of universal empire growing up
From universal ruin. Blast the design
Great God of Hosts, nor let thy creatures fall
Unpitied victims at Ambition's shrine !

Yet say, should Tyrants learn at last to feel,
And the loud din of battle cease to bray ;
Should dove-eyed Peace o'er all the earth extend
Her olive-branch, and give the world repose,
Would Death be foil'd ? Would health, and strength, and youth

Defy his pow'r ? Has he no arts in store,
No other shafts save those of War ? Alas !
Ev'n in the smile of Peace, that smile which sheds
A heav'nly sunshine o'er the soul, there basks
That serpent Luxury. War its thousand slays ;
Peace its ten thousands. In th' embattled plain,
Tho' Death exults, and claps his raven wings,
Yet reigns he not ev'n there so absolute,
So merciless, as in yon frantic scenes
Of midnight revel and tumultuous mirth,
Where in th' intoxicating draught conceal'd,
Or couch'd beneath the glance of lawless love,
He snares the simple youth, who, nought suspecting,

Means to be blest—but finds himself undone.

Down the smooth stream of life the stripling
darts,

Gay as the morn ; bright glows the vernal sky,
Hopeswells his sails, and passion steers his course,
Safe glides his little bark along the shore
Where virtue takes her stand ; but if too far
He launches forth beyond discretion's mark,
Sudden the tempest scowls, the surges roar,
Blot his fair day, and plunge him in the deep.
O sad but sure mischance ! O happier far
To lie like gallant Howe 'midst Indian wilds
A breathless corse, cut off by savage hands
In earliest prime, a generous sacrifice
To freedom's holy cause ; than so to fall,
Torn immature from life's meridian joys,
A prey to Vice, Intemp'rance, and Disease.

Yet die ev'n thus, thus rather perish still,
Ye sons of Pleasure, by th' Almighty strick'n,
Than ever dare (though oft, alas ! ye dare)
To lift against yourselves the murd'rous steel,
To wrest from God's own hand the sword of Justice,

And be your own avengers ! Hold, rash Man,
Though with anticipating speed thou'st rang'd
Through every region of delight, nor left
One joy to gild the evening of thy days ;
Though life seem one uncomfortable void,
Guilt at thy heels, before thy face despair ;
Yet gay this scene, and light this load of woe,
Compar'd with thy hereafter. Think, O think,
And, ere thou plunge into the vast abyss,
Pause on the verge a while : look down and see
Thy future mansion. Why that start of horror ?
From thy slack hand why drops th' uplifted steel ?
Didst thou not think such vengeance must await
The wretch, that with his crimes all fresh about
Rushes irreverent, unprepar'd, uncall'd, [him

Into his Maker's presence, throwing back
With insolent disdain his choicest gift?

Live then, while Heav'n in pity lends thee life,
And think it all too short to wash away,
By penitential tears and deep contrition,
The scarlet of thy crimes. So shalt thou find
Rest to thy soul; so unappall'd shalt meet
Death when he comes, not wantonly invite
His ling'ring stroke. Be it thy sole concern
With innocence to live; with patience wait
Th' appointed hour; too soon that hour will come,
Tho' Nature run her course. But Nature's God,
If need require, by thousand various ways,
Without thy aid can shorten that short span,
And quench the lamp of life. O when he comes,
Rous'd by the cry of wickedness extreme,
To heav'n ascending from some guilty land,
Now ripe for vengeance; when he comes array'd
In all the terrors of Almighty wrath,
Forth from his bosom plucks his ling'ring arm,
And on the miscreants pours destruction down;
Who can abide his coming? Who can bear
His whole displeasure? In no common form
Death then appears, but starting into size
Enormous, measures with gigantic stride
Th' astonish'd Earth, and from his looks throws
Unutterable horror and dismay. [round

All Nature lends her aid, each Element
Arms in his cause. Ope fly the doors of Heav'n;
The fountains of the deep their barriers break,
Above, below, the rival torrents pour,
And drown Creation; or in floods of fire
Descends a livid cataract, and consumes [peace,
An impious race. Sometimes, when all seems Wakes the grim whirlwind, and with rude embrace

Sweeps nations to their grave, or in the deep
Whelms the proud wooden world; full many a
Floats on his wat'ry bier, or lies unwept [youth
On some sad desert shore! At dead of night,
In sullen silence stalks forth Pestilence:
Contagion close behind taints all her steps
With pois'nous dew; no smiting hand is seen,
No sound is heard, but soon her secret path
Is mark'd with desolation; heaps on heaps Promiscuous drop. No friend, no refuge, near;
All, all, is false and treacherous around;
All that they touch, or taste, or breathe, is Death.

But ah! what means that ruinous roar? why fail

These tott'ring feet? Earth to its centre feels
The Godhead's pow'r, and trembling at his touch
Through all its pillars, and in ev'ry pore,
Hurls to the ground, with one convulsive heave,
Precipitating domes, and towns, and tow'rs,
The work of ages. Crush'd beneath the weight
Of general devastation, millions find
One common grave; not ev'n a widow left
To wail her sons: the house, that should protect,
Entombs his master; and the faithless plain,
If there he flies for help, with sudden yawn
Starts from beneath him. Shield me, gracious
Heav'n,

O snatch me from destruction! If this Globe,

This solid Globe, which thine own hand hath
So firm and sure, if this my steps betray; [made
If my own mother Earth, from whence I sprung,
Rise up with rage unnatural to devour
Her wretched offspring, whither shall I fly?
Where look for succour? Where, but up to thee,
Almighty Father? Save, O save, thy suppliant
From horrors such as these! At thy good time Let death approach; I reckon not—let him but come

In genuine form, not with thy vengeance arm'd,
Too much for man to bear. O rather lend
Thy kindly aid to mitigate his stroke;
And at that hour when all aghast I stand
(A trembling candidate for thy compassion)
On this world's brink, and look into the next;
When my soul, starting from the dark unknown,
Casts back a wishful look, and fondly clings
To her frail prop, unwilling to be wrench'd
From this fair scene, from all her custom'd joys,
And all the lovely relatives of life;
Then shed thy comforts o'er me, then put on
The gentlest of thy looks. Let no dark crimes,
In all their hideous forms then starting up,
Plant themselves round my couch in grim array,
And stab my bleeding heart with two-edg'd torture,

Sense of past guilt, and dread of future woe.
Far be the ghastly crew! And in their stead
Let cheerful Memory from her purest cells
Lead forth a goodly train of Virtues fair,
Cherish'd in earliest youth, now paying back
With tenfold usury the pious care,
And pouring o'er my wounds the heav'nly balm
Of conscious innocence. But chiefly, Thou,
Whom soft-eyed Pity once led down from Heav'n
To bleed for man, to teach him how to live,
And oh! still harder lesson! how to die;
Disdain not Thou to smooth the restless bed
Of Sickness and of Pain. Forgive the tear
That feeble Nature drops, calm all her fears,
Wake all her hopes, and animate her faith,
Till my rapt soul, anticipating Heav'n,
Bursts from the thralldom of incumb'ring clay,
And on the wing of ecstasy upborne,
Springs into Liberty, and Light, and Life.

§ 26. The Grave. Blair.

“The house appointed for all living.” JOB.

WHILST some affect the sun, and some the
shade,

Some flee the city, some the hermitage,
Their aims as various as the roads they take
In journeying through life; the task be mine
To paint the gloomy horrors of the tomb;
Th' appointed place of rendezvous, where all
These travellers meet. Thy succours I implore,
Eternal King, whose potent arm sustains
The keys of hell and death. The Grave, dread thing!

Men shiver when thou'rt nam'd: Nature appall'd
Shakes off her wonted firmness. Ah! how dark
Thy long-extended realms, and rueful wastes;

Where nought but silence reigns, and night, dark
 Dark as was Chaos ere the infant sun [night,
 Was roll'd together, or had tried its beams
 Athwart the gloom profound! The sickly taper,
 By glimm'ring thro' thy low-brow'd misty vaults,
 Furr'd round with mouldy damp, and ropy slime,
 Lets fall a supernumerary horror,
 And only serves to make thy night more irksome.
 Well do I know thee by thy trusty yew,
 Cheerless, unsocial plant! That loves to dwell
 'Midst skulls and coffins, epitaphs and worms;
 Where light-heel'd ghosts and visionary shades,
 Beneath the wan cold moon (as fame reports)
 Embodied thick, perform their mystic rounds.
 No other merriment, dull tree! is thine.

See yonder hallow'd fane! the pious work
 Of names once fam'd, now dubious or forgot,
 And buried 'midst the wreck of things which were:

There lie interr'd the more illustrious dead.

The wind is up: hark! how it howls! Methinks

Till now, I never heard a sound so dreary: [bird
 Doors creak, and windows clap, and night's foul Rook'd in the spire screams loud; the gloomy aisles

Black plaster'd, and hung round with shreds of
 'scutcheons,

And tatter'd coats of arms, send back the sound
 Laden with heavier airs, from the low vaults,
 The mansions of the dead. Rous'd from their
 In grim array the grisly spectres rise, [slumbers,
 Grin horrible, and obstinately sullen
 Pass and repass, hush'd as the foot of night.

Again! the screech-owl shrieks: ungracious
 sound!

I'll hear no more; it makes one's blood run chill!

Quite round the pile, a row of rev'rend elms,
 Coæval near with that, all ragged show, [down
 Long-lash'd by the rude winds: some rift half
 Their branchless trunks; others so thin a-top,
 That scarce two crows could lodge in the same tree.

[pen'd here:
 Strange things, the neighbours say, have hap-
 Wild shrieks have issu'd from the hollow tombs;
 Dead men have come again, and walk'd about;
 And the great bell has toll'd, unring, untouch'd.
 Such tales their cheer, at wake or gossiping,
 When it draws near to witching time of night.

Oft in the lone church-yard at night I've seen,
 By glimpse of moon-shine, chequ'ring through the trees,

The school-boy, with his satchel in his hand,
 Whistling aloud to keep his courage up,
 And lightly tripping o'er the long flat stones
 (With nettles skirted, and with moss o'ergrown)
 That tell in homely phrase who lie below;
 Sudden he starts! and hears, or thinks he hears,
 The sound of something purring at his heels;
 Full fast he flies, and dares not look behind him,
 Till out of breath he overtakes his fellows;
 Who gather round, and wonder at the tale
 Of horrid apparition, tall and ghastly,
 That walks at dead of night, or takes his stand

O'er some new-open'd grave; and, strange to tell!
 Evanishes at crowing of the cock!

The new-made widow, too, I've sometimes spied,

Sad sight! slow moving o'er the prostrate dead:
 Listless, she crawls along in doleful black,
 While bursts of sorrow gush from either eye,
 Fast-falling down her now untasted cheek.
 Prone on the lonely grave of the dear man
 She drops, whilst busy meddling Memory,
 In barbarous succession, musters up
 The past endearments of their softer hours,
 Tenacious of its theme. Still, still she thinks
 She sees him, and, indulging the fond thought,
 Clings yet more closely to the senseless turf,
 Nor heeds the passenger who looks that way.

Invidious Grave! how dost thou rend in sunder
 Whom love has knit, and sympathy made one!
 A tie more stubborn far than nature's band.
 Friendship! mysterious cement of the soul!
 Sweet'ner of life, and solder of society!
 I owe thee much. Thou hast deserv'd from me,
 Far, far beyond what I can ever pay.

Oft have I prov'd the labours of thy love,
 And the warm efforts of the gentle heart
 Anxious to please. O! when my friend and I
 In some thick wood have wander'd heedless on,
 Hid from the vulgar eye, and set us down
 Upon the sloping cowslip-covered bank,
 Where the pure limpid stream has slid along
 In grateful errors thro' the underwood, [thrush
 Sweet murmur'ing; methought, the shrill-tongued
 Mended his song of love; the sooty blackbird
 Mellow'd his pipe, and soften'd ev'ry note;
 The eglantine smell'd sweeter, and the rose
 Assum'd a dye more deep; whilst ev'ry flow'r
 Vied with his fellow-plant in luxury
 Of dress. Oh! then the longest summer's day
 Seem'd too, too much in haste; still the full heart
 Had not imparted half: 'twas happiness
 Too exquisite to last. Of joys departed,
 Not to return, how painful the remembrance!
 Dull Grave! thou spoil'st the dance of youthful blood,

Strik'st out the dimple from the cheek of mirth,
 And ev'ry smirking feature from the face;
 Branding our laughter with the name of madness.
 Where are the jesters now? the man of health
 Complexionally pleasant? where the droll?
 Whose ev'ry look and gesture was a joke
 To clapping theatres and shouting crowds
 And made ev'n thick-lipp'd musing Melancholy
 To gather up her face into a smile
 Before she was aware? Ah! sullen now,
 And dumb as the green turf that covers them!

Where are the mighty thunderbolts of war?
 The Roman Cæsars and the Grecian chiefs,
 The boast of story? Where the hot-brain'd youth,
 Who the tiara at his pleasure tore
 From kings of all the then discover'd globe,
 And cried, forsooth, because his arm was ham-
 And had not room enough to do its work? [per'd,
 Alas! how slim, dishonorably slim!
 And cramm'd into a space we blush to name!

Proud royalty! how alter'd in thy looks!
 How blank thy features, and how wan thy hue!
 Son of the morning! whither art thou gone?
 Where hast thou hid thy many-spangled head,
 And the majestic menace of thine eyes
 Felt from afar? Pliant and powerless now
 Like new-born infant bound up in his swatches,
 Or victim tumbled flat upon his back,
 That throbs beneath the sacrificer's knife:
 Mute must thou bear the strife of little tongues,
 And coward insults of the base-born crowd,
 That grudge a privilege thou never hadst,
 But only hoped for in the peaceful grave,
 Of being unmolested and alone.
 Araby's gums, and odoriferous drugs,
 And honors by the heralds duly paid
 In mode and form, ev'n to a very scruple;
 O cruel irony! these come too late;
 And only mock whom they were meant to honor.
 Surely, there's not a dungeon-slave that's buried
 In the highway, unshrouded and uncoffin'd,
 But lies as soft, and sleeps as sound as he.
 Sorry pre-eminence of high descent
 Above the vulgar born, to rot in state!

But see! the well-plum'd hearse comes nodding
 Stately and slow; and properly attended [on,
 By the whole sable tribe, that painful watch
 The sick man's door, and live upon the dead,
 By letting out their persons by the hour
 To mimic sorrow when the heart's not sad!
 How rich the trappings, now they're all unfurl'd
 And glitt'ring in the sun! Triumphant entries
 Of conquerors, and coronation pomps,
 In glory scarce exceed. Great gluts of people Retard the unwieldy show; whilst from the casements,
 And housetops, ranks behind ranks close wedg'd
 Hang bellying o'er. But tell us, why this waste?
 Why this ado in earthing up a carcase
 That's fallen into disgrace, and in the nostril
 Smells horrible! Ye undertakers! tell us,
 'Midst all the gorgeous figures you exhibit,
 Why is the principal conceal'd, for which
 You make this mighty stir? 'Tis wisely done:
 What would offend the eye in a good picture,
 The painter casts discreetly into shades.

Proud lineage, now how little thou appear'st!
 Below the envy of the private man!
 Honor, that meddlesome officious ill,
 Pursues thee e'en to death, nor there stops short.
 Strange persecution! when the grave itself
 Is no protection from rude sufferance.

Absurd! to think to over-reach the grave!
 And from the wreck of names to rescue ours!
 The best-concerted schemes men lay for fame
 Die fast away - only themselves die faster
 The far-fam'd sculptor, and the laurel bard,
 Those bold insurers of eternal fame,
 Supply their little feeble aids in vain,
 The tap'ring pyramid, th' Egyptian's pride,
 And wonder of the world! whose spiky top
 Has wounded the thick cloud, and long outliv'd
 The angry shaking of the winter's storm;
 Yet spent at last by th' injuries of heav'n,

Shatter'd with age, and furrow'd o'er with years,
 The mystic cone with hieroglyphics crusted,
 Gives way. O lamentable sight! at once
 The labor of whole ages lumbers down;
 A hideous and mis-shapen length of ruins.
 Sepulchral columns wrestle but in vain
 With all-subduing Time; her cank'ring hand
 With calm deliberate malice wasteth them:
 Worn on the edge of days, the brass consumes,
 The busto moulders, and the deep-cut marble,
 Unsteady to the steel, gives up its charge.
 Ambition, half convicted of her folly,
 Hangs down the head, and reddens at the tale.

Here all the mighty troublers of the earth,
 Who swam to sov'reign rule thro' seas of blood;
 Th' oppressive, sturdy, man-destroying villains,
 Who ravag'd kingdoms, and laid empires waste,
 And in a cruel wantonness of pow'r
 Thinn'd states of half their people, and gave up
 To want the rest; now, like a storm that's spent,
 Lie hush'd, and meanly sneak behind thy covert.
 Vain thought! to hide them from the gen'ral
 scorn

That haunts and dogs them like an injur'd ghost
 Implacable. Here, too, the petty tyrant,
 Whose scant domains geographer ne'er notic'd,
 And, well for neighb'ring grounds, of arm as
 Who fix'd his iron talons on the poor, [short,
 And grip'd them like some lordly beast of prey,
 Deaf to the forceful cries of gnawing hunger,
 And piteous plaintive voice of misery
 (As if a slave was not a shred of nature,
 Of the same common nature as his lord);
 Now tame and humble, like a child that's whipp'd,
 Shakes hands with dust, and calls the worm his kinsman;
 Nor pleads his rank and birthright. Under ground
 Precedency's a jest; vassal and lord,
 Grossly familiar, side by side consume.

When self-esteem, or others' adulation,
 Would cunningly persuade us we were something
 Above the common level of our kind; [flatt'ry,
 The Grave gainsays the smooth complexion'd
 And with blunt truth acquaints us what we are.
 Beauty! thou pretty plaything! dear deceit!
 That steals so softly o'er the stripling's heart,
 And gives it a new pulse unknown before!
 The grave discredits thee: thy charms expung'd,
 Thy roses faded, and thy lilies soil'd,
 What hast thou more to boast of? Will thy lovers Flock round thee now, to gaze and do thee homage?

Methinks I see thee with thy head low-laid;
 Whilst surfeited upon thy damask cheek,
 The high-fed worm in lazy volumes roll'd,
 Riots unscar'd. For this was all thy caution!
 For this thy painful labours at thy glass,
 To improve those charms and keep them in repair,
 For which the spoiler thanks thee not? Foul feeder!
 Coarse fare and carrion please thee full as well,
 And leave as keen a relish on the sense.

Look how the fair one weeps ! the conscious tears
Stand thick as dew-drops on the bells of flow'rs :
Honest effusion ! the swoln heart in vain
Works hard to put a gloss on its distress.

Strength too ! thou surly, and less gentle boast
Of those that laugh loud at the village ring !
A fit of common sickness pulls thee down,
With greater ease than e'er thou didst the stripling
That rashly dar'd thee to th' unequal fight.
What groan was that I heard ? deep groan indeed !
With anguish heavy laden ! let me trace it :
From yonder bed it comes, where the strong man
By stronger arm belabour'd, gasps for breath
Like a hard-hunted beast. How his great heart
Beats thick ! his roomy chest by far too scant
To give the lungs full play ! what now avail
The strong-built sinewy limbs, and well-spread shoulders !

See how he tugs for life, and lays about him,
Mad with his pain ! eager he catches hold
Of what comes next to hand, and grasps it hard,
Just like a creature drowning ! hideous sight !
Oh ! how his eyes stand out and stare full ghastly !
Whilst the distemper's rank and deadly venom
Shoots like a burning arrow cross his bowels,
And drinks his marrow up. Heard you that groan ?

It was his last. See how the great Goliath,
Just like a child that brawl'd itself to rest,
Lies still. What mean'st thou then, O mighty boaster !

To vaunt of nerves of thine ? What means the bull,
Unconscious of his strength, to play the coward,
And flee before a feeble thing like man ;
That, knowing well the slackness of his arm,
Trusts only in the well-invented knife !

With study pale, and midnight vigils spent,
The star-surveying sage close to his eye
Applies the sight-invigorating tube ;
And trav'ling thro' the boundless length of space,
Marks well the courses of the far-seen orbs,
That roll with regular confusion there,
In ecstasy of thought. But ah ! proud man !
Great heights are hazardous to the weak head !
Soon, very soon, thy firmest footing fails ; [place,
And down thou dropp'st into that darksome
Where nor device nor knowledge ever came.

Here the tongue-warrior lies ! disabled now,
Disarm'd, dishonor'd, like a wretch that's gagg'd,
And cannot tell his ail to passers-by. [change ?
Great man of language, whence this mighty
This dumb despair, and drooping of the head ?
Though strong persuasion hung upon thy lip,
And sly insinuation's softer arts

In ambush lay about thy flowing tongue :
Alas ! how chop-fall'n now ! thick mists and Rest, like a weary cloud, upon thy breast [silence
Unceasing. Ah ! where is the lifted arm,
The strength of action, and the force of words,
The well-turn'd period, and the well-tun'd voice,
With all the lesser ornaments of phrase ?

Ah ! fled for ever, as they ne'er had been !
Raz'd from the book of fame, or, more provoking,

Perhaps some hackney, hunger-bitten scribbler
Insults thy memory, and blots thy tomb
With long flat narratives, or duller rhymes
With heavy halting pace that drawl along ;
Enough to rouse a dead man into rage,
And warm with red resentment the wan cheek.

Here the great masters of the healing art,
These mighty mock-defrauders of the tomb !
Spite of their jalaps and catholicons,
Resign to fate. Proud Æsculapius' son,
Where are thy boasted implements of art,
And all thy well-cramm'd magazines of health ?
Nor hill, nor vale, as far as ship could go,
Nor margin of the gravel-bottom'd brook,
Escap'd thy rifling hands : from stubborn shrubs
Thou wrung'st their shy retiring virtues out,
And vex'd them in the fire : nor fly, nor insect,
Nor writhy snake, escap'd thy deep research.—

But why this apparatus ? why this cost ?
Tell us thou doughty keeper from the grave !
Where are thy recipes and cordials now,
With the long list of vouchers for thy cures ?
Alas ! thou speakest not. The bold impostor
Looks not more silly when the cheat's found out.

Here, the lank-sided miser, worst of felons !
Who meanly stole, discreditable shift !
From back and belly too, their proper cheer ;
Eas'd of a tax it irk'd the wretch to pay
To his own carcase, now lies cheaply lodg'd,
By clam'rous appetites no longer teas'd,
Nor tedious bills of charges and repairs.
But, ah ! where are his rents, his comings in ?
Ay ! now you've made the rich man poor indeed :
Robb'd of his gods, what has he left behind ?
O cursed lust of gold ! when for thy sake
The fool throws up his int'rest in both worlds,
First starv'd in this, then damn'd in that to come.

How shocking must thy summons be, O Death !
To him that is at ease in his possessions ;
Who, counting on long years of pleasure here,
Is quite unfurnish'd for that world to come !
In that dread moment, how the frantic soul
Raves round the walls of her clay tenement,
Runs to each avenue, and shrieks for help,
But shrieks in vain ! how wishfully she looks
On all she's leaving, now no longer hers !
A little longer, yet a little longer,
O might she stay to wash away her stains,
And fit her for her passage ! mournful sight !
Her very eyes weep blood ; and every groan
She heaves is big with horror : but the foe,
Like a staunch murd'rer steady to his purpose,
Pursues her close through ev'ry lane of life,
Nor misses once the track, but presses on ;
Till, forc'd at last to the tremendous verge,
At once she sinks to everlasting ruin.

Sure, 'tis a serious thing to die ! my soul !
What a strange moment must it be, when near
Thy journey's end thou hast the gulph in view !
That awful gulph no mortal e'er repass'd
To tell what's doing on the other side !
Nature runs back, and shudders at the sight, [ing ?
And ev'ry life-string bleeds at thoughts of part-
For part they must : body and soul must part ;

Fond couple! link'd more close than wedded pair.
This wings its way to its Almighty Source,
 The witness of its actions, now its judge;
That drops into the dark and noisome grave,
 Like a disabled pitcher, of no use.

If death was nothing, and nought after death;
 If, when men died, at once they ceas'd to be,
 Returning to the barren womb of nothing [chee
 Whence first they sprung; then might the debau-Untrembling mouth the heav'ns; then might the drunkard

Reel over his full bowl, and when 'tis drain'd
 Fill up another to the brim, and laugh [wretch
 At the poor bug-bear Death; then might the That's weary of the world, and tir'd of life,
 At once give each inquietude the slip,
 By stealing out of being when he pleas'd,
 And by what way; whether by hemp or steel:
 Death's thousand doors stand open. Who could
 The ill-pleas'd guest to sit out his full time, [force
 Or blame him if he goes? Sure! he does well
 That helps himself as timely as he can,
 When able. But if there is an hereafter,
 And that there is, conscience uninfluenc'd,
 And suffer'd to speak out, tells ev'ry man,
 Then must it be an awful thing to die;
 More horrid yet to die by one's own hand.
 Self-murder! name it not; our island's shame,
 That makes her the reproach of neighb'ring states.
 Shall nature, swerving from her earliest dictate,
 Self-preservation, fall by her own act?
 Forbid it, Heav'n! let not, upon disgust,
 The shameless hand be foully crimson'd o'er
 With blood of its own lord. Dreadful attempt!
 Just reeking from self-slaughter, in a rage
 To rush into the presence of our Judge!
 As if we challeng'd him to do his worst,
 And matter'd not his wrath. Unheard-of tortures
 Must be reserv'd for such: these herd together;
 The common damn'd shun their society,
 And look upon themselves as fiends less foul.
 Our time is fix'd; and all our days are number'd;
 How long, how short, we know not: this we
 know,

Duty requires we calmly wait the summons,
 Nor dare to stir till Heav'n shall give permission;
 Like sentries that must keep their destin'd stand,
 And wait th' appointed hour, till they're reliev'd.
 Those only are the brave who keep their ground,
 And keep it to the last. To run away
 Is but a coward's trick: to run away
 From this world's ills, that at the very worst
 Will soon blow o'er, thinking to mend ourselves
 By boldly vent'ring on a world unknown,
 And plunging headlong in the dark; 'tis mad;
 No frenzy half so desperate as this.

Tell us, ye dead! will none of you in pity
 To those you left behind disclose the secret?
 O! that some courteous ghost would blab it out,
 What 'tis you are, and we must shortly be.
 I've heard that souls departed have sometimes
 Forewarn'd men of their death: 'twas kindly done
 To knock and give th' alarm. But what means
 This stinted charity? 'tis but lame kindness

That does its work by halves. Why might you not Tell us what 'tis to die? Do the strict laws
 Of your society forbid your speaking
 Upon a point so nice? I'll ask no more;
 Sullen like lamps in sepulchres, your shine
 Enlightens but yourselves: well—'tis no matter:
 A very little time will clear up all,
 And make us learn'd as you are, and as close.

Death's shafts fly thick! Here falls the village swain, [round,
 And there his pamper'd lord! The cup goes
 And who so artful as to put it by?
 'Tis long since death had the majority;
 Yet, strange! the living lay it not to heart.
 See yonder maker of the dead man's bed,
 The sexton, hoary-headed chronicle!
 Of hard unmeaning face, down which ne'er stole
 A gentle tear; with mattock in his hand [ance
 Digs thro' whole rows of kindred and acquaint-
 By far his juniors! scarce a scull's cast up,
 But well he knew its owner, and can tell
 Some passage of his life. Thus hand in hand
 The sot has walked with death twice twenty years;

And yet ne'er younker on the green laughs louder,
 Or clubs a smuttier tale; when drunkards meet,
 None sings a merrier catch, or lends a hand [not
 More willing to his cup. Poor wretch! he minds
 That soon some trusty brother of the trade
 Shall do for him what he has done for thousands.

On this side, and on that, men see their friends
 Drop off, like leaves in autumn; yet launch out
 Into fantastic schemes, which three long lives
 In the world's hale and undegen'rate days
 Could scarce have leisure for. Fools that we are!
 Never to think of death and of ourselves
 At the same time! as if to learn to die
 Were no concern of ours. O more than sottish!
 For creatures of a day, in gamesome mood
 To frolic on eternity's dread brink,
 Unapprehensive; when for aught we know,
 The very first sworn surge shall sweep us in.
 Think we, or think we not, time hurries on
 With a resistless unremitting stream,
 Yet treads more soft than e'er did midnight thief,
 That slides his hand under the miser's pillow,
 And carries off his prize. What is this world?
 What but a spacious burial-field unwall'd,
 Strew'd with death's spoils, the spoils of animals,
 Savage and tame, and full of dead men's bones?
 The very turf on which we tread once liv'd;
 And we that live must lend our carcasses
 To cover our own offspring: in their turns
 They too must cover theirs. 'Tis here all meet!
 The shiv'ring Iclander, and sun-burnt Moor;
 Men of all climes, that never met before;
 And of all creeds, the Jew, the Turk, the Christian.

Here the proud prince, and favourite yet prouder,
 His sov'reign's keeper, and the people's scourge,
 Are huddled out of sight. Here lie abash'd
 The great negociators of the earth,
 And celebrated masters of the balance,
 Deep read in stratagems, and wiles of courts:

Now vain their treaty-skill; Death scorns to treat.

Here the o'erloaded slave flings down his burthen
From his gall'd shoulders; and when the cruel tyrant,

With all his guards and tools of pow'r about him,
Is meditating new unheard-of hardships,
Mocks his short arm, and quick as thought escapes,

Where tyrants vex not, and the weary rest.
Here the warm lover, leaving the cool shade,
The tell-tale echo, and the bubbling stream,
Time out of mind the fav'rite seats of love,
Fast by his gentle mistress lays him down
Unblasted by foul tongue. Here friends and foes
Lie close, unmindful of their former feuds.

The lawn-rob'd prelate, and plain presbyter,
Ere while that stood aloof, as shy to meet,
Familiar mingle here, like sister-streams
That some rude interposing rock had split.

Here is the large-limb'd peasant; here the child
Of a span long, that never saw the sun,
Nor press'd the nipple, strangled in life's porch:
Here is the mother with her sons and daughters;
The barren wife; the long-demurring maid,
Whose lonely unappropriated sweets
Smil'd like yon knot of cowslips on the cliff,
Not to be come at by the willing hand.

Here are the prude severe, and gay coquette,
The sober widow, and the young green virgin,
Cropp'd like a rose before 'tis fully blown,
Or half its worth disclos'd. Strange medley here!

Here garrulous old age winds up his tale;
And jovial youth, of lightsome vacant heart,
Whose ev'ry day was made of melody, [shrew,
Hears not the voice of mirth; the shrill-tongued
Meek as the turtle-dove, forgets her chiding.

Here are the wise, the gen'rous, and the brave;
The just, the good, the worthless, the profane;
The downright clown, and perfectly well-bred,
The fool, the churl, the scoundrel, and the mean,

The supple statesman, and the patriot stern;
The wrecks of nations, and the spoils of time,
With all the lumber of six thousand years.

Poor man! how happy once in thy first state!
When yet but warm from thy great Maker's hand,

He stamp'd thee with his image, and well pleas'd
Smil'd on his last fair work! Then all was well.
Sound was the body, and the soul serene;
Like two sweet instruments ne'er out of tune,
That play their several parts. Nor head, nor heart,
Offer'd to ache; nor was there cause they should,
For all was pure within: no fell remorse,
Nor anxious castings up of what may be,
Alarm'd his peaceful bosom: summer seas
Show not more smooth when kiss'd by southern winds,

Just ready to expire. Scarce importun'd,
The gen'rous soil with a luxuriant hand
Offer'd the various produce of the year,
And ev'ry thing most perfect in its kind.
Bless'd, thrice blessed days! but ah, how short!

Bless'd as the pleasing dreams of holy men,
But fugitive, like those, and quickly gone.
O slippery state of things! What sudden turns,
What strange vicissitudes, in the first leaf
Of man's sad history! To-day most happy;
And, ere to-morrow's sun has set, most abject!
How scant the space between these vast extremes!
Thus far'd it with our sire: not long he enjoy'd
His paradise! Scarce had the happy tenant
Of the fair spot due time to prove its sweets,
Or sum them up, when straight he must be gone,
Ne'er to return again. And must he go?
Can nought compound for the first dire offence
Of erring man? Like one that is condemn'd,
Fain would he trifle time with idle talk,
And parley with his fate. But 'tis in vain.
Not all the lavish odours of the place,
Offer'd in incense, can procure his pardon,
Or mitigate his doom. A mighty angel
With flaming sword forbids his longer stay,
And drives the loiterer forth; nor must he take
One last and farewell round. At once he lost
His glory and his God. If mortal now,
And sorely maim'd, no wonder! Man has sinn'd.
Sick of his bliss, and bent on new adventures,
Evil he would needs try: nor tried in vain.
(Dreadful experiment! destructive measure!
Where the worst thing could happen, is success.)

Alas! too well he sped: the good he scorn'd
Stalk'd off reluctant, like an ill-us'd ghost,
Not to return; or, if it did, its visits
Like those of angels short, and far between:
Whilst the black daemon, with his hell-scap'd
Admitted once into its better room, [train,
Grew loud and mutinous, nor would be gone;
Lording it o'er the man, who now too late
Saw the rash error which he could not mend;
An error fatal not to him alone,
But to his future sons, his fortune's heirs.
Inglorious bondage! human nature groans
Beneath a vassalage so vile and cruel,
And its vast body bleeds through ev'ry vein.

What havock hast thou made, foul monster,
Sin!

Greatest and first of ills! the fruitful parent
Of woes of all dimensions! But for thee,
Sorrow had never been. All noxious things
Of vilest nature, other sorts of evils,
Are kindly circumscrib'd, and have their bounds.
The fierce volcano, from its burning entrails
That belches molten stone and globes of fire,
Involv'd in pitchy clouds of smoke and stench,
Mars the adjacent fields for some leagues round,
And there it stops. The big-swoln inundation,
Of mischief more diffusive, raving loud,
Buries whole tracts of country, threat'ning more;
But that too has its shore it cannot pass.
More dreadful far than these, Sin has laid waste,
Not here and there a country, but a world;
Dispatching at a wide-extended blow
Entire mankind, and for their sakes defacing
A whole creation's beauty with rude hands;
Blasting the fruitful grain, the loaded branches,

And marking all along its way with ruin.
Accursed thing! O where shall fancy find
A proper name to call thee by, expressive
Of all thy horrors? pregnant womb of ills!
Of temper so transcendently malign,
That toads and serpents of most deadly kind
Compar'd to thee are harmless. Sickneses
Of ev'ry size and symptom, racking pains,
And bluest plagues are thine! See how the fiend
Profusely scatters the contagion round! [heels,
Whilst deep-mouth'd slaughter, bellowing at her
Wades deep in blood new spilt; yet for to-morrow
Shapes out new work of great uncommon daring,
And inly pines till the dread blow is struck.

But hold! I've gone too far; too much discover'd

My father's nakedness, and nature's shame.
Here let me pause! and drop an honest tear,
One burst of filial duty, and condolence,
O'er all those ample deserts Death has spread,
This chaos of mankind. O great man-eater!
Whose ev'ry day is carnival: not sated yet!
Unheard-of epicure! without a fellow!
The veriest gluttons do not always cram;
Some intervals of abstinence are sought
To edge the appetite: thou seekest none.
Methinks the countless swarms thou hast devour'd,

And thousands that each hour thou gobblest up,
This, less than this, might gorge thee to the full.
But, ah! rapacious still, thou gap'st for more:
Like one, whole days defrauded of his meals,
On whom lank hunger lays his skinny hand,
And whets to keenest eagerness his cravings
(As if Diseases, Massacres, and Poison
Famine, and War, were not thy caterers)!

But know that thou must render up the dead,
And with high interest too! they are not thine;
But only in thy keeping for a season,
Till the great promis'd day of restitution;
When loud diffusive sound from brazen trump
Of strong-lung'd cherub shall alarm thy captives,
And rouse the long, long sleepers into life,
Day-light, and liberty.—

Then must thy gates fly open, and reveal
The mines that lay long forming under ground,
In their dark cells immur'd; but now full ripe,
And pure as silver from the crucible,
That twice has stood the torture of the fire,
And inquisition of the forge. We know,
Th' Illustrious Deliv'rer of mankind,
The Son of God, thee foil'd. Him in thy pow'r
Thou couldst not hold: self-vigorous he rose
And, shaking off thy fetters, soon retook
Those spoils his voluntary yielding lent,
(Sure pledge of our release from thy thrall!)
Twice twenty days he sojourn'd here on earth,
And show'd himself alive to chosen witnesses
By proofs so strong, that the most slow assenting
Had not a scruple left. This having done,
He mounted up to heav'n. Methinks I see him
Climb the aerial heights, and glide along
Athwart the severing clouds: but the faint eye,
Flung backward in the chace, soon drops its hold,

Disabled quite, and jaded with pursuing.
Heaven's portals wide expand to let him in;
Nor are his friends shut out: as some great prince
Not for himself alone procures admission,
But for his train; it was his royal will,
That where he is, there should his followers be.
Death only lies between! a gloomy path!
Made yet more gloomy by our coward fears!
But not untrod, nor tedious: the fatigue
Will soon go off. Besides, there's no by-road
To bliss. Then why, like ill-conditioned child,
Start we at transient hardships in the way [dren,
That leads to purer air and softer skies,
And a ne'er-setting sun? Fools that we are!
We wish to be wheresweets unwith'ring bloom;
But straight our wish revoke, and will not go.
So have I seen, upon a summer's even,
Fast by a riv'let's brink a youngster play!
How wishfully he looks to stem the tide!
This moment resolute, next unresolv'd,
At last he dips his foot; but as he dips
His fears redouble, and he runs away
From th' inoffensive stream, unmindful now
Of all the flow'rs that paint the further bank,
And smil'd so sweet of late. Thrice welcome
That, after many a painful bleeding step, [Death!
Conducts us to our home, and lands us safe
On the long-wish'd-for shore. Prodigious change!

Our bane turn'd to a blessing! Death disarm'd
Loses his fellness quite! all thanks to Him
Who scourg'd the venom out! Sure the last end
Of the good man is peace. How calm his exit!
Night-dews fall not more gently to the ground,
Nor weary worn-out winds expire so soft.
Behold him! in the ev'ning tide of life,
A life well-spent, whose early care it was,
His riper years should not upbraid his green:
By unperceiv'd degrees he wears away;
Yet like the sun seems larger at his setting!
High in his faith and hopes, look! how he reaches
After the prize in view! and, like a bird
That's hamper'd, struggles hard to get away!
Whilst the glad gates of sight are wide expanded
To let new glories in, the first fair fruits
Of the fast-coming harvest! Then! O then!
Each earth-born joy grows vile, or disappears,
Shrunk to a thing of nought. O how he longs
To have his passport signed, and be dismiss'd!
'Tis done, and now he's happy! The glad soul
Has not a wish uncrown'd. Ev'n the lag flesh
Rests too in hope of meeting once again
Its better half, never to sunder more.
Nor shall it hope in vain: the time draws on
When not a single spot of burial earth,
Whether on land, or in the spacious sea,
But must give back its long committed dust
Inviolat: and faithfully shall these
Make up the full account; not the least atom
Embezzled, or mislaid, of the whole tale.
Each soul shall have a body ready furnished;
And each shall have his own. Hence, ye pro-phane!

Ask not, how this can be? Sure the same pow'r

That rear'd the piece at first, and took it down,
Can re-assemble the loose scatter'd parts,
And put them as they were. Almighty God
Has done much more; nor is his arm impair'd
Thro' length of days; and what he can he will;
His faithfulness stands bound to see it done.
When the dread trumpet sounds, the slumb'ring
Not unattentive to the call, shall wake; [dust,
And ev'ry joint possess its proper place,
With a new elegance of form, unknown
To its first state. Nor shall the conscious soul
Mistake its partner; but amidst the crowd,
Singling its other half, into its arms
Shall rush, with all the impatience of a man
That's new come home, who, having long been absent,

With haste runs over ev'ry different room,
In pain to see the whole. Thrice happy meeting!
Nor time, nor death, shall ever part them more.

'Tis but a night; a long and moonless night;
We make the grave our bed, and then are gone.

Thus, at the shut of even, the weary bird
Leaves the wide air, and in some lonely break
Cov'rs down, and doses till the dawn of day;
Then claps his well-fledg'd wings, and bears
away.

§ 27. Happiness to be found in Virtue alone.
Pope.

Know then this truth (enough for man to
"Virtue alone is Happiness below." [know)
The only point where human bliss stands still,
And takes the good without the fall to ill;
Where only merit constant pay receives,
Is blest in what it takes, and what it gives;
The joy unequal'd if its end it gain,
And, if it lose, attended with no pain:
Without satiety, though e'er so bless'd,
And but more relish'd as the more distress'd.
The broadest mirth unfeeling Folly wears,
Less pleasing far than Virtue's very tears:
Good from each object, from each place acquir'd,
For ever exercis'd, yet never tir'd;
Never elated while one man's oppress'd;
Never dejected while another's bless'd;
And where no wants, no wishes can remain,
Since but to wish more Virtue is to gain.

See! the sole bliss Heav'n could on all bestow,
Which who but feels can taste; but thinks, can
know:

Yet poor with fortune, and with learning blind,
The bad must miss; the good, untaught, will
find;

Slave to no sect, who takes no private road,
But looks through Nature up to Nature's God;
Pursues that chain which links th' immense design,

Joins heav'n and earth, and mortal and divine;
Sees, that no being any bliss can know,
But touches some above, and some below;
Learns from this union of the rising whole,
The first, last purpose, of the human soul;
And knows where Faith, Law, Morals, all began,
All end in Love of God, and Love of Man.

For him alone, Hope leads from goal to goal'
And opens still, and opens on his soul:
Till lengthen'd on to Faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind.
He sees why Nature plants in Man alone
Hope of known bliss, and faith in bliss unknown
(Nature, whose dictates to no other kind
Are giv'n in vain, but what they seek they find).
Wise is her present; she connects in this
His greatest Virtue with his greatest Bliss;
At once his own bright prospect to be blest,
And strongest motive to assist the rest.

Self-love, thus push'd to social, to divine,
Gives thee to make thy neighbour's blessing
Is this too little for the boundless heart? [thine.
Extend it, let thy enemies have part:
Grasp the whole worlds of Reason, Life, and
In one close system of Bevevolence: [Sense,
Happier as kinder, in whate'er degree,
And height of Bliss but height of Charity.
God loves from Whole to Parts: but human soul
Must rise from Individual to the Whole.
Self-love but serves the virtuous mind to wake,
As the small pebble stirs the peaceful lake;
The centre mov'd, a circle straight succeeds,
Another still, and still another spreads;
Friend, parent, neighbour, first it will embrace;
His country next; and next all human race:
Wide, and more wide, th' o'erflowings of the
Take ev'ry creature in, of ev'ry kind; [mind
Earth smiles around, with boundless bounty
blest,
And Heav'n beholds its image in his breast.

§ 28. On the Eternity of the Supreme Being.
Smart.

HAIL, wond'rous Being, who in pow'r supreme
Exists from everlasting! whose great name
Deep in the human heart, and ev'ry atom
The Air, the Earth, or azure Main contains,
In undecipher'd characters is wrote—

Incomprehensible!—O what can words,
The weak interpreters of mortal thoughts, [rove
Or what can thoughts (tho' wild of wing they Thro' the vast concave of th' æthereal round)?
If to the Heav'n of Heav'ns they wing their way
Advent'rous, like the birds of night they're lost,
And delug'd in the flood of dazzling day—

May then the youthful, uninspired Bard
Presume to hymn th' Eternal? may he soar
Where Seraph and where Cherubim on high
Resound th' unceasing plaudits, and with them
In the grand chorus mix his feeble voice?

He may—if thou, who from the witless babe
Ordainest honor, glory, strength, and praise,
Uplift th' unpinion'd Muse, and deign'st to Great Poet of the Universe! his song. [assist,

Before this earthly Planet wound her course
Round Light's perennial fountain; before Light
Herself 'gan shine, and at th' inspiring word
Shot to existence in a blaze of day;
Before "the Morning Stars together sang."
And hail'd Thee architect of countless worlds,

Thou art—All-glorious, All-beneficent,
All Wisdom and Omnipotence Thou art.

But is the æra of Creation fix'd
At when these worlds began? Could aught retard
Goodness, that knows no bounds, from blessing
Or keep th' immense Artificer in sloth? [ever,
Avaunt the dust-directed crawling thought,
That Puissance immeasurably vast,
And Bounty inconceivable, could rest
Content, exhausted with one week of action!
No—in th' exertion of thy righteous pow'r,
Ten thousand times more active than the Sun,
Thou reign'd, and with a mighty hand compos'd
Systems innumerable, matchless all,
All stamp'd with thine uncounterfeited seal.

But yet (if still to more stupendous heights
The Muse unblam'd her aching sense may strain)
Perhaps wrapt up in contemplation deep,
The best of Beings on the noblest theme
Might ruminate at leisure, scope immense!
Th' Eternal Pow'r and Godhead to explore,
And with itself th' Omniscient Mind replete.
This were enough to fill the boundless All,
This were a Sabbath worthy the Supreme!
Perhaps enthron'd amidst a choicer few
Of spirits inferior, he might greatly plan
The two prime Pillars of the Universe,
Creation and Redemption—and a while
Pause—with the grand presentiments of glory,
Perhaps—but all's conjecture here below,
All ignorance, and self-plum'd vanity—
O Thou, whose ways to wonder at's distrust,
Whom to describe's presumption (all we can,
And all we may), be glorified, be prais'd.

A day shall come when all this earth shall perish,
Nor leave behind ev'n Chaos; it shall come,
When all the armies of the elements
Shall war against themselves, and mutual rage,
To make Perdition triumph; it shall come,
When the capacious atmosphere above
Shall in sulphureous thunders groan, and die,
And vanish into void; the earth beneath
Shall sever to the centre, and devour
Th' enormous blaze of the destructive flames.
Ye rocks that mock the ravings of the floods,
And proudly frown upon th' impatient deep,
Where is your grandeur now? Ye foaming
waves,

That all along th' immense Atlantic roar,
In vain ye swell; will a few drops suffice
To quench the inextinguishable fire?
Ye mountains, on whose cloud-crown'd tops the cedars,

Are lessen'd into shrubs, magnific piles,
That prop the painted chamber of the heavens,
And fix the earth continual: Athos, where!
Where, Tenerif, thy stateliness to-day?
What, Ætna, are thy flames to these? No more
Than the poor glow-worm to the golden sun.

Nor shall the verdant valleys then remain
Safe in their meek submission; they the debt
Of nature and of justice too must pay.
Yet I must weep for you, ye rival fair,

Arno and Andalusia; but for thee
More largely, and with filial tears must weep,
O Albion! O my country! Thou must join,
In vain dissever'd from the rest, must join
The terrors of th' inevitable ruin.

Nor thou, illustrious monarch of the day;
Nor thou, fair queen of night; nor you, ye stars,
Tho' million leagues and million still remote,
Shall yet survive that day; ye must submit,
Sharers, not bright spectators of the scene.

But tho' the Earth shall to the centre perish,
Nor leave behind ev'n Chaos; tho' the air
With all the elements must pass away,
Vain as an idiot's dream; tho' the huge rocks,
That brandish the tall cedars on their tops,
With humbler vales must to perdition yield;
Tho' the gilt sun, and silver-tressed moon,
With all her bright retinue, must be lost:
Yet thou, Great Father of the world, surviv'st
Eternal, as thou wert. Yet still survives
The soul of man immortal, perfect now,
And candidate for unexpiring joys.

He comes! he comes! the awful trump I hear;
The flaming sword's intolerable blaze
I see! He comes! th' Archangel from above.
"Arise, ye tenants of the silent grave,
"Awake incorruptible, and arise:
"From east to west, from the Antarctic pole
"To regions Hyperborean, all ye sons,
"Ye sons of Adam, and ye heirs of heaven—
"Arise, ye tenants of the silent grave,
"Awake incorruptible, and arise."

'Tis then, nor sooner, that the restless mind
Shall find itself at home; and like the ark,
Fix'd on the mountain top, shall look aloft
O'er the vague passage of precarious life;
And winds and waves, and rocks and tempests,
Enjoy the everlasting calm of Heaven: [past,
'Tis then, nor sooner, that the deathless soul,
Shall justly know its nature and its rise:
'Tis then the human tongue, new-tun'd, shall give Praises more worthy the Eternal Ear.
Yet what we can, we ought;—and therefore

Thou,
Purge Thou my heart, Omnipotent and good!
Purge Thou my heart with hyssop, lest, like
Cain,

I offer fruitless sacrifice, and with gifts
Offend, and not propitiate the Ador'd.
Tho' Gratitude were blest with all the powers
Her bursting heart could long for; tho' the swift,
The fiery wing'd Imagination soar'd
Beyond Ambition's wish—yet all were vain
To speak him as he is, who is ineffable.
Yet still let reason thro' the eye of Faith
View him with fearful love; let Truth pronounce,
And Adoration on her bended knee,
With heav'n-directed hands, confess his reign,
And let the angelic, archangelic band,
With all the hosts of Heaven, cherubic forms,
And forms seraphic, with their silver trump
And golden lyres attend:—"For thou art holy,
"For thou art one, th' Eternal, who alone
"Exerts all goodness, and transcends all praise!"

§ 29. On the Immensity of the Supreme Being.

Smart.

ONCE more I dare to rouse the sounding string,
The Poet of my God—Awake, my glory,
Awake, my lute and harp—myself shall wake,
Soon as the stately night-exploding bird
In lively lay sings welcome to the dawn.

List ye! how nature with ten thousand tongues
Begins the grand thanksgiving, Hail, all hail;
Ye tenants of the forest and the field!
My fellow-subjects of th' Eternal King,
I gladly join your matins, and with you
Confess his presence, and report his praise.

O Thou, who or the lambkin or the dove,
When offer'd by the lowly, meek, and poor,
Prefer'st to pride's whole hecatomb, accept
This mean Essay, nor from thy treasure-house
Of glory immense the orphan's mite exclude.

What tho' the Almighty's regal throne be rais'd
High o'er yon azure Heaven's exalted dome,
By mortal eye unkenn'd—where East nor West,
Nor South nor blustering North has breath to blow;

Albeit He there with angels and with saints
Hold conference, and to his radiant host
Ev'n face to face stands visibly confest;
Yet know, that nor in presence or in power
Shines he less perfect here; 'tis man's dim eye
That makes th' obscurity. He is the same;
Alike in all his universe the same.

Whether the mind along the spangled sky
Measures her pathless walk, studious to view
The works of vaster fabric, where the planets
Weave their harmonious rounds, their march directing

Still faithful, still inconstant, to the sun;
Or where the comet, thro' space infinite
(Tho' whirling worlds oppose in globes of fire)
Darts, like a javelin, to his distant goal; [vens,
Or where in Heaven above, the Heaven of Hea-
Burn brighter suns, and goodlier planets roll
With satellites more glorious—Thou art there.

Or whether on the ocean's boisterous back
Thou ride triumphant, and with outstretch'd arm
Curb the wild winds and discipline the billows,
The suppliant sailor finds Thee there, his chief,
His only help—When Thou rebuk'st the storm,
It ceases,—and the vessel gently glides
Along the glossy level of the calm.

O! could I search the bosom of the sea,
Down the great depth descending, there thy works

Would also speak thy residence! and there
Would I, thy servant, like the still profound,
Astonish'd into silence muse thy praise!
Behold! behold! th' unplanted garden round
Of vegetable coral, sea-flowers gay, [tom,
And shrubs of amber from the pearl-pav'd bot-
Rise richly varied, where the finny race
In blithe security their gambols play:
While high upon their heads, Leviathan,
The terror and the glory of the main,
His pastime takes with transport, proud to see
The ocean's vast dominion all his own.

Hence thro' the genial bowels of the earth
Easy may fancy pass; till at thy mines,
Gani or Raolconda, she arrive,
And from the adamant's imperial blaze
Form weak ideas of her Maker's glory.

Next to Pegu or Ceylon let me rove,
Where the rich ruby (deem'd by sages old
Of sov'reign virtue) sparkles ev'n like Sirius,
And blushes into flames. Thence will I go
To undermine the treasure-fertile womb
Of the huge Pyrenean, to detect
The agate and the deep-intrenched gem
Of kindred jasper—Nature in them both Delights to play the mimic on herself:
And in their veins she oft pourtrays the forms
Of leaning hills, of trees erect, and streams
Now stealing softly on, now thundering down
In desperate cascades with flowers and beasts,
And all the living landskip of the vale:
In vain thy pencil, Claudio or Poussin,
Or thine, immortal Guido, would essay
Such skill to imitate—it is the hand
Of God himself—for God himself is there.

Hence with th' ascending springs let me advance

Thro' beds of magnets, minerals, and spar,
Up to the mountain's summit, there t' indulge
Th' ambition of the comprehensive eye,
That dares to call th' horizon all her own.
Behold the forest, and th' expansive verdure
Of yonder level lawn, whose smooth-shorn sod
No object interrupts, unless the oak
His lordly head uprears, and branching arms
Extends—Behold in regal solitude,
And pastoral magnificence, he stands
So simple, and so great, the under-wood
Of meaner rank an awful distance keep.
Yet Thou art there, y' God himself is there,
Ev'n on the bush (tho' not as when to Moses
He shone in burning majesty reveal'd).
Nathless conspicuous in the linnet's throat
Is his unbounded goodness—Thee her Maker,
Thee her Preserver chants she in her song;
While all the emulative vocal tribe
The grateful lesson learn—no other voice
Is heard, no other sound—for, in attention
Buried, ev'n babbling Echo holds her peace.

Now from the plains, where the unbounded prospect

Gives liberty her utmost scope to range,
Turn we to yon inclosures, where appears
Chequer'd variety in all her forms,
Which the vague mind attract, and still suspend
With sweet perplexity. What are yon towers,
The work of laboring men and clumsy art,
Seen with the ringdove's nest? On that tall beech

Her pensile house the feather'd artist builds—
The rocking winds molest her not; for see
With such due poise the wond'rous fabric's hung,
That, like the compass in the bark, it keeps
True to itself and stedfast ev'n in storms.
Thou idiot, that asserts there is no God,
View, and be dumb for ever—

Go bid Vitruvius or Palladio build
 The bee his mansion, or the ant her cave—
 Go call Correggio, or let Titian come [cherry
 To paint the hawthorn's bloom, or teach the
 To blush with just vermillion—Hence away—
 Hence, ye profane! for God himself is here.
 Vain were th' attempt, and impious, to trace
 Thro' all his works th' Artificer Divine—
 And tho' nor shining sun, nor twinkling star,
 Bedeck'd the crimson curtains of the sky;
 Tho' neither vegetable, beast, nor bird
 Were extant on the surface of this ball,
 Nor lurking gem beneath; tho' the great sea
 Slept in profound stagnation, and the air
 Had left no thunder to pronounce its Maker;
 Yet man at home, within himself, might find
 The Deity immense, and in that frame,
 So fearfully, so wonderfully made,
 See and adore his providence and power—
 I see, and I adore—O God most bounteous!
 O infinite of goodness and of glory, [Thee;
 The knee that Thou hast shap'd shall bend to
 The tongue which Thou hast tun'd shall chant thy praise;
 And thine own image, the immortal soul,
 Shall consecrate herself to Thee for ever.

§ 30. On the Omniscience of the Supreme Being.
 Smart.

ARISE, divine Urania, with new strains
 To hymn thy God! and thou, immortal Fame,
 Arise and blow thy everlasting trump!
 All glory to the Omniscient, and praise,
 And power and domination in the height!
 And thou, cherubic Gratitude, whose voice
 To pious ears sounds silverly so sweet,
 Come with thy precious incense, bring thy gifts,
 And with thy choicest stores the altar crown.
 Thou too, my heart, whom He, and He alone
 Who all things knows, can know, with love re-
 Regenerate, and pure, pour all thyself [plete,
 A living sacrifice before his throne!
 And may th' eternal, high, mysterious tree,
 That in the centre of the arched heavens [branch
 Bears the rich fruit of knowledge, with some Stoop to my humble reach, and bless my toil!
 When in my mother's womb conceal'd I lay,
 A senseless embryo, then my soul thou knew'st;
 Knew'st all her future workings, every thought,
 And every faint idea yet unform'd.
 When up the imperceptible ascent
 Of growing years, led by thy hand, I rose,
 Perception's gradual light, that ever dawns
 Insensibly to-day, thou didst vouchsafe,
 And taught me by that reason thou inspir'dst,
 That what of knowledge in my mind was low,
 Imperfect, incorrect,—in Thee is wond'rous,
 Uncircumscrib'd, unsearchably profound,
 And estimable solely by itself. [brutes,

What is that secret pow'r that guides the
 Which Ignorance calls instinct: 'Tis from
 It is the operation of thine hands, [Thee;
 Immediate, instantaneous; 'tis thy wisdom
 That glorious shines transparent thro' thy works.

Who taught the pye, or who forewarn'd the jay,
 To shun the deadly nightshade? Tho' the cherry
 Boasts not a glossier hue, nor does the plum
 Lure with more seeming sweets the amorous eye,
 Yet will not the sagacious birds, decoyed
 By fair appearance, touch the noxious fruit.
 They know to taste is fatal; whence, alarm'd,
 Swift on the winnowing winds they work their way.

Go to, proud reasoner, philosophic man,
 Hast thou such prudence, thou such knowledge?
 Full many a race has fall'n into the snare—[No.
 Of meretricious looks, of pleasing surface;
 And oft in desert isles the famish'd pilgrim,
 By forms of fruit, and luscious taste, beguil'd,
 Like his forefather Adam, eats and dies.
 For why? his wisdom on the leaden feet
 Of slow Experience, dully tedious, creeps,
 And comes, like vengeance, after long delay.

The venerable sage, that nightly trims
 The learned lamp, t'investigate the powers
 Of plants medicinal, the earth, the air,
 And the dark regions of the fossil world,
 Grows old in following what he ne'er shall find;
 Studios in vain! till haply at the last
 He spies a mist, then shapes it into mountains,
 And baseless fabrics from conjecture builds:
 While the domestic animal, that guards
 At midnight hours his threshold, if oppress'd
 By sudden sickness, at his master's feet
 Begg not that aid his services might claim,
 But is his own physician, knows the case,
 And from th' emetic herbage works his cure.
 Hark! from afar the feather'd matron* screams
 And all her brood alarms! The docile crew
 Accept the signal one and all, expert
 In th' art of nature and unlearn'd deceit:
 Along the sod, in counterfeited death,
 Mute, motionless they lie; full well appriz'd
 That the rapacious adversary's near.
 But who inform'd her of th' approaching danger?
 Who taught the cautious mother, that the hawk
 Was hatch'd her foe, and liv'd by her destruction?
 Her own prophetic soul is active in her,
 And more than human providence her guard.

When Philomela, ere the cold domain
 Of crippled Winter 'gins t'advance, prepares
 Her annual flight, and in some poplar shade
 Takes her melodious leave, who then's her pilot?
 Who points her passage thro' the pathless void
 To realms from us remote, to us unknown?
 Her science is the science of her God.
 Not the magnetic index to the North
 E'er ascertains her course, nor buoy, nor beacon:
 She, Heaven-taught voyager, that sails in air,
 Courts nor coy West nor East, but instant knows
 What Newton or not sought, or sought in vain†.

Illustrious name! irrefragable proof
 Of man's vast genius, and the soaring soul!
 Yet what wert thou to Him, who knew his works
 Before creation form'd them, long before
 He measur'd in the hollow of his hand

* The Hen Turkey. † The Longitude.

Th' exulting ocean, and the highest heavens
He comprehended with a span, and weigh'd
The mighty mountains in his golden scales;
Who shone supreme, who was himself the light,
Ere yet Refraction learn'd her skill to paint,
And bend athwart the clouds her beauteous bow.

When Knowledge at her father's dread com-
Resign'd to Israel's king her golden key, [mand
O! to have join'd the frequent auditors
In wonder and delight, that whilom heard
Great Solomon descanting on the brutes.
O! how sublimely glorious to apply
To God's own honor, and good-will to man,
That wisdom he alone of men possess'd
In plenitude so rich, and scope so rare.
How did he rouse the pamper'd silken sons
Of bloated Ease, by placing to their view
The sage industrious Ant, the wisest insect,
And best œconomist of all the field!
Tho' she presumes not by the solar orb
To measure times and seasons, nor consults
Chaldean calculations, for a guide;
Yet, conscious that December's on the march,
Pointing with icy hand to Want and Woe,
She waits his dire approach, and undismay'd
Receives him as a welcome guest, prepar'd
Against the churlish Winter's fiercest blow.
For when as yet the favorable Sun
Gives to the genial earth th' enliv'ning ray,
Not the poor suffering slave, that hourly toils
To rive the groaning earth for ill-sought gold,
Endures such trouble, such fatigue, as she;
While all her subterraneous avenues, [meet
And storm-proof cells, with management most
And unexampled housewifery, she forms:
Then to the field she hies, and on her back,
Burden immense! she bears the cumbrous corn.
Then many a weary step, and many a strain,
And many a grievous groan subdu'd, at length
Up the huge hill she hardly heaves it home,
Nor rests she here her providence, but nips
With subtle tooth the grain, lest from her garner
In mischievous fertility it steal,
And back to day-light vegetate its way.
Go to the Ant, thou sluggard, learn to live,
And by her wary ways reform thine own.
But if thy deaden'd sense, and listless thought,
More glaring evidence demand; behold,
Where yon pellucid populous hive presents
A yet uncopied model to the world!
There Machiavel in the reflecting glass
May read himself a fool. The chemist there
May with astonishment invidious view
His toils outdone by each plebeian bee,
Who, at the royal mandate, on the wing,
From various herbs, and from discordant flowers,
A perfect harmony of sweets compounds.

Avaunt, Conceit! Ambition! take thy flight
Back to the prince of vanity and air!
O! 'tis a thought of energy most piercing; [force
Form'd to make pride grow humble; form'd to
Its weight on the reluctant mind, and give her
A true but irksome image of herself.
Woeful vicissitude! when man, fallen man,

Who first from Heaven, from gracious God himself

Learn'd knowledge of the brutes, must know, by brutes

Instructed and reproach'd, the scale of being;
By slow degrees from lowly steps ascend,
And trace Omniscience upwards to its spring!
Yet murmur not, but praise—for tho' we stand
Of many a godlike privilege amerc'd
By Adam's dire transgression; tho' no more
Is Paradise our home, but o'er the portal
Hangs in terrific pomp the burning blade;
Still with ten thousand beauties bloom the earth,
With pleasures populous, and with riches
crown'd.

Still is there scope for wonder and for love
Ev'n to their last exertion—showers of blessings
Far more than human virtue can deserve,
Or hope expect, or gratitude return.

Then, O ye people, O ye sons of men,
Whatever be the color of your lives,
Whatever portion of itself his wisdom
Shall deign t'allow, still patiently abide,
And praise him more and more; nor cease to chant

“All glory to th' Omniscient, and praise,
“And pow'r, and domination in the height!
“And thou, cherubic Gratitude, whose voice
“To pious ears sounds silverly so sweet,
“Come with thy precious incense, bring thy gifts,
“And with thy choicest stores the altar crown.”

ΤΩ ΘΕΩ ΔΟΞΑ.

§ 31. On the Power of the Supreme Being.
Smart.

“TREMBLE, thou Earth!” th' anointed poet said, [mountains!
“At God's bright presence; tremble all ye
“And all ye hillocks on the surface bound!”
Then once again, ye glorious thunders, roll!
The Muse with transport hears ye; once again
Convulse the solid continent! and shake,
Grand music of Omnipotence, the isles!
'Tis thy terrific voice, thou God of power,
'Tis thy terrific voice; all nature hears it,
Awaken'd and alarm'd; she feels its force;
In every spring she feels it, every wheel,
And every movement of her vast machine.
Behold! quakes Apennine; behold! recoils
Athos; and all the hoary headed Alps
Leap from their bases at the god-like sound.
But what is this, celestial tho' the note,
And proclamation of the reign supreme,
Compar'd with such as, for a mortal ear
Too great, amaze the incorporeal worlds?
Should Ocean to his congregated waves
Call in each river, cataract, and lake,
And with the wat'ry world down a huge rock
Fall headlong in one horrible cascade,
'Twere but the echo of the parting breeze,
When zephyr faints upon the lily's breast;
'Twere but the ceasing of some instrument,
When the last lingering undulation

Dies on the doubting ear, if nam'd with sounds
So mighty! so stupendous! so divine!

But not alone in the ærial vault
Does He the dread theocracy maintain;
For oft, enrag'd with his intestine thunders,
He harrows up the bowels of the earth,
And shocks the central magnet—Cities then
Trotter on their foundations, stately columns,
Magnific walls, and heaven-assaulting spires.
What tho' in haughty eminence erect
Stands the strong citadel, and frowns defiance
On adverse hosts; tho' many a bastion jut
Forth from the rampart's elevated mound;
Vain the poor providence of human art,
And mortal strength how vain! while underneath

Triumphs his mining vengeance in th' uproar
Of shatter'd towers, riven rocks, and mountains,
With clamor inconceivable upturn,
And hurl'd adown th' abyss. Sulphureous pyrites
Bursting abrupt from darkness into day,
With din outrageous and destructive ire,
Augment the hideous tumult, while it wounds
Th' afflictive ear, and terrifies the eye, [felt,
And rends the heart in twain. Twice have we Within Augusta's walls, twice have we felt
Thy threaten'd indignation: but even Thou,
Incens'd Omnipotent, art gracious ever;
Thy goodness infinite but mildly warn'd us,
With mercy-blended wrath; O spare us still,
Nor send more dire conviction! We confess
That thou art He th' Almighty: we believe.
For at thy righteous power whole systems quake;
For at thy nod tremble ten thousand worlds.
Hark! on the winged whirlwind's rapid rage,
Which is and is not in a moment—hark!
On th' hurricane's tempestuous sweep he rides
Invincible, and oaks, and pines, and cedars,
And forests are no more. For, conflict dreadful!
The West encounters East, and Notus meets
In his career the Hyperborean blast.
The lordly lions shuddering seek their dens,
And fly like timorous deer; the king of birds,
Who dar'd the solar ray, is weak of wing,
And faints, and falls, and dies;—while He supreme

Stands stedfast in the centre of the storm.

Wherefore ye objects terrible and great,
Ye thunders, earthquakes, and ye fire-fraught wombs

Of fell volcanos, whirlwinds, hurricanes,
And boiling billows, hail! in chorus join
To celebrate and magnify your Maker,
Who yet in works of a minuter mould
Is not less manifest, is not less mighty.

Survey the magnet's sympathetic love
That woos the yielding needle; contemplate
Th' attractive amber's power, invisible
Ev'n to the mental eye; or when the blow
Sent from th' electric sphere assaults thy frame,
Show me the hand that dealt it!—Baffled here
By his Omnipotence, Philosophy
Slowly her thoughts inadequate revolves,

And stands, with all his circling wonders round
Like heavy Saturn in th' ethereal space, [her,
Begirt with an inexplicable ring.

If such the operations of his power,
Which at all seasons and in every place
(Rul'd by establish'd laws and current nature)
Arrest th' attention; who, oh who shall tell
His acts miraculous? when his own decrees
Repeals he, or suspends; when by the hand
Of Moses or of Joshua, or the mouths
Of his prophetic seers, such deeds be wrought,
Before th' astonish'd sun's all-seeing eye,
That faith was scarce a virtue. Need I sing
The fate of Pharoah and his numerous band
Lost in the reflux of the wat'ry walls,
That melted to their fluid state again?

Need I recount how Samson's warlike arm,
With more than mortal nerves was strung,
Idolatrous Philistia? Shall I tell [t' o'erthrow
How David triumph'd, and what Job sustain'd?
—But, O supreme, unutterable mercy!

O love unequal'd, mystery immense, [tion
Which angels long t' unfold! 'tis man's redemp-
That crowns thy glory, and thy power confirms;
Confirms the great, th' uncontroverted claim.

When from the Virgin's unpolluted womb
Shone forth the Sun of Righteousness reveal'd,
And on benighted reason pour'd the day;

“Let there be peace!” he said, and all was calm
Amongst the warring world—calm as the sea
When, “O bestill, ye boisterous winds!” he cried,
And not a breath was blown, nor murmur heard.

His was a life of miracles and might,
And charity and love, ere yet he taste
The bitter draught of death, ere yet he rise
Victorious o'er the universal foe,

And death, and sin, and hell in triumph lead.
His by the right of conquest is mankind,
And in sweet servitude and golden bonds
Were tied to him for ever.—O how easy

Is his ungalling yoke, and all his burdens
'Tis ecstasy to bear. Him, blessed Shepherd!
His flocks shall follow thro' the maze of life,
And shades that tend to day-spring from on high;
And as the radiant roses, after fading,

In fuller foliage, and more fragrant breath
Revive in smiling spring, so shall it fare
With those that love him—for sweet is their sa-
And all Eternity shall be their spring. [vor,

Then shall the gates and everlasting doors,
At which the King of Glory enters in, [sure
Be to the saints unbarr'd: and there, where plea-
Boasts an undying bloom, where dubious hope
Is certainty, and grief-attended love

Is freed from passion—there we'll celebrate,
With worthier numbers, Him who is, and was,
And, in immortal prowess King of kings,
Shall be the monarch of all worlds for ever.

§ 32. On the Goodness of the Supreme Being.
Smart.

ORPHEUS, for so the Gentiles * call'd thy name,
Israel's sweet Psalmist, who alone couldst wake

* See this conjecture strongly supported by Delany, in his Life of David.

Th' inanimate to motion ; who alone
 The joyful hillocks, the applauding rocks,
 And floods with musical persuasion drew ;
 Thou, who to hail and snow gav'st voice and sound,
 And mad'st the mute melodious !—greater yet
 Was thy divinest skill, and rul'd o'er more
 Than art and nature ; for thy tuneful touch
 Drove trembling Satan from the heart of Saul,
 And quell'd the evil Angel—in this breast
 Some portion of thy genuine spirit breathe,
 And lift me from myself ; each thought impure
 Banish ; each low idea raise, refine,
 Enlarge, and sanctify ;—so shall the Muse
 Above the stars aspire, and aim to praise
 Her God on earth as he is prais'd in heaven.

Immense Creator ! whose all-powerful hand
 Fram'd universal being, and whose eye
 Saw like thyself, that all things form'd were good,
 Where shall the timorous Bard thy praise begin,
 Where end the purest sacrifice of song, [light,
 And just thanksgiving ?—The thought-kindling
 Thy prime production, darts upon my mind
 Its vivifying beams, my heart illumines,
 And fills my soul with gratitude and Thee.
 Hail to the cheerful rays of ruddy morn,
 That paint the streaky East, and blithsome rouse

The birds, the cattle, and mankind from rest !
 Hail to the freshness of the early breeze,
 And Iris dancing on the new-fall'n dew,
 Without the aid of yonder golden globe.
 Lost were the garnet's lustre, lost the lily,
 The tulip and auricula's spotted pride ;
 Lost were the peacock's plumage, to the sight
 So pleasing in its pomp and glossy glow.
 O thrice-illustrious ! were it not for Thee,
 Those pansies, that reclining from the bank
 View thro' th' immaculate pellucid stream
 Their portraiture in the inverted heav'n,
 Might as well change their triple boast, the white,
 The purple, and the gold, that far outvie
 The Eastern monarch's garb, ev'n with the dock,
 Ev'n with the baleful hemlock's irksome green.
 Without thy aid, without thy gladsome beams,
 The tribes of woodland warblers would remain
 Mute on the bending branches, nor recite
 The praise of Him, who, ere he form'd their lord,
 Their voices tun'd to transport, wing'd their flight,

And bade them call for nurture, and receive :
 And lo ! they call the blackbird and the thrush,
 The woodlark and the redbreast, jointly call ;
 He hears, and feeds their feather'd families ;
 He feeds his sweet musicians—nor neglects
 Th' invoking ravens in the greenwood wide ;
 And tho' their throats coarse rattling hurt the ear,
 They mean it all for music, thanks and praise
 They mean, and leave ingratitude to man :—
 But not to all—for, hark ! the organs blow
 Their swelling notes round the cathedral's dome.
 And grace the harmonious choir, celestial feast
 To pious ears, and medicine of the mind !
 The thrilling trebles and the manly base
 Join in accordance meet, and with one voice

All to the sacred subject suit their song.
 While in each breast sweet melancholy reigns
 Angelically pensive, till the joy
 Improves and purifies ; the solemn scene
 The sun thro' storied panes surveys with awe,
 And bashfully with-holds each bolder beam.
 Here, as her home, from morn to eve frequents
 The cherub Gratitude ; behold her eyes !
 With love and gladness weepingly they shed
 Ecstatic smiles ; the incense, that her hands
 Uprear, is sweeter than the breath of May Caught from the nectarine's blossom, and her voice

Is more than voice can tell : to Him she sings,
 To Him who feeds, who clothes, and who adorns,
 Who made, and who preserves, whatever dwells
 In air, in stedfast earth, or fickle sea.
 O He is good, He is immensely good ! [man ;
 Who all things form'd, and form'd them all for
 Who mark'd the climates, varied every zone,
 Dispensing all his blessings for the best,
 In order and in beauty :—rise, attend,
 Arrest, and praise, ye quarters of the world !
 Bow down, ye elephants, submissive bow
 To Him who made the mite ! Tho', Asia's pride,
 Ye carry armies on your tower-crown'd backs,
 And grace the turban'd tyrants, bow to Him
 Who is as great, as perfect, and as good
 In his less striking wonders, till at length
 The eye's at fault, and seeks th' assisting glass
 Approach, and bring from Araby the Blest
 The fragrant cassia, frankincense, and myrrh,
 And, meekly kneeling at the altar's foot,
 Lay all the tributary incense down.
 Stoop, feeble Africa, with reverence stoop,
 And from thy brow take off the painted plume ;
 With golden ingots all thy camels load
 To adorn his temples ; hasten with thy spear
 Reverted, and thy trusty bow unstrung,
 While unpursued thy lions roam and roar,
 And ruin'd towers, rude rocks, and caverns wide
 Re-murmur to the glorious, surly sound.
 And thou, fair Indian, whose immense domain
 To counterpoise the hemisphere extends, [ers,
 Haste from the West, and with thy fruits and flow-
 Thy mines and medicines, wealthy maid, attend.
 More than the plenteousness so fam'd to flow
 By fabling bards from Amalthea's horn
 Is thine ; thine therefore be a portion due [crown
 Of thanks and praise : come with thy brilliant
 And vest of fur ; and from thy fragrant lap
 Pomegranates and the rich ananas pour.
 But chiefly thou, Europa, seat of Grace
 And Christian excellence, his Goodness own.
 Forth from ten thousand temples pour his praise.
 Clad in the armor of the living God,
 Approach, unsheath the Spirit's flaming sword ;
 Faith's shield, salvation's glory—compass'd helm
 With fortitude assume, and o'er your heart
 Fair Truth's invulnerable breast-plate spread ;
 Then join the general chorus of all worlds,
 And let the song of Charity begin
 In strains seraphic, and melodious prayer
 “ O all-sufficient, all beneficent,

'Thou God of Goodness and of Glory, hear!
 "Thou, who to lowest minds dost condescend,
 "Assuming passions to enforce thy laws,
 "Adopting jealousy to prove thy love:
 "Thou, who resign'd humility uphold'st,
 "Ev'n as the florist props the drooping rose,
 "But quell'st tyrannic pride with peerless power,
 "Ev'n as the tempest rives the stubborn oak:
 "O all-sufficient, all-beneficent,
 "Thou God of Goodness and of Glory, hear!
 "Bless all mankind; and bring them in the end
 "To heav'n, to immortality, and Thee!"

§ 33. Ode to Wisdom. Miss Carter.

THE solitary bird of night
 Through the pale shades now wings his flight,
 And quits the time-shook tow'r,
 Where, shelter'd from the blaze of day,
 In philosophic gloom he lay,
 Beneath his ivy bow'r.

With joy I hear the solemn sound,
 Which midnight echoes waft around,
 And sighing gales repeat:
 Fav'rite of Pallas! I attend,
 And faithful to thy summons, bend
 At Wisdom's awful seat.

She loves the cool, the silent eve,
 Where no false shows of life deceive,
 Beneath the lunar ray:
 Here Folly drops each vain disguise,
 Nor sports her gaily-color'd dyes,
 As in the glare of day.

O Pallas! queen of ev'ry art
 "That glads the sense or mends the heart,"
 Blest source of purer joys;
 In ev'ry form of beauty bright,
 That captivates the mental sight
 With pleasure and surprise;

To thy unspotted shrine I bow,
 Assist thy modest suppliant's vow,
 That breathes no wild desires:
 But, taught by thy unerring rules
 To shun the fruitless wish of fools,
 To nobler views aspires.

Not Fortune's gem, Ambition's plume,
 Nor Cytherea's fading bloom,
 Be objects of my pray'r;
 Let av'rice, vanity, and pride,
 These glitt'ring envied toys divide,
 The dull rewards of care.

To me thy better gifts impart,
 Each moral beauty of the heart,
 By studious thought refin'd:
 For wealth, the smiles of glad content;
 For pow'r, its amplest, best extent,
 An empire o'er my mind.

When Fortune drops her gay parade,
 When Pleasure's transient roses fade,
 And wither in the tomb,
 Unchang'd is thy immortal prize,
 Thy ever-verdant laurels rise
 In undecaying bloom.

By thee protected, I defy
 The coxcomb's sneer, the stupid lie
 Of ignorance and spite;
 Alike contemn the leaden fool,
 And all the pointed ridicule
 Of undiscerning wit.

From envy, hurry, noise, and strife,
 The dull impertinence of life,
 In thy retreat I rest;
 Pursue thee to thy peaceful groves,
 Where Plato's sacred spirit roves,
 In all thy graces drest.

He bid Ilyssus' tuneful stream
 Convey the philosophic theme
 Of perfect, fair, and good:
 Attentive Athens caught the sound,
 And all her list'ning sons around
 In awful silence stood.

Reclaim'd, her wild licentious youth
 Confess'd the potent voice of truth,
 And felt its just control:
 The passions ceas'd their loud alarms,
 And virtue's soft persuasive charms
 O'er all their senses stole.

Thy breath inspires the poet's song,
 The patriot's free unbiass'd tongue,
 The hero's gen'rous strife:
 Thine are retirement's silent joys,
 And all the sweet endearing ties
 Of still, domestic life.

No more to fabled names confin'd,
 To thee, supreme, all perfect mind,
 My thoughts direct their flight:
 Wisdom's thy gift, and all her force
 From thee deriv'd, unchanging source
 Of intellectual light!

O send her sure, her steady ray,
 To regulate my doubtful way,
 Thro' life's perplexing road;
 The mists of error to control;
 And thro' its gloom direct my soul
 To happiness and good!

Beneath her clear discerning eye,
 The visionary shadows fly
 Of Folly's painted show:
 She sees, thro' ev'ry fair disguise,
 That all but Virtue's solid joys
 Is vanity and woe.

§ 34. On Human Life. Ogilvie.

BY Time's slow-heaving tide, the works of man
 Are whelm'd; how sinks beneath his wasteful sway

The pride of empire! Glittering for a while,
 The gilded vessels sport along the stream,
 Fann'd with propitious gales: the sides are firm,
 The hull capacious, and the swelling sails
 Float to the breeze of summer. Ah! how soon,
 Torn by the tempest's wildly-rushing wing,
 And foundering on the deep it lies deform'd,
 A shatter'd wreck! Nor less on life descends

The storm impetuous; let thy silver hairs,
Time-hallow'd Age, be witness! the dim eye,
The tottering tread, the furrow'd cheek, the hand
Yet trembling from the blast. Tell, ye who tend
The bed of death, how o'er the helpless race
Of human victims strides the harpy foot
Of Misery triumphant! while the veins
Shrink to the Fever's scorching breath, or feel,
Starting, the fiery dart of racking Pain,
That writhes to agony; or loosen'd shake
Before Consumption; when her baleful sponge
Drops its green poison on the springs of life.

Nor these alone pursue the race of man.
Far other ills await; far other woes
Like vultures revel on his canker'd heart.

O ye who nightly languish o'er the tomb,
Wheresleeps thy dust, Eugenio! Ye whose hearts
O'er Virtue bleed, when, reeking from the scourge
Of dire Oppression, in some lonely cave
She pines all desolate!—Ye powers that haunt
The vale where Genius breathes her plaint alone,
Wild to the whistling wind; her voice unheard
As airs that warble o'er the murmuring dale
Remote, to Solitude's enchanting ear!

O tell, why wrapt in Grandeur's floating robe,
Vice mounts her throne! while trembling at the bar,

Stands Innocence appall'd! Tell why the hand
Of strutting Impudence, unlicens'd, grasps
The palm of Worth, and his indignant brow
Looks down, while meek-ey'd Modesty, dismay'd,
Mantles her cheek in crimson, and retires
To blush in silence! why thy purple ear,
High-plum'd Ambition, bathes its rolling wheels
In blood, and o'er pale Virtue's streaming corse,
Rapid and madd'ning springs to reach the goal!

§ 35. Diseases are the Consequence of Intemperance.
Ogilvie.

LONG o'er the lili'd plain I cast my eye,
Long mark'd the crowd that roam'd delighted
Alternate transport, pity, love, and fear, [on;
Work'd in my bosom.

I look'd, and hovering o'er the flowery turf
Were seen innumerable shapes, whose wings
Wav'd on the wind, or o'er the glittering field
Who trod in silence. Care with lowering brow
Slow stalk'd; and Slander, speckled as the snake
That stings th' unwary traveller, along
The tainted earth trail'd loose, or borne on wings
Blue as the brimstone's gleam, in secret shot
Her poison'd arrows. Pining Envy gnaw'd
A blasted laurel, from the locks of Fame
Snatch'd, as the goddess to her lips applied
Her mighty trump, and swell'd a solemn note
To Homer's venerable name.—Not far
Stood Discord foaming. Riot double-tongu'd,
And gleaming Frenzy, and thy yellow wing,
Revenge, fell fiend! shook plagues, and thro' the Infus'd their venom to the inmost soul. [breast
O'er all, Disease her beauty-withering wand
Wav'd high; and, heaving on the heavy air,
Her raven pinions, bloated as she sail'd

The face of Nature. Shapeless was her form'
And void; the owl's ill-omen'd eyes high-raised,
Speckled her front, her nostrils breath'd a cloud,
Pale Famine's sallow hand had scoop'd her cheek;
And a green viper form'd her forked tongue.

—Slow she mov'd
Along the troubled air; and from a bag
(Wrought deep by Envy in her midnight den)
Scatter'd the seeds of death. The sparkling bowl
Receiv'd them now; and now the enfeebled corse,
Lank, open, spent, at each unfolding pore
Suck'd in the poison, as it rose decay'd,
Livid and weak, from Pleasure's loose embrace.

Soon o'er each withering cheek the baleful
pow'r

Had spread unseen her life-consuming stain:
Nor knew th' exulting youth, who quaff'd elate
The draught delicious, that untimely frost
Lurk'd by the springs of life; and secret chill'd
The florid blood, and mark'd him for the tomb.

At last with weak step came the trembling Sage,
Haggard, and shrinking from the breeze; his voice
Was deep, and hollow; and the loose nerves shook
His silver-sprinkled head. He thus began:

"O yet, while Heav'n suspends your doom, be
My sons! O cease to listen to the lure [wise;
Of Pleasure! Death attends her forward step,
And Peril lays the sure, tho' secret snare.
Hear, then, the words of age. Yet Fate bestows
One hour; yet Virtue, with indulgent voice,
By me invites to shun the devious maze
Of Error!—Yet to crown with length of days,
With joy, with happiness, your bold career
She hopes! O snatch the proffer'd boon! be rous'd;
Ere her strong arm tremendous at your heads
Shall launch th' avenging thunder; ere dismay'd,
Perplex'd, bewilder'd, wild, you seek the haunt
Of Peace, when darkness veils her lowly cot:
And mourn her gentle smile for ever gone."

§ 36. Wishes obtained often make Men miserable.
Ogilvie.

YET warn'd, behold what danger marks the path
Of high-brow'd Opulence! Intemperance,
The fruitful parent of Disease, behind
Reels loose, and silent plants th' entangling snare.
Oft when, to vengeance rous'd, th' Eternal dooms
Some wretch to misery extreme, he grants
The fervent wish; he gives th' insatiate eye
To rove transported o'er its golden store;
The heart to swell like Xerxes', when he view'd
His hosts that wrapt th' immeasurable plain,
And triumph'd in his pow'r. Thus fares the wretch

As, whirl'd by Passion, thro' life's dusty field
He bursts exulting. On the drooping head
Of Merit, shy to censure, and repress
By decent Pride from murmuring; his rude hand
Arrests the palm. He gains it; and ador'd
By Folly's wond'ring train, presumptuous shapes
His course; till like a canker at the root,
That secret riots on the vital stream,

Slow, but sure-wasting Fate in silence takes
Th' inevitable aim; and spares the hand
Of hoary Time his silver and his scythe.

O weak! thro' Passion's erring glass to view
What cooler thought condemns! 'Think'st thou
the man

By birth exalted, by the lavish hand [hours
Of Fortune crown'd with honor, whose gay
Dance to the melting lute's melodious lay,
Is happy?—Know, thy wandering search mistakes
The shade for substance. Could thy thought
The mind within, what real ills excite [explore
The mental tumult; to the trembling gaze
Of Fear what phantoms of imagin'd woes
Swim thro' the dark night's solemn noon, when Sleep

Shakes not her poppies o'er his longing eyes,
That roll in vain; what inward-eating care
Preys on his pamper'd blood; what wishes wild;
What dread of future misery; what dreams
Of horror gleam athwart the sable scroll [scene
Where Memory prints her records: would the Wake thee to envy? Would thy wishing soul
Pant for the boon that glitters to the eye,
But stings the heart, and poisons all its joy?

I read thy secret doubt:—" 'Tis Guilt that shades

The brow of Grandeur; 'tis the solemn peal
Of Conscience, thundering in the mental ear,
That wakes to quick sensation. To the dream
Of harmless Innocence, no Demon shakes
His front terrific: all is calm within,
And tun'd to perfect harmony.—Yet Peace
May dwell with Opulence; one happy mind
May eye rejoicing its extended pow'r

To work for man; exulting as it views
A smiling tribe around, snatch'd from the grasp
Of ruthless want, and basking in the beam
Of joy, to transport kindling, and to love."

'Tis just—The noble mind by Fortune rais'd,
And warm'd by strong benevolence to spread
Its happiness to all, displays to man
His Maker's image. To a godlike few
Heav'n gives at once the virtue and the power;
Yet plants not Opulence for these a snare,
That poverty escapes?—The wretch who dragg'd
His sire relentless to the tomb—say rose
No boiling passion in his rankled heart?

Felt not his tortur'd breast the venom sting
Of keen Impatience? Flam'd not to his eye
Gold, titles, honor; all the tinsel-show,
That on the sullen front of Avarice wakes
A gloomy smile, and bids his little thought
Receive a gleam of joy? From these secure
Lives not untutor'd Indigence at ease?
And steals unseen along the vale of Life,
Calm, peaceful, shelter'd from the stormy blast
That shakes Ambition's plume: that wrecks the hope,

The quiet of mankind?—What though to these
The means are scanty?—O'er the roughen'd cheek

Health sheds her bloom; their sinews knit by toil,
Robust and firm, support th' allotted weight,

And gradual loos'd by long revolving years,
Resign their charge, untainted by the seeds
Of lurking Death, slow thro' the form diffus'd
From meals that Nature nauseates, from the cup
Where the wine laughs, and on the mantling
cheek

Kindles a transient blush, but works disease,
And shades the temples with untimely snow.

§ 37. DEITY. Boyse.

*Unde nil majus generatur Ipso,
Nec viget quidquam simile aut secundum.* HOR.

FROM earth's low prospects and deceitful aims,
From wealth's allurements, and ambition's
dreams,

The lover's raptures, and the hero's views,
All the false joys mistaken man pursues;
The schemes of science, the delights of wine,
Or the more pleasing follies of the Nine!
Recal, fond Bard, thy long-enchanted sight
Deluded with the visionary light!

A nobler theme demands thy sacred song,
A theme beyond or man's or angel's tongue!

But oh, alas! unhallow'd and profane,
How shalt thou dare to raise the heav'nly strain?
Do Thou, who from the altar's living fire
Isaiah's tuneful lips didst once inspire,
Come to my aid, celestial Wisdom, come;
From my dark mind dispel the doubtful gloom:
My passions still, my purer breast inflame,
To sing that God from whom existence came;
Till heav'n and nature in the concert join,
And own the Author of their birth divine.

I. ETERNITY.

Whence sprung this glorious frame! or whence
The various forms the universe compose? [arose
From what Almighty Cause, what mystic springs
Shall we derive the origin of things?

Sing, heav'nly Guide! whose all-efficient light
Drew dawning planets from the womb of night!
Since reason, by the sacred dictates taught,
Adores a pow'r beyond the reach of thought.

First Cause of causes! Sire supreme of birth!
Sole light of heav'n! acknowledg'd life of earth!
Whose Word from nothing call'd this beauteous
whole,

This wide expanded All from pole to pole!
Who shall prescribe the boundary to Thee,
Or fix the æra of Eternity?

Should we, deceiv'd by error's sceptic glass,
Admit the thought absurd—That Nothing was!
Thence would this wild, this false conclusion
flow,

That Nothing rais'd this beauteous All below!
When from disclosing darkness splendor breaks,
Associate atoms move, and matter speaks,
When non-existence bursts its close disguise,
How blind are mortals—not to own the skies!

If one vast void eternal held its place,
Whence started time? or whence expanded space?
What gave the slumb'ring mass to feel a change,
Or bid consenting worlds harmonious range?

Could Nothing link the universal chain?
 No, 'tis impossible, absurd, and vain!
 Here reason its eternal Author finds,
 The whole who regulates, unites, and binds,
 Enlivens matter, and produces minds!
 Inactive Chaos sleeps in dull repose,
 Nor knowledge thence, nor free volition flows!
 A nobler source those powers ethereal show,
 By which we think, design, reflect, and know;
 These from a cause superior date their rise,
 "Abstract in essence from material ties."

An origin immortal, as supreme,
 From whose pure day, celestial rays! they came:
 In whom all possible perfections shine,
 Eternal, self-existent, and divine!

From this great spring of uncreated might!
 This all-resplendent orb of vital light;
 Whence all-created beings take their rise,
 Which beautify the earth, or paint the skies!
 Profusely wide the boundless blessings flow,
 Which heav'n enrich and gladden worlds below!
 Which are no less, when properly defin'd,
 Than emanations of th' Eternal Mind!
 Hence triumphs truth beyond objection clear
 (Let unbelief attend and shrink with fear!)
 That what for ever was—must surely be
 Beyond commencement, and from period free;
 Drawn from himself his native excellence,
 His date eternal, and his space immense!
 And all of whom that man can comprehend,
 Is, that he ne'er began, nor e'er shall end.

In him from whom existence boundless flows,
 Let humble faith its sacred trust repose:
 Assur'd on his eternity depend,
 "Eternal Father! and eternal Friend!"
 Within that mystic circle safety seek,
 No time can lessen, and no force can break!
 And, lost in adoration, breathe his praise,
 High Rock of ages, ancient Sire of days!

II. UNITY.

Thus recogniz'd, the spring of life and thought!
 Eternal, self-deriv'd, and unbegot,
 Approach, celestial Muse, th' empyreal throne,
 And awfully adore th' exalted One!
 In nature pure, in place supremely free,
 And happy in essential unity!
 Bless'd in himself, had from his forming hand
 No creatures sprung to hail his wide command;
 Bless'd, had the sacred fountain ne'er run o'er,
 A boundless sea of bliss that knows no shore!

Nor sense can two prime origins conceive,
 Nor reason two eternal Gods believe!
 Could the wild Manichæan own that guide,
 The good would triumph, and the ill subside!
 Again would vanquish'd Aramianus bleed,
 And darkness from prevailing light recede!

In diff'rent individuals we find
 An evident disparity of mind;
 Hence ductile thought a thousand changes gains,
 And actions vary as the will ordains;
 But should two Beings, equally supreme,
 Divided pow'r and parted empire claim;

How soon would universal order cease!
 How soon would discord harmony displace!
 Eternal schemes maintain eternal fight,
 Nor yield, supported by eternal might;
 Where each would uncontroll'd his aim pursue,
 The links dis sever, or the chain renew!
 Matter from motion cross impressions take,
 As serv'd each pow'r his rival's pow'r to break,
 While neutral Chaos from his deep recess,
 Would view the never-ending strife increase,
 And bless the contest that secur'd his peace!
 While new creations would opposing rise,
 And elemental war deform the skies!
 Around wild uproar and confusion hurl'd,
 Eclipse the heav'ns, and waste the ruin'd world.

Two independent causes to admit,
 Destroys religion, and debases wit;
 The first by such an anarchy undone,
 The last acknowledges its source but one.
 As from the main the mountain rills are drawn,
 That wind irriguous through the flow'ry lawn;
 So, mindful of their spring, one course they keep,

Exploring, till they find their native deep!
 Exalted Power, invisible, supreme,
 Thou sov'reign, sole unutterable Name!
 As round thy throne thy flaming seraphs stand,
 And touch the golden lyre with trembling hand;
 Too weak thy pure effulgence to behold,
 With their rich plumes their dazzled eyes infold;
 Transported with the ardors of thy praise,
 The holy! holy! holy! anthem raise!
 To them responsive, let creation sing,
 Thee, indivisible eternal King!

III. SPIRITUALITY.

O say, celestial Muse! whose purer birth
 Disdains the low material ties of earth;
 By what bright images shall be defin'd
 The mystic nature of th' eternal Mind!
 Or how shall thought the dazzling height explore,
 Where all that reason can—is to adore!

That God's an immaterial essence pure,
 Whom figure can't describe, nor parts immure;
 Incapable of passions, impulse, fear,
 In good pre-eminent, in truth severe:
 Unmix'd his nature, and sublim'd his pow'rs
 From all the gross allay that tempers ours;
 In whose clear eye the bright angelic train
 Appear suffus'd with imperfection's stain!
 Impervious to the man's or seraph's eye,
 Beyond the ken of each exalted high.
 Him would in vain material semblance feign,
 Or figur'd shrines the boundless God contain;
 Object of faith! he shuns the view of sense,
 Lost in the blaze of sightless excellence!
 Most perfect, most intelligent, most wise,
 In whom the sanctity of pureness lies;
 In whose adjusting mind the whole is wrought,
 Whose form is spirit, and whose essence thought!
 Are truths inscrib'd by Wisdom's brightest ray,
 In characters that gild the face of day!

Reason confess'd (howe'er we may dispute),
 Fix'd boundary! discovers man from brute;

But, dim to us, exerts its fainter ray,
 Depress'd in matter, and allied to clay!
 In forms superior kindles less confin'd,
 Whose dress is æther, and whose substance mind;
 Yet all from Him, supreme of causes, flow,
 To Him their pow'rs and their existence owe;
 From the bright cherub of the noblest birth,
 To the poor reasoning glow-worm plac'd on earth;
 From matter then to spirit still ascend,
 Thro' spirit still refining, higher tend;
 Pursue, on knowledge bent, the pathless road,
 Pierce thro' infinitude in quest of God!
 Still from thy search, the centre still shall fly,
 Approaching still—thou never shalt come nigh!
 So its bright orb th' aspiring flame would join,
 But the vast distance mocks the fond design.
 If he, Almighty! whose decree is fate,
 Could, to display his pow'r, subvert his state;
 Bid from his plastic hand, a greater rise,
 Produce a master, and resign his skies;
 Impart his incommunicable flame,
 The mystic number of th' Eternal Name;
 Then might revolting reason's feeble ray
 Aspire to question God's all-perfect day!
 Vain task! the clay in the directing hand,
 The reason of its form might so demand,
 As man presume to question his dispose
 From whom the power he thus abuses flows.

Here point, fair Muse! the worship God requires,

The soul inflam'd with chaste and holy fires?
 Where love celestial warms the happy breast,
 And from sincerity the thought's express'd;
 Where genuine piety, and truth refin'd,
 Re-consecrate the temple of the mind;
 With grateful flames the living altars glow,
 And God descends to visit man below!

IV. OMNIPRESENCE.

Thro' th' unmeasurable tracts of space
 Go, Muse divine! and present Godhead trace!
 See where, by place uncircumscrib'd as time,
 He reigns extended; and he shines sublime!
 Shouldst thou above the heav'n of heav'ns ascend,
 Couldst thou below the depth of depths descend,
 Could thy fond flight beyond the starry sphere
 The radiant morning's lucid pinions bear!
 There should his brighter presence shine confest,
 There his almighty arm thy course arrest!
 Couldst thou the thickest veil of night assume,
 Or think to hide thee in the central gloom!
 Yet there, all patent to his piercing sight,
 Darkness itself would kindle into light:
 Not the dark mansions of the silent grave,
 Nor darker hell, from his perception save;
 What pow'r, alas! thy footsteps can convey
 Beyond the reach of omnipresent day?

In his wide grasp, and comprehensive eye,
 Immediate worlds on worlds unnumber'd lie;
 Systems inclos'd in his perception roll,
 Whose all-informing mind directs the whole:
 Lodg'd in his grasp, their certain ways they know;
 Plac'd in that sight from whence can nothing go.

On earth his footstool fix'd, in heav'n his seat;
 Enthron'd he dictates, and his word is fate.

Nor want his shining images below;
 In streams that murmur, or in winds that blow;
 His spirit broods along the boundless flood,
 Smiles in the plain, and whispers in the wood;
 Warms in the genial sun's enliv'ning ray,
 Breathes in the air, and beautifies the day!

Should man his great immensity deny,
 Man might as well usurp the vacant sky:
 For were he limited in date, or view,
 Thence were his attributes imperfect too;
 His knowledge, power, his goodness all confin'd,
 And lost th' idea of a ruling Mind!
 Feeble the trust, and comfortless the sense
 Of a defective partial Providence!
 Boldly might then his arm injustice brave,
 Or innocence in vain his mercy crave;
 Dejected virtue lift its hopeless eye,
 And heavy sorrow vent the heartless sigh!
 An absent God no abler to defend,
 Protect, or punish, than an absent friend;
 Distant alike our wants and griefs to know,
 To ease the anguish, or prevent the blow,
 If he, Supreme Director, were not near,
 Vain were our hope, and empty were our fear;
 Unpunish'd vice would o'er the world prevail,
 And unrewarded virtue toil—to fail!
 The moral world a second chaos lie,
 And nature sicken to the thoughtful eye!

E'en the weak embryo, ere to life it breaks,
 From his high pow'r its slender texture takes;
 While in his book the various parts inroll'd,
 Increasing, own eternal Wisdom's mould.

Nor views he only the material whole,
 But pierces thought, and penetrates the soul!
 Ere from the lips the vocal accents part,
 Or the faint purpose dawns within the heart,
 His steady eye the mental birth perceives,
 Ere yet to us the new idea lives!

Knows what we say, ere yet the words proceed,
 And ere we form th' intention, marks the deed!

But Conscience, fair vicegerent-light within,
 Asserts its Author, and restores the scene!
 Points out the beauty of the govern'd plan,
 "And vindicates the ways of God to man."

Then, sacred Muse, by the vast prospect fir'd,
 From heaven descended, as by heaven inspir'd;
 His all-enlight'ning Omnipresence own, [known;
 Whence first thou feel'st thy dwindling presence
 His wide Omniscience, justly, grateful, sing,
 Whence thy weak science prunes its callow wing!
 And bless th' Eternal, All-informing Soul,
 Whose sight pervades, whose knowledge fills the whole.

V. IMMUTABILITY.

As the Eternal and Omniscient Mind,
 By laws not limited, nor bounds confin'd,
 Is always independent, always free,
 Hence shines confess'd Immutability!
 Change, whether the spontaneous child of will,
 Or birth of force—is imperfection still.

But he, all-perfect, in himself contains
 Pow'r self-deriv'd, and from himself he reigns!
 If, alter'd by constraint, we could suppose,
 That God his fix'd stability should lose;
 How startles reason at a thought so strange!
 What pow'r can force Omnipotence to change?
 If from his own divine productive thought,
 Were yet the stranger alteration wrought;
 Could excellence supreme new rays acquire?
 Or strong perfection raise its glories higher?
 Absurd!—his high meridian brightness glows,
 Never decreases, never overflows!
 Knows no addition, yields to no decay,
 The blaze of incommunicable day!

Below through different forms does matter
 And life subsist from elemental change; [range,
 Liquids condensing shapes terrestrial wear,
 Earth mounts in fire, and fire dissolves in air;
 While we, inquiring phantoms of a day,
 Inconstant as the shadows we survey!
 With them, along Time's rapid current pass,
 And haste to mingle with the parent mass;
 But Thou, Eternal Lord of life divine!
 In youth immortal shalt for ever shine!
 No change shall darken thy exalted name;
 From everlasting ages still the same!

If God, like man, his purpose could renew,
 His laws could vary, or his plans undo;
 Desponding Faith would droop its cheerless wing,
 Religion deaden to a lifeless thing!
 Where could we, rational, repose our trust,
 But in a Pow'r immutable as just?
 How judge of revelation's force divine,
 If truth unerring gave not the design?
 Where, as in nature's fair according plan,
 All smiles benevolent and good to man.

Plac'd in this narrow clouded spot below,
 We darkly see around and darkly know!
 Religion lends the salutary beam,
 That guides our reason thro' the dubious gleam;
 Till sounds the hour, when he who rules the skies
 Shall bid the curtain of Omniscience rise!
 Shall dissipate the mists that veil our sight,
 And show his creatures—all his ways are right!

Then, when astonish'd nature feels its fate,
 And fetter'd time shall know his latest date;
 When earth shall in his mighty blaze expire,
 Heav'n melt with heat, and worlds dissolve in fire!
 The universal system shrink away,
 And ceasing orbs confess th' almighty sway!
 Immortal He, amidst the wreck secure,
 Shall sit exalted, permanently pure!
 As in the sacred bush, shall shine the same,
 And from the ruin raise a fairer frame!

VI. OMNIPOTENCE.

Far hence, ye visionary charming maids,
 Ye fancied nymphs that haunt the Grecian shades!
 Your birth who from conceiving fiction drew,
 Yourselves producing phantoms as untrue:
 But come, superior Muse! divinely bright,
 Daughter of heav'n, whose offspring still is light;
 Oh condescend, celestial sacred guest!
 To purge my sight, and animate my breast,

While I presume Omnipotence to trace,
 And sing that Pow'r who peopled boundless space! [rode,

Thou present wert, when forth th' Almighty
 While Chaos trembled at the voice of God!
 Thou saw'st, when o'er th' immense his line he drew,

When Nothing from his Word existence knew!
 His Word, that wak'd to life the vast profound,
 While conscious light was kindled at the sound!
 Creation fair surpris'd the angelic eyes,
 And sov'reign Wisdom saw that all was wise!

Him, sole Almighty, nature's book displays,
 Distinct the page, and legible the rays!
 Let the wild sceptic his attention throw
 To the broad horizon, or earth below;
 He finds thy soft impression touch his breast,
 He feels the God, and owns him unconfest:
 Should the stray pilgrim, tir'd of sands and skies,
 In Libya's waste behold a palace rise,
 Would he believe the charm from atoms wrought?
 Go, atheist, hence, and mend thy juster thought!

What hand, Almighty Architect! but thine,
 Could give the model of this vast design?
 What hand but thine adjust th' amazing whole?
 And bid consenting systems beauteous roll!
 What hand but thine apply the solar light?
 Ever bestowing, yet for ever bright!
 What hand but thine the starry train array,
 Or give the Moon to shed her borrow'd ray?
 What hand but thine the azure convex spread?
 What hand but thine compose the ocean's bed?
 To the vast main the sandy barrier throw,
 And with the feeble curb restrain the foe!
 What hand but thine the wint'ry flood assuage,
 Or stop the tempest in its wildest rage!

Thee infinite! what finite can explore?
 Imagination sinks beneath thy pow'r;
 Thee could the ablest of thy creatures know,
 Lost were thy Unity, for he were Thou!
 Yet present to all sense thy pow'r remains,
 Reveal'd in nature, nature's Author reigns!
 In vain would error from conviction fly,
 Thou ev'ry where art present to the eye!
 The sense how stupid, and the sight how blind,
 That fails this universal truth to find!

Go! all the sightless realms of space survey,
 Returning trace the Planetary Way!
 The sun that in his central glory shines,
 While ev'ry planet round his orb inclines;
 Then at our intermediate globe repose,
 And view yon lunar satellite that glows!
 Or cast along the azure vault the eye,
 When golden day enlightens all the sky;
 Around, behold earth's variegated scene,
 The mingling prospects, and the flow'ry green;
 The mountain brow, the long-extended wood,
 Or the rude rock that threatens o'er the flood!
 And say, are these the wild effects of chance?
 Oh, strange effect of reas'ning ignorance!

Nor pow'r alone confess'd in grandeur lies,
 The glitt'ring planet or the painted skies!
 Equal, the elephant's or emmet's dress
 The wisdom of Omnipotence confess;

Equal, the cumbrous whale's enormous mass,
 With the small insects in the crowded grass;
 The mite that gambols in its acid sea,
 In shape a porpus, though a speck to thee!
 Ev'n the blue down the purple plum surrounds,
 A living world, thy failing sight confounds,
 To him a peopled habitation shows,
 Where millions taste the bounty God bestows!

Great Lord of life, whose all-controlling might Thro' wide creation beams divinely bright,
 Nor only does thy pow'r in forming shine,
 But to annihilate, dread King! is thine: [hand,
 Shouldst thou withdraw thy still-supporting
 How languid nature would astonish'd stand!
 Thy frown the ancient realm of night restore,
 And raise a blank—where systems smil'd before!

See in corruption, all-surprising state,
 How struggling life eludes the stroke of fate;
 Shock'd at the scene, though sense averts its eye,
 Nor stops the wondrous process to descry;
 Yet juster thought the mystic change pursues,
 And with delight Almighty Wisdom views!
 The brute, the vegetable world surveys,
 Sees life subsisting ev'n from life's decays!
 Marks the self-taught, the pensive reptile come,
 Spin his thin shroud, and living build his tomb!
 With conscious care his former pleasures leave,
 And dress him for the bus'ness of the grave!
 Thence, pass'd the short-liv'd change, renew'd
 he springs,

Admires the skies, and tries his silken wings!
 With airy flight the insect roves abroad,
 And scorns the meaner earth he lately trod!
 Thee, potent, let deliver'd Israel praise,
 And to thy name their grateful homage raise!
 Thee, potent God! let Egypt's land declare,
 That felt thy justice awfully severe!
 How did thy frown benight the shadow'd land,
 Nature revers'd, how own thy high command!
 When jarring elements their use forgot,
 And the sun felt thy overcasting blot!
 When earth produc'd the pestilential brood,
 And the foul stream was crimson'd into blood!
 How deep the horrors of that awful night,
 How strong the terror, and how wild the fright!
 When o'er the land thy sword vindictive pass'd,
 And men and infants breath'd at once their last,
 How did thy arm thy favour'd tribes convey!
 Thy light conducting point the patent way!
 Obedient ocean to their march divide
 The wat'ry wall distinct on either side;
 While thro' the deep the long procession led,
 And saw the wonders of the oozy bed!
 Nor long they march'd, till, black'ning in the rear,
 The vengeful tyrant and his host appear!
 Plunge down the steep, the waves thy nod obey,
 And whelm the threat'ning storm beneath the sea!

Nor yet thy pow'r thy chosen train forsook,
 When thro' Arabia's sands their way they took;
 By day thy cloud was present to the sight,
 Thy fiery pillar led the march-by night;
 Thy hand amidst the waste their table spread,
 With feather'd viands, and with heav'nly bread:

When the dry wilderness no streams supplied,
 Gush'd from the yielding rock the vital tide!
 What limits can Omnipotence confine?
 What obstacles oppose thy arm divine?
 Since stones and waves their settled laws forego,
 Since seas can harden, and since rocks can flow!

On Sinai's top, the Muse with ardent wing
 The triumphs of Omnipotence would sing!
 When o'er its airy brow thy cloud display'd,
 Involv'd the nations 'in its awful shade;
 When shrunk the earth from thy approaching
 And the rock trembled to its rooted base: [face,
 Yet where thy majesty divine appear'd,
 Where shone thy glory, and thy voice was heard;
 Ev'n in the blaze of that tremendous day,
 Idolatry its impious rites could pay! [vade,
 Oh shame to thought!—thy sacred throne in-
 And brave the bolt that linger'd round its head!

VII. WISDOM.

O thou, who, when th' Almighty form'd this All,
 Upheld the scale, and weigh'd each balanc'd ball;
 And as his hand completed each design,
 Number'd the work, and fix'd the seal divine;
 O Wisdom infinite! creation's soul,
 Whose rays diffuse new lustre o'er the whole,
 What tongue shall make thy charms celestial known? [own?

What hand, fair Goddess! paint thee, but thy
 What though in nature's universal store
 Appear the wonders of almighty pow'r;
 Pow'r, unattended, terror would inspire,
 Aw'd must we gaze, and comfortless admire.
 But when fair Wisdom joins in the design,
 The beauty of the whole result's divine!

Hence life acknowledges its glorious cause,
 And matter owns its great Disposer's laws;
 Hence in a thousand different models wrought,
 Now fix'd to quiet, now allied to thought;
 Hence flow the forms and properties of things,
 Hence rises harmony, and order springs;
 Else, had the mass a shapeless chaos lay,
 Nor ever felt the dawn of Wisdom's day!

See, how associate round their central sun,
 Their faithful rings the circling planets run;
 Still equi-distant, never yet too near,
 Exactly tracing their appointed sphere.
 Mark how the moon our flying orb pursues,
 While from the sun her monthly light renews;
 Breathes her wide influence on the world below,
 And bids the tides alternate ebb and flow.
 View how in course the constant seasons rise,
 Deform the earth or beautify the skies:
 First, Spring advancing with her flow'ry train;
 Next, Summer's hand, that spreads the sylvan
 scene;

Then, Autumn, with her yellow harvests crown'd,
 And trembling Winter close the annual round.
 The vegetable tribes observant trace,
 From the tall cedar to the creeping grass:
 The chain of animated beings scale,
 From the small reptile to the enormous whale;
 From the strong eagle stooping through the skies,
 To the low insect that escapes thy eyes!

And see, if see thou canst, in ev'ry frame,
Eternal Wisdom shine confest the same:
As proper organs to the least assign'd,
As proper means to propagate the kind,
As just the structure, and as wise the plan,
As in this lord of all—debating man!

Hence, reas'ning creature, thy distinction find,
Nor longer to the ways of Heav'n be blind.
Wisdom in outward beauty strikes the mind,
But outward beauty points a charm behind.
What gives the earth, the ambient air, or seas,
The plain, the river, or the wood to please?
Oh say, in whom does beauty's self reside,
The Beautifier, or the beautified?
There dwells the Godhead in the bright disguise,
Beyond the ken of all created eyes;
His works our love and our attention steal;
His works (surprising thought) the Maker veil;
Too weak our sight to pierce the radiant cloud,
Where Wisdom shines, in all her charms avow'd.

O gracious God, omnipotent and wise,
Unerring Lord, and Ruler of the skies!
All-condescending, to my feeble heart
One beam of thy celestial light impart;
I seek not sordid wealth, or glitt'ring pow'r;
O grant me Wisdom—and I ask no more!

VIII. PROVIDENCE.

As from some level country's shelter'd ground,
With towns replete, with green enclosures bound,
Where the eye kept within the verdant maze,
But gets a transient vista as it strays;
The pilgrim to some rising summit tends,
Whence opens all the scene as he ascends;
So Providence the friendly height supplies,
Where all the charms of Deity surprise;
Here Goodness, Power, and Wisdom, all unite,
And dazzling glories whelm the ravish'd sight!

Almighty Cause! 'tis thy preserving care,
That keeps thy works for ever fresh and fair;
The sun, from thy superior radiance bright,
Eternal sheds his delegated light;
Lends to his sister orb inferior day,
And paints the silver moon's alternate ray:
Thy hand the waste of eating Time renews:
Thou shedd'st the tepid morning's balmy dews:
When raging winds the blacken'd deep deform,
Thy spirit rides commission'd in the storm;
Bids at thy will the slack'ning tempest cease,
While the calm ocean smooths its ruffled face;
When lightnings thro' the air tremendous fly,
Or the blue plague is loosen'd to destroy,
Thy hand directs, or turns aside the stroke;
Thy word the fiend's commission can revoke;
When subterraneous fires the surface heave,
And towns are buried in the yawning grave;
Thou suffer'st not the mischief to prevail;
Thy sov'reign touch the recent wound can heal.
To Zembla's rock thousand'st the cheerful gleam;
O'er Libya's sands thou pour'st the cooling stream;
Thy watchful providence o'er all intends,
Thy works obey their great Creator's ends.
When man too long the paths of vice pursued,
Thy hand prepar'd the universal flood;

Gracious, to Noah gave the timely sign,
To save a remnant from the wrath divine!
One shining waste the globe terrestrial lay,
And the ark heav'd along the troubled sea;
Thou bad'st the deep his ancient bed explore,
The clouds their wat'ry deluge pour'd no more!
The skies were clear'd—the mountain tops were
The dove pacific brought the olive green. [seen,
On Ararat the happy Patriarch tost,
Found the recover'd world his hopes had lost;
There his fond eyes review'd the pleasing scene,
The earth all verdant, and the air serene!
Its precious freight the guardian ark display'd,
While Noah grateful adoration paid!
Beholding in the many-tinctur'd bow
The promise of a safer world below.

When wild ambition rear'd its impious head,
And rising Babel Heav'n with pride survey'd;
Thy word the mighty labor could confound,
And leave the mass to moulder with the ground.

From Thee all human actions take their springs,

The rise of empires, and the fall of kings!
See the vast theatre of time display'd,
While o'er the scene succeeding heroes tread!
With pomp the shining images succeed,
What leaders triumph! and what monarchs bleed!
Perform the parts thy providence assign'd,
Their pride, their passions, to thy ends inclin'd:
A while they glitter in the face of day,
Then at thy nod the phantoms pass away;
No traces left of all the busy scene,
But that remembrance says—The things have been!
“But (questions Doubt) whence sickly nature
“The ague-fits her face so soft reveals? [feels “Whence earthquakes heave the earth's asto-nish'd breast? [fest?
“Whence tempests rage? or yellow plagues in-“Whence draws rank Afric her empoison'd
“Or liquid fires explosive Ætna pour?” [store?
Go, sceptic mole! demand th' eternal Cause,
The secret of his all-preserving laws;
The depths of wisdom infinite explore,
And ask thy Maker—why he knows no more?

Thy error still in moral things as great,
As vain to cavil at the ways of fate,
To ask why prosp'rous vice so oft succeeds,
Why suffers innocence, or virtue bleeds?
Why monsters, nature must with blushes own,
By crimes grow pow'rful, and disgrace a throne?
Why saints and sages, mark'd in every age,
Perish the victims of tyrannic rage;
Why Socrates for truth and freedom fell,
Or Nero reign'd the delegate of hell?
In vain by reason is the maze pursued,
Of ill triumphant, and afflicted good:
Fix'd to the hold, so might the sailor aim
To judge the pilot, and the steerage blame,
As we direct to God what should belong,
Or say, that sov'reign wisdom governs wrong.

Nor always vice does uncorrected go,
Nor virtue unrewarded pass below!
Oft sacred Justice lifts her awful head,
And dooms the tyrant and th' usurper dead;

Oft Providence, more friendly than severe,
Arrests the hero in his wild career;
Directs the fever, poniard, or the ball,
By which an Ammon, Charles, or Cæsar fall;
Or, when the cursed Borgias brews the cup
For merit, bids the monster drink it up;
On violence oft retorts the cruel spear,
Or fetters cunning in its crafty snare;
Relieves the innocent, exalts the just,
And lays the proud oppressor in the dust!

But, fast as Time's swift pinions can convey,
Hastens the pomp of that tremendous day,
When to the view of all created eyes
God's high tribunal shall majestic rise,
When the loud trumpet shall assemble round
The dead, reviving at the piercing sound!
Where men and angels shall to audit come,
And millions yet unborn receive their doom!
Then shall fair Providence, to all display'd,
Appear divinely bright without a shade;
In light triumphant all her acts be shown,
And blushing Doubt eternal Wisdom own!

Mean-while, thou great Intelligence supreme,
Sov'reign Director of this mighty frame,
Whose watchful hand, and all-observing ken,
Fashions the hearts, and views the ways of men;
Whether thy hand the plenteous table spread,
Or measure sparingly the daily bread;
Whether or wealth or honors gild the scene,
Or wants deform, or wasting anguish stain;
On thee let truth and virtue firm rely,
Bless'd in the care of thy approving eye!
Know that thy providence, their constant friend,
Thro' life shall guard them, and in death attend;
With everlasting arms their cause embrace,
And crown the paths of piety with peace.

IX. GOODNESS.

Ye seraphs, who God's throne encircling still,
With holy zeal your golden censers fill;
Ye flaming ministers, to distant lands
Who bear, obsequious, his divine commands;
Ye cherubs, who compose the sacred choir,
Attuning to the voice th' angelic lyre!
Or ye, fair natives of the heav'nly plain,
Who once were mortal—now a happier train!
Who spend in peaceful love your joyful hours,
In blissful meads, and amaranthine bowers,
Oh lend one spark of your celestial fire,
Oh deign my glowing bosom to inspire,
And aid the Muse's unexperienc'd wing,
While Goodness, theme divine, she soars to sing!

Though all thy attributes, divinely fair,
Thy full perfection, glorious God! declare;
Yet if one beams superior to the rest,
Oh let thy Goodness fairest be confess'd:
As shines the moon amidst her starry train,
As breathes the rose amongst the flow'ry scene,
As the mild dove her silver plumes displays,
So sheds thy mercy its distinguish'd rays.

This led, Creator mild, thy gracious hand,
When formless Chaos heard thy high command;
When, pleas'd, the eye thy matchless works re-
view'd,
And Goodness, placid, spoke that all was good!

Nor only does in heav'n thy Goodness shine;
Delighted nature feels its warmth divine;
The vital sun's illuminating beam,
The silver crescent, and the starry gleam,
As day and night alternate they command,
Proclaim that truth to ev'ry distant land.

See smiling nature, with thy treasures fair,
Confess thy bounty and parental care;
Renew'd by thee, the faithful seasons rise,
And earth with plenty all her sons supplies.
The generous lion, and the brinded boar,
As nightly through the forest walks they roar,
From thee, Almighty Maker, seek their prey,
Nor from thy hand unsated go away:

To thee for meat the callow ravens cry,
Supported by thy all-preserving eye:
From thee the feather'd natives of the plain,
Or those who range the field or plough the main,
Receive with constant course th' appointed food,
And taste the cup of universal good;

Thy hand thou open'st, million'd myriads live;
Thou frown'st, they faint; thou smil'st, and they

On virtue's acre, as on rapine's stores, [revive!
See Heav'n impartial deal the fruitful show'rs!
'Life's common blessings all her children share,'
Tread the same earth, and breathe a gen'ral air!
Without distinction boundless blessings fall,
And Goodness like the sun, enlightens all!

Oh man! degenerate man! offend no more!
Go, learn of brutes thy Maker to adore!
Shall these through ev'ry tribe his bounty own,
Of all his works ungrateful thou alone!

Deaf when the tuneful voice of mercy cries,
And blind when sov'reign Goodness charms the eyes! [phemes,

Mark how the wretch his awful name blas-
His pity spares—his clemency reclaims!

Observe his patience with the guilty strive,
And bid the criminal repent and live;
Recal the fugitive with gentle eye,
Beseech the obstinate, he would not die!

Amazing tenderness—amazing most,
The soul on whom such mercy should be lost!

But wouldst thou view the rays of goodness join

In one strong point of radiance all divine,
Behold, celestial Muse! yon eastern light;
To Bethlem's plain, adoring, bend thy sight!
Hear the glad message to the shepherds giv'n,
Good will on earth to man, and peace in heav'n!
Attend the swains, pursue the starry road,
And hail to earth the Saviour and the God!

Redemption! oh thou beauteous mystic plan!
Thou salutary source of life to man!

What tongue can speak thy comprehensive grace?
What thought thy depths unfathomable trace?
When lost in sin our ruin'd nature lay,
When awful justice claim'd her righteous pay!
See the mild Saviour bend his pitying eye,
And stop the lightning just prepar'd to fly!

(O strange effect of unexampled love!)
View him descend the heav'nly throne above;
Patient the ills of mortal life endure,
Calm, though revil'd; and innocent, though poor.

Uncertain his abode, and coarse his food,
His life one fair continued scene of good;
For us sustain the wrath to man decreed,
The victim of eternal justice bleed!
Look! to the cross the Lord of life is tied,
They pierce his hands, and wound his sacred
side;

See God expires! our forfeit to atone,
While nature trembles at his parting groan!

Advance, thou hopeless mortal, steel'd in guilt,
Behold, and, if thou canst, forbear to melt!
Shall Jesus die thy freedom to regain,
And wilt thou drag the voluntary chain?
Wilt thou refuse thy kind assent to give,
When dying he looks down to bid thee live!
Perverse, wilt thou reject the proffer'd good,
Bought with his life, and streaming in his blood?
Whose virtue can thy deepest crimes efface,
Re-heal thy nature, and confirm thy peace!
Can all the errors of thy life atone,
And raise thee from a rebel to a son!

O blest Redeemer, from thy sacred throne,
Where saints and angels sing thy triumphs won!
(Where from the grave thou rais'd thy glorious
head,

Chain'd to thy car the pow'rs infernal led)
From that exalted height of bliss supreme,
Look down on those who bear thy sacred name;
Restore their ways, inspire them by thy grace,
Thy laws to follow, and thy steps to trace;
Thy bright example to thy doctrine join,
And by their morals prove their faith divine!

Nor only to thy church confine thy ray,
O'er the glad world thy healing light display;
Fair Sun of Righteousness! in beauty rise,
And clear the mists that cloud the mental skies!
To Judah's remnant, now a scatter'd train,
Oh great Messiah! show thy promis'd reign;
O'er earth as wide thy saving warmth diffuse,
As spreads the ambient air, or falling dews;
And haste the time when, vanquish'd by thy
pow'r,

Death shall expire, and sin defile no more!

X. RECTITUDE.

Hence distant far, ye sons of earth profane,
The loose, ambitious, covetous, or vain:
Ye worms of pow'r! ye minion'd slaves of state,
The wanton vulgar, and the sordid great!
But come, ye purer souls, from dross refin'd,
The blameless heart and uncorrupted mind!
Let your chaste hands the holy altars raise,
Fresh incense bring, and light the glowing blaze,
Your grateful voices aid the Muse to sing
The spotless justice of th' Almighty King!

As only rectitude divine he knows,
As truth and sanctity his thoughts compose;
So these the dictates which th' Eternal Mind
To reasonable beings has assign'd;
These has his care on ev'ry mind impress'd,
The conscious seals the hand of Heav'n attest!
When man, perverse, for wrong forsakes the right,

He still attentive keeps the fault in sight;

Demands that strict atonement should be made,
And claims the forfeit on th' offender's head!

But Doubt demands—"Why man dispos'd
"this way?

"Why left the dang'rous choice to go astray?
"If Heav'n that made him did the fault foresee,
"Thence follows, Heav'n is more to blame than No—had to good the heart alone inclin'd, [he."
What toil, what prize had virtue been assign'd?
From obstacles her noblest triumphs flow,
Her spirits languish when she finds no foe!
Man might perhaps have so been happy still,
Happy, without the privilege of will,
And just, because his hands were tied from ill!
O wondrous scheme, to mend th' almighty plan,
By sinking all the dignity of man!

Yet turn thy eyes, vain sceptic, own thy pride,
And view thy happiness and choice allied;
See virtue from herself her bliss derive,
A bliss, beyond the pow'r of thrones to give;
See vice, of empire and of wealth possess'd,
Pine at the heart, and feel herself unblest'd:
And, say, were yet no farther marks assign'd,
Is man ungrateful? or is Heav'n unkind?

"Yes, all the woes from Heav'n permissive
fall,

"The wretch adopts—the wretch improves them
From his wild lust, or his oppressive deed, [all."
Rapes, battles, murders, sacrilege proceed;
His wild ambition thins the peopled earth,
Or from his av'rice famine takes her birth;
Had nature giv'n the hero wings to fly,
His pride would lead him to attempt the sky!
To angels make the pigmy's folly known,
And draw ev'n pity from th' eternal throne.

Yet while on earth triumphant vice prevails,
Celestial Justice balances her scales;
With eye unbiass'd all the scene surveys,
With hand impartial ev'ry crime she weighs;
Oft close pursuing at his trembling heels,
The man of blood her awful presence feels;
Oft from her arm, amidst the blaze of state,
The regal tyrant, with success elate,
Is forc'd to leap the precipice of fate!
Or if the villain pass unpunish'd here,
'Tis but to make the future stroke severe;
For soon or late eternal Justice pays
Mankind the just desert of all their ways.

'Tis in that awful all-disclosing day,
When high Omniscience shall her books display,
When Justice shall present her strict account,
While Conscience shall attest the due amount;
That all who feel, condemn the dreadful rod,
Shall own that righteous are the ways of God!

Oh then, while penitence can fate disarm,
While ling'ring Justice yet withholds its arm;
While heavenly patience grants the precious time,
Let the lost sinner think him of his crime;
Immediate, to the seat of mercy fly,
Nor wait to-morrow—lest to-night he die!

But tremble, all ye sins of blackest birth,
Ye giants, that deform the face of earth;
Tremble, ye sons of aggravated guilt,
And, ere too late, let sorrow learn to melt:

Remorseless Murder! drop thy hand severe,
 And bathe thy bloody weapon with a tear;
 Go, Lust impure! converse with friendly light,
 Forsake the mansions of defiling night;
 Quit, dark Hypocrisy, thy thin disguise,
 Nor think to cheat the notice of the skies!
 Unsocial Avarice, thy grasp forego,
 And bid the useful treasure learn to flow!
 Restore, Injustice, the defrauded gain!
 Oppression, bend to ease the captive's chain,
 Ere awful Justice strike the fatal blow!
 And drive you to the realms of night below!

But doubt resumes—"If Justice has decreed
 "The punishment proportion'd to the deed;
 "Eternal misery seems too severe,
 "Too dread a weight for wretched man to bear!
 "Too harsh!—that endless torments should repay
 "The crimes of life—the errors of a day!"

In vain our reason would presumptuous pry;
 Heav'n's counsels are beyond conception high:
 In vain would thought his measur'd justice scan;
 His ways how different from the ways of man!
 Too deep for thee his secrets are to know,
 Inquire not, but more wisely shun the woe;
 Warn'd by his threat'nings, to his laws attend,
 And learn to make Omnipotence thy friend!
 Our weaker laws, to gain the purpos'd ends,
 Oft pass the bounds the lawgiver intends,
 Oft partial pow'r, to serve its own design,
 Warps from the text, exceeding reason's line;
 Strikes bias'd at the person, not the deed,
 And sees the guiltless unprotected bleed!

But God alone, with unimpassion'd sight,
 Surveys the nice barrier of wrong and right;
 And while subservient, as his will ordains,
 Obedient nature yields the present means;
 While neither force nor passions guide his views,
 Ev'n Evil works the purpose he pursues!
 That bitter spring, the source of human pain!
 Heal'd by his touch does mineral health contain;
 And dark affliction at his potent rod,
 Withdraws its cloud, and brightens into good.

Thus human justice (far as man can go)
 For private safety strikes the dubious blow;
 But Rectitude divine, with nobler soul,
 Consults each individual in the whole!
 Directs the issues of each moral strife,
 And sees creation struggle into life!

And you, ye happier souls! who in his ways
 Observant walk, and sing his daily praise;
 Ye righteous few! whose calm unruffled breasts
 No fears can darken, and no guilt infests,
 To whom his gracious promises extend,
 In whom they centre, and in whom shall end,
 Which (bless'd on that foundation sure who build)
 Shall with eternal Justice be fulfill'd:
 Ye sons of life, to whose glad hope is giv'n
 The bright reversion of approaching heav'n,
 With grateful hearts his glorious praise recite,
 Whose love from darkness call'd you out to
 So let your piety reflective shine, [light;
 As men may thence confess his truth divine!
 And when this mortal veil, as soon it must,
 Shall drop, returning to its native dust;

The work of life with approbation done,
 Receive from God your bright immortal crown.

XI. GLORY.

But oh, advent'rous Muse, restrain thy flight,
 Dare not the blaze of uncreated light!
 Before whose glorious throne with dread surprise
 Th' adoring seraph veils his dazzled eyes;
 Whose pure effulgence, radiant to excess,
 No colors can describe, or words express!
 All the fair beauties, all the lucid stores,
 Which o'er thy work thy hand resplendent pours,
 Feeble, thy brighter glories to display,
 Pale as the moon before the solar ray!

See on his throne the gaudy Persian plac'd,
 In all the pomp of the luxuriant east!
 While mingling gems a borrow'd day unfold,
 And the rich purple waves emboss'd with gold;
 Yet mark this scene of painted grandeur yield
 To the fair lily that adorns the field!
 Obscur'd, behold that fainter lily lies,
 By the rich bird's inimitable dyes;
 Yet these survey confounded and outdone
 By the superior lustre of the sun;
 That sun himself withdraws his lessen'd beam
 From Thee, the glorious Author of his frame!

Transcendent Pow'r! sole arbiter of fate!
 How great thy glory! and thy bliss how great!
 To view from thy exalted throne above,
 (Eternal source of light, and life, and love)
 Unnumber'd creatures draw their smiling birth,
 To bless the heav'ns, or beautify the earth,
 While systems roll, obedient to thy view,
 And worlds rejoice—which Newton never knew.

Then raise the song, the gen'ral anthem raise,
 And swell the concert of eternal praise!
 Assist, ye orbs, that form this boundless whole,
 Which in the womb of space unnumber'd roll;
 Ye planets who compose our lesser scheme,
 And bend, concertive, round the solar frame;
 Thou eye of nature! whose extensive ray
 With endless charms adorns the face of day;
 Consenting raise th' harmonious joyful sound,
 And bear his praises thro' the vast profound!
 His praise, ye winds that fan the cheerful air,
 Swift as they pass along your pinions bear!
 His praise let ocean through her realms display,
 Far as her circling billows can convey!
 His praise, ye misty vapors, wide diffuse,
 In rains descending, or in milder dews!
 His praises whisper, ye majestic trees,
 As your tops rustle to the gentle breeze!
 His praise around, ye flow'ry tribes, exhale,
 Far as your sweets embalm the spicy gale!
 His praise, ye dimpled streams, to earth reveal,
 As pleas'd ye murmur through the flow'ry vale!
 His praise, ye feather'd choirs, distinguish'd sing,
 As to your notes the vocal forests ring!
 His praise proclaim, ye monsters of the deep,
 Who in the vast abyss your revels keep!
 Or ye, fair natives of our earthly scene,
 Who range the wilds, or haunt the pasture green!
 Nor thou, vain lord of earth, with careless ear
 The universal hymn of worship hear!

But ardent in the sacred chorus join,
Thy soul transported with the task divine!
While by his works th' Almighty is confess'd,
Supremely glorious, and supremely bless'd!

Great Lord of life! from whom this humble
Derives the pow'r to sing thy holy name, [frame
Forgive the lowly Muse, whose artless lay
Has dar'd thy sacred Attributes survey!
Delighted oft through Nature's beauteous field
Has she ador'd thy wisdom bright reveal'd;
Oft have her wishes aim'd the secret song,
But awful rev'rence still withheld her tongue.
Yet as thy bounty lent the reas'ning beam,
As feels my conscious breast thy vital flame,
So, blest Creator, let thy servant pay
His mite of gratitude this feeble way;
Thy goodness own, thy Providence adore
And yield thee only—what was thine before.

§ 38. The Day of Judgement: a Seatonian Prize Poem. By Dr. Glynn.

THY Justice, heav'nly King! and that great day,
When Virtue, long abandon'd and forlorn,
Shall raise her pensive head; and Vice, that erst
Rang'd unrepov'd and free, shall sink appall'd;
I sing advent'rous—But what eye can pierce
The vast immeasurable realms of space,
O'er which Messiah drives his flaming car
To that bright region, where enthron'd he sits,
First-born of Heav'n, to judge assembled worlds,
Cloth'd in celestial radiance? Can the Muse,
Her feeble wing all damp with earthly dew,
Sore to that bright empyreal, where around
Myriads of angels, God's perpetual choir,
Hymn hallelujahs, and in concert loud
Chant songs of triumph to their Maker's praise?—
Yet will I strive to sing, albeit unus'd
To tread poetic soil. What though the wilds
Of Fancy, me enchanted, ne'er could lure
To rove o'er fairy lands; to swim the streams
That through her valleys wave their mazy way;
Or climb her mountain tops; yet will I raise
My feeble voice to tell what harmony
(Sweet as the music of the rolling spheres)
Attunes the moral world: that Virtue still
May hope her promis'd crown; that Vice may dread
Vengeance, though late; that reas'ning Pride may own

Just, though unsearchable, the ways of Heav'n.

Sceptic! whoe'er thou art, who say'st the soul,
That divine particle which God's own breath
Inspir'd into the mortal mass, shall rest
Annihilate, till Duration has unroll'd
Her never-ending line; tell, if thou know'st,
Why every nation, every clime, though all
In laws, in rites, in manners disagree,
With one consent expect another world,
Where wickedness shall weep? Why Paynim-
Fabled Elysian plains, Tartarian lakes, [bards,
Styx and Cocytus? Tell, why Heli's sons
Have feign'd a paradise of mirth and love,
Banquets, and blooming nymphs? Or rather tell,
Why, on the brink of Orellana's stream,
Where never Science rear'd her sacred torch,

Th' untutor'd Indian dreams of happier worlds
Behind the cloud-topt hill? Why in each breast
Is plac'd a friendly monitor, that prompts,
Informs, directs, encourages, forbids?
Tell, why on unknown evil grief attends,
Or joy on secret good? Why conscience acts
With tenfold force, when sickness, age, or pain
Stands tott'ring on the precipice of death?
Or why such horror gnaws the guilty soul
Of dying sinners, while the good man sleeps
Peaceful and calm, and with a smile expires?
Look round the world! with what a partial hand
The scale of bliss and mis'ry is sustain'd!

Beneath the shade of cold obscurity
Pale Virtue lies; no arm supports her head,
No friendly voice speaks comfort to her soul,
Nor soft-eyed Pity drops a melting tear;
But, in their stead, Contempt and rude Disdain
Insult the banish'd wanderer: on she goes,
Neglected and forlorn: Disease and Cold,
And Famine, worst of ills, her steps attend!
Yet patient, and to Heaven's just will resign'd,
She ne'er is seen to weep, or heard to sigh.

Now turn your eyes to yon sweet-smelling bow'r,
Where, flush'd with all the insolence of wealth,
Sits pamper'd Vice! For him th' Arabian gale
Breathes forth delicious odours; Gallia's hills
For him pour nectar from the purple vine.

Nor think for these he pays the tribute due
To Heav'n: of Heav'n he never names the name,
Save when with imprecations dark and dire
He points his jest obscene. Yet buxom Health
Sits on his rosy cheek; yet Honor gilds
His high exploits; and downy-pinion'd Sleep
Sheds a soft opiate o'er his peaceful couch. [this,

Seest thou this, righteous Father! seest thou
And wilt thou ne'er repay? Shall good and ill
Be carried undistinguish'd to the land
Where all things are forgot?—Ah, no! the day
Will come when Virtue from the cloud shall burst,
That long obscur'd her beams, when Sin shall fly
Back to her native Hell; there sink eclips'd
In penal darkness; where no star shall rise,
Nor ever sunshine pierce th' impervious gloom.

On that great day the solemn trump shall sound,
(That trump which once in heav'n non man's revolt Convok'd th' astonish'd seraphs) at whose voice
Th' unpeopled graves shall pour forth all their dead.
Then shall th' assembled Nations of the Earth
From ev'ry quarter at the judgement-seat
Unite; Egyptians, Babylonians, Greeks,
Parthians; and they who dwelt on Tiber's banks,
Names fam'd of old: or who of later age,
Chinese and Russian, Mexican and Turk,
Tenant the wild terrene; and they who pitch
Their tents on Niger's banks; or, where the sun
Pours on Golconda's spires his early light,
Drink Ganges' sacred stream. At once shall rise,
Whom distant ages to each other's sight
Had long denied: before the throne shall kneel
Some great Progenitor, while at his side
Stand his descendants through a thousand lines.
Whate'er their nation, and whate'er their rank,
Heroes and patriarchs, slaves and sceptred kings,

With equal eye the God of all shall see,
 And judge with equal love. What though the
 With costly pomp and aromatic sweets [great
 Embalm'd his poor remains; or through the dome
 A thousand tapers shed their gloomy light,
 While solemn organs to his parting soul
 Chanted slow orisons? Say, by what mark
 Dost thou discern him from that lowly swain
 Whose mould'ring bones beneath the thorn-bound
 Long lay neglected? All at once shall rise, [turf
 But not to equal glory; for, alas!
 With howlings dire, and execrations loud,
 Some wail their fatal birth.—First among these,
 Behold the mighty murd'ers of mankind:
 They who in sport whole kingdoms slew; or they
 Who to the tott'ring pinnacle of power [curse
 Waded through seas of blood! How will they
 The madness of ambition! how lament [wife
 Their dear-bought laurels; when the widow'd
 And childless mother at the judgement seat [they Plead trumpet-tongu'd against them!—Here are
 Who sunk an aged father to the grave;
 Or with unkindness hard, and cold disdain,
 Slighted a brother's suff'rings.—Here are they
 Whom fraud and skilful treachery long secur'd;
 Who from the infant virgin tore her dow'r,
 And ate the orphan's bread; who spent their
 In selfish luxury; or o'er their gold [stores
 Prostrate and pale ador'd the useless heap.
 Here too who stain'd the chaste connubial bed!—
 Who mix'd the pois'nous bowl;—or broke the
 Of hospitable friendship;—and the wretch [ties
 Whose listless soul, sick with the cares of life,
 Unsummon'd, to the presence of his God
 Rush'd in with insult rude. How would they joy
 Once more to visit earth, and, though oppress'd
 With all that pain and famine can inflict,
 Pant up the hill of life? Vain wish! the judge
 Pronounces doom eternal on their heads,
 Perpetual punishment. Seek not to know
 What punishment! for that th' Almighty will
 Has hid from mortal eyes: and shall vain man
 With curious search refin'd presume to pry
 Into thy secrets, Father? No! let him
 With humble patience all thy works adore,
 And walk in all thy paths; so shall his meed
 Be great in Heav'n, so haply shall he 'scape
 Th' immortal worm and never-ceasing fire.

But who are they, who bound in tenfold chains
 Stand horribly aghast? This is that crew
 Who strove to pull Jehovah from his throne,
 And in the place of heaven's eternal King
 Set up the phantom Chance. For them in vain
 Alternate seasons cheer'd the rolling year;
 In vain the sun o'er herb, tree, fruit, and flow'r
 Shed genial influence mild; and the pale moon
 Repair'd her waning orb.—Next these is plac'd
 The vile blasphemer; he whose impious wit
 Profan'd the sacred mysteries of faith,
 And 'gainst th' impenetrable walls of Heav'n
 Planted his feeble battery. By these stands
 The Arch-Apostate: he with many a wile
 Exhorts them still to foul revolt. Alas!
 No hope have they from black despair, no ray

Shines through the gloom to cheer their sinking souls.

In agonies of grief they curse the hour
 When first they left Religion's onward way.

These on the left are rang'd: but on the right
 A chosen band appears, who fought beneath
 The banner of Jehovah, and defied
 Satan's united legions. Some, unmov'd
 At the grim tyrant's frown, o'er barb'rous climes
 Diffus'd the Gospel's light: some long immur'd
 (Sad servitude!) in chains and dungeons pin'd;
 Or, rack'd with all the agonies of pain, [they Breath'd out their faithful lives. Thrice happy
 Whom Heav'n elected to that glorious strife!—
 Here are they plac'd, whose kind munificence
 Made heaven-born Science raise her drooping
 And on the labors of a future race [head;
 Entail'd their just reward. Thou amongst these,
 Good Seaton! whose well-judg'd benevolence
 Fost'ring fair Genius, bade the poet's hand
 Bring annual off'rings to his Maker's shrine,
 Shall find the generous care was not in vain.—
 Here is that fav'rite band, whom mercy mild,
 God's best-lov'd attribute, adorn'd; whose gate
 Stood ever open to the stranger's call;
 Who fed the hungry; to the thirsty lip
 Reach'd out the friendly cup; whose care benign
 From the rude blast secur'd the pilgrim's side;
 Who heard the widow's tender tale, and shook
 The galling shackle from the pris'ner's feet;
 Who each endearing tie, each office knew
 Of meek-eyed, heaven-descended Charity.
 O Charity, thou nymph divinely fair!
 Sweeter than those whom ancient poets bound
 In amity's indissoluble chain,
 The Graces! how shall I essay to paint
 Thy charms, celestial maid! and in rude verse
 Blazon those deeds thyself didst ne'er reveal?
 For thee nor rankling Envy can infect,
 Nor Rage transport, nor high o'erweening Pride
 Puff up with vain conceit: ne'er didst thou
 To see the sinner as a verdant tree [smile
 Spread his luxuriant branches o'er the stream;
 While, like some blasted trunk, the righteous fall
 Prostrate, forlorn. When prophecies shall fail, When tongues shall cease, when knowledge is no more,

And this great day is come, thou by the throne
 Shalt sit triumphant. Thither, lovely maid!
 Bear me, O bear me on thy soaring wing,
 And through the adamant gates of Heav'n
 Conduct my steps, safe from the fiery gulph
 And dark-abyss, where Sin and Satan reign!

But can the Muse, her numbers all too weak,
 Tell how that restless element of fire
 Shall wage with seas and earth intestine war,
 And deluge all creation? Whether (so
 Some think) the comet, as through fields of air
 Lawless he wanders, shall rush headlong on Thwarting th'ecliptic, where th'unconscious earth
 Rolls in her wonted course; whether the sun
 With force centripetal into his orb
 Attract her, long reluctant; or the caves,
 Those dead volcanos, where engend'ring lie

Sulphureous minerals, from the dark abyss
 Pour streams of liquid fire; while from above,
 As erst on Sodom, Heaven's avenging hand
 Rains fierce combustion.—Where are now the
 Of art, the toil of ages?—Where are now [works
 Th' imperial cities, sepulchres and domes,
 Trophies and pillars? Where is Egypt's boast,
 Those lofty pyramids, which high in air
 Rear'd their aspiring heads, to distant times
 Of Memphian pride a lasting monument?—
 Tell me where Athens rais'd her tow'rs? where Thebes

Open'd her hundred portals?—Tell me where Stood sea-girt Albion? where Imperial Rome,
 Propt, by seven hills, sat like a sceptred queen,
 And aw'd the tributary world to peace?—
 Show me the rampart which o'er many a hill,
 Through many a valley, stretch'd its wide extent,
 Rais'd by that mighty monarch to repel
 The roving Tartar, when with insult rude
 'Gainst Pekin's tow'rs he bent th' unerring bow.
 But what is mimic art? E'en Nature's work,
 Seas, meadows, pastures, the meand'ring streams,
 And everlasting hills, shall be no more.
 No more shall Teneriff, cloud-piercing height!
 O'erhang th' Atlantic surge; nor that fam'd cliff,
 Thro' which the Persian steer'd with many a sail,
 Throw to the Lemnian isle its evening shade
 O'er half the wide Ægean.—Where are now
 The Alps that confin'd with unnumber'd realms,
 And from the Black Sea to the ocean stream
 Stretch'd their extended arms!—Where's Ararat,
 That hill on which the faithful patriarch's ark,
 Which seven long months had voyag'd o'er its top,
 First rested, when the earth with all her sons,
 As now by streaming cataracts of fire,
 Was whelm'd by mighty waters?—All at once
 Are vanish'd and dissolv'd; no trace remains,
 No mark of vain distinction: heaven itself,
 That azure vault, with all those radiant orbs,
 Sinks in the universal ruin lost.

No more shall planets round their central sun
 Move in harmonious dance; no more the moon
 Hang out her silver lamp; and those fix'd stars,
 Spangling the golden canopy of night,
 Which oft the Tuscan with his optic glass
 Call'd from their wondrous height, to read their
 And magnitude, some winged minister [names
 Shall quench; and (surest sign that all on earth
 Is lost) shall rend from heaven the mystic bow.

Such is that awful, that tremendous day,
 Whose coming who shall tell? For as a thief
 Unheard, unseen, it steals with silent pace [I sit,
 Through night's dark gloom—Perhaps as here
 And rudely carol these incondite lays, [mouth
 Soon shall the hand be check'd, and dumb the
 That lisps the falt'ring strain.—O may it ne'er
 Intrude unwelcome on an ill-spent hour;
 But find me wrapt in meditations high,
 Hymning my great Creator!—

———“ Pow'r Supreme!
 “ O everlasting King! to thee I kneel,
 “ To thee I lift my voice. With fervent heat
 “ Melt, all ye elements! And thou high heav'n,

“ Shrink like a shrivell'd scroll! But think, O Lord,
 “ Think on the best, the noblest of thy works;
 “ Think on thine own bright image! Think on “ Him

“ Who died to save us from thy righteous wrath;
 “ And 'midst the wreck of worlds remember man!

§ 39. On the Deity. Mrs. Barbauld.

I READ God's awful name emblazon'd high,
 With golden letters on th' illumin'd sky;
 Nor less the mystic characters I see,
 Wrought in each flower, inscrib'd on ev'ry tree;
 In ev'ry leaf that trembles to the breeze
 I hear the voice of God among the trees.
 With thee in shady solitudes I walk,
 With thee in busy crowded cities talk;
 In every creature own thy forming power,
 In each event thy providence adore.

Thy hopes shall animate my drooping soul,
 Thy precepts guide me, and thy fear control:
 Thus shall I rest, unmov'd by all alarms,
 Secure within, the temple of thine arms,
 From anxious cares, from gloomy terrors free,
 And feel myself omnipotent in thee.

Then when the last, the closing hour draws nigh,
 And earth recedes before my swimming eye;
 When trembling on the doubtful edge of fate
 I stand, and stretch my view to either state;
 Teach me to quit this transitory scene
 With decent triumph and a look serene;
 Teach me to fix my ardent hopes on high,
 And, having liv'd to thee, in thee to die.

§ 40. HYMNS. By Mrs. Barbauld.

Quid prius dicam solitis Parentis
 Laudibus? qui res hominum ac deorum,
 Qui mare ac terras, variisque mundum
 Temperat horis? HORAT.

HYMN I.

JEHOVAH reigns: let ev'ry nation hear,
 And at his footstool bow with holy fear;
 Let Heav'n's high arches echo with his name,
 And the wide peopled earth his praise proclaim;
 Then send it down to hell's deep glooms resounding, [ing.
 Thro' all her caves in dreadful murmurs sound-
 He rules with wide and absolute command
 O'er the broad ocean and the stedfast land:
 Jehovah reigns, unbounded and alone,
 And all creation hangs beneath his throne:
 He reigns alone; let no inferior nature
 Usurp or share the throne of the Creator.
 He saw the struggling beams of infant light
 Shoot thro' the massy gloom of ancient night;
 His spirit hush'd the elemental strife,
 And brooded o'er the kindling seeds of life:
 Seasons and months began the long procession,
 And measur'd o'er the year in bright succession.
 The joyful sun sprung up th' ethereal way,
 Strong as a giant, as a bridegroom gay;
 And the pale moon diffus'd her shadowy light
 Superior o'er the dusky brow of night;

Ten thousand glitt'ring lamps the skies adorning, [morning.
 Numerous as dew-drops from the womb of Earth's blooming face with rising flow'rs he
 dress'd,
 And spread a verdant mantle o'er her breast;
 Then from the hollow of his hand he pours
 The circling waters round her winding shores.
 The new-born world in their cool arms embracing,
 And with soft murmurs still her banks caressing.

At length she rose complete in finish'd pride,
 All fair and spotless, like a virgin bride:
 Fresh with untarnish'd lustre as she stood,
 Her Maker bless'd his work, and call'd it good,
 The morning stars, with joyful acclamation,
 Exulting sung, and hail'd the new creation.

Yet this fair world, the creature of a day,
 Tho' built by God's right hand, must pass
 away;
 And long oblivion creep o'er mortal things,
 The fate of empires, and the pride of kings:
 Eternal night shall veil their proudest story,
 And drop the curtain o'er all human glory.

The sun himself, with weary clouds opprest,
 Shall in his silent, dark pavilion rest:
 His golden urn shall broke and useless lie,
 Amidst the common ruins of the sky!
 The stars rush headlong in the wild commotion,
 And bathe their glitt'ring foreheads in the ocean.

But fix'd, O God! for ever stands thy throne;
 Jehovah reigns, a universe alone;
 Th' eternal fire that feeds each vital flame,
 Collected or diffus'd is still the same.
 He dwells within his own unfathom'd essence,
 And fills all space with his unbounded presence.

But oh! our highest notes the theme debase,
 And silence is our least injurious praise: [trol,
 Cease, cease your songs, the daring flight con-
 Revere him in the stillness of the soul;
 With silent duty meekly bend before him,
 And deep within your inmost hearts adore him.

HYMN II.

PRAISE to God, immortal praise*,
 For the love that crowns our days;
 Bounteous source of every joy,
 Let thy praise our tongues employ;

For the blessings of the field,
 For the stores the gardens yield,
 For the vine's exalted juice,
 For the gen'rous olive's use;

Flocks that whiten all the plain,
 Yellow sheaves of ripen'd grain,
 Clouds that drop their fatt'ning dews,
 Suns that temp'rate warmth diffuse;

All that Spring with bounteous hand
 Scatters o'er the smiling land;
 All that lib'ral Autumn pours
 From her rich o'erflowing stores:

These to thee, my God, we owe,
 Source whence all our blessings flow;
 And for these my soul shall raise
 Grateful vows and solemn praise.

Yet, should rising whirlwinds tear
 From its stem the rip'ning ear;
 Should the fig-tree's blasted shoot
 Drop her green untimely fruit;
 Should the vine put forth no more,
 Nor the olive yield her store;
 Though the sick'ning flocks should fall,
 And the herds desert the stall;

Should thine alter'd hand restrain
 The early and the latter rain;
 Blast each op'ning bud of joy,
 And the rising year destroy;

Yet to thee my soul shall raise
 Grateful vows, and solemn praise!
 And, when ev'ry blessing's flown,
 Love thee—for thyself alone.

HYMN III.

For Easter-Sunday.

AGAIN the lord of life and light
 Awakes the kindling ray;
 Unseals the eyelids of the morn,
 And pours increasing day.

O what a night was that which wrapt
 The heathen world in gloom!
 O what a sun which broke this day,
 Triumphant from the tomb!

This day be grateful homage paid,
 And loud hosannas sung;
 Let gladness dwell in ev'ry heart,
 And praise on ev'ry tongue.

Ten thousand diff'ring lips shall join
 To hail this welcome morn;
 Which scatters blessings from its wings
 To nations yet unborn.

Jesus, the friend of human kind,
 With strong compassion mov'd,
 Descended, like a pitying God,
 To save the souls he lov'd.

The pow'rs of darkness leagu'd in vain
 To bind his soul in death;
 He shook their kingdom, when he fell,
 With his expiring breath.

Not long the toils of hell could keep
 The hope of Judah's line;
 Corruption never could take hold
 On aught so much divine.

* Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines, the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat, the flocks shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation.
 HABAKKUK, iii. 17, 18.

And now his conqu'ring chariot wheels
Ascend the lofty skies ;
While broke, beneath his pow'rful cross,
Death's iron sceptre lies.

Exalted high at God's right hand,
And Lord of all below,
Through him is pard'ning love dispens'd,
And boundless blessings flow.

And still for erring, guilty man
A brother's pity flows ;
And still his bleeding heart is touch'd
With mem'ry of our woes.

To thee, my Saviour and my King,
Glad homage let me give ;
And stand, prepar'd, like thee to die,
With thee that I may live.

HYMN IV.

BEHOLD where, breathing love divine,
Our dying Master stands !
His weeping followers, gath'ring round,
Receive his last commands.

From that mild Teacher's parting lip
What tender accents fell !
The gentle precept which he gave Became its author well.

" Bless'd is the man whose soft'ning heart
" Feels all another's pain :
" To whom the supplicating eye
" Was never rais'd in vain ;

" Whose breast expands with gen'rous warmth
" A stranger's woes to feel :
" And bleeds in pity o'er the wound
" He wants the pow'r to heal.

" He spreads his kind supporting arms
" To ev'ry child of grief ;
" His secret bounty largely flows,
" And brings unask'd relief.

" To gentle offices of love
" His feet are never slow ;
" He views, through mercy's melting eye,
" A brother in a foe.

" Peace from the bosom of his God,
" My peace to him I give !
" And when he kneels before the throne,
" His trembling soul shall live.

" To him protection shall be shown,
" And mercy from above
" Descend on those who thus fulfil
" The perfect law of love."

HYMN V.

AWAKE, my soul ! lift up thine eyes,
See where thy foes against thee rise,
In long array, a numerous host ;
Awake, my soul, or thou art lost.

Here giant Danger threat'ning stands
Must ring his pale terrific bands ;
There Pleasure's silken banners spread,
And willing souls are captive led.

See where rebellious passions rage,
And fierce desires and lusts engage ;
The meanest foe of all the train
Has thousands and ten thousands slain.

Thou tread'st upon enchanted ground,
Perils and snares beset thee round ;
Beware of all, guard ev'ry part,
But most the traitor in thy heart.

Come then, my soul, now learn to wield
The weight of thine immortal shield ;
Put on the armor from above
Of heav'nly truth and heav'nly love.

The terror and the charm repel,
And pow'rs of earth, and pow'rs of hell ;
The man of Calvary triumph'd here ;
Why should his faithful followers fear ?

§ 41. An Address to the Deity. Mrs. Barbauld.
Deus est quodcunque vides, quocunque moveris.

LUCAN.

GOD of my life, and author of my days !
Permit my feeble voice to lisp thy praise ;
And trembling take upon a mortal tongue
That hallow'd name to harps of Seraphs sung.
Yet here the brightest Seraphs could no more
Than hide their faces, tremble, and adore.
Worms, angels, men, in ev'ry diff'rent sphere,
Are equal all, for all are nothing here.
All Nature faints beneath the mighty name,
Which Nature's works, thro' all her parts, proclaim.

I feel that name my inmost thoughts control,
And breathe an awful stillness thro' my soul ;
As by a charm the waves of grief subside ;
Impetuous passion stops her headlong tide :
At thy felt presence all emotions cease,
And my hush'd spirit finds a sudden peace,
Till ev'ry worldly thought within me dies,
And earth's gay pageants vanish from my eyes,
Till all my sense is lost in infinite,
And one vast object fills my aching sight.

But soon, alas ! this holy calm is broke ;
My soul submits to wear her wonted yoke ;
With shackled pinions strives to soar in vain,
And mingles with the dross of earth again.
But he, our gracious Master, kind as just,
Knowing our frame, remembers man is dust.
His spirit, ever brooding o'er our mind,
Sees the first wish to better hopes inclin'd ;
Marks the young dawn of ev'ry virtuous aim,
And fans the smoking flax into a flame :
His ears are open to the softest cry,
His grace descends to meet the lifted eye ;
He reads the language of a silent tear,
And sighs are incense from a heart sincere.
Such are the vows, the sacrifice I give :
Accept the vow, and bid the suppliant live.
From each terrestrial bondage set me free ;
Still ev'ry wish that centres not in thee ;
Bid my fond hopes, my vain disquiets cease,
And point my path to everlasting peace.

If the soft hand of winning pleasure leads
By living waters, and thro' flow'ry meads,

When all is smiling, tranquil, and serene,
 And vernal beauty paints the flatt'ring scene,
 Oh! teach me to elude each latent snare,
 And whisper to my sliding heart—Beware!
 With caution let me hear the Syren's voice,
 And doubtful, with a trembling heart rejoice.
 If friendless in a vale of tears I stray, [way,
 Where briars wound, and thorns perplex my
 Still let my steady soul thy goodness see,
 And with strong confidence lay hold on thee;
 With equal eye my various lot receive,
 Resign'd to die, or resolute to live;
 Prepar'd to kiss the sceptre or the rod,
 While God is seen in all, and all in God.

I read his awful name emblazon'd high
 With golden letters on th' illumin'd sky.
 Nor less the mystic characters I see
 Wrought in each flow'r, inscrib'd on ev'ry tree:
 In ev'ry leaf that trembles to the breeze
 I hear the voice of God among the trees;
 With thee in shady solitudes I walk,
 With thee in busy crowded cities talk;
 In ev'ry creature own thy forming pow'r,
 In each event thy providence adore.
 Thy hopes shall animate my drooping soul,
 Thy precepts guide me, and thy fear control.
 Thus shall I rest unmov'd by all alarms,
 Secure within the temple of thine arms,
 From anxious cares, from gloomy terrors free,
 And feel myself omnipotent in thee.
 Then, when the last, the closing hour draws nigh,
 And earth recedes before my swimming eye;
 When trembling on the doubtful edge of fate
 I stand, and stretch my view to either state;
 Teach me to quit this transitory scene
 With decent triumph and a look serene;
 Teach me to fix my ardent hopes on high,
 And, having liv'd to thee, in thee to die.

§ 42. A Summer Evening's Meditation.
 Mrs. Barbauld.

One sun by day, by night ten thousand shine.
 YOUNG.

'Tis past! the sultry tyrant of the south [hours
 Has spent his short-liv'd rage: more grateful
 Move silent on: the skies no more repel
 The dazzled sight; but, with mild maiden beams
 Of temper'd light, invite the cherish'd eye
 To wander o'er their sphere; where, hung aloft,
 Dian's bright crescent, like a silver bow
 New strung in heaven, lifts high its beamy horns,
 Impatient for the night, and seems to push
 Her brother down the sky. Fair Venus shines,
 Ev'n in the eye of day; with sweetest beam
 Propitious shines, and shakes a trembling flood
 Of soften'd radiance from her dewy locks.
 The shadows spread apace; while meek Eve,
 Her cheek yet warm with blushes, slow retires
 Through the Hesperian gardens of the west,
 And shuts the gates of day. 'Tis now the hour
 When Contemplation, from her sunless haunts,
 The cool damp grotto, or the lonely depth
 Of unpierc'd woods, where, wrapt in silent shade,

She mus'd away the gaudy hours of noon,
 And fed on thoughts unripen'd by the sun,
 Moves forward; and with radiant finger points
 To yon blue concave swell'd by breath divine,
 Where, one by one, the living eyes of heaven
 Awake, quick kindling o'er the face of æther
 One boundless blaze; ten thousand trembling
 fires,

And dancing lustres, where the unsteady eye,
 Restless and dazzled, wanders unconfin'd
 O'er all this field of glories: spacious field,
 And worthy of the master: he whose hand,
 With hieroglyphics elder than the Nile,
 Inscrib'd the mystic tablet: hung on high
 To public gaze; and said, Adore, O man,
 The finger of thy God! From what pure wells
 Of milky light, what soft o'erflowing urn,
 Are all these lamps so fill'd? these friendly lamps,
 For ever streaming o'er the azure deep
 To point our path and light us to our home.
 How soft they slide along their lucid spheres!
 And, silent as the foot of time, fulfil
 Their destin'd courses: Nature's self is hush'd,
 And, but a scatter'd leaf which rustles through
 The thick-wove foliage, not a sound is heard
 To break the midnight air; though the rais'd ear,
 Intensely list'ning, drinks in ev'ry breath.
 How deep the silence, yet how loud the praise!
 But are they silent all? or is there not

A tongue in ev'ry star that talks with man,
 And woos him to be wise? nor woos in vain.
 This dead of midnight is the noon of thought,
 And wisdom mounts her zenith with the stars.
 At this still hour the self-collected soul
 Turns inward and beholds a stranger there
 Of high descent, and more than mortal rank;
 An embryo God; a spark of fire divine,
 Which must burn on for ages, when the sun
 (Fair transitory creature of a day)

Has clos'd his golden eye, and, wrapt in shades,
 Forgets his wonted journey through the east.

Ye citadels of light, and seats of Gods!
 Perhaps my future home, from whence the soul,
 Revolving periods past, may oft look back,
 With recollected tenderness, on all
 The various busy scenes she left below,
 Its deep-laid projects and its strange events,
 As on some fond and doting tale that sooth'd
 Her infant hours—O be it lawful now
 To tread the hallow'd circle of your courts,
 And with mute wonder and delighted awe
 Approach your burning confines!—Seis'd in
 On fancy's wild and roving wing I sail [thought,
 From the green borders of the peopled earth,
 And the pale moon, her duteous fair attendant;
 From solitary Mars; from the vast orb
 Of Jupiter, whose huge gigantic bulk
 Dances in ether like the lightest leaf;
 To the dim verge, the suburbs of the system,
 Where cheerless Saturn 'midst his wat'ry moons,
 Girt with a lucid zone, in gloomy pomp,
 Sits like an exil'd monarch; fearless thence
 I launch into the trackless deeps of space, [pear,
 Where, burning round, ten thousand suns ap-

Of elder beam ; which ask no leave to shine
 Of our terrestrial star, nor borrow light
 From the proud regent of our scanty day ;
 Sons of the morning, first-born of creation,
 And only less than him who marks their track,
 And guides their fiery wheels. Here must I stop,
 Or is there aught beyond ? What hand unseen
 Impels me onward thro' the glowing orbs
 Of habitable nature, far remote,
 To the dread confines of eternal night,
 To solitudes of vast unpeopled space,
 The deserts of creation, wide and wild,
 Where embryo systems and unkindled suns
 Sleep in the womb of chaos ? Fancy droops,
 And thought astonish'd stops her bold career.
 But, oh thou mighty Mind ! whose pow'rful word

Said, Thus let all things be, and thus they were,
 Where shall I seek thy presence ? how unblam'd
 Invoke thy dread perfection ?——
 Have the broad eyelids of the morn beheld thee ?
 Or does the beamy shoulder of Orion
 Support thy throne ? O look with pity down
 On erring, guilty man ! not in thy names
 Of terror clad ; not with those thunders arm'd
 That conscious Sinai felt, when fear appall'd
 The scatter'd tribes ! Thou hast a gentler voice
 That whispers comfort to the swelling heart,
 Abash'd, yet longing to behold her Maker.

But now my soul, unus'd to stretch her pow'rs
 In flights so daring, drops her weary wing,
 And seeks again the known accustom'd spot,
 Drest up with sun, and shade, and lawns, and streams ;

A mansion fair and spacious for its guest,
 And full replete with wonders. Let me here,
 Content and grateful, wait the appointed time,
 And ripen for the skies ; the hour will come
 When all these splendors bursting on my sight
 Shall stand unveil'd, and to my ravish'd sense
 Unlock the glories of the world unknown.

§ 43. Hymn to Content. Mrs. Barbauld.
 —natura beatos

Omnibus esse dedit, si quis cognoverit uti.

CLAUD.

O THOU, the Nymph with placid eye !
 O seldom found, yet ever nigh !
 Receive my temp'rate vow.
 Not all the storms that shake the pole,
 Can e'er disturb thy halcyon soul,
 And smooth unalter'd brow.

O come, in simple vest array'd,
 With all thy sober cheer display'd,
 To bless my longing sight ;
 Thy mien compos'd, thy even pace,
 Thy meek regard, thy matron grace,
 And chaste subdu'd delight.

No more by varying passions beat,
 O gently guide my pilgrim feet
 To find thy hermit cell ;
 Where in some pure and equal sky,
 Beneath thy soft indulgent eye
 The modest virtues dwell.

Simplicity in Attic vest,
 And Innocence with candid breast,
 And clear undaunted eye ;
 And Hope, who points to distant years,
 Fair op'ning through this vale of tears
 A vista to the sky.

There Health, through whose calm bosom glide
 The temp'rate joys in even tide,
 That rarely ebb or flow ;
 And Patience there, thy sister meek,
 Presents her mild unvarying cheek
 To meet the offer'd blow.

Her influence taught the Phrygian sage
 A tyrant master's wanton rage
 With settled smiles to meet ;
 Inur'd to toil and bitter bread,
 He bow'd his meek submitted head,
 And kiss'd thy sainted feet.

But thou, O Nymph, retir'd and coy !
 In what brown hamlet dost thou joy
 To tell thy tender tale ?
 The lowliest children of the ground,
 Moss-rose and violet blossom round,
 And lily of the vale.

O say what soft propitious hour
 I best may choose to hail thy pow'r,
 And court thy gentle sway ?
 When Autumn, friendly to the Muse,
 Shall thy own modest tints diffuse,
 And shed thy milder day :

When Eve, her dewy star beneath,
 Thy balmy spirit loves to breathe,
 And ev'ry storm is laid ;
 If such an hour was e'er thy choice,
 Oft let me hear thy soothing voice
 Low whisp'ring through the shade.

§ 44. To Wisdom. Mrs. Barbauld.

Dona præsentis rape laetus horæ, ac
 Linque severa. HORAT.

O WISDOM, if thy soft control
 Can sooth the sickness of the soul,
 Can bid the warring passions cease,
 And breathe the calm of tender peace :
 Wisdom ! I bless thy gentle sway,
 And ever, ever will obey.

But if thou com'st with frown austere
 To nurse the brood of care and fear ;
 To bid our sweetest passions die,
 And leave us in their room a sigh ;
 Or if thine aspect stern have pow'r
 To wither each poor transient flow'r
 That cheers this pilgrimage of woe,
 And dry the springs whence hope should flow ;
 Wisdom, thine empire I disclaim,
 Thou empty boast of pompous name !
 In gloomy shade of cloisters dwell,
 But never haunt my cheerful cell.
 Hail to pleasure's frolic train !
 Hail to fancy's golden reign !
 Festive mirth and laughter wild,
 Free and sportful as the child !

Hope with eager sparkling eyes,
And easy faith and fond surprise!
Let these, in fairy colors drest,
For ever share my careless breast:
Then, tho' wise I may not be,
The wise themselves shall envy me.

§ 45. Despondency. An Ode. Burns.

OPPRESS'D with grief, oppress'd with care,
A burden more than I can bear,

I sit me down and sigh:
O life! thou art a galling load,
A long, a rough, a weary road,
To wretches such as I!

Dim backward as I cast my view,
What sick'ning scenes appear?
What sorrows yet may pierce me through,
Too justly I may fear!

Still caring, despairing
Must be my bitter doom;
My woes here shall close ne'er,
But with the closing tomb!

Happy! ye sons of busy life,
Who, equal to the bustling strife,
No other view regard!

Ev'n when the wished end's denied,
Yet while the busy means are plied,
They bring their own reward:

Whilst I, a hope-abandon'd wight,
Unfitted with an aim,

Meet ev'ry sad returning night
And joyless morn the same.

You, bustling and justling,
Forget each grief and pain;

I, listless yet restless,
Find ev'ry prospect vain.

How blest the Solitary's lot,
Who all-forgetting, all-forgot,
Within his humble cell,

The cavern wild with tangling roots,
Sits o'er his newly-gather'd fruits,
Beside his crystal well!

Or haply to his ev'ning thought,
By unfrequented stream,
The ways of men are distant brought,
A faint-collected dream:

While praising, and raising
His thoughts to Heav'n on high,
As wand'ring, meand'ring,
He views the solemn sky.

Than I, no lonely Hermit plac'd
Where never human footstep trac'd,
Less fit to play the part,

The lucky moment to improve,
And just to stop and just to move,
With self-respecting art:

But ah! those pleasures, loves, and joys,
Which I too keenly taste,

The Solitary can despise,
Can want, and yet be blest!

He needs not, he heeds not,
Or human love or hate!
Whilst I here, must cry here,
At perfidy ingrate!

Oh! enviable early days,
When dancing thoughtless Pleasure's maze,
To Care, to Guilt unknown!
How ill exchang'd for riper times,
To feel the follies or the crimes
Of others, or my own!

Ye tiny elves, that guiltless sport
Like linnets in the bush,
Ye little know the ills ye court,
When manhood is your wish!
The losses, the crosses,
That active man engage;
The fears all, the tears all,
Of dim declining age!

§ 46. The Frailty and Folly of Man. Prior.

GREAT Heav'n! how frail thy creature Man is made!

How by himself insensibly betray'd!
In our own strength unhappily secure,
Too little cautious of the adverse pow'r;
And, by the blast of self-opinion mov'd,
We wish to charm, and seek to be belov'd.
On pleasure's flow'ry brink we idly stray,
Masters as yet of our returning way:
Seeing no danger, we disarm our mind,
And give our conduct to the waves and wind:
Then in the flow'ry mead, or verdant shade,
To wanton dalliance negligently laid,
We weave the chaplet, and we crown the bowl,
And smiling see the nearer waters roll:
Till the strong gusts of raging passion rise,
Till the dire tempest mingles earth and skies;
And, swift into the boundless ocean borne,
Our foolish confidence too late we mourn:
Round our devoted heads the billows beat;
And from our troubled view the lessen'd lands retreat.

§ 47. A Paraphrase on the latter part of the Sixth Chapter of St. Matthew. Thomson.

WHEN my breast labours with oppressive care,
And o'er my cheek descends the falling tear;
While all my warring passions are at strife,
Oh let me listen to the words of life!
Raptures deep felt his doctrine did impart,
And thus he rais'd from earth the drooping heart:
Think not, when all your scanty stores afford
Is spread at once upon the sparing board;
Think not, when worn the homely robe appears,
While on the roof the howling tempest bears;
What farther shall this feeble life sustain?
And what shall clothe these shiv'ring limbs again?
Say, does not life its nourishment exceed?
And the fair body its investing weed?
Behold! and look away your low despair—
See the light tenants of the barren air:
To them nor stores nor granaries belong,
Nought but the woodland and the pleasing song;
Yet your kind heav'nly Father bends his eye
On the least wing that flits along the sky.
To him they sing when spring renews the plain,
To him they cry in winter's pinching reign;
Nor is their music or their plaint in vain;

He hears the gay and the distressful call,
And with unsparring bounty fills them all.

Observe the rising lily's snowy grace,
Observe the various vegetable race;
They neither toil nor spin, but careless grow,
Yet see how warm they blush! how bright they glow!

What regal vestments can with them compare?
What king so shining, or what queen so fair?

If ceaseless thus the fowls of heav'n he feeds,
If o'er the fields such lucid robes he spreads,
Will he not care for you, ye faithless, say?
Is he unwise? or are ye less than they?

§ 48. The Sluggard. Watts.

'Tis the voice of a sluggard—I heard him complain, [again.]

"You have wak'd me too soon, I must slumber
As the door on its hinges, so he on his bed [head.
Turns his sides and his shoulders, and his heavy

"A little more sleep and a little more slumber."
Thus he wastes half his days, and his hours without number;

And when he gets up, he sits folding his hands,
Or walks about saunt'ring, or trifling he stands.

I pass'd by his garden, and saw the wild brier,
The thorn and the thistle grow broader and higher;

The clothes that hang on him are turning to rags;
And his money still wastes, till he starves or he begs.

I made him a visit, still hoping to find

He had took better care for improving his mind;
He told me his dreams, talk'd of eating and drinking, [thinking.]

But he scarce reads his Bible, and never loves

Said I then to my heart, "Here's a lesson for me,
That man's but a picture of what I might be;

But thanks to my friends for their care in my breeding, [reading!]

Who taught me betimes to love working and § 49. The Rose. Watts.

How fair is the Rose! what a beautiful flow'r!
The glory of April and May!

But the leaves are beginning to fade in an hour,
And they wither and die in a day.

Yet the rose has one powerful virtue to boast,
Above all the flow'rs of the field: [lost,

When its leaves are all dead, and fine colors are Still how sweet a perfume it will yield!

So frail is the youth and the beauty of men,

Though they bloom and look gay like the rose;
But all our fond care to preserve them is vain;

Time kills them as fast as he goes.

Then I'll not be proud of my youth or my beauty,
Since both of them wither and fade;

But gain a good name by well doing my duty:
This will scent like a rose when I'm dead.

§ 50. The Ant, or Emmet. Watts.

THESE emmets, how little they are in our eyes!
We tread them to dust, and a troop of them
dies,

Without our regard or concern:
Yet as wise as we are, if we went to their school,
There's many a sluggard, and many a fool,
Some lessons of wisdom might learn.

They don't wear their time out in sleeping or play,
But gather up corn in a sun-shiny day,

And for winter they lay up their stores:
They manage their work in such regular forms,
One would think they foresaw all the frosts and the storms,

And so brought their food within doors.

But I have less sense than a poor creeping ant,
If I take not due care for the things I shall want,
Nor provide against dangers in time:

When death or old age shall stare in my face,
What a wretch shall I be in the end of my days,
If I trifle away all their prime!

Now, now, while my strength and my youth are in bloom, [shall come,

Let me think what will serve me when sickness
And pray that my sins be forgiven:

Let me read in good books, and believe and obey,
That, when death turns me out of this cottage
I may dwell in a palace in heaven. [of clay,

§ 51. A Summer Evening. Watts.

How fine has the day been, how bright was the sun,

How lovely and joyful the course that he run,
Though he rose in a mist when his race he begun,

And there follow'd some droppings of rain!
But now the fair traveller's come to the west,

His rays all are gold, and his beauties are best;
He paints the sky gay as he sinks to his rest,

And foretels a bright rising again.
Just such is the Christian: his course he begins,

Like the sun in a mist, when he mourns for his sins, [shines,

And melts into tears; then he breaks out and
And travels his heavenly way:

But, when he comes nearer to finish his race,
Like a fine setting sun, he looks richer in grace,

And gives a sure hope at the end of his days
Of rising in brighter array!

§ 52. The Nunc Dimittis. Merrick.

'Tis enough—the hour is come:

Now within the silent tomb

Let this mortal frame decay,

Mingled with its kindred clay;

Since thy mercies, oft of old

By thy chosen seers foretold,

Faithful now and stedfast prove,

God of truth, and God of love!

Since at length my aged eye

Sees the day-spring from on high

Sun of righteousness, to thee,

Lo! the nations bow the knee;

And the realms of distant kings
Own the healing of thy wings.
Those whom death had overspread
With his dark and dreary shade,
Lift their eyes, and from afar
Hail the light of Jacob's Star;
Waiting till the promis'd ray
Turn their darkness into day.
See the beams intensely shed,
Shine o'er Sion's favor'd head!
Never may they hence remove,
God of truth and God of love!

§ 53. The Benedicite paraphrased. Merrick.

YE works of God, on him alone,
In earth his footstool, heav'n his throne,
Be all your praise bestow'd;
Whose hand the beauteous fabric made,
Whose eye the finish'd work survey'd,
And saw that all was good.

Ye angels, that with loud acclaim
Admiring view'd the new-born frame,
And hail'd the Eternal King,
Again proclaim your Maker's praise,
Again your thankful voices raise,
And touch the tuneful string.

Praise him, ye blest æthereal plains,
Where, in full majesty, he deigns
To fix his awful throne:
Ye waters that above him roll,
From orb to orb, from pole to pole,
O make his praises known!

Ye thrones, dominions, virtues, pow'rs,
Join ye your joyful songs with ours;
With us your voices raise!
From age to age extend the lay,
To Heaven's Eternal Monarch pay
Hymns of eternal praise.

Celestial orb! whose powerful ray
Opes the glad eyelids of the day,
Whose influence all things own;
Praise him, whose courts effulgent shine
With light as far excelling thine,
As thine the paler moon.

Ye glitt'ring planets of the sky,
Whose lamps the absent sun supply,
With him the song pursue;
And let himself submissive own,
He borrows from a brighter Sun
The light he lends to you.

Ye show'rs and dews, whose moisture shed
Calls into life the op'ning seed,
To him your praises yield,
Whose influence wakes the genial birth,
Drops fatness on the pregnant earth,
And crowns the laughing field.

Ye winds, that oft tempestuous sweep
The ruffled surface of the deep,
With us confess your God;
See thro' the heav'ns the King of kings,
Upborne on your expanded wings,
Come flying all abroad.

Ye floods of fire, where'er ye flow,
With just submission humbly bow
To his superior pow'r,
Who stops the tempest on its way,
Or bids the flaming deluge stray,
And gives its strength to roar.

Ye summer's heat, and winter's cold,
By turns in long succession roll'd,
The drooping world to cheer,
Praise him who gave the sun and moon
To lead the various seasons on,
And guide the circling year.

Ye frosts, that bind the wat'ry plain,
Ye silent show'rs of fleecy rain,
Pursue the heav'nly theme;
Praise him who sheds the driving snow,
Forbids the harden'd waves to flow,
And stops the rapid stream.

Ye days and nights, that swiftly borne
From morn to eve, from eve to morn,
Alternate glide away,
Praise him, whose never-varying light,
Absent, adds horror to the night,
But, present, gives the day.

Light, from whose rays all beauty springs;
Darkness, whose wide-expanded wings
Involve the dusky globe;
Praise him who, when the heav'ns he spread,
Darkness his thick pavilion made,
And light his regal robe.

Praise him, ye lightnings, as ye fly
Wing'd with his vengeance thro' the sky,
And red with wrath divine;
Praise him, ye clouds that wand'ring stray,
Or, fix'd by him, in close array
Surround his awful shrine.

Exalt, O earth! thy Heav'nly King,
Who bids the plants that form the spring
With annual verdure bloom;
Whose frequent drops of kindly rain,
Prolific swell the rip'ning grain,
And bless thy fertile womb.

Ye mountains, that ambitious rise,
And heave your summits to the skies,
Revere his awful nod;
Think how you once affrighted fled;
When Jordan sought his fountain-head,
And own'd the approaching God.

Ye trees, that fill the rural scene;
Ye flow'rs, that o'er the enamell'd green
In native beauty reign;
O praise the Ruler of the skies,
Whose hand the genial sap supplies,
And clothes the smiling plain.

Ye secret springs, ye gentle rills,
That murmur rise among the hills,
Or fill the humble vale;
Praise him, at whose Almighty nod
The rugged rock dissolving flow'd,
And form'd a springing well.

Praise him, ye floods, and seas profound,
Whose waves the spacious earth surround,
And roll from shore to shore;
Aw'd by his voice, ye seas, subside;
Ye floods within your channels glide,
And tremble and adore.

Ye whales, that stir the boiling deep,
Or in its dark recesses sleep,
Remote from human eye,
Praise him by whom ye all are fed;
Praise him, without whose heavenly aid,
Ye languish, faint, and die.

Ye birds, exalt our Maker's name;
Begin, and with th' important theme
Your artless lays improve;
Wake with your songs the rising day,
Let music sound on ev'ry spray,
And fill the vocal grove.

Praise him, ye beasts, that nightly roam
Amid the salutary gloom,
Th' expected prey to seize;
Ye slaves of the laborious plough,
Your stubborn necks submissive bow,
And bend your wearied knees.

Ye sons of men, his praise display,
Who stamp'd his image on your clay,
And gave it pow'r to move;
Ye that in Judah's confines dwell,
From age to age successive tell
The wonders of his love.

Let Levi's tribe the lay prolong,
Till angels listen to the song,
And bend attention down,
Let wonder seize the heavenly train,
Pleas'd while they hear a mortal strain
So sweet, so like their own.

And you your thankful voices join,
That oft at Salem's sacred shrine
Before his altars kneel;
Where thron'd in majesty he dwells,
And from the mystic cloud reveals
The dictates of his will.

Ye spirits of the just and good,
That, eager for the bless'd abode,
To heavenly mansions soar;
O let your songs his praise display,
Till heaven itself shall melt away,
And time shall be no more!

Praise him, ye meek and humble train,
Ye saints, whom his decrees ordain
The boundless bliss to share;
O praise him, till ye take your way
To regions of eternal day,
And reign for ever there.

Let us, who now impassive stand,
Aw'd by the tyrant's stern command,
Amid the fiery blaze;
While thus we triumph in the flame,
Rise, and our Maker's love proclaim,
In hymns of endless praise.

§ 54. The Ignorance of Man. Merrick.

BEHOLD yon new-born infant griev'd
With hunger, thirst, and pain;
That asks to have the wants reliev'd,
It knows not to complain.

Aloud the speechless suppliant cries,
And utters, as it can,
The woes that in its bosom rise,
And speaks its nature—man.

That infant, whose advancing hour
Life's various sorrows try;
(Sad proof of sin's transmissive pow'r),
That infant, Lord, am I.

A childhood yet my thoughts confess,
Though long in years mature;
Unknowing whence I feel distress,
And where, or what, its cure.

Author of good! to thee I turn:
Thy ever-wakeful eye
Alone can all my wants discern;
Thy hand alone supply.

O let thy fear within me dwell,
Thy love my footsteps guide;
That love shall vainer loves expel;
That fear all fears beside.

And, oh! by error's force subdued,
Since oft my stubborn will Prepost'rous shuns the latent good,
And grasps the specious ill;

Not to my wish, but to my want,
Do thou thy gifts apply:
Unask'd, what good thou knowest grant;
What ill, tho' ask'd, deny.

§ 55. The Trials of Virtue. Merrick.

PLAC'D on the verge of youth, my mind
Life's op'ning scene survey'd:
I view'd its ills of various kind,
Afflicted and afraid.

But chief my fear the dangers mov'd,
That virtue's path inclose:
My heart the wise pursuit approv'd;
But oh, what toils oppose!

For see! ah see! while yet her ways
With doubtful step I tread,
A hostile world its terrors raise,
Its snares delusive spread.

Oh how shall I, with heart prepar'd,
Those terrors learn to meet?
How from the thousand snares to guard
My unexperienc'd feet?

As thus I mov'd, oppressive sleep
Soft o'er my temples drew
Oblivion's veil.—The wat'ry deep,
An object strange and new,

Before me rose: on the wide shore
Observant as I stood,
The gathering storms around me roar
And heave the boiling flood.

Near and more near the billows rise;
 Ev'n now my steps they lave!
 And death to my affrighted eyes
 Approach'd in ev'ry wave.

What hope, or whither to retreat!
 Each nerve at once unstrung,
 Chill fear had fetter'd fast my feet,
 And chain'd my speechless tongue.

I feel my heart within me die;
 When sudden to mine ear
 A voice, descending from on high,
 Reprov'd my erring fear:

'What tho' the swelling surge thou see
 'Impatient to devour;
 'Rest, mortal, rest on God's decree,
 'And thankful own his pow'r.

'Know, when he bade the deep appear,
 'Thus far," th' Almighty said,
 "'Thus far, nor farther, rage; and here
 "'Let thy proud waves be stay'd."

I heard; and, lo! at once control'd,
 The waves, in wild retreat,
 Back on themselves reluctant roll'd,
 And murmuring left my feet.

Deep to assembling deeps in vain,
 Once more the signal gave:
 The shores the rushing weight sustain,
 And check th' usurping wave.

Convinc'd, in Nature's volume wise,
 The imag'd truth I read;
 And sudden from my waking eyes
 Th' instructive vision fled.

'Then why thus heavy, O my soul!
 'Say why, distrustful still,
 'Thy thoughts with vain impatience roll
 'O'er scenes of future ill?

'Let faith suppress each rising fear,
 'Each anxious doubt exclude;
 'Thy Maker's will has plac'd thee here,
 'A Maker wise and good!

'He to thy ev'ry trial knows
 'Its just restraint to give;
 'Attentive to behold thy woes,
 'And faithful to relieve.

'Then why thus heavy, O my soul!
 'Say why, distrustful still,
 'Thy thoughts with vain impatience roll
 'O'er scenes of future ill?

'Tho' griefs unnumber'd thron'd thee round,
 'Still in thy God confide,
 'Whose finger marks the seas their bound,
 'And curbs the headlong tide.'

§ 56. A Funeral Hymn. Mallet.

YE midnight shades, o'er nature spread!
 Dumb silence of the dreary hour!
 In honor of th' approaching dead,
 Around your awful terrors pour.
 Yes, pour around
 On this pale ground

Through all this deep surrounding gloom,
 The sober thought,
 The tear untaught,
 Those meekest mourners at a tomb.

Lo! as the surpliced train drew near
 To this last mansion of mankind,
 The slow sad bell, the sable bier,
 In holy musing wrapt the mind!
 And while their beam,
 With trembling stream,
 Attending tapers faintly dart;
 Each mould'ring bone,
 Each sculptur'd stone,
 Strikes mute instruction to the heart!

Now let the sacred organ blow,
 With solemn pause, and sounding slow;
 Now let the voice due measure keep,
 In strains that sigh, and words that weep;
 Till all the vocal current blended roll,
 Not to depress, but lift the soaring soul:

To lift it in the Maker's praise,
 Who first inform'd our frame with breath;
 And, after some few stormy days,
 Now, gracious, gives us o'er to death.
 No King of Fears
 In him appears,
 Who shuts the scene of human woes.
 Beneath his shade
 Securely laid,
 The dead alone find true repose.

Then, while we mingle dust with dust,
 To One, supremely good and wise,
 Raise hallelujahs! God is just,
 And man most happy when he dies!
 His winter past,
 Fair spring at last
 Receives him on her flow'ry shore!
 Where pleasure's rose
 Immortal blows,
 And sin and sorrow are no more!

§ 57. Veni Creator Spiritus, paraphrased.
 Dryden.

CREATOR Spirit, by whose aid
 The world's foundations first were laid,
 Come visit ev'ry pious mind;
 Come pour thy joys on human kind.
 From sin and sorrow set us free,
 And make thy temples worthy thee.
 O source of uncreated light,
 The Father's promis'd Paraclete!
 Thrice holy fount, thrice holy fire,
 Our hearts with heavenly love inspire;
 Come, and thy sacred unction bring
 To sanctify us, while we sing.
 Plenteous of grace, descend from high,
 Rich in thy sevenfold energy!
 Thou strength of his Almighty hand,
 Whose pow'r does heaven and earth command.
 Proceeding Spirit, our defence,
 Who dost the gift of tongues dispense,
 And crown thy gift with eloquence!

Refine and purge our earthly parts;
 But, oh, inflame and fire our hearts!
 Our frailties help, our vice control,
 Submit the senses to the soul;
 And when rebellious they are grown,
 Then lay thy hand, and hold them down.
 Chase from our minds th' infernal foe,
 And peace, the fruit of love, bestow;
 And, lest our feet should step astray,
 Protect and guide us in the way.

Make us eternal truth receive,
 And practise all that we believe:
 Give us thyself, that we may see
 The Father, and the Son, by thee.

Immortal honor, endless fame.
 Attend th' Almighty Father's name:
 Thy Saviour Son be glorified,
 Who for lost man's redemption died;
 And equal adoration be,
 Eternal Paraclete, to thee!

§ 58. A Night Piece. Miss Carter.

WHILE night in solemn shade invests the pole,
 And calm reflection sooths the pensive soul,
 While reason undisturb'd asserts her sway,
 And life's deceitful colors fade away;
 To thee! all-conscious Presence! I devote
 This peaceful interval of sober thought:
 Here all my better faculties confine;
 And be this hour of sacred silence thine!

If, by the day's illusive scenes misled,
 My erring soul from virtue's path has stray'd;
 Snar'd by example, or by passion warm'd,
 Some false delight my giddy sense has charm'd;
 My calmer thoughts the wretched choice reprove,
 And my best hopes are centred in thy love.
 Depriv'd of this can life one joy afford?
 Its utmost boast a vain unmeaning word.

But, ah! how oft my lawless passions rove,
 And break those awful precepts I approve!
 Pursue the fatal impulse I abhor,
 And violate the virtue I adore!
 Oft when thy better Spirit's guardian care
 Warn'd my fond soul to shun the tempting snare,
 My stubborn will his gentle aid repress'd,
 And check'd the rising goodness in my breast;
 Mad with vain hopes, or urg'd by false desires,
 Still'd his soft voice, and quench'd his sacred fires.

With grief oppress'd, and prostrate in the dust,
 Shouldst thou condemn, I own thy sentence just.
 But, oh! thy softer titles let me claim,
 And plead my cause by Mercy's gentle name.
 Mercy! that wipes the penitential tear,
 And dissipates the horrors of despair!
 From righteous justice steals the vengeful hour,
 Softens the dreadful attribute of pow'r,
 Disarms the wrath of an offended God,
 And seals my pardon in a Saviour's blood!

All pow'rful Grace, exert thy gentle sway,
 And teach my rebel passions to obey;
 Lest lurking Folly, with insidious art,
 Regain my volatile inconstant heart!
 Shall every high resolve Devotion frames
 Be only lifeless sounds and specious names?

Oh rather, while thy hopes and fears control,
 In this still hour, each motion of my soul,
 Secure its safety by a sudden doom,
 And be the soft retreat of sleep my tomb!
 Calm let me slumber in that dark repose,
 Till the last morn its orient beam disclose:
 Then, when the great archangel's potent sound
 Shall echo through creation's ample round,
 Wak'd from the sleep of death, with joy survey
 The opening splendors of eternal day.

§ 59. Ode to Melancholy. Carter.

COME, Melancholy! silent pow'r,
 Companion of my lonely hour,
 To sober thought confin'd!
 Thou sweetly sad ideal guest,
 In all thy soothing charms confest,
 Indulge my pensive mind.

No longer wildly hurried through
 The tides of mirth, that ebb and flow
 In folly's noisy stream,
 I from the busy crowd retire,
 To court the objects that inspire
 Thy philosophic dream.

Through yon dark grove of mournful yews
 With solitary steps I muse,
 By thy direction led:
 Here, cold to pleasure's tempting forms,
 Consociate with my sister worms,
 And mingle with the dead.

Ye midnight horrors, awful gloom!
 Ye silent regions of the tomb,
 My future peaceful bed:
 Here shall my weary eyes be clos'd,
 And ev'ry sorrow lie repos'd
 In death's refreshing shade.

Ye pale inhabitants of night,
 Before my intellectual sight
 In solemn pomp ascend;
 O tell how trifling now appears
 The train of idle hopes and fears,
 That varying life attend!

Ye faithless idols of our sense,
 Here own how vain the fond pretence,
 Ye empty names of joy!
 Your transient forms like shadows pass,
 Frail offspring of the magic glass,
 Before the mental eye.

The dazzling colors, falsely bright,
 Attract the gazing vulgar sight
 With superficial state:
 Thro' reason's clearer optics view'd,
 How stripp'd of all its pomp, how rude,
 Appears the painted cheat!

Can wild ambition's tyrant pow'r,
 Or ill got wealth's superfluous store,
 The dread of death control?
 Can pleasure's more bewitching charms
 Avert or sooth the dire alarms
 That shake thy parting soul?

Religion ! ere the hand of Fate
Shall make reflection plead too late,
My erring senses teach,
Amidst the flatt'ring hopes of youth,
To meditate the solemn truth
These awful relics preach.

Thy penetrating beams disperse
The mist of error, whence our fears
Derive their fatal spring :
'Tis thine the trembling heart to warm,
And soften to an angel form
The pale terrific king.

When, sunk by guilt in sad despair,
Repentance breathes her humble pray'r,
And owns thy threat'nings just ;
Thy voice the shudd'ring suppliant cheers,
With mercy calms her torturing fears,
And lifts her from the dust.

Sublim'd by thee, the soul aspires
Beyond the range of low desires,
In nobler views elate :
Unmov'd her distant change surveys,
And, arm'd by faith, intrepid pays
The universal debt.

In death's soft slumber lull'd to rest,
She sleeps by smiling visions blest,
That gently whisper peace ;
Till the last morn's fair op'ning ray
Unfolds the bright eternal day
Of active life and bliss.

§ 60. Written at Midnight in a Thunder Storm. Carter.

LET coward Guilt, with pallid fear,
To shelt'ring caverns fly,
And justly dread the vengeful fate
That thunders through the sky.

Protected by that hand, whose law
The threat'ning storms obey,
Intrepid Virtue smiles secure,
As in the blaze of day.

In the thick cloud's tremendous gloom,
The lightning's lurid glare,
It views the same all-gracious Pow'r
That breathes the vernal air.

Through Nature's ever-varying scene,
By different ways pursued,
The one eternal end of Heav'n
Is universal good :

With like beneficent effect
O'er flaming æther glows,
As when it tunes the linnet's voice,
Or blushes in the rose.

By reason taught to scorn those fears
That vulgar minds molest,
Let no fantastic terrors break
My dear Narcissa's rest.

Thy life may all the tend'rest care
Of Providence defend ;
And delegated angels round
Their guardian wings extend !

When thro' creation's vast expanse
The last dread thunders roll,
Untune the concord of the spheres,
And shake the rising soul ;
Unmov'd mayst thou the final storm
Of jarring worlds survey,
That ushers in the glad serene
Of everlasting day !

§. 61. The Vanity of Human Wishes.

Johnson.

In Imitation of the Tenth Satire of Juvenal.

LET * observation with extensive view
Survey mankind, from China to Peru ;
Remark each anxious toil, each eager strife,
And watch the busy scenes of crowded life :
Then say how hope and fear, desire and hate,
O'erspread with snares the clouded maze of fate,
Where wav'ring man, betray'd by vent'rous
pride

To tread the dreary paths without a guide ;
As treach'rous phantoms in the mist delude,
Shuns fancied ills, or chases airy good :
How rarely reason guides the stubborn choice,
Rules the bold hand, or prompts the suppliant
voice :

How nations sink by darling schemes oppress,
When vengeance listens to the fool's request.
Fate wings with ev'ry wish th' afflictive dart,
Each gift of nature, and each grace of art ;
With fatal heat impetuous courage glows,
With fatal sweetness elocution flows ;
Impeachment stops the speaker's powerful breath,
And restless fire precipitates on death. [bold

But †, scarce observ'd, the knowing and the Fall in the gen'ral massacre of gold ;
Wide-wasting pest, that rages unconfin'd,
And crowds with crimes the records of mankind !
For gold his sword the hireling ruffian draws,
For gold the hireling judge distorts the laws ;
Wealth heap'd on wealth nor truth nor safety
The dangers gather as the treasures rise. [buys ;
Let hist'ry tell, where rival kings command,
And dubious title shakes the madden'd land,
When statutes glean the refuse of the sword,
How much more safe the vassal than the lord :
Low sculks the hind beneath the rage of pow'r,
And leaves the wealthy traitor in the Tower ;
Untouch'd his cottage, and his slumbers sound,
Though confiscation's vultures hover round.

The needy traveller, serene and gay,
Walks the wild heath, and sings his toil away.
Does envy seise thee ? crush th' upbraiding joy ;
Increase his riches, and his peace destroy.
New fears in dire vicissitude invade,
The rustling break alarms, and quiv'ring shade ;
Nor light nor darkness brings his pain relief,
One shows the plunder, and one hides the thief.

Yet † still one gen'ral cry the skies assails,
And gain and grandeur load the tainted gales ;
Few know the toiling statesman's fear or care,
Th' insidious rival and the gaping heir.

* Ver. 1—11. † Ver. 12—22.

† Ver. 23—27.

Once * more, Democritus, arise on earth,
With cheerful wisdom and instructive mirth,
See motley life in modern trappings drest,
And feed with varied fools th' eternal jest :
Thou who couldst laugh where want enchain'd caprice,

Toil crush'd conceit, and man was of a piece ;
Where wealth unlov'd without a mourner died ;
And scarce a sycophant was fed by pride ;
Where ne'er was known the form of mock debate,
Or seen a new-made mayor's unwieldy state ;
Where change of fav'rites made no change of laws,
And senates heard before they judg'd a cause ;
How wouldst thou shake at Britain's modish tribe,
Dart the quick taunt, and edge the piercing gibe ?
Attentive truth and nature to descry,
And pierce each scene with philosophic eye,
To thee were solemn toys or empty show,
The robes of pleasure and the veils of woe :
All aid the farce, and all thy mirth maintain,
Whose joys are causeless, or whose griefs are vain.

Such was the scorn that fill'd the sage's mind,
Renew'd at ev'ry glance on human kind ;
How just that scorn ere yet thy voice declare,
Search ev'ry state, and canvass ev'ry pray'r.

† Unnumber'd suppliants crowd Preferment's gate,
Athirst for wealth, and burning to be great ;
Delusive Fortune hears th' incessant call,
They mount, they shine, evaporate, and fall.
On ev'ry stage the foes of peace attend,
Hate dogs their flight, and insult mocks their end.
Love ends with hope, the sinking statesman's door
Pours in the morning worshipper no more ;
For growing names the weekly scribbler lies,
To growing wealth the dedicator flies ;
From ev'ry room descends the painted face,
That hung the bright palladium of the place,
And smok'd in kitchens, or in auctions sold,
To better features yields the frame of gold ;
For now no more we trace in ev'ry line
Heroic worth, benevolence divine :
The form distorted justifies the fall,
And detestation rides th' indignant wall.
But will not Britain hear the last appeal,
Sign her foes' doom, or guard her fav'rites' zeal ?
Thro' Freedom's sons no more remonstrance rings,
Degrading nobles, and controlling kings ;
Our supple tribes repress their patriot throats,
And ask no questions but the price of votes ;
With weekly libels, and septennial ale,
Their wish is full to riot and to rail,

In full-blown dignity, see Wolsey stand,
Law in his voice, and fortune in his hand :
To him the church, the realm, their pow'rs con-
Thro' him the rays of regal bounty shine ; [sign,
Turn'd by his nod the stream of honor flows,
His smile alone security bestows :
Still to new heights his restless wishes tow'r ;
Claim leads to claim, and pow'r advances pow'r ;

Till conquest unresisted ceas'd to please,
And rights submitted left him none to seize.
At length his sov'reign frowns—the train of state
Mark the keen glance, and watch the sign to hate.

Where'er he turns he meets a stranger's eye,
His suppliants scorn him, and his followers
fly :

Now drops at once the pride of awful state,
The golden canopy, the glitt'ring plate,
The regal palace, the luxurious board,
The liv'ried army, and the menial lord.
With age, with cares, with maladies oppress,
He seeks the refuge of monastic rest.
Grief aids disease, remember'd folly stings,
And his last sighs reproach the faith of kings.

Speak thou, whose thoughts at humble peace
repine,

Shall Wolsey's wealth with Wolsey's end be thine ?
Or liv'st thou now, with safer pride content,
The wisest justice on the banks of Trent ?
For why did Wolsey, near the steeps of fate,
On weak foundations raise th' enormous weight ?
Why but to sink, beneath misfortune's blow,
With louder ruin to the gulphs below ?

What † gave great Villiers to th' assassin's knife,
And fix'd disease on Harley's closing life ?
What murder'd Wentworth, and what exil'd
Hyde,

By kings protected, and to kings ally'd ?
What but their wish indulg'd in courts to shine,
And pow'r too great to keep, or to resign ?

When § first the college rolls receive his name,

Resistless burns the fever of renown,
Caught from the strong contagion of the gown :

And || Bacon's mansion trembles o'er his head.
Are these thy views ? proceed, illustrious youth,
And Virtue guard thee to the throne of Truth !
Yet should thy soul indulge the gen'rous heat,
Till captive Science yields her last retreat ;
Should Reason guide thee with her brightest ray,
And pour on misty Doubt resistless day :
Should no false kindness lure to loose delight,
Nor praise relax, nor difficulty fright ;
Should tempting Novelty thy cell refrain,
And Sloth effuse her opiate fumes in vain ;
Should Beauty blunt on fops her fatal dart,
Nor claim the triumph of a letter'd heart ;
Should no disease thy torpid veins invade,
Nor Melancholy's phantoms haunt thy shade ;
Yet hope not life from grief or danger free,
Nor think the doom of man revers'd for thee :
Deign on the passing world to turn thine eyes,
And pause a while from learning, to be wise :
There mark what ills the scholar's life assail,
Toil, envy, want, the patron, and the jail.
See nations slowly wise, and meanly just,
To buried merit raise the tardy bust.

He wrote, among many others, a Latin treatise, De Natura Coeli, &c. in which he attacked the sentiments of Scaliger and Aristotle; not bearing to hear it urged that some things are true in philosophy and false in divinity. He made above six hundred sermons on the harmony of the Evangelists. Being unsuccessful in publishing his works, he lay in the prison of Bocardo at Oxford, and the king's-bench, till bishop Usher, Dr. Laud, Sir William Boswell, and Dr. Pink, released him by paying his debts. He petitioned king Charles I. to be sent into Ethiopia, &c. to procure MSS. Time hovers o'er, impatient to destroy,
 And shuts up all the passages of joy :
 In vain their gifts their bounteous seasons pour,
 The fruit autumnal, and the vernal flow'r—
 With listless eyes the dotard views the store,
 He views, and wonders that they please no more;
 Now pall the tasteless meats, and joyless wines,
 And Luxury with sighs her slave resigns.
 Approach, ye minstrels, try the soothing strain,
 Diffuse the tuneful lenitives of pain :
 No sounds, alas! would touch th' impervious ear,
 Though dancing mountains witness'd Orpheus
 Nor lute nor lyre his feeble pow'rs attend, [near;
 Nor sweeter music of a virtuous friend :
 But everlasting dictates crowd his tongue,
 Perversely grave, or positively wrong.
 The still returning tale, or ling'ring jest,
 Perplex the fawning niece and pamper'd guest,
 While growing hopes scarce awe the gathering
 And scarce a legacy can bribe to hear ; [sneer,
 The watchful guests still hint the last offence,
 The daughter's petulance, the son's expence,
 Improve his heady rage with treach'rous skill,
 And mould his passions till they make his will.

Unnumber'd maladies his joints invade,
 Lay siege to life, and press the dire blockade ;
 But unextinguish'd Av'rice still remains,
 And dreaded losses aggravate his pains ;
 He turns, with anxious heart and crippled hands,
 His bonds of debt, and mortgages of lands ;
 Or views his coffers with suspicious eyes,
 Unlocks his gold, and counts it till he dies.

But grant, the virtues of a temp'rate prime
 Blest with an age exempt from scorn or crime ;
 An age that melts with unperceiv'd decay,
 And glides in modest innocence away ;
 Whose peaceful day Benevolence endears,
 Whose night congratulating Conscience cheers ;
 The gen'ral fav'rite as the gen'ral friend :
 Such age there is, and who shall wish its end ?

Yet ev'n on this her load Misfortune flings,
 To press the weary minutes' flagging wings ;
 New sorrow rises as the day returns,
 A sister sickens, or a daughter mourns.
 Now kindred Merit fills the sable bier,
 Now lacerated Friendship claims a tear.
 Year chases year, decay pursues decay,
 Still drops some joy from with'ring life away ;
 New forms arise, and diff'rent views engage,
 Superfluous lags the vet'ran on the stage,
 Till pitying Nature signs the last release,
 And bids afflicted worth retire to peace.

But few there are whom hours like these await,
 Who set unclouded in the gulphs of Fate.
 From Lydia's monarch should the search descend,
 By Solon caution'd to regard his end,
 In life's last scene what prodigies surprise,
 Fears of the brave, and follies of the wise !
 From Marlborough's eyes the streams of dotage
 And Swift expires a driv'ler and a show. [flow,

The * teeming mother, anxious for her race,

 Whom Pleasure keeps too busy to be wise,
 Whom joys with soft varieties invite,

 Who frown with vanity, who smile with art,
 And ask the latest fashion of the heart,
 What care, what rules your heedless charms shall save, [slave ?

Each nymph your rival, and each youth your
 Against your fame with fondness hate combines,
 The rival batters, and the lover mines.
 With distant voice neglected Virtue calls,
 Less heard and less, the faint remonstrance falls ;
 Tir'd with contempt, she quits the slipp'ry rein,
 And Pride and Prudence take her seat in vain.
 In crowd at once, where none the pass defend,
 The harmless freedom, and the private friend.
 The guardians yield, by force superior ply'd ;
 To Int'rest, Prudence ; and to Flatt'ry, Pride.
 Here beauty falls betray'd, despis'd, distress,
 And hissing Infamy proclaims the rest.

Where† then shall Hope and Fear their objects
 find ?

Must dull Suspense corrupt the stagnant mind ?
 Must helpless man, in ignorance sedate,
 Roll darkling down the torrent of his fate ?
 Must no dislike alarm, no wishes rise,
 No cries invoke the mercies of the skies ?
 Enquirer, cease, petitions yet remain
 Which Heav'n may hear, nor deem religion vain ;
 Still raise for good the supplicating voice,
 But leave to Heav'n the measure and the choice,
 Safe in his pow'r, whose eyes discern afar
 The secret ambush of a specious pray'r,
 Implore his aid, in his decisions rest,
 Secure whate'er he gives, he gives the best.
 Yet when the sense of sacred presence fires,
 And strong devotion to the skies aspires,
 Pour forth thy fervors for a healthful mind,
 Obedient passions, and a will resign'd ;
 For love, which scarce collective man can fill ;
 For patience, sov'reign o'er transmuted ill ;
 For faith, that, panting for a happier seat,
 Counts death kind Nature's signal of retreat :
 These goods for man the laws of Heav'n ordain,
 These goods he grants, who grants the pow'r to gain ;
 With these celestial Wisdom calms the mind,
 And makes the Happiness she does not find.

§ 62. Elegy on the Death of Lady Coventry.
Written in 1760. Mason.

THE midnight clock has toll'd—and, hark the bell [found ?
 Of death beats slow ! heard ye the note pro-
 It pauses now ; and now, with rising knell,
 Flings to the hollow gale its sullen sound.
 Yes—Coventry is dead. Attend the strain,
 Daughters of Albion ! ye that, light as air,

So oft have tripp'd in her fantastic train,
 With hearts as gay, and faces half as fair :
 For she was fair beyond your brightest bloom,
 (This envy owns, since now her bloom is fled;)
 Fair as the forms that, wove in Fancy's loom,
 Float in light vision round the poet's head.
 Whene'er with soft serenity she smil'd,
 Or caught the orient blush of quick surprise,
 How sweetly mutable, how brightly wild,
 The liquid lustre darted from her eyes !
 Each look, each motion, wak'd a new-born grace,
 That o'er her form its transient glory cast :
 Some lovelier wonder soon usurp'd the place,
 Chas'd by a charm still lovelier than the last.
 That bell again ! It tells us what she is ;
 On what she was, no more the strain prolong ;
 Luxuriant fancy, pause ! an hour like this
 Demands the tribute of a serious song.
 Maria claims it from that sable bier,
 Where cold and wan the slumb'rer rests her
 head ;
 In still small whispers to reflection's ear
 She breathes the solemn dictates of the dead.
 O catch the awful notes, and lift them loud !
 Proclaim the theme by sage, by fool rever'd,
 Hear it, ye young, ye vain, ye great, ye proud !
 'Tis Nature speaks, and Nature will be heard.
 Yes ; ye shall hear, and tremble as ye hear,
 While, high with health, your hearts exulting
 E'en in the midst of pleasure's mad career, [leap ;
 The mental monitor shall wake and weep !
 For say, than Coventry's propitious star,
 What brighter planet on your births arose ?
 Or gave of fortune's gifts an ampler share,
 In life to lavish, or by death to lose ?
 Early to lose ! While, borne on busy wing,
 Ye sip the nectar of each varying bloom ;
 Nor fear, while basking in the beams of spring,
 The wint'ry storm that sweeps you to the tomb ;
 Think of her fate ! revere the heavenly hand
 That led her hence, tho' soon by steps so slow ;
 Long at her couch Death took his patient stand,
 And menac'd oft, and oft withheld the blow.
 To give reflection time, with lenient art,
 Each fond delusion from her soul to steal !
 Teach her from folly peaceably to part,
 And wean her from a world she lov'd so well.
 Say, are you sure his mercy shall extend
 To you so long a span ? Alas, ye sigh ! [friend,
 Make then, while yet ye may, your God your
 And learn with equal ease to sleep or die !
 Nor think the Muse, whose sober voice ye hear,
 Contracts with bigot frown her sullen brow ;
 Casts round religion's orb the mists of fear, [glow.
 Or shades with horrors what with smiles should
 No—she would warn you with seraphic fire,
 Heirs as ye are of heaven's eternal day ;
 Would bid you boldly to that heaven aspire,
 Nor sink and slumber in your cells of clay.

Know, ye were form'd to range yon azure field,
 In yon ethereal founts of bliss to lave :
 Force then, secure in faith's protecting shield,
 The sting from death, the vict'ry from the grave !
 Is this the bigot's rant ? Away, ye vain ! [steep :
 Your hopes, your fears, in doubt, in dullness
 Go sooth your souls in sickness, grief, or pain,
 With the sad solace of eternal sleep !
 Yet will I praise you, triflers as you are,
 More than those preachers of your fav'rite creed,
 Who proudly swell the brazen throat of war,
 Who from the phalanx, bid the battle bleed,
 Nor wish for more ; who conquer but to die.
 Hear, Folly, hear, and triumph in the tale !
 Like you they reason, not like you enjoy
 The breeze of bliss, that fills your silken sail :
 On pleasure's glitt'ring stream ye gaily steer
 Your little course to cold oblivion's shore ;
 They dare the storm, and thro' th' inclement year
 Stem the rough surge, and brave the torrent's roar.
 Is it for glory ? That just Fate denies ;
 Long must the warrior moulder in his shroud,
 Ere from her trump the heaven-breath'd accents
 That lift the hero from the fighting crowd ! [rise
 Is it his grasp of empire to extend ?
 To curb the fury of insulting foes ?
 Ambition, cease ! the idle contest end :
 'Tis but a kingdom thou canst win or lose.
 And why must murder'd myriads lose their all,
 (If life be all), why desolation low'r
 With famish'd frown on this affrighted ball,
 That thou mayst flame the meteor of an hour ?
 Go, wiser ye, that flutter life away, [high ?
 Crown with the mantling juice the goblet
 Weave the light dance, with festive freedom gay,
 And live your moment, since the next ye die !
 Yet know, vain sceptics ! know, th' Almighty
 Mind,
 Who breath'd on man a portion of his fire,
 Bade his free soul, by earth nor time confin'd,
 To heav'n, to immortality aspire.
 Nor shall the pile of hope his mercy rear'd
 By vain philosophy be e'er destroy'd :
 Eternity, by all or wish'd or fear'd,
 Shall be by all or suffer'd or enjoy'd !

NOTE. In a book of French verses, intitled, Ouvres du Philosophe de Sans Souci, and lately reprinted at Berlin by authority, under the title of Poesies Diverses, may be found an Epistle to Marshal Keith, written professedly against the immortality of the soul. By way of specimen of the whole, take the following lines :

De l'avenir, cher Keith, jugeons par le passé :
 Comme avant que je fusse il n'avoit point pensé ;
 De même, après ma mort, quand toutes mes parties
 Par la corruption seront anéanties,
 Par un même destin il ne pensera plus !
 Non, rien n'est plus certain, soyons en convaincu.

It is to this Epistle that the latter part of the Elegy alludes.

§ 63. Elegy to a young Nobleman leaving the University. Mason.

ERE yet, ingenuous youth, thy steps retire [vale,
From Cam's smooth margin, and the peaceful
Where Science call'd thee to her studious quire,
And met thee musing in her cloisters pale;
O let thy friend (and may he boast the name!)
Breathe from his artless reed one parting lay:
A lay like this thy early virtues claim,
And this let voluntary friendship pay.

Yet know, the time arrives, the dang'rous time,
When all those virtues, op'ning now so fair,
Transplanted to the world's tempestuous clime,
Must learn each passion's boist'rous breath to
There, if ambition, pestilent and pale, [bear;
Or luxury should taint their vernal glow;
If cold self-interest, with her chilling gale, [blow;
Should blast th' unfolding blossoms ere they

If mimic hues, by art or fashion spread,
Their genuine simple colouring should supply;
O may with them these laureate honors fade,
And with them (if it can) my friendship die!

Then do not blame, if, tho' thyself inspire,
Cautious I strike the panegyric string;
The Muse full oft pursues a meteor fire,
And, vainly vent'rous, soars on waxen wing:

Too actively awake at friendship's voice,
The poet's bosom pours the fervent strain,
Till sad reflection blames the hasty choice,
And oft invokes oblivion's aid in vain.

Call we the shade of Pope from that blest bow'r,
Where thron'd he sits with many a tuneful sage;
Ask, if he ne'er bemoans that hapless hour
When St. John's name illumin'd glory's page.

Ask, if the wretch, who dar'd his mem'ry stain;
Ask if his country's, his religion's foe,
Deserv'd the meed that Marlbro' fail'd to gain;
The deathless meed he only could bestow:

The bard will tell thee, the misguided praise
Clouds the celestial sunshine of his breast;
Ev'n now, repentant of his erring lays,
He heaves a sigh amid the realms of rest.

If Pope thro' friendship fail'd, indignant view,
Yet pity, Dryden—hark, whene'er he sings,
How adulation drops her courtly dew
On titled rhymers and inglorious kings!

See, from the depths of his exhaustless mine,
His glitt'ring stores the tuneful spendthrift throws:

Where fear or int'rest bids, behold they shine;
Now grace a Cromwell's, now a Charles's brows.

Born with too gen'rous or too mean a heart,
Dryden! in vain to thee those stores were lent;
Thy sweetest numbers but a trifling art:
Thy strongest diction idly eloquent.

The simplest lyre, if truth directs its lays,
Warbles a melody ne'er heard from thine:

Not to disgust with false or venal praise,
Was Parnell's modest fame, and may be mine.

Go then, my friend, nor let thy candid breast
Condemn me, if I check the plausible string;
Go to the wayward world; complete the rest;
Be what the purest Muse would wish to sing.

Be still thyself: that open path of truth,
Which led thee here, let manhood firm pursue;
Retain the sweet simplicity of youth;
And all thy virtue dictates dare to do.

Still scorn, with conscious pride, the mask of art;
On vice's front let fearful caution low'r;
And teach the diffident, discreeter part
Of knaves that plot, and fools that fawn for
pow'r.

So, round thy brow when age's honors spread,
When death's cold hand unstrings thy Ma-
son's lyre,

When the green turf lies lightly on his head,
Thy worth shall some superior bard inspire:

He to the amplest bounds of time's domain
On rapture's plume shall give thy name to fly;
For trust, with rev'rence trust, this Sabine strain,
"The Muse forbids the virtuous man to die."

§ 64. The Choice of Hercules: from the Greek of Prodicus. Bp. Lowth.

Now had the son of Jove, mature, attain'd
The joyful prime; when youth, elate and gay,
Steps into life, and follows unrestrain'd [way.
Where passion leads, or prudence points the
In the pure mind, at those ambiguous years,
Or vice, rank weed, first strikes her pois'nous
Or haply virtue's op'ning bud appears [root;
By just degrees, fair bloom of fairest fruit!
For, if on youth's untainted thought imprest,
The gen'rous purpose still shall warm the manly breast.

As on a day, reflecting on his age
For highest deeds now ripe, Alcides sought
Retirement, nurse of contemplation sage,
Step following step, and thought succeeding
thought;

Musing, with steady pace the youth pursued
His walk, and lost in meditation stray'd
Far in a lonely vale, with solitude
Conversing; while intent his mind survey'd
The dubious path of life: before him lay, [way.
Here virtue's rough ascent, there pleasure's flow'ry

Much did the view divide his wav'ring mind;
Now glow'd his breast with gen'rous thirst of fame;

Now love of ease to softer thoughts inclin'd
His yielding soul, and quench'd the rising
flame:

When, lo! far off two female forms he spies:
Direct to him their steps they seem to bear;
Both large and tall, exceeding human size;
Both, far exceeding human beauty, fair.
Graceful, yet each with different grace, they move;
This striking sacred awe; that, softer, winning
love.

The first in native dignity surpass'd ;
 Artless and unadorn'd she pleas'd the more ;
 Health o'er her looks a genuine lustre cast ;
 A vest more white than new-fall'n snow she
 August she trod, yet modest was her air ; [wore:
 Serene her eye, yet darting heavenly fire ;
 Still she drew near, and nearer still more fair,
 More mild, appear'd : yet such as might inspire
 Pleasure corrected with an awful fear ;
 Majestically sweet, and amiably severe.

The other dame seem'd even of fairer hue ;
 But bold her mien, ungarded rov'd her eye,
 And her flush'd cheeks confess'd at nearer view
 The borrow'd blushes of an artful dye.
 All soft and delicate, with airy swim,
 Lightly she danc'd along ; her robe betray'd
 Through the clear texture every tender limb,
 Height'ning the charms it only seem'd to shade ;
 And as it flow'd adown, so loose and thin,
 Her stature show'd more tall, more snowy white her skin.

Oft with a smile she view'd herself askance ;
 Even on her shade a conscious look she threw :
 Then all around her cast a careless glance,
 To mark what gazing eyes her beauty drew.
 As they came near, before that other maid
 Approaching decent, eagerly she press'd
 With hasty step ; nor of repulse afraid, [dress'd ;
 With freedom bland the wond'ring youth ad-
 With winning fondness on his neck she hung ;
 Sweet as the honey-dew flow'd her enchanting
 tongue ;

“ Dear Hercules, whence this unkind delay ?
 Dear youth, what doubts can thus distract thy Securely follow where I lead the way, [mind ?
 And range through wilds of pleasure uncon-
 fin'd.

With me retire from noise, and pain, and care,
 Embath'd in bliss, and wrapt in endless ease :
 Rough is the road to fame, through blood and war ;
 Smooth is my way, and all my paths are peace.
 With me retire, from toils and perils free ;
 Leave honor to the wretch ! pleasures were made for thee.

“ Then will I grant thee all thy soul's desire ;
 All that may charm thine ear, and please thy sight ;
 All that the thought can frame, or wish require,
 To steep thy ravish'd senses in delight :
 The sumptuous feast, enhanc'd with music's
 Fittest to tune the melting soul to love, [sound,
 Rich odors, breathing choicest sweets around ;
 The fragrant bow'r, cool fountain, shady grove ;
 Fresh flow'rs to strew thy couch, and crown thy head : [thy bed.

Joy shall attend thy steps, and ease shall smooth
 “ These will I freely, constantly supply ;
 Pleasure's not earn'd with toil, nor mix'd with Far from thy rest repining want shall fly, [woe ;
 Nor labor bathe in sweat thy careful brow.
 Mature the copious harvest shall be thine,
 Let the laborious hind subdue the soil ;

Leave the rash soldier spoils of war to win,
 Won by the soldier thou shalt share the spoil :
 These softer cares my best allies employ,
 New pleasures to invent, to wish, and to enjoy,”
 Her winning voice the youth attentive caught :
 He gaz'd impatient on the smiling maid ;
 Still gaz'd and listen'd ; then her name besought :
 “ My name, fair youth, is Happiness,” she said.
 “ Well can my friends this envied truth maintain ;
 They share my bliss, they best can speak my
 praise :

Though Slander call me Sloth (detraction vain!),
 Heed not what Slander, vain detractor, says ;
 Slander, still prompt true merit to defame,
 To blot the brightest worth, and blast the fairest
 name.”

By this arriv'd the fair majestic maid ;
 She all the while, with the same modest pace,
 Compos'd advanc'd : “ Know Hercules,” she said
 With manly tone, “ thy birth of heav'nly race :
 Thy tender age, that lov'd instruction's voice, Promis'd thee generous, patient, brave, and
 wise :

When manhood should confirm thy glorious
 Now expectation waits to see thee rise. [choice,
 Rise, youth ! exalt thyself and me ; approve Thy high descent from Heaven, and dare be worthy Jove.

 “ But what truth prompts, my tongue shall not
 The steep ascent must be with toil subdued ;
 Watching and cares must win the lofty prize
 Propos'd by Heaven—true bliss and real good,
 Honor rewards the brave and bold alone ;
 She spurns the timorous, indolent, and base ;
 Danger and toil stand stern before her throne,
 And guard (so Jove commands) the sacred
 place.

Who seeks her, must the mighty cost sustain,
 And pay the price of fame—labor, and care,
 and pain.

“ Wouldst thou engage the gods' peculiar care,
 O Hercules, th' immortal pow'rs adore !
 With a pure heart, with sacrifice, and pray'r,
 Attend their altars, and their aid implore.
 Or, wouldst thou gain thy country's loud applause,
 Lov'd as her father, as her god ador'd ?

Be thou the bold asserter of her cause ;
 Her voice in council, in the fight her sword :
 In peace, in war, pursue thy country's good ;
 For her, bare thy bold breast, and pour thy generous blood.

[prest,
 Wouldst thou, to quell the proud and lift th' op-
 In arts of war and matchless strength excel ?
 First conquer thou thyself : to ease, to rest,
 To each soft thought of pleasure, bid farewell.
 The night alternate, due to sweet repose,
 In watches waste ; in painful march, the day :
 Congeal'd amidst the rigorous winter's snows,
 Scorch'd by the summer's thirst-inflaming ray,
 Thy harden'd limbs shall boast superior might :
 Vigor shall brace thine arm, resistless in the fight.”

"Hear'st thou what monsters then thou must engage? [prove?

What dangers, gentle youth, she bids thee (Abrupt says Sloth)—"Ill fit thy tender age Tumult and wars, fit age for joy and love.

§ 65. The Hermit. Parnell.

FAR in a wild, unknown to public view,
 From youth to age a rev'rend Hermit grew;
 The moss his bed, the cave his humble cell;
 His food the fruits, his drink the crystal well:
 Remote from man, with God he pass'd his days,
 Pray'r all his business, all his pleasure praise.

A life so sacred, such serene repose,
 Seem'd heav'n itself, till one suggestion rose —
 That vice should triumph, virtue vice obey;
 This sprung some doubt of Providence's sway:
 His hopes no more a certain prospect boast,
 And all the tenor of his soul is lost.
 So when a smooth expanse receives imprest
 Calm nature's image on its wat'ry breast, [grow,
 Down bend the banks, the trees depending
 And skies beneath with answering colors glow:
 But if a stone the gentle sea divide,
 Swift ruffling circles curl on ev'ry side,
 And glimmering fragments of a broken sun;
 Banks, trees, and skies in thick disorder run.

To clear this doubt, to know the world by
 To find if books or swains report it right, [sight,
 (For yet by swains alone the world he knew,
 Whose feet came wand'ring o'er the nightly dew)
 He quits his cell; the pilgrim staff he bore,
 And fix'd the scallop in his hat before!
 Then with the sun a rising journey went,
 Sedate to think, and watching each event.

The morn was wasted in the pathless grass,
 And long and lonesome was the wild to pass;
 But when the southern sun had warm'd the day,
 A youth came posting o'er a crossing way;
 His raiment decent, his complexion fair,
 And soft in graceful ringlets wav'd his hair:
 Then near approaching, "Father, hail!" he cried:
 And "Hail, my son!" the rev'rend sire replied.
 Words follow'd words, from question answer
 flow'd,
 And talk of various kind deceiv'd the road;
 Till each with other pleas'd, and loth to part,
 While in their age they differ, join in heart.

Thus stands an aged elm in ivy bound,
 Thus youthful ivy clasps an elm around.

Now sunk the sun; the closing hour of day
 Came onward, mantled o'er with sober grey;
 Nature in silence bid the world repose:
 When near the road a stately palace rose; [pass,
 There, by the moon, through ranks of trees they Whose verdure crown'd their sloping sides of
 It chanc'd the noble master of the dome [grass.
 Still made his house the wand'ring stranger's home;

Yet still the kindness, from a thirst of praise,
 Prov'd the vain flourish of expensive ease.
 The pair arrive: the liveried servants wait;
 Their lord receives them at the pompous gate.
 The table groans with costly piles of food,
 And all is more than hospitably good. [drown,
 Then, led to rest, the day's long toil they
 Deep sunk in sleep, and silk, and heaps of down.

At length 'tis morn, and at the dawn of day
 Along the wide canals the Zephyrs play;
 Fresh o'er the gay parterres the breezes creep,
 And shake the neighb'ring wood to banish sleep.
 Up rise the guests obedient to the call;
 An early banquet deck'd the splendid hall;
 Rich luscious wine a golden goblet grac'd,
 Which the kind master forc'd the guests to taste,
 Then pleas'd and thankful, from the porch
 they go:

And, but the landlord, none had cause of woe:
 His cup was vanish'd; for in secret guise
 The younger guest purloin'd the glitt'ring prize.
 As one who spies a serpent in his way,
 Glist'ning and basking in the summer ray,
 Disorder'd stops to shun the danger near,
 Then walks with faintness on, and looks with
 So seem'd the sire, when far upon the road [fear;
 The shining spoil his wily partner show'd. [heart,
 He stopp'd with silence, walk'd with trembling
 And much he wish'd, but durst not ask, to part:
 Murm'ring he lifts his eyes, and thinks it hard
 That gen'rous actions meet a base reward.

While thus they pass, the sun his glory shrouds,
 The changing skies hang out their sable clouds;
 A sound in air presag'd approaching rain,
 And beasts to covert scud across the plain.
 Warn'd by the signs, the wand'ring pair retreat
 To seek for shelter at a neighb'ring seat:
 'Twas built with turrets on a rising ground,
 And strong, and large, and unimprov'd around;
 Its owner's temper, tim'rous and severe,
 Unkind and griping caus'd a desert there.
 As near the miser's heavy doors they drew,
 Fierce rising gusts with sudden fury blew;
 The nimble lightning mix'd with show'rs began,
 And o'er their heads loud rolling thunder ran;
 Here long they knock, but knock or call in vain,
 Driv'n by the wind and batter'd by the rain.
 At length some pity warm'd the master's breast
 ('Twas then his threshold first receiv'd a guest):
 Slow creaking turns the door with jealous care,
 And half he welcomes in the shiv'ring pair;
 One frugal faggot lights the naked walls,
 And nature's fervor through their limbs recalls:

Bread of the coarser sort with meagre wine,
(Each hardly granted) serv'd them both to dine:
And when the tempest first appear'd to cease,
A ready warning bid them part in peace.

With still remark the pond'ring Hermit view'd,
In one so rich a life so poor and rude;
And why should such (within himself he cried)
Lock the lost wealth a thousand want beside?
But what new marks of wonder soon took place
In ev'ry settling feature of his face,
When from his vest the young companion bore
That cup the gen'rous landlord own'd before;
And paid profusely with the precious bowl
The stinted kindness of this churlish soul!

But now the clouds in airy tumult fly;
The sun emerging opes an azure sky;
A fresher green the smelling leaves display,
And, glitt'ring as they tremble, cheer the day:
The weather courts them from the poor retreat,
And the glad master bolts the wary gate.

While hence they walk the Pilgrim's bosom wrought

With all the travail of uncertain thought;
His partner's acts without their cause appear;
'Twas there a vice; and seem'd a madness here:
Detesting that, and pitying this, he goes,
Lost and confounded with the various shows.

Now night's dim shades again involve the sky;
Again the wand'ers want a place to lie:
Again they search, and find a lodging nigh.
The soil improv'd around, the mansion neat,
And neither poorly low nor idly great,
It seem'd to speak its master's turn of mind,
Content, and not for praise but virtue kind.

Hither the walkers turn with weary feet,
Then bless the mansion, and the master greet.
Their greeting fair, bestow'd with modest guise,
The courteous master hears and thus replies:

"Without a vain, without a grudging heart,
To him who gives us all, I yield a part;
From him you come, for him accept it here,
A frank and sober, more than costly cheer."
He spoke, and bid the welcome table spread,
Then talk'd of virtue till the time of bed;
When the grave household round his hall repair,
Warn'd by a bell, and close the hours with pray'r.

At length the world renew'd by calm repose,
Was strong for toil; the dappled morn arose.
Before the Pilgrims part, the younger crept,
Near the clos'd cradle, where an infant slept,
And writh'd his neck: the landlord's little pride,
O strange return! grew black, and gasp'd, and
Horror of horrors! what! his only son? [died,
How look'd our Hermit when the fact was done?
Not hell, tho' hell's black jaws in sunder part,
And breathe blue fire, could more assault his heart.

Confus'd and struck with silence at the deed,
He flies; but trembling, fails to fly with speed,
His steps the youth pursues: the country lay
Perplex'd with roads; a servant show'd the way:
A river cross'd the path; the passage o'er
Was nice to find; the servant trod before:
Long arms of oaks an open bridge supplied, [glide.
And deep the waves beneath the bending branches

The youth, who seem'd to watch a time to sin,
Approach'd the careless guide, and thrust him in:
Plunging he falls; and rising lifts his head;
Then flashing turns, and sinks among the dead.

Wild sparkling rage inflames the father's eyes;
He bursts the bands of fear, and madly cries,
"Detested wretch!"—But scarce his speech
began,

When the strange partner seem'd no longer man.
His youthful face grew more serenely sweet;
His robe turn'd white, and flow'd upon his feet;
Fair rounds of radiant points invest his hair;
Celestial odors breathe through purpled air;
And wings whose colors glitter'd on the day,
Wide at his back their gradual plumes display.
The form ethereal bursts upon his sight,
And moves in all the majesty of light.

Tho' loud at first the Pilgrim's passion grew,
Sudden he gaz'd and wist not what to do;
Surprise in secret chains his words suspends,
And in a calm his settling temper ends.
But silence here the beauteous angel broke
(The voice of music ravish'd as he spoke):

"Thy pray'r, thy praise, thy life to vice unknown,

In sweet memorial rise before the throne:
These charms success in our bright region find,
And force an angel down to calm thy mind;
For this commission'd, I forsook the sky—
Nay, cease to kneel!—thy fellow-servant I.

"Then know the truth of government divine,
And let these scruples be no longer thine.

"The Maker justly claims that world he made,
In this the right of Providence is laid;
Its sacred majesty through all depends
On using second means to work his ends;
'Tis thus, withdrawn in state from human eye,
The pow'r exerts his attributes on high;
Your actions uses, nor controls your will,
And bids the doubting sons of men be still. [prise,

"What strange events can strike with more sur-
Than those which lately struck thy wond'ring eyes?

Yet, taught by these, confess th' Almighty just;
And, where you can't unriddle, learn to trust.

"The great vain man, who far'd on costly food,
Whose life was too luxurious to be good;
Who made his iv'ry stands with goblets shine,
And forc'd his guests to morning draughts of wine;
Has with the cup, the graceless custom lost,
And still he welcomes, but with less of cost.

"The mean suspicious wretch, whose bolted door

Ne'er mov'd in pity to the wand'ring poor,
With him I left the cup, to teach his mind
That Heaven can bless, if mortals will be kind.
Conscious of wanting worth, he views the bowl,
And feels compassion touch his grateful soul.
Thus artists melt the sullen ore of lead,
With heaping coals of fire upon its head;
In the kind warmth the metal learns to glow,
And loose from dross, the silver runs below.

"Long had our pious friend in virtue trod,
But now the child half-wean'd his heart from God;

(Child of his age) for him he liv'd in pain,
And measur'd back his steps to earth again.
To what excesses had his dotage run!
But God, to save the father, took the son.
To all but thee in fits he seem'd to go;
And 'twas my ministry to deal the blow.

The poor fond parent, humbled in the dust,
Now owns in tears the punishment was just.
"But how had all his fortunes felt a wrack,
Had that false servant sped in safety back!
This night his treasur'd heaps he meant to steal,
And what a fund of charity would fail!
Thus Heav'n instructs thy mind: this trial o'er,
Depart in peace, resign, and sin no more."

On sounding pinions here the youth withdrew;
The sage stood wond'ring as the seraph flew.
Thus look'd Elisha, when, to mount on high,
His master took the chariot of the sky:
The fiery pomp ascending left the view;
The prophet gaz'd, and wish'd to follow too.

The bending Hermit here a pray'r begun:
Lord! as in heav'n, on earth thy will be done.
Then, gladly turning, sought his ancient place,
And pass'd a life of piety and peace.

§ 66. The Fire-Side. Cotton.

DEAR Chloe, while the busy crowd,
The vain, the wealthy, and the proud,
In Folly's maze advance:
Though singularity and pride
Be call'd our choice, we'll step aside,
Nor join the giddy dance.

From the gay world we'll oft retire
To our own family and fire,
Where love our hours employs;
No noisy neighbour enters here,
No intermeddling stranger near,
To spoil our heart-felt joys.

If solid happiness we prize,
Within our breast this jewel lies;
And they are fools who roam:
The world has nothing to bestow;
From our own selves our joys must flow,
And that dear hut, our home.

Of rest was Noah's dove bereft,
When with impatient wing she left
That safe retreat, the ark;
Giving her vain excursion o'er,
The disappointed bird once more
Explor'd the sacred bark.

Though fools from Hymen's gentle pow'rs,
We, who improve his golden hours,
By sweet experience know,
That marriage, rightly understood,
Gives to the tender and the good
A paradise below.

Our babes shall richest comforts bring;
If tutor'd right, they'll prove a spring
Whence pleasures ever rise:

We'll form their minds, with studious care,
To all that's manly, good, and fair,
And train them for the skies.

While they our wisest hours engage,
They'll joy our youth, support our age,
And crown our hoary hairs:
They'll grow in virtue ev'ry day,
And thus our fondest loves repay,
And recompense our cares.

No borrow'd joys, they're all our own,
While to the world we live unknown,
Or by the world forgot:
Monarchs! we envy not your state;
We look with pity on the great,
And bless our humble lot.

Our portion is not large, indeed;
But then how little do we need!
For nature's calls are few:
In this the art of living lies,
To want no more than may suffice,
And make that little do.

We'll therefore, relish, with content,
Whate'er kind Providence has sent,
Nor aim beyond our pow'r;
For, if our stock be very small,
'Tis prudence to enjoy it all,
Nor lose the present hour.

To be resign'd when ills betide,
Patient when favors are denied,
And pleas'd with favors given;
Dear Chloe, this is wisdom's part;
This is that incense of the heart
Whose fragrance smells to heaven.

We'll ask no long protracted treat,
Since winter's life is seldom sweet;
But, when our feast is o'er,
Grateful, from table we'll arise,
Nor grudge our sons with envious eyes
The relics of our store.

Thus, hand in hand, through life we'll go;
Its checquer'd paths of joy and woe
With cautious steps we'll tread;
Quit its vain scenes without a tear,
Without a trouble or a fear,
And mingle with the dead.

While conscience, like a faithful friend,
Shall through the gloomy vale attend,
And cheer our dying breath;
Shall, when all other comforts cease,
Like a kind angel whisper peace,
And smooth the bed of death.

§ 67. VISIONS for the Entertainment and Instruction of younger Minds. Cotton.
Virginibus puerisque canto. HOR.

TO THE READER.

AUTHORS, you know, of greatest fame,
Through modesty suppress their name*;

* Though Dr. Cotton is well known to have been the author of these Visions, they have generally been published without prefixing his name.

And would you wish me to reveal
 What these superior wits conceal?
 Forego the search, my curious friend,
 And husband time to better end.
 All my ambition is, I own,
 To profit and to please unknown;
 Like streams supplied from springs below,
 Which scatter blessings as they flow.

Were you diseas'd, or press'd with pain,
 Straight you'd apply to Warwick Lane,
 The thoughtful Doctor feels your pulse,
 (No matter whether Mead or Hulse,) writes—Arabic to you and me—
 Then signs his hand, and takes his fee.
 Now, should the sage omit his name,
 Would not the cure remain the same?
 Not but physicians sign their bill,
 Or when they cure, or when they kill.

'Tis often known, the mental race
 Their fond ambitious sires disgrace.
 Dar'd I avow a parent's claim,
 Critics might sneer, and friends might blame.
 This dang'rous secret let me hide,
 I'll tell you ev'ry thing beside:
 Not that it boots the world a tittle,
 Whether the author's big or little;
 Or whether fair, or black, or brown;
 No writer's hue concerns the town.

I pass the silent rural hour,
 No slave to wealth, no tool to pow'r,
 My mansion's warm, and very neat;
 You'd say, "A pretty snug retreat!"
 My rooms no costly paintings grace,
 The humbler print supplies their place.
 Behind the house my garden lies,
 And opens to the southern skies:
 The distant hills gay prospects yield,
 And plenty smiles in ev'ry field.

The faithful mastiff is my guard:
 The feather'd tribes adorn my yard;
 Alive my joy, my treat when dead,
 And their soft plumes improve my bed.

My cow rewards me all she can (Brutes leave ingratitude to man);
 She, daily thankful to her lord,
 Crowns with nectarious sweets my board:
 Am I diseas'd? The cure is known,
 Her sweeter juices mend my own.

I love my house, and seldom roam;
 Few visits please me more than home;
 I pity that unhappy elf
 Who loves all company but self;
 By idle passions borne away
 To opera, masquerade, or play;
 Fond of those hives where Folly reigns,
 And Britain's peers receive her chains;
 Where the pert virgin slights a name,
 And scorns to redden into shame.
 But know, my fair, to whom belong
 The poet and his artless song,
 When female cheeks refuse to glow,
 Farewell to virtue here below!
 Our sex is lost to ev'ry rule;
 Our sole distinction, knave or fool:

'Tis to your innocence we run;
 Save us, ye fair, or we're undone;
 Maintain your modesty and station,
 So women shall preserve the nation.
 -Mothers, 'tis said, in days of old,
 Esteem'd their girls more choice than gold;
 Too well a daughter's worth they knew,
 To make her cheap by public view;
 Few, who their diamonds' value weigh,
 Expose those diamonds every day.
 Then, if sir Plume drew near, and smil'd,
 The parent trembled for her child:
 The first advance alarm'd her breast,
 And fancy pictur'd all the rest.
 But now no mother fears a foe;
 No daughter shudders at a beau.

Pleasure is all the reigning theme;
 Our noon-day thought, our midnight dream.
 In Folly's chace our youths engage,
 And shameless crowds of tott'ring age.
 The die, the dance, th' intemperate bowl,
 With various charms engross the soul.
 Are gold, fame, health, the terms of vice?
 The frantic tribes shall pay the price.
 But though to ruin post they run,
 They'll think it hard to be undone.

Do not arraign my want of taste,
 Or sight, to ken where joys are plac'd.
 They widely err who think me blind;
 And I disclaim a Stoic's mind.
 Like yours are my sensations quite;
 I only strive to feel aright.
 My joys, like streams, glide gently by;
 Though small their channel, never dry;
 Keep a still, even, fruitful wave,
 And bless the neighb'ring meads they lave.

My fortune (for I'll mention all,
 And more than you dare tell) is small;
 Yet ev'ry friend partakes my store,
 And Want goes smiling from my door.
 Will forty shillings warm the breast
 Of worth or industry distress—
 This sum I cheerfully impart,
 'Tis fourscore pleasures to my heart;
 And you may make, by means like these,
 Five talents ten, whene'er you please.
 'Tis true, my little purse grows light;
 But then I sleep so sweet at night!
 This grand specific will prevail
 When all the doctor's opiates fail.

You ask what party I pursue;
 Perhaps you mean, "Whose fool are you?"
 The names of party I detest—
 Badges of slavery at best—
 I've too much grace to play the knave,
 And too much pride to turn a slave.

I love my country from my soul,
 And grieve when knaves or fools control;
 I'm pleased when vice and folly smart,
 Or at the gibbet or the cart;
 Yet always pity where I can;
 Abhor the guilt, but mourn the man.

Now the religion of your poet—
 Does not this little preface show it?

My Visions if you scan with care,
 'Tis ten to one you'll find it there.
 And if my actions suit my song,
 You can't in conscience think me wrong.

§ 68. *Vision I. Slunder. Inscribed to Miss S***.*

My lovely girl, I write for you,
 And pray believe my Visions true ;
 They'll form your mind to ev'ry grace ;
 They'll add new beauties to your face ;
 And when old age impairs your prime,
 You'll triumph o'er the spoils of time.
 Childhood and youth engage my pen ;
 'Tis labor lost to talk to men ;
 Youth may perhaps reform when wrong ;
 Age will not listen to my song.
 He who at fifty is a fool,
 Is far too stubborn grown for school.

What is that vice which still prevails,
 When almost ev'ry passion fails ;
 Which with our very dawn begun,
 Nor ends but with our setting sun ;
 Which, like a noxious weed, can spoil
 The fairest flow'rs, and choke the soil !
 'Tis Slander—and, with shame I own,
 The vice of human kind alone.

Be Slander, then, my leading dream,
 Though you're a stranger to the theme ;
 Thy softer breast, and honest heart,
 Scorn the defamatory art ;
 Thy soul asserts her native skies,
 Nor asks detraction's wings to rise ;
 In foreign spoils let others shine,
 Intrinsic excellence is thine.
 The bird in peacock's plumes who shone
 Could plead no merit of her own ;
 The silly theft betray'd her pride,
 And spoke her poverty beside.

Th' insidious sland'ring thief is worse
 Than the poor rogue who steals your purse.
 Say, he purloins your glitt'ring store ;
 Who takes your gold, takes trash—no more ;
 Perhaps he pilfers—to be fed—
 Ah ! guiltless wretch who steals for bread !
 But the dark villain who shall aim
 To blast my fair, my spotless name,
 He'd steal a precious gem away,
 Steal what both Indies can't repay !
 Here the strong pleas of want are vain,
 Or the more pious pleas of gain.
 No sinking family to save !
 No gold to glut th' insatiate knave !

Improve the hint of Shakspeare's tongue ;
 'Twas thus immortal Shakspeare sung* ;
 And trust the bard's unerring rule,
 For nature was that poet's school.

* Othello.

† Xerxes, king of Persia, and son of Darius. He invaded Greece with an army consisting of more than a million of men (some say more than two millions) ; who, together with their cattle, perished in a great measure through the inability of the countries to supply such a vast host with provision.

§ Hesperia includes Italy as well as Spain ; and the inhabitants of both are remarkable for their revengeful dispositions.

As I was nodding in my chair,
 I saw a rueful wild appear ;
 No verdure met my aching sight,
 But hemlock and cold aconite ;
 Two very pois'nous plants, 'tis true,
 But not so bad as vice to you.

The dreary prospect spread around ;
 Deep snow had whiten'd all the ground :
 A bleak and barren mountain nigh,
 Expos'd to ev'ry friendless sky !
 Here foul-mouth'd Slander lay reclin'd,
 Her snaky tresses hiss'd behind ;
 " A bloated toad-stool rais'd her head,
 " The plumes of ravens were her bed† ;"
 She fed upon the viper's brood,
 And slak'd her impious thirst with blood.

The rising sun, and western ray,
 Were witness to her distant sway.
 The tyrant claim'd a mightier host
 Than the proud Persian e'er could boast.
 No conquest grac'd Darius' son†,
 By his own numbers half undone :
 Success attended Slander's pow'r ;
 She reap'd fresh laurels ev'ry hour :
 Her troops a deeper scarlet wore
 Than ever armies knew before.

No plea diverts the fury's rage,
 The fury spares nor sex nor age.
 E'en Merit, with destructive charms,
 Provokes the vengeance of her arms.

Whene'er the tyrant sounds to war,
 Her canker'd trump is heard afar.
 Pride, with a heart unknown to yield,
 Commands in chief, and guides the field ;
 He stalks with vast gigantic stride,
 And scatters fear and ruin wide :
 So the impetuous torrents sweep
 At once whole nations to the deep.

Revenge, that base Hesperian§, known
 A chief support of Slander's throne,
 Amidst the bloody crowd is seen,
 And treach'ry brooding in his mien ;
 The monster often chang'd his gait,
 But march'd resolv'd and fix'd as fate.
 Thus the fell kite, whom hunger stings,
 Now slowly moves his outstretch'd wings ;
 Now swift as lightning bears away,
 And darts upon his trembling prey.

Envy commands a sacred band,
 With sword and poison in her hand.
 Around her haggard eye-balls roll ;
 A thousand fiends possess her soul.
 The artful unsuspected sprite
 With fatal aim attacks by night.
 Her troops advance with silent tread,
 And stab the hero in his bed ;

† Garth's Dispensatory.

Or shoot the wing'd malignant lie,
And female honors pine and die.
So prowling wolves, when darkness reigns,
Intent on murder, scour the plains;
Approach the folds where lambs repose,
Whose guileless breasts suspect no foes;
The savage gluts his fierce desires,
And bleating innocence expires.

Slander smil'd horribly, to view
How wide her conquests daily grew:
Around the crowded levees wait,
Like oriental slaves of state;
Of either sex whole armies prest,
But chiefly of the fair and best.

Is it a breach of friendship's law,
To say what female friends I saw?
Slander assumes the idol's part,
And claims the tribute of the heart;
The best in some unguarded hour
Have bow'd the knee, and own'd her pow'r.
Then let the poet not reveal
What candor wishes to conceal.

If I beheld some faulty fair,
Much worse delinquents crowded there:
Prelates in sacred lawn I saw,
Grave physic, and loquacious law;
Courtiers, like summer flies, abound;
And hungry poets swarm around;
But now my partial story ends,
And makes my females full amends.

If Albion's isle such dreams fulfils,
'Tis Albion's isle which cures the ills;
Fertile of ev'ry worth and grace,
Which warm the heart and flush the face.

Fancy disclos'd a smiling train
Of British nymphs that tripp'd the plain.
Good-nature first, a sylvan queen,
Attir'd in robes of cheerful green;
A fair and smiling virgin she!
With ev'ry charm that shines in thee.
Prudence assum'd the chief command,
And bore a mirror in her hand;
Grey was the matron's head by age,
Her mind by long experience sage;
Of ev'ry distant ill afraid,
And anxious for the simp'ring maid.
The Graces danc'd before the fair;
And white-rob'd Innocence was there:
The trees with golden fruits were crown'd,
And rising flow'rs adorn'd the ground;
The sun display'd each brighter ray,
And shone in all the pride of day:

When Slander sicken'd at the sight,
And skulk'd-away to shun the light.

§ 69. Vision II. Pleasure.

HEAR, ye fair mothers of our isle,
Nor scorn your Poet's homely style.
What though my thoughts be quaint or new,
I'll warrant that my doctrine's true;
Or, if my sentiments be old,
Remember truth is sterling gold.

You judge it of important weight,
To keep your rising offspring straight;

For this such anxious moments feel,
And ask the friendly aids of steel;
For this import the distant cane,
Or slay the monarch of the main.
And shall the soul be warp'd aside
By passion, prejudice, and pride?
Deformity of heart I call
The worst deformity of all.

Your cares to body are confin'd;
Few fear obliquity of mind.
Why not adorn the better part?
This is a noble theme for art.
For what is form, or what is face,
But the soul's index, or its case?

Now take a simile at hand,
Compare the mental soil to land.
Shall fields be till'd with annual care,
And minds lie fallow ev'ry year?
Oh, since the crop depends on you,
Give them the culture which is due:
Hoe ev'ry weed, and dress the soil,
So harvest shall repay your toil.

If human minds resemble trees
(As ev'ry moralist agrees),
Prune all the stragglers of your vine,
Then shall the purple clusters shine.
The gard'ner knows that fruitful life
Demands the salutary knife:
For ev'ry wild luxuriant shoot
Or robs the bloom, or starves the fruit.

A satirist* in Roman times,
When Rome, like Britain, groan'd with crimes,
Asserts it for a sacred truth,
That pleasures are the bane of youth;
That sorrows such pursuits attend,
Or such pursuits in sorrows end:
That all the wild advent'rer gains,
Are perils, penitence, and pains.
Approve, ye fair, the Roman page,
And bid your sons revere the sage;
In study spend their midnight oil,
And string their nerves by manly toil.
Thus shall they grow, like Temple, wise;
Thus future Lockes and Newtons rise;
Or hardy chiefs to wield the lance,
And save us from the chains of France.
Yes, bid your sons betimes forego
Those treach'rous paths where pleasures grow,
Where the young mind is Folly's slave;
Where ev'ry virtue finds a grave.

Let each bright character be nam'd,
For wisdom or for valor fam'd.
Are the dear youths to science prone?
Tell how th' immortal Bacon shone!
Who, leaving meaner joys to kings,
Soar'd high on contemplation's wings;
Rang'd the fair fields of nature o'er,
Where never mortal trod before;
Bacon! whose vast capacious plan
Bespoke him angel more than man!

Does love of martial fame inspire?
Cherish, ye fair, the gen'rous fire;

* Persius.

Teach them to spurn inglorious rest,
And rouse the hero in his breast :
Paint Cressy's vanquish'd field anew,
Their souls shall kindle at the view ;
Resolv'd to conquer or to fall,
When Liberty and Britain call.
Thus shall they rule the crimson plain ;
Or hurl their thunders through the main ;
Gain with their blood, nor grudge the cost,
What their degen'rate sires have lost :
The laurel thus shall grace their brow,
As Churchill's once, or Warren's now.

One summer evening as I stray'd
Along the silent moon-light glade,
With these reflections in my breast,
Beneath an oak I sunk to rest ;
A gentle slumber intervenes,
And fancy dress'd instructive scenes.

Methought a spacious road I spied.
And stately trees adorn'd its side ;
Frequented by a giddy crowd
Of thoughtless mortals, vain and loud ;
Who tripp'd with jocund heel along,
And bade me join their smiling throng.

I straight obey'd—persuasion hung
Like honey on the speaker's tongue :
A cloudless sun improv'd the day,
And pinks and roses strew'd our way.

Now as our journey we pursue,
A beauteous fabric rose to view—
A stately dome, and sweetly grac'd
With ev'ry ornament of taste.
This structure was a female's claim,
And Pleasure was the Monarch's name.

The hall we enter'd uncontrol'd,
And saw the queen enthron'd on gold :
Arabian sweets perfum'd the ground,
And laughing Cupids flutter'd round ;
A flowing vest adorn'd the fair,
And flow'ry chaplets wreath'd her hair.
Fraud taught the queen a thousand wiles,
A thousand soft insidious smiles ;
Love taught her lisp'ing tongue to speak,
And form'd the dimple in her cheek ;
The lily and the damask rose
The tincture of her face compose ;
Nor did the God of wit disdain
To mingle with the shining train.
Her vot'ries flock from various parts,
And chiefly youth resign'd their hearts ;
The old in sparing numbers press'd,
But awkward devotees at best.

"Now let us range at large," we cried,
"Thro' all the garden's boasted pride."
Here jasmines spread the silver flow'r,
To deck the wall, or weave the bow'r ;
The woodbines mix in am'rous play,
And breathe their fragrant lives away.
Here rising myrtles form a shade ;
There roses blush, and scent the glade ;
The orange, with a vernal face,
Wears ev'ry rich autumnal grace ;
While the young blossoms here unfold,
There shines the fruit like pendent gold.

Citrons their balmy sweets exhale,
And triumph in the distant gale.
Now fountains, murmur'ing to the song,
Roll their translucent streams along ;
Thro' all the aromatic groves
The faithful turtles coo their loves ;
The lark ascending pours his notes,
And linnets swell their rapt'rous throats.

Pleasure, imperial fair ! how gay
Thy empire, and how wide thy sway !
Enchanting queen, how soft thy reign !
How man, fond man, implores thy chain !
Yet thine each meretricious art,
That weakens and corrupts the heart :
The childish toys, and wanton page,
Which sink and prostitute the stage !
The masquerade, that just offence
To virtue, and reproach to sense !
The midnight dance, the mantling bowl,
And all that dissipate the soul ;
All that to ruin man combine,
Yes, specious harlot ! all are thine.

Whence sprung th' accursed lust of play,
Which beggars thousands in a day ?
Speak, sorceress, speak (for thou canst tell),
Who call'd the treach'rous card from hell ?
Now man profanes his reas'ning pow'rs,
Profanes sweet friendship's sacred hours ;
Abandon'd to inglorious ends,
And faithless to himself and friends ;
A dupe to ev'ry artful knave,
To ev'ry abject wish a slave :
But who against himself combines,
Abets his enemy's designs.
When rapine meditates a blow,
He shares the guilt who aids the foe.
Is man a thief who steals my self—
How great his theft who robs himself ?
Is man, who gulls his friend, a cheat—
How heinous, then, is self-deceit ?
Is murder justly deem'd a crime—
How black his guilt who murders time ?
Should custom plead, as custom will,
Grand precedents to palliate ill ;
Shall modes and forms avail with me,
When reason disavows the plea ?
Who games is felon of his wealth,
His time, his liberty, his health ;
Virtue forsakes his sordid mind,
And Honor scorns to stay behind.
From man when these bright cherubs part,
Ah, what's the poor deserted heart !
A savage wild that shocks the sight !
Or chaos, and impervious night !
Each gen'rous principle destroy'd,
And dæmons crowd the frightful void.

Shall Siam's elephant supply
The baneful desolating die !
Against the honest sylvan's will,
You taught his iv'ry tusk to kill.
Heaven, fond its favors to dispense,
Gave him that weapon for defence :
That weapon for his guard design'd,
You render'd fatal to mankind.

He plann'd no death for thoughtless youth ;
You gave the venom to his tooth.
Blush, tyrant, blush ! for, oh ! 'tis true,
That no fell serpent bites like you.

The guests were order'd to depart ;
Reluctance sat on every heart :
A porter show'd a diff'rent door,
Not the fair portal known before.
The gates, methought were open'd wide ;
The crowds descended in a tide :
But oh ! ye heavens, what vast surprise
Struck the advent'rer's frightened eyes !
A barren heath before us lay,
And gath'ring clouds obscur'd the day ;
The darkness rose in smoky spires ;
The lightnings flash'd their livid fires ;
Loud peals of thunder rent the air,
While vengeance chill'd our hearts with fear.

Five ruthless tyrants sway'd the plain,
And triumph'd o'er the mangled slain.
Here sat Distaste, with sickly mien,
And more than half devour'd with spleen :
There stood Remorse with thought opprest,
And vipers feeding on his breast :
Then Want, dejected, pale, and thin,
With bones just starting thro' his skin ;
A ghastly fiend !—and close behind,
Disease his aching head reclin'd ;
His everlasting thirst confess'd
The fires which rag'd within his breast.
Death clos'd the train ! the hideous form
Smil'd, unrelenting, in the storm ;
When straight a doleful shriek was heard :
I 'woke—the vision disappear'd.

Let not the unexperienc'd boy
Deny that pleasures will destroy ;
Or say that dreams are vain and wild,
Like fairy tales to please a child.
Important hints the wise may reap
From sallies of the soul in sleep ;
And since there's meaning in my dream,
The moral merits your esteem.

70. Vision III. Health.

ATTEND my Visions, thoughtless youths,
Ere long you'll think them weighty truths ;
Prudent it were to think so now,
Ere age has silver'd o'er your brow :
For he, who at his early years
Has sown in vice, shall reap in tears.
If folly has possess'd his prime,
Disease shall gather strength in time ;
Poison shall rage in ev'ry vein ;
Nor penitence dilute the stain :
And when each hour shall urge his fate,
Thought, like the doctor, comes too late.

The subject of my song is Health,
A good superior far to wealth.
Can the young mind distrust its worth ?
Consult the monarchs of the earth :
Imperial czars, and sultans, own
No gem so bright that decks their throne ;

Each for this pearl his crown would quit,
And turn a rustic, or a cit.

Mark, though the blessing's lost with ease,
'Tis not recover'd when you please.
Say not that gruels shall avail ;
For salutary gruels fail ;
Say not, Apollo's sons succeed ;
Apollo's Son is Egypt's* reed.
How fruitless the physician's skill,
How vain the penitential pill,
The marble monuments proclaim ;
The humbler turf confirms the same !
Prevention is the better cure ;
So says the proverb, and 'tis sure.

Would you extend your narrow span,
And make the most of life you can ;
Would you, when med'cines cannot save,
Descend with ease into the grave—
Calmly retire, like ev'ning light,
And cheerful bid the world good night ?
Let Temp'rance constantly preside ;
Our best physician, friend, and guide !
Would you to wisdom make pretence,
Proud to be thought a man of sense ?
Let Temp'rance (always friend to fame)
With steady hand direct your aim !
Or, like an archer in the dark,
Your random shaft will miss the mark :
For they who slight her golden rules,
In wisdom's volume stand for fools.

But morals, unadorn'd by art,
Are seldom known to reach the heart :
I'll therefore strive to raise my theme
With all the scenery of a dream.

Soft were my slumbers, sweet my rest,
Such as the infant's on the breast ;
When fancy, ever on the wing,
And fruitful as the genial spring,
Presented in a blaze of light,
A new creation to my sight.

A rural landscape I descried,
Drest in the robes of summer pride ;
The herds adorn'd the sloping hills,
That glitter'd with their tinkling rills ;
Below the fleecy mothers stray'd,
And round their sportive lambkins play'd.

Nigh to a murmur'ing brook I saw
An humble cottage, thatch'd with straw ;
Behind, a garden, that supplied
All things for use, and none for pride :
Beauty prevail'd through ev'ry part ;
But more of nature than of art.

“ Hail, thou sweet, calm, unenvied seat ! ”
I said, and bless'd the fair retreat ;
“ Here would I pass my remnant days,
“ Unknown to censure or to praise ;
“ Forget the world, and be forgot,
“ As Pope describes his vestal's lot.”

While thus I mus'd, a beauteous maid
Stepp'd from a thicket's neighbouring shade ;
Not Hampton's gallery can boast,
Nor Hudson's paint, so fair a toast :

* An allusion to 2 Kings, xviii. 21.

She claim'd the cottage for her own :
To Health a cottage is a throne.

The annals say (to prove her worth)
The Graces solemniz'd her birth.
Garlands of various flow'rs they wrought,
The orchard's blushing pride they brought :
Hence in her face the lily speaks,
And hence the rose which paints her cheeks ;
The cherry gave her lips to glow :
Her eyes were debtors to the sloe ;
And, to complete the lovely fair,
'Tis said the chesnut stain'd her hair.

The virgin was averse to courts,
But often seen in rural sports :
When in her rosy vest the morn
Walks o'er the dew-bespangled lawn,
The nymph is first to form the race,
Or wind the horn, and lead the chace.

Sudden I heard a shouting train ;
Glad acclamations fill'd the plain ;
Abundant joy improv'd the scene,
For Health was loud proclaim'd a queen.

Two smiling cherubs grac'd her throne,
(To modern courts, I fear, unknown :)
One was the nymph that loves the light,
Fair Innocence, array'd in white ;
With sister Peace in close embrace,
And heaven all opening in her face.

The reign was long, the empire great,
And Virtue minister of state.
In other kingdoms, ev'ry hour,
You hear of Vice preferr'd to power :
Vice was a perfect stranger here ;
No knaves engross'd the royal ear ;
No fools obtain'd the monarch's grace ;
Virtue dispos'd of ev'ry place.
What sickly appetites are ours,
Still varying with the varying hours !
And though from good to bad we range,
"No matter," says the fool, "'tis change."

Her subjects now express'd apace
Dissatisfaction in their face ;
Some view the state with Envy's eye ;
Some were displeas'd, they knew not why ;
When Faction, ever bold and vain,
With rigor tax'd their monarch's reign.
Thus, should an angel from above,
Fraught with benevolence and love,
Descend to earth, and here impart
Important truths to mend the heart,
Would not th' instructive guest dispense
With passion, appetite, and sense,
We should his heavenly lore despise,
And send him to his former skies.
A dang'rous hostile pow'r arose
To Health, whose household were her foes :
A harlot's loose attire she wore,
And Luxury the name she bore.
This princess of unbounded sway,
Whom Asia's softer sons obey,
Made war against the queen of Health,
Assisted by the troops of Wealth.

The queen was first to take the field,
Arm'd with her helmet and her shield ;

Temper'd with such superior art,
That both were proof to ev'ry dart.
Two warlike chiefs approach'd the green,
And wond'rous fav'rites with the queen ;
Both were of Amazonian race,
Both high in merit and in place.
Here Resolution march'd, whose soul
No fear could shake, no pow'r control ;
The heroine wore a Roman vest ;
A lion's heart inform'd her breast.
There Prudence shone, whose bosom wrought
With all the various plans of Thought ;
'Twas hers to bid the troops engage,
And teach the battle where to rage.

And now the Syren's armies press ;
Their van was headed by Excess ;
The mighty wings that form'd the side,
Commanded by that giant Pride ;
While Sickness, and her sisters, Pain
And Poverty, the centre gain :
Repentance, with a brow severe,
And Death were station'd in the rear !

Health rang'd her troops with matchless art,
And acted the defensive part :
Her army posted on a hill,
Plainly bespoke superior skill.
Hence were discover'd, through the plain,
The motions of the hostile train :
While Prudence, to prevent surprise,
Oft sallied with her trusty spies ;
Explor'd each ambuscade below,
And reconnoitred well the foe.
Afar when Luxury descried
Inferior force by art supplied,
The Syren spake—"Let Fraud prevail,
"Since all my num'rous hosts must fail ;
"Henceforth hostilities shall cease ;
"I'll send to Health and offer peace."

Straight she dispatch'd, with pow'rs complete,
Pleasure, her minister, to treat.
This wicked strumpet topp'd her part,
And sow'd sedition in the heart !
Through ev'ry troop the poison ran ;
All were infected to a man.
The wary generals were won
By Pleasure's wiles, and both undone.
Jove held the troops in high disgrace,
And bade diseases blast the race ;
Look'd on the queen with melting eyes,
And snatch'd his darling to the skies,
Who still regards those wiser few,
That dare her dictates to pursue.
For where her stricter law prevails,
Though passion prompts or vice assails,
Long shall they cloudless skies behold,
And their calm sun-set beam with gold.

§ 71. Vision IV. Content.

MAN is deceiv'd by outward show—
'Tis a plain homespun truth I know ;
The fraud prevails at ev'ry age,
So says the school-boy and the sage :
Yet still we hug the dear deceit,
And still exclaim against the cheat.

But whence this inconsistent part ?
Say, moralists, who know the heart :
If you'll this labyrinth pursue,
I'll go before, and find the clue.

I dream'd ('twas on a birth-day night)
A sumptuous palace rose to sight :
The builder had, through ev'ry part,
Observ'd the chastest rules of art ;
Raphael and Titian had display'd
All the full force of light and shade :
Around the liveried servants wait ;
An aged porter kept the gate.

As I was traversing the hall,
Where Brussels looms adorn'd the wall
(Whose tap'stry shows, without my aid,
A nun is no such useless maid),
A graceful person came in view
(His form, it seems, is known to few) ;
His dress was unadorn'd with lace,
But charms ! a thousand in his face.

" This, Sir, your property ? " I cried ;
" Master and mansion coincide :
" Where all, indeed, is truly great,
" And proves that bliss may dwell with state :
" Pray, Sir, indulge a stranger's claim,
" And grant the favor of your name."

" Content ! " the lovely form replied ;
" But think not here that I reside :
" Here lives a courtier, base and sly ;
" An open, honest rustic, I.
" Our taste and manners disagree ;
" His levee boasts no charms for me :
" For titles, and the smiles of kings,
" To me are cheap, unheeded things.
" 'Tis virtue can alone impart
" The patent of a ducal heart :
" Unless this herald speaks him great,
" What shall avail the glare of state ? )
" Those secret charms are my delight,
" Which shine remote from public sight—
" Passions subdued, desires at rest,
" And hence his chaplain shares my breast.

" There was a time (his grace can tell)
" I knew the duke exceeding well ;
" Knew ev'ry secret of his heart ;
" In truth, we never were apart :
" But when the court became his end,
" He turn'd his back upon his friend.

" One day I call'd upon his grace,
" Just as the duke had got a place :
" I thought (but thought amiss, 'tis clear)
" I should be welcome to the peer ;
" Yes, welcome to a man in pow'r ;
" And so I was—for half an hour :
" But he grew weary of his guest,
" And soon discarded me his breast ;
" Upbraided me with want of merit,
" But most for poverty of spirit.

" You relish not the great man's lot !
" Come, hasten to my humble cot.
" Think me not partial to the great,
" I'm a sworn foe to pride and state !
" No monarch shares my kind embrace ;
" There's scarce a monarch knows my face ;

" Content shuns courts, and oftener dwells
" With modest worth in rural cells :
" There's no complaint, though brown the bread,
" Or the rude turf sustain the head ;
" Though hard the couch, and coarse the meat,
" Still the brown loaf and sleep are sweet.
" Far from the city I reside,
" And a thatch'd cottage all my pride.
" True to my heart, I seldom roam,
" Because I find my joys at home :
" For foreign visits then begin
" When the man feels a void within.
" But though from towns and crowds I fly,
" No humorist, nor cynic, I.
" Amidst sequester'd shades I prize
" The friendships of the good and wise.
" Bid Virtue and her sons attend,
" Virtue will tell thee, I'm her friend ;
" Tell thee I'm faithful, constant, kind,
" And meek, and lowly, and resign'd ;
" Will say, there's no distinction known,
" Betwixt her household and my own."

AUTHOR.

If these the friendships you pursue,
Your friends, I fear, are very few.
So little company, you say,
Yet fond of home from day to day !
How do you shun Detraction's rod ?
I doubt your neighbours think you odd !

CONTENT.

I commune with myself at night,
And ask my heart if all be right :
If " Right " replies my faithful breast,
I smile, and close my eyes to rest.

AUTHOR.

You seem regardless of the town :
Pray, sir, how stand you with the gown ?

CONTENT.

The clergy say they love me well ;
Whether they do, they best can tell :
They paint me modest, friendly, wise,
And always praise me to the skies :
But if conviction's at the heart,
Why not a correspondent part ?
For shall the learned tongue prevail,
If actions preach a diff'rent tale ?
Who'll seek my door, and grace my walls,
When neither dean nor prelate calls ?

With those my friendships must obtain,
Who prize their duty more than gain ;
Soft flow the hours whene'er we meet,
And conscious virtue is our treat ;
Our harmless breasts no envy know,
And hence we fear no secret foe ;
Our walks Ambition ne'er attends,
And hence we ask no pow'rful friends ;
We wish the best to church and state,
But leave the steerage to the great ;
Careless who rises or who falls,
And never dream of vacant stalls :
Much less, by pride or int'rest drawn,
Sigh for the mitre and the lawn.

Observe the secrets of my art,
I'll fundamental truths impart;
If you'll my kind advice pursue,
I'll quit my hut, and dwell with you.

The passions are a num'rous crowd,
Imperious, positive, and loud :
Curb these licentious sons of strife :
Hence chiefly rise the storms of life :
If they grow mutinous, and rave,
They are thy masters, thou their slave.

Regard the world with cautious eye,
Nor raise your expectation high :
See that the balanc'd scales be such,
You neither fear nor hope too much :
For disappointment's not the thing ;
'Tis pride and passion point the sting ;
Life is a sea where storms must rise ;
'Tis folly talks of cloudless skies ;
He who contracts his swelling sail,
Eludes the fury of the gale.

Be still, nor anxious thoughts employ ;
Distrust embitters present joy :
On God for all events depend ;
You cannot want when God's your friend.
Weigh well your part, and do your best ;
Leave to your Maker all the rest.
The hand which form'd thee in the womb,
Guides from the cradle to the tomb.
Can the fond mother slight her boy ?
Can she forget her prattling joy ?
Say then, shall sov'reign love desert
The humble and the honest heart ?
Heav'n may not grant thee all thy mind ;
Yet say not thou, that Heav'n's unkind.
God is alike both good and wise
In what he grants and what denies :
Perhaps, what Goodness gives to-day,
To-morrow Goodness takes away.

You say, that troubles intervene ;
That sorrows darken all the scene.
True—and this consequence you see,
The world was ne'er design'd for thee.
You're like a passenger below,
That stays perhaps a night or so ;
But still his native country lies
Beyond the bound'ries of the skies.

Of Heav'n ask virtue, wisdom, health,
But never let thy pray'r be wealth.
If food be thine (though little gold),
And raiment to repel the cold ;
Such as may Nature's wants suffice,
Not what from pride and folly rise :
If soft the motions of thy soul,
And a calm conscience crown the whole ;
Add but a friend to all this store,
You can't in reason wish for more :
And if kind Heav'n this comfort brings,
'Tis more than Heav'n bestows on kings.

He spake—the airy spectre flies,
And straight the sweet illusion dies :
The vision, at the early dawn,
Consign'd me to the thoughtful morn ;
To all the cares of waking clay,
And inconsistent dreams of day.

§ 72. Vision V. Happiness.

YE ductile youths, whose rising sun
Hath many circles still to run ;
Who wisely wish the pilot's chart,
To steer through life th' unsteady heart ;
And, all the thoughtful voyage past,
To gain a happy port at last :
Attend a Seer's instructive song ;
For moral truths to dreams belong.

I saw this wondrous Vision soon,
Long ere my sun had reach'd its noon ;
Just when the rising beard began
To grace my chin, and call me man.

One night, when balmy slumbers shed
Their peaceful poppies o'er my head,
My fancy led me to explore
A thousand scenes unknown before.

I saw a plain extended wide,
And crowds pour'd in from ev'ry side ;
All seem'd to start a diff'rent game,
Yet all declar'd their views the same :
The chace was Happiness, I found ;
But all alas ! enchanted ground.

Indeed, I judg'd it wondrous strange,
To see the giddy numbers range
Through roads, which promis'd nought, at best,
But sorrow to the human breast.
Methought, if bliss was all their view,
Why did they diff'rent paths pursue ?
The waking world has long agreed,
That Bagshot's not the road to Tweed ;
And he who Berwick seeks through Staines,
Shall have his labor for his pains.

As Parnell says*, my bosom wrought
With travail of uncertain thought ;
And, as an angel help'd the dean,
My angel chose to intervene.

The dress of each was much the same ;
And Virtue was my seraph's name.
When thus the angel silence broke ;
Her voice was music as she spoke :

“ Attend, O man ! nor leave my side,
“ And safety shall thy footsteps guide :
“ Such truths I'll teach, such secrets show,
“ As none but favor'd mortals know.”

She said—and straight we march'd along
To join Ambition's active throng :
Crowds urg'd on crowds with eager pace,
And happy he who led the race.
Axes and daggers lay unseen
In ambuscade along the green ;
While vapors shed delusive light,
And bubbles mock'd the distant sight.

We saw a shining mountain rise,
Whose tow'ring summit reach'd the skies ;
The slopes were steep, and form'd of glass,
Painful and hazardous to pass :
Courtiers and statesmen led the way ;
The faithless paths their steps betray ;
This moment seen aloft to soar,
The next to fall, and rise no more.
'Twas here ambition kept her court,
A phantom of gigantic port :

* See the Hermit, page 62.

The fav'rite that sustain'd her throne
Was falsehood by her vizard known ;
Next stood Mistrust, with frequent sigh,
Disorder'd look, and squinting eye ;
While meagre Envy claim'd a place ;
And Jealousy, with jaundic'd face.

" But where is Happiness ? " I cried.
My guardian turn'd, and thus replied :
" Mortal, by Folly still beguil'd,
" Thou hast not yet outstripp'd the child ;
" Thou who hast twenty winters seen
" (I hardly think thee past fifteen)
" To ask if happiness can dwell
" With ev'ry dirty imp of hell !
" Go to the school-boy ; he shall preach
" What twenty winters cannot teach ;
" He'll tell thee, from his weekly theme,
" That thy pursuit is all a dream ;
" That bliss ambitious vows disowns,
" And, self-dependent, laughs at thrones ;
" Prefers the shades, and lowly seats,
" Whither fair Innocence retreats.
" So the coy lily of the vale
" Shuns eminence, and loves the dale."

I blush'd ; and now we cross'd the plain,
To find the money-getting train ;
Those silent, snug, commercial bands,
With busy looks, and dirty hands.
Amidst these thoughtful crowds, the old
Plac'd all their happiness in gold ;
And surely, if there's bliss below,
These hoary heads the secret know.
We journey'd with the plodding crew,
When soon a temple rose to view ;
A Gothic pile ! with moss o'ergrown ;
Strong were the walls, and built with stone ;
Without a thousand mastiffs wait ;
A thousand bolts secure the gate.
We sought admission long in vain,
For here all favors sell for gain.
The greedy porter yields to gold ;
His fee receiv'd, the gates unfold.
Assembled nations here we found,
And view'd the cringing herds around,
Who daily sacrific'd to Wealth
Their honor, conscience, peace, and health,
I saw no charms that could engage ;
The god appear'd like sordid age,
With hooked nose, and famish'd jaws,
But serpent's eyes, and harpy's claws :
Behind stood Fear, that restless sprite,
Which haunts the watches of the night ;
And viper Care, that stings so deep,
Whose deadly venom murders sleep.

We hasten now to Pleasure's bow'rs,
Where the gay tribes sat crown'd with flow'rs :
Here beauty ev'ry charm display'd,
And love inflam'd the yielding maid ;
Delicious wine our taste employs ;
His crimson bowl exalts our joys.
I felt its gen'rous pow'r, and thought
The pearl was found that long I sought.
Determin'd here to fix my home,
I bless'd the change, nor wish'd to roam :

The seraph disapprov'd my stay ;
Spread her fair plumes, and wing'd away.
Alas ! whene'er we talk of bliss,
How prone is man to judge amiss !
See, a long train of ills conspires
To scourge our uncontrol'd desires ;
Like summer swarms diseases crowd,
Each bears a crutch, or each a shroud :
Fever, that thirsty fury came,
With inextinguishable flame ;
Consumption, sworn ally of Death !
Crept slowly on with panting breath ;
Gout roar'd, and show'd his throbbing feet ;
And Dropsy took the drunkard's seat ;
Stone brought his tort'ring racks : and near
Sat Palsy, shaking in his chair.

A mangled youth, beneath a shade,
A melancholy scene display'd :
His noseless face, and loathsome stains,
Proclaim'd the poison in his veins ;
He rais'd his eyes, he smote his breast,
He wept aloud, and thus address'd :

" Forbear the harlot's false embrace,
" Though lewdness wear an angel's face :
" Be wise, by my experience taught ;
" I die, alas ! for want of thought !"

As he who travels Lybia's plains,
Where the fierce lion lawless reigns,
Is seiz'd with fear and wild dismay,
When the grim foe obstructs his way ;
My soul was pierc'd with equal fright,
My tot'ring limbs oppos'd my flight :
I call'd on Virtue, but in vain ;
Her absence quicken'd ev'ry pain.
At length the slighted angel heard ;
The dear refulgent form appear'd :

" Presumptuous youth ! " she said, and frown'd
(My heart-strings flutter'd at the sound) ;

" Who turns to me reluctant ears,
" Shall shed repeated floods of tears.
" These rivers shall for ever last ;
" There's no retracting what is pas :
" Nor think avenging ills to shun ;
" Play a false card, and you're undone.
" Of Pleasure's gilded baits beware,
" Nor tempt the Syren's fatal snare :
" Forego this curs'd detested place ;
" Abhor the strumpet, and her race.
" Had you those softer paths pursu'd,
" Perdition, stripling, had ensued :
" Yes, fly—you stand upon its brink !
" To-morrow is too late to think.

" Indeed, unwelcome truths I tell,
" But mark my sacred lesson well ;
" With me whoever lives at strife,
" Loses his better friend for life ;
" With me, who lives in friendship's ties,
" Finds all that's sought for by the wise.
" Folly exclaims, and well she may,
" Because I take her mask away ;
" If once I bring her to the sun,
" The painted harlot is undone.
" But prize, my child, oh prize my rules,
" And leave Deception to her fools.

"Ambition deals in tinsel toys;
 "Her traffic gewgaws, fleeting joys,
 "An errant juggler in disguise,
 "Who holds false optics to your eyes.
 "But ah! how quick the shadows pass!
 "Though the bright visions through her glass
 "Charm at a distance! yet, when near,
 "The baseless fabrics disappear.
 "Nor riches boast intrinsic worth;
 "Their charms, at best, superior earth:
 "These oft the heaven-born mind enslave,
 "And make an honest man a knave."
 "'Wealth cures my wants!' the miser cries:
 "Be not deceiv'd—the miser lies;
 "One want he has, with all his store,
 "That worst of wants—the want of more."
 "'Take Pleasure, Wealth, and Pomp away,
 "And where is Happiness?' you say.
 "'Tis here—and may be yours—for, know,
 "I'm all that's Happiness below.
 "To Vice I leave tumultuous joys;
 "Mine is the still and softer voice!
 "That whispers peace when storms invade,
 "And music through the midnight shade.
 "Come, then, be mine in ev'ry part,
 "Nor give me less than all your heart;
 "When troubles discompose your breast,
 "I'll enter there a cheerful guest:
 "My converse shall your cares beguile,
 "The little world within shall smile.
 "And then it scarce imports a jot,
 "Whether the great world frowns or not.
 "And when the closing scenes prevail,
 "When wealth, state, pleasure, all shall fail;
 "All that a foolish world admires,
 "Or Passion craves, or Pride inspires:
 "At that important hour of need,
 "Virtue shall prove a friend indeed!
 "My hands shall smooth thy dying bed,
 "My arms sustain thy drooping head:
 "And when the painful struggle's o'er,
 "And that vain thing, the world, no more;
 "I'll bear my fav'rite son away
 "To rapture and eternal day."

§ 73. Vision VI. Friendship.

FRIENDSHIP! thou soft propitious pow'r!
 Sweet regent of the social hour!
 Sublime thy joys, nor understood
 But by the virtuous and the good!
 Cabal and Riot take thy name,
 But 'tis a false affected claim;
 In heaven if Love and Friendship dwell,
 Can they associate e'er with hell?

Thou art the same through change of times,
 Through frozen zones and burning climes;
 From the equator to the pole,
 The same kind angel through the whole:
 And, since thy choice is always free,
 I bless thee for thy smiles on me.

When sorrows swell the tempest high,
 Thou, a kind port, art always nigh;
 For aching hearts a sov'reign cure,
 Not soft nepenthe * half so sure!
 And, when returning comforts rise,
 Thou the bright sun that gilds our skies.

While these ideas warm'd my breast,
 My weary eyelids stole to rest;
 When fancy re-assum'd the theme,
 And furnish'd this instructive dream:

I sail'd upon a stormy sea
 (Thousands embark'd alike with me);
 My skiff was small, and weak beside,
 Not built, methought, to stem the tide;
 The winds along the surges sweep,
 The wrecks lie scatter'd through the deep;
 Aloud the foaming billows roar;
 Unfriendly rocks forbid the shore.

While all our various course pursue,
 A spacious isle salutes our view:
 Two queens with tempers diff'ring wide,
 This new-discover'd world divide:
 A river parts their proper claim,
 And Truth its celebrated name.

One side a beauteous tract of ground
 Presents, with living verdure crown'd:
 The seasons temp'rate, soft, and mild,
 And a kind sun that always smil'd:
 Few storms molest the natives here;
 Cold is the only ill they fear.
 This happy clime and grateful soil,
 With plenty crowns the laborer's toil.

Here Friendship's happy kingdom grew:
 Her realms were small, her subjects few:
 A thousand charms the palace grace;
 A rock of adamant its base.
 Though thunders roll, and lightnings fly,
 This structure braves th' inclement sky:
 E'en time, which other piles devours,
 And mocks the pride of human pow'rs,
 Partial to Friendship's pile alone,
 Cements the joints, and binds the stone:
 Ripens the beauties of the place,
 And calls to life each latent grace.

Around the throne in order stand,
 Four Amazons, a trusty band!
 Friends ever faithful to advise,
 Or to defend when dangers rise.
 Here Fortitude, in coat of mail;
 There Justice lifts her golden scale;
 Two hardy chiefs, who persevere,
 With form erect, and brow severe:
 Who smile at perils, pains, and death,
 And triumph with their latest breath.

Temp'rance, that comely matron's near,
 Guardian of all the virtues here;
 Adorn'd with ev'ry blooming grace,
 Without one wrinkle in her face.

But Prudence most attracts the sight,
 And shines pre-eminently bright.

* Nepenthe is a herb which, being infused in wine, dispels grief. It is unknown to the moderns; but some believe it a kind of opium, and others take it for a species of bugloss. Plin. xvi. 21. f. & xxv. 2.

To view her various thoughts that rise,
She holds a mirror to her eyes;
The mirror, faithful to its charge,
Reflects the virgin's soul in large.

A Virtue with a softer air
Was handmaid to the regal fair:
This nymph, indulgent, constant, kind,
Derives from heaven her spotless mind;
When actions wear a dubious face,
Puts the best meaning on the case;
She spreads her arms, and bares her breasts,
Takes in the naked and distress'd;
Prefers the hungry orphan's cries,
And from her queen obtains supplies.
The maid, who acts this lovely part,
Grasp'd in her hand a bleeding heart.
Fair Charity, be thou my guest,
And be thy constant couch my rest!

But virtues of inferior name
Crowd round the throne with equal claim;
In loyalty by none surpass'd,
They hold allegiance to the last:
Not ancient records e'er can show
That one deserted to the foe.

The river's other side display'd
Alternate plots of flow'rs and shade,
Where poppies shone with various hue,
Where yielding willows plenteous grew:
And humble plants*, by trav'lers thought
With slow but certain poison fraught.
Beyond these scenes the eye descried
A pow'rful realm extended wide;
Whose bound'ries from north-east begun,
And stretch'd to meet the south-west sun.
Here Flatt'ry boasts despotic sway,
And basks in all the warmth of day.

Long practis'd in Deception's school,
The tyrant knew the arts to rule;
Elated with th' imperial robe,
She plans the conquest of the globe;
And, aided by her servile trains,
Leads kings, and sons of kings, in chains.
Her darling minister is Pride
(Who ne'er was known to change his side),
A friend to all her int'rests just,
And active to discharge his trust;
Caress'd alike by high and low,
The idol of the belle and beau:
In ev'ry shape he shows his skill,
And forms her subjects to his will:
Enters their houses and their hearts,
And gains his point before he parts;
Sure never minister was known
So zealous for his sov'reign's throne!

Three sisters, similar in mien,
Were maids of honor to the queen;
Who farther favors shar'd beside,
As daughters of her statesman, Pride.
The first, Conceit, with tow'ring crest,
Who look'd with scorn upon the rest;

Fond of herself, nor less, I deem,
Than duchess in her own esteem.

Next Affectation, fair and young,
With half-form'd accents on her tongue;
Whose antic shapes, and various face,
Distorted ev'ry native grace.

Then Vanity, a wanton maid,
Flaunting in brussels and brocade;
Fantastic, frolicsome, and wild,
With all the trinkets of a child.

The people, loyal to the queen,
Wore their attachment in their mien;
With cheerful heart they homage paid,
And happiest he who most obey'd;
While they who sought their own applause,
Promoted most their sov'reign's cause.
The minds of all were fraught with guile;
Their manners dissolute and vile;
And ev'ry tribe, like Pagans, run
To kneel before the rising sun.

But now some clam'rous sounds arise,
And all the pleasing vision flies.

Once more I clos'd my eyes to sleep,
And gain'd th' imaginary deep;
Fancy presided at the helm,
And steer'd me back to Friendship's realm.
But, oh! with horror I relate
The revolutions of her state;
The Trojan chief could hardly more
His Asiatic tow'rs deplore.

For Flatt'ry view'd those fairer plains
With longing eyes, where Friendship reigns:
With envy heard her neighbour's fame,
And often sigh'd to gain the same;
At length, by pride and int'rest fir'd,
To Friendship's kingdom she aspir'd.

And, now commencing open foe,
She plans in thought some mighty blow;
Draws out her forces on the green,
And marches to invade the queen.

The river Truth the hosts withstood,
And roll'd her formidable flood:
Her current strong, and deep, and clear;
No fords were found, no ferries near,
But as the troops approach'd the waves,
Their fears suggest a thousand graves;
They all retir'd with haste extreme,
And shudder'd at the dang'rous stream.

Hypocrisy the gulph explores;
She forms a bridge, and joins the shores.
Thus often art or fraud prevails,
When military prowess fails:
The troops an easy passage find,
And vict'ry follows close behind.

Friendship with ardor charg'd her foes,
And now the fight promiscuous grows;
But Flatt'ry threw a poison'd dart,
And pierc'd the empress to the heart.
The Virtues all around were seen
To fall in heaps about the queen.

* The humble plant bends down before the touch, as the sensitive plant shrinks from the touch; and is said by some to be the slow poison of the Indians.

The tyrant stripp'd the mangled fair ;
She wore her spoils, assum'd her air ;
And, mounting next the sufferer's throne,
Claim'd the queen's titles as her own.

" Ah, injur'd maid !" aloud I cried ;
" Ah, injur'd maid !" the rocks replied.
But judge my griefs, and share them too,
For the sad tale pertains to you ;
Judge, reader, how severe the wound,
When Friendship's foes were mine, I found ;
When the sad scene of pride and guile
Was Britain's poor degen'rate isle !

The Amazons, who propp'd the state,
Haply survey'd the gen'ral fate.

Justice to Powis House is fled,
And Yorke sustains her radiant head.

The virtue, Fortitude, appears
In open day at Ligonier's ;
Illustrious heroine of the sky,
Who leads to vanquish or to die !

'Twas she our vet'rans breasts inspir'd,
When Belgia's faithless sons retir'd :
For Tournay's treach'rous tow'rs can tell
Britannia's children greatly fell.

No partial Virtue of the plain !
She rous'd the lions of the main :
Hence Vernon's little fleet succeeds*,
And hence the gen'rous Cornwall bleeds†,
Hence Grenville glorious‡ !—for she smil'd
On the young hero from a child.

Though in high life such virtues dwell,
They'll suit plebeian breasts as well.
Say, that the mighty and the great
Blaze, like meridian suns of state ;
Effulgent excellence display,
Like Hallifax, in floods of day ;
Our lesser orbs may pour their light,
Like the mild crescent of the night.
Though pale our beams, and small our sphere,
Still we may shine serene and clear.

Give to the judge the scarlet gown ;
To martial souls the civic crown :
What then ? Is merit their's alone ?
Have we no worth to call our own ?
Shall we not vindicate our part
In the firm breast and upright heart ?
Reader, these virtues may be thine,
Though in superior life they shine.
I can't discharge great Hardwicke's trust ;
True—but my soul may still be just :
And though I can't the state defend,
I'll draw the sword to serve my friend.
Two golden virtues are behind,
Of equal import to the mind ;
Prudence, to point out Wisdom's way,
Or to reclaim us when we stray ;
Temp'rance, to guard the youthful heart,
When Vice and Folly throw the dart :
Each virtue, let the world agree,
Daily resides with you and me.
And when our souls in friendship join,
We'll deem the social bond divine ;

Through ev'ry scene maintain our trust,
Nor e'er be timid or unjust.
That breast, where Honor builds his throne,
That breast, which Virtue calls her own,
Nor Int'rest warps, nor Fear appals,
When Danger frowns, or Lucre calls.
No ! the true friend collected stands,
Fearless his heart, and pure his hands :
Let Int'rest plead, let storms arise,
He dares be honest, though he dies !

§ 74. *Vision VII. Marriage. Inscribed to Miss ***.*

FAIREST, this Vision is thy due ;
I form'd th' instructive plan for you.
Slight not the rules of thoughtful age ;
Your welfare actuates ev'ry page ;
But ponder well my sacred theme,
And tremble while you read my dream.

These awful words, " till death do part,"
May well alarm the youthful heart :
No after-thought when once a wife,
The die is cast, and cast for life ;
Yet thousands venture ev'ry day,
As some base passion leads the way.
Pert Sylvia talks of wedlock scenes,
Though hardly enter'd on her teens ;
Smiles on her whining spark, and hears
The sugar'd speech with raptur'd ears ;
Impatient of a parent's rule,
She leaves her sire, and weds a fool ;
Want enters at the guardless door,
And Love is fled, to come no more.

Some few there are of sordid mould,
Who barter youth and bloom for gold,
Careless with what or whom they mate ;
Their ruling passion's all for state.
But Hymen, gen'rous, just, and kind,
Abhors the mercenary mind ;
Such rebels groan beneath his rod ;
For Hymen's a vindictive god :
" Be joyless ev'ry night," he said :
" And barren be their nuptial bed !"

Attend, my fair, to wisdom's voice ;
A better fate shall crown thy choice.
A married life, to speak the best,
Is all a lottery confest :
Yet, if my fair one will be wise,
I will ensure my girl a prize,
Though not a prize to match thy worth :
Perhaps thy equal's not on earth !

'Tis an important point, to know
There's no perfection here below.
Man's an odd compound, after all ;
And ever has been since the fall.
Say, that he loves you from his soul,
Still man is proud, nor brooks control ;
And though a slave in love's soft school,
In wedlock claims his right to rule.
The best, in short, has faults about him ;
If few those faults, you must not flout him.

* At Porto Bello.

† Died in a late engagement with the French fleet.

‡ Against the combined fleets of France and Spain.

With some, indeed, you can't dispense,
 As want of temper and of sense :
 For when the sun deserts the skies,
 And the dull winter evenings rise,
 Then for a husband's social pow'r
 To form the calm, conversive hour ;
 The treasures of thy breast explore,
 From that rich mine to draw the ore :
 Fondly each gen'rous thought refine,
 And give thy native gold to shine ;
 Show thee, as really thou art,
 Though fair, yet fairer still at heart.

Say, when life's purple blossoms fade,
 As soon they must, thou charming maid !
 When in thy cheek the roses die,
 And sickness clouds that brilliant eye ;
 Say, when or age or pains invade,
 And those dear limbs shall call for aid ;
 If thou art fetter'd to a fool,
 Shall not his transient passion cool ?
 And, when thy health and beauty end,
 Shall thy weak mate persist a friend ?
 But to a man of sense, my dear,
 E'en then thou lovely shalt appear ;
 He'll share the griefs that wound thy heart,
 And, weeping, claim the larger part :
 Though age impairs that beauteous face,
 He'll prize the pearl beyond it's case.
 In wedlock when the sexes meet,
 Friendship is only then complete.
 " Bless'd state ! where souls each other draw ;
 " Where love is liberty and law !"
 The choicest blessing found below,
 That man can wish, or Heaven bestow !
 Trust me, these raptures are divine,
 For lovely Chloe once was mine !
 Nor fear the varnish of my style ;
 Though poet, I'm estfang'd to guile.
 Ah me ! my faithful lips impart
 The genuine language of my heart !

When bards extol their patrons high,
 Perhaps 'tis gold extorts the lie ;
 Perhaps the poor reward of bread—
 But who burns incense to the dead ?
 He, whom a fond affection draws,
 Careless of censure or applause ;
 Whose soul is upright and sincere,
 With nought to wish, and nought to fear.

Now to my visionary scheme
 Attend, and profit by my dream.
 Amidst the slumbers of the night,
 A stately temple rose to sight ;
 And ancient as the human race,
 If Nature's purposes you trace :
 This fane, by all the wise rever'd,
 To wedlock's pow'rful god was rear'd.
 Hard by I saw a graceful sage,
 His locks were frosted o'er by age ;
 His garb was plain, his mind serene,
 And wisdom dignified his mien.
 With curious search his name I sought,
 And found 'twas Hymen's fav'rite, Thought.

Apace the giddy crowds advance,
 And a lewd satyr led the dance.

I griev'd to see whole thousands run,
 For oh ! what thousands were undone !
 The sage, when these mad troops he spied,
 In pity flew to join their side :
 The disconcerted pairs began
 To rail against him to a man ;
 Vow'd they were strangers to his name,
 Nor knew from whence the dotard came.

But mark the sequel—for this truth
 Highly concerns impetuous youth.
 Long ere the honey-moon could wane,
 Perdition seiz'd on every twain ;
 At ev'ry house, and all day long,
 Repentance plied her scorpion thong :
 Disgust was there with frowning mien,
 And ev'ry wayward child of spleen.

Hymen approach'd his awful fane,
 Attended by a num'rous train.
 Love, with each soft and nameless grace,
 Was first in favor and in place :
 Then came the god, with solemn gait,
 Whose ev'ry word was big with fate ;
 His hand a flaming taper bore,
 That sacred symbol, fam'd of yore.
 Virtue, adorn'd with every charm,
 Sustain'd the god's incumbent arm ;
 Beauty improv'd the glowing scene
 With all the roses of eighteen.
 Youth led the gaily-smiling fair ;
 His purple pinions wav'd in air ;
 Wealth, a close hunk, walk'd hobbling nigh,
 With vulture-claw, and eagle-eye,
 Who threescore years had seen, or more
 ('Tis said his coat had seen a score) :
 Proud was the wretch, though clad in rags,
 Presuming much upon his bags.

A female next her arts display'd ;
 Poets alone can paint the maid :
 Trust me, Hogarth (though great thy fame),
 'T would pose thy skill to draw the same ;
 And yet thy mimic pow'r is more
 Than ever painter's was before.
 Now she was fair as cygnet's down,
 Now as Mat Prior's Emma brown ;
 And, changing as the changing flow'r,
 Her dress she varied ev'ry hour.
 'Twas Fancy, child—you know the fair,
 Who pins your gown, and sets your hair.

Lo ! the god mounts his thrown of state,
 And sits the arbiter of fate :
 His head, with radiant glories drest,
 Gently reclin'd on Virtue's breast,
 Love took his station on the right :
 His quiver beam'd with golden light :
 Beauty usurp'd the second place,
 Ambitious of distinguish'd grace ;
 She claim'd this ceremonial joy,
 Because related to the boy ;
 Said it was hers to point his dart,
 And speed his passage to the heart ;
 While on the god's inferior hand
 Fancy and Wealth obtain'd their stand.

And now the hallow'd rites proceed,
 And now a thousand heart-strings bleed.

I saw a blooming, trembling bride,
A toothless lover join'd her side ;
Averse she turn'd her weeping face,
And shudder'd at the cold embrace.

But various baits their force impart ;
Thus titles lie at Celia's heart.

A passion, much too foul to name,
Costs supercilious prudes their fame :
Prudes wed to publicans and sinners ;
The hungry poet weds for dinners.

The god with frown indignant view'd
The rabble covetous or lewd ;
By ev'ry vice his altar stain'd,
By ev'ry fool his rites profan'd :
When Love complain'd of Wealth aloud,
Affirming Wealth debauch'd the crowd ;
Drew up in form his heavy charge,
Desiring to be heard at large.

The god consents, the throng divide,
The young espous'd the plaintiff's side ;
The old declar'd for the defendant,
For age is money's sworn attendant.

Love said, that wedlock was design'd
By gracious Heaven to match the mind ;
To pair the tender and the just,
And his the delegated trust :
That Wealth had play'd a knavish part,
And taught the tongue to wrong the heart ;
But what avails the faithless voice ?
The injur'd heart disdains the choice.

Wealth straight replied, that Love was blind,
And talk'd at random of the mind :
That killing eyes, and bleeding hearts,
And all th' artillery of darts,
Were long ago exploded fancies,
And laugh'd at even in romances.
Poets indeed style love a treat,
Perhaps for want of better meat :
And love might be delicious fare,
Could we, like poets, live on air.
But grant that angels feast on love
(Those purer essences above),
Yet Albion's sons, he understood,
Preferr'd a more substantial food.
Thus while with gibes he dress'd his cause,
His grey admirers hemm'd applause ;
With seeming conquest pert and proud,
Wealth shook his sides, and chuckled loud ;
When Fortune, to restrain his pride,
And fond to favor Love beside,
Op'ning the miser's tape-tied vest,
Disclos'd the cares which stung his breast :
Wealth stood abash'd at his disgrace,
And a deep crimson flush'd his face.

Love sweetly simper'd at the sight ;
His gay adherents laugh'd outright.
The god, though grave his temper, smil'd ;
For Hymen dearly priz'd the child.
But he who triumphs o'er his brother,
In turn is laugh'd at by another.
Such cruel scores we often find
Repaid the criminal in kind :
For Poverty, that famish'd fiend !
Ambitious of a wealthy friend,

Advanc'd into the miser's place,
And star'd the stripling in the face ;
Whose lips grew pale, and cold as clay :
I thought the chit would swoon away.
The god was studious to employ
His cares to aid the vanquish'd boy ;
And therefore issued his decree,
That the two parties straight agree :
When both obey'd the god's commands,
And Love and Riches join'd their hands.

What wond'rous change in each was wrought,
Believe me, fair, surpasses thought.

If love had many charms before,
He now had charms ten thousand more :
If Wealth had serpents in his breast,
They now were dead, or lull'd to rest.

Beauty, that vain, affected thing,
Who join'd the hymeneal ring,
Approach'd, with round unthinking face ;
And thus the trifler states her case :

She said that Love's complaints, 'twas
known,

Exactly tallied with her own :
That Wealth had learn'd the felon's arts,
And robb'd her of a thousand hearts ;
Desiring judgement against Wealth,
For falsehood, perjury, and stealth :
All which she could on oath depose ;
And hop'd the court would slit his nose.

But Hymen, when he heard her name,
Call'd her an interloping dame ;
Look'd through the crowd with angry state,
And blam'd the porter at the gate
For giving entrance to the fair,
When she was no essential there.

To sink this haughty tyrant's pride,
He order'd Fancy to preside.
Hence, when debates on beauty rise,
And each bright fair disputes the prize,
To Fancy's court we straight apply,
And wait the sentence of her eye ;
In beauty's realms she holds the seals,
And her awards preclude appeals.

§ 75. Vision VIII. Life.

LET not the young my precepts shun ;
Who slight good counsels are undone.
Your poet sung of love's delights,
Of halcyon days and joyous nights ;
To the gay fancy lovely themes ;
And fain I'd hope they're more than dreams.
But, if you please, before we part,
I'd speak a language to your heart.
We'll talk of Life, tho' much I fear
Th' ungrateful tale would wound your ear.
You raise your sanguine thoughts too high,
And hardly know the reason why :
But say, Life's tree bears golden fruit,
Some canker shall corrode the root ;
Some unexpected storm shall rise,
Or scorching suns, or chilling skies ;
And (if experienced truths avail)
All your autumnal hopes shall fail.

" But, poet, whence such wide extremes?
 " Well may you style your labors dreams.
 " A son of sorrow thou, I ween,
 " Whose Visions are the brats of Spleen.
 " Is bliss a vague, unmeaning name?
 " Speak then the passions' use or aim;
 " Why rage desires without control,
 " And rouse such whirlwinds in the soul?
 " Why Hope erects her tow'ring crest,
 " And laughs and riots in the breast!
 " Think not my weaker brain turns round;
 " Think not I tread on fairy ground;
 " Think not your pulse alone beats true—
 " Mine makes as healthful music too.
 " Our joys, when Life's soft spring we trace,
 " Put forth their early buds apace:
 " See the bloom loads the tender shoot;
 " The bloom conceals the future fruit.
 " Yes, manhood's warm meridian sun
 " Shall ripen what in spring begun.
 " Thus infant roses, ere they blow,
 " In germinating clusters grow;
 " And only wait the summer's ray,
 " To burst and blossom to the day."
 What said the gay unthinking boy?
 Methought Hilario talk'd of joy!
 Tell, if thou canst, whence joys arise,
 Or what those mighty joys you prize.
 You'll find (and trust superior years)
 The vale of life a vale of tears.
 Could wisdom teach where joys abound,
 Or riches purchase them when found,
 Would sceptred Solomon complain
 That all was fleeting, false, and vain?
 Yet sceptred Solomon could say,
 Returning clouds obscur'd his day.
 Those maxims, which the preacher drew,
 The royal sage experienc'd true.
 He knew the various ills that wait
 Our infant and meridian state;
 That toys our earliest thoughts engage,
 And diff'rent toys maturer age;
 That grief at ev'ry stage appears,
 But diff'rent griefs at diff'rent years;
 That vanity is seen, in part,
 Inscrib'd on ev'ry human heart;
 In the child's breast the spark began,
 Grows with his growth, and glares in man.
 But when in life we journey late,
 If follies die, do griefs abate?
 Ah! what is life at fourscore years? [and tears.
 One dark, rough road, of sighs, groans, pains,
 Perhaps you'll think I act the same
 As a sly sharper plays his game:
 You triumph ev'ry deal that's past,
 He's sure to triumph at the last!
 Who often wins some thousands more
 Than twice the sums you won before.
 But I'm a loser with the rest;
 For life is all a deal at best,
 Where not the prize of wealth or fame
 Repays the trouble of the game—
 (A truth no winner e'er denied,
 An hour before that winner died.)

Not that with me these prizes shine;
 For neither fame nor wealth is mine.
 My cards, a weak plebeian band,
 With scarce an honor in my hand!
 And, since my trumps are very few,
 What have I more to boast than you?
 Nor am I gainer by your fall;
 That harlot Fortune bubbles all!
 'Tis truth (receive it ill or well),
 'Tis melancholy truth I tell.
 Why should the preacher take your pence,
 And smother truth to flatter sense?
 I'm sure physicians have no merit,
 Who kill through lenity of spirit.

That life's a game, divines confess;
 This says at cards, and that at chess:
 But, if our views be centred here,
 'Tis all a losing game I fear.

Sailors, you know, when wars obtain,
 And hostile vessels crowd the main,
 If they discover from afar
 A bark as distant as a star,
 Hold the perspective to their eyes,
 To learn its colors, strength, and size;
 And, when this secret once they know,
 Make ready to receive the foe;
 Let you and I from sailors learn
 Important truths of like concern.

I clos'd the day, as custom led,
 With reading till the time of bed;
 Where Fancy, at the midnight hour,
 Again display'd her magic pow'r—
 (For know that Fancy, like a sprite, Prefers the silent scenes of night.)
 She lodg'd me in a neighb'ring wood,
 No matter where the thicket stood;
 The Genius of the place was nigh,
 And held two pictures to my eye.
 The curious painter had pourtray'd
 Life in each just and genuine shade.
 They, who have only known its dawn,
 May think these lines too deeply drawn;
 But riper years, I fear, will show
 The wiser artists paint too true.

One piece presents a rueful wild,
 Where not a summer's sun had smil'd;
 The road with thorns is cover'd wide,
 And Grief sits weeping by the side;
 Here tears with constant tenor flow,
 And form a mournful lake below;
 Whose silent waters, dark and deep,
 Through all the gloomy valley creep.

Passions that flatter, or that slay,
 Are beasts that fawn, or birds that prey.
 Her Vice assumes the serpent's shape;
 There Folly personates the ape:
 Here Av'rice gripes with harpy's claws;
 There Malice grins with tiger's jaws;
 While sons of Mischief, Art, and Guile,
 Are alligators of the Nile.

E'en Pleasure acts a treach'rous part;
 She charms the sense, but stings the heart:
 And when she gulls us of our wealth,
 Or that superior pearl, our health,

Restores us nought but pains and woe,
And drowns us in the lake below.

There a commission'd angel stands,
With desolation in his hands!
He sends the all-devouring flame,
And cities hardly boast a name:
Or wings the pestilential blast,
And, lo! ten thousands breathe their last.
He speaks—obedient tempests roar,
And guilty nations are no more:
He speaks—the fury Discord raves,
And sweeps whole armies to their graves;
Or Famine lifts her mildew'd hand,
And Hunger howls through all the land.

“Oh! what a wretch is man!” I cried;
“Expos'd to death on ev'ry side!
“And sure as born to be undone
“By evils which he cannot shun!
“Besides a thousand baits to sin,
“A thousand traitors lodg'd within!
“For soon as Vice assaults the heart,
“The rebels take the dæmon's part.”

I sigh, my aching bosom bleeds;
When straight the milder plan succeeds.
The lake of tears, the dreary shore,
The same as in the piece before;
But gleams of light are here display'd,
To cheer the eye, and gild the shade;
Affliction speaks a softer style,
And Disappointment wears a smile:
A group of virtues blossom near;
Their roots improve by ev'ry tear.

Here Patience, gentle maid! is nigh,
To calm the storm, and wipe the eye;
Hope acts the kind physician's part,
And warms the solitary heart:
Religion nobler comfort brings,
Disarms our griefs, or blunts their stings;
Points out the balance on the whole,
And Heaven rewards the struggling soul.

But while these raptures I pursue,
The Genius suddenly withdrew.

§ 76. Vision the last. Death.

'Tis thought my Visions are too grave*;
A proof I'm no designing knave.
Perhaps, if int'rest held the scales,
I had devis'd quite diff'rent tales;
Had join'd the laughing, low buffoon,
And scribbled satire and lampoon;
Or stirr'd each source of soft desire,
And fann'd the coals of wanton fire:
Then had my paltry Visions sold;
Yes, all my dreams had turn'd to gold;
Had prov'd the darling of the town,
And I—a Poet of renown!

Let not my awful theme surprise;
Let no unmanly fears arise.
I wear no melancholy hue;
No wreaths of cypress, or of yew.
The shroud, the coffin, pall, or hearse,
Shall ne'er deform my softer verse.

Let me consign the fun'ral plume,
The herald's paint, the sculptur'd tomb,
And all the solemn farce of graves,
To undertakers and their slaves.

You know that moral writers say,
The world's a stage, and life a play;
That in this drama to succeed,
Requires much thought and toil indeed!
There still remains one labor more,
Perhaps a greater than before.
Indulge the search, and you shall find
The harder task is still behind:
That harder task, to quit the stage
In early youth or riper age;
To leave the company and place
With firmness, dignity, and grace.

Come, then, the closing scenes survey;
'Tis the last act which crowns the play.
Do well this grand decisive part,
And gain the plaudit of your heart.
Few greatly live in Wisdom's eye—
But, oh! how few who greatly die!
Who, when their days approach an end,
Can meet the foe as friend meets friend.

Instructive heroes! tell us whence
Your noble scorn of flesh and sense!
You part from all we prize so dear;
Nor drop one soft reluctant tear;
Part from those tender joys of life,
The friend, the parent, child, and wife.
Death's black and stormy gulph you brave,
And ride exulting on the wave;
Deem thrones but trifles all!—no more—
Nor send one wishful look to shore.

For foreign ports, and lands unknown,
Thus the firm sailor leaves his own;
Obedient to the rising gale,
Unmoors his bark, and spreads his sail;
Defies the ocean and the wind,
Nor mourns the joys he left behind.

Is Death a pow'ful monarch? True:
Perhaps you dread the tyrant too!
Fear, like a fog, precludes the light,
Or swells the object to the sight.
Attend my visionary page,
And I'll disarm the tyrant's rage.
Come, let this ghastly form appear;
He's not so terrible when near.
Distance deludes th' unwary eye;
So clouds seem monsters in the sky:
Hold frequent converse with him now,
He'll daily wear a milder brow.
Why is my theme with terror fraught?
Because you shun the frequent thought.
Say, when the captive pard is nigh,
Whence thy pale cheek and frightened eye?
Say, why dismay'd thy manly breast,
When the grim lion shakes his crest?
Because these savage sights are new;
No keeper shudders at the view:
Keepers accustom'd to the scene,
Approach the dens with looks serene;

* See the Monthly Review of New Books, for February 1751.

Fearless their grisly charge explore,
And smile to hear the tyrants roar.

“Ay—but to die! to bid adieu!

“An everlasting farewell too!

“Farewell to ev’ry joy around!

“Oh, the heart sickens at the sound!”

Stay, stripling—thou art poorly taught:

Joy, didst thou say? discard the thought.

Joys are a rich celestial fruit,

And scorn a sublunary root:

What wears the face of joy below,

Is often found but splendid woe.

Joys here, like unsubstantial fame,

Are nothing but a pompous name;

Or else, like comets in the sphere,

Shine with destruction in their rear.

Passions, like clouds, obscure the sight,

Hence mortals seldom judge aright.

The world’s a harsh unfruitful soil,

Yet still we hope, and still we toil;

Deceive ourselves with wondrous art,

And disappointment wrings the heart.

Thus, when a mist collects around,

And hovers o’er a barren ground,

The poor deluded trav’ller spies

Imagin’d trees and structures rise;

But, when the shrouded sun is clear,

The desert and the rocks appear.

“Ah—but when youthful blood runs high,

“Sure ’tis a dreadful thing to die!

“To die! and what exalts the gloom,

“I’m told that man survives the tomb!

“O! can the learned prelate find

“What future scenes await the mind!

“Where wings the soul, dislodg’d from clay?

“Some courteous angel point the way!

“That unknown somewhere in the skies,

“Say, where that unknown somewhere lies?

“And kindly prove, when life is o’er,

“That pains and sorrows are no more;

“For, doubtless, dying is a curse,

“If present ills be chang’d for worse.”

Hush, my young friend, forego the theme,

And listen to your poet’s dream.

Erewhile I took an ev’ning walk,

Honorio join’d in social talk.

Along the lawns the zephyrs sweep;

Each ruder wind was lull’d asleep:

The sky, all beauteous to behold,

Was streak’d with azure, green, and gold:

But though serenely soft and fair,

Fever hung brooding in the air;

Then settled on Honorio’s breast,

Which shudder’d at the fatal guest.

No drugs the kindly wish fulfil;

Disease eludes the doctor’s skill:

The poison, spread through all the frame,

Ferments, and kindles into flame.

From side to side Honorio turns,

And now with thirst insatiate burns.

His eyes resign their wonted grace,

Those friendly lamps expire apace!

The brain’s an useless organ grown;

And Reason tumbled from his throne.

But, while the purple surges glow,

The currents thicken as they flow:

The blood in ev’ry distant part

Stagnates and disappoints the heart;

Defrauded of its crimson store,

The vital engine plays no more.

Honorio dead, the fun’ral bell

Call’d ev’ry friend to bid farewell.

I join’d the melancholy bier,

And dropp’d the unavailing tear.

The clock struck twelve—when nature sought

Repose from all the pangs of thought;

And, while my limbs were sunk to rest,

A Vision sooth’d my troubled breast.

I dream’d the spectre Death appear’d!

I dream’d his hollow voice I heard!

Methought th’ imperial tyrant wore

A state no prince assum’d before;

All nature fetch’d a general groan,

And lay expiring round his throne.

I gaz’d—when straight arose to sight

The most detested fiend of night.

He shuffled with unequal pace,

And conscious shame deform’d his face.

With jealous leer he squinted round,

Or fix’d his eyes upon the ground.

From hell this frightful monster came;

Sin was his sire, and Guilt his name.

This fury, with officious care,

Waited around the sov’reign’s chair;

In robes of terror dress’d the king,

And arm’d him with a baneful sting;

Gave fierceness to the tyrant’s eye,

And hung the sword upon his thigh.

Diseases next, a hideous crowd!

Proclaim’d their master’s empire loud,

And all, obedient to his will,

Flew in commission’d troops to kill.

A rising whirlwind shakes the poles,

And lightning glares, and thunder rolls.

The monarch and his train prepare

To range the foul tempestuous air.

Straight to his shoulders he applies

Two pinions of enormous size!

Methought I saw the ghastly form

Stretch his black wings and mount the storm;

When Fancy’s airy horse I strode,

And join’d the army on the road.

As the grim conqueror urg’d his way,

He scatter’d terror and dismay.

Thousands a pensive aspect wore,

Thousands who sneer’d at death before.

Life’s records rise on ev’ry side,

And conscience spreads those volumes wide;

Which faithful registers were brought

By pale-eyed Fear and busy Thought.

Those faults which artful men conceal,

Stand here engrav’d with pen of steel

By Conscience, that impartial scribe!

Whose honest palm disdains a bribe:

Their actions all like critics view,

And all like faithful critics too.

As Guilt had stain’d life’s various stage,

What tears of blood bedew’d the page!

All shudder'd at the black account,
And scarce believ'd the vast amount !
All vow'd a sudden change of heart,
Would death relent, and sheath his dart :
But, when the awful foe withdrew,
All to their follies fled anew.

So when a wolf, who scours at large,
Springs on the shepherd's fleecy charge,
The flock in wild disorder fly,
And cast behind a frequent eye;
But when the victim's borne away,
They rush to pasture and to play.

Indulge my dream, and let my pen
Paint those unmeaning creatures, men.

Carus, with pain and sickness worn,
Chides the slow night, and sighs for morn :
Soon as he views the eastern ray,
He mourns the quick return of day;
Hourly laments protracted breath,
And courts the healing hand of death.

Verres, oppress'd with guilt and shame,
Shipwreck'd in fortune, health, and fame,
Pines for his dark, sepulchral bed,
To mingle with th' unheeded dead.

With fourscore years grey Natho bends,
A burden to himself and friends !
And with impatience seems to wait
The friendly hand of ling'ring Fate.
So hirelings wish their labor done,
And often eye the western sun.

The monarch hears their various grief;
Descends, and brings the wish'd relief.
On Death with wild surprise they stared;
All seem'd averse ! all unprepared !

As torrents sweep with rapid force,
The grave's pale chief pursued his course.
No human pow'r can or withstand,
Or shun, the conquests of his hand.
Oh ! could the prince of upright mind,
And as a guardian angel kind,
With ev'ry heart-felt worth beside,
Turn the keen shaft of death aside,
When would the brave Augustus join
The ashes of his sacred line !
But Death maintains no partial war ;
He mocks a sultan or a czar :
He lays his iron hand on all—
Yes, kings, and sons of kings, must fall !
A truth Britannia lately felt,
And trembled to her centre—* !

Could ablest statesmen ward the blow,
Would Grenville own this common foe ?
For greater talents ne'er were known
To grace the fav'rite of a throne.

Could genius save—wit, learning, fire—
Tell me would Chesterfield expire ?
Say, would his glorious sun decline,
And set like your pale star or mine ?

Could ev'ry virtue of the sky—
Would Herring†, Butler,‡, Secker§, die ?

Why this address to peerage all ?
Untitled Allen's virtues call !
If Allen's worth demands a place,
Lords, with your leave, 'tis no disgrace.
Though high your ranks in heralds' rolls,
Know, Virtue too ennobles souls.
By her that private man's renown'd
Who pours a thousand blessings round.
While Allen takes Affliction's part,
And draws out all his gen'rous heart,
Anxious to seize the fleeting day,
Lest unimprov'd it steal away ;
While thus he walks with jealous strife,
Through goodness, as he walks through life ;
Shall not I mark his radiant path ?—
Rise, Muse, and sing the Man of Bath !
Publish abroad, could goodness save,
Allen would disappoint the grave ;
Translated to the heavenly shore,
Like Enoch, when his walk was o'er.

Nor Beauty's pow'rful pleas restrain :
Her pleas are trifling, weak, and vain ;
For women pierce with shrieks the air,
Smite the bare breasts, and rend their hair ;
All have a doleful tale to tell,
How friends, sons, daughters, husbands fell !

Alas ! is life our fav'rite theme—
'Tis all a vain or painful dream ;
A dream which fools or cowards prize,
But slighted by the brave or wise.
Who lives, for others' ills must groan,
Or bleed for sorrows of his own ;
Must journey on with weeping eye,
Then pant, sink, agonize, and die.

“ And shall a man arraign the skies,
“ Because man lives, and mourns, and dies ?
“ Impatient Reptile !” Reason cried ;
“ Arraign thy passion and thy pride ;
“ Retire, and commune with thy heart ;
“ Ask whence thou cam'st, and what thou art ;
“ Explore thy body and thy mind,
“ Thy station too, why here assign'd.
“ The search shall teach thee life to prize,
“ And make thee grateful, good, and wise.
“ Why do you roam to foreign climes,
“ To study nations, modes, and times ;
“ A science often dearly bought,
“ And often what avails you nought ?
“ Go, man, and act a wiser part,
“ Study the science of your heart :
“ This home philosophy, you know,
“ Was priz'd some thousand years ago ||.
“ Then why abroad a frequent guest ?
“ Why such a stranger to your breast ?
“ Why turn so many volumes o'er,
“ Till Dodsley can supply no more ?
“ Not all the volumes on thy shelf
“ Are worth that single volume, Self :
“ For who this sacred book declines,
“ Howe'er in other arts he shines,

|| “ Know thyself ;” a celebrated saying of Chilo, one of the Seven Wise Men of Greece.

" Though smit with Pindar's noble rage,
 " Or vers'd in Tully's manly page;
 " Though deeply read in Plato's school,
 " With all his knowledge, is a fool.
 " Proclaim the truth—Say, what is man?
 " His body from the dust began;
 " And when a few short years are o'er,
 " The crumbling fabric is no more.
 " But whence the soul?—From heav'n it came!
 " O prize this intellectual flame!
 " This nobler self with rapture scan;
 " 'Tis mind alone which makes the man.
 " Trust me, there's not a joy on earth,
 " But from the soul derives its birth;
 " Ask the young rake, (he'll answer right,)
 " Who treats by day and drinks by night,
 " What makes his entertainment shine?
 " What gives the relish to his wine?
 " He'll tell thee (if he scorns the beast)
 " That social pleasures form the feast.
 " The charms of beauty too shall cloy,
 " Unless the soul exalts the joy.
 " The mind must animate the face,
 " Or cold and tasteless ev'ry grace.
 " What! must the soul her pow'rs dispense,
 " To raise and swell the joys of sense?
 " Know, too, the joys of sense control
 " And clog the motions of the soul;
 " Forbid her pinions to aspire,
 " Damp and impair her native fire;
 " And sure as Sense, that tyrant! reigns,
 " She holds the empress Soul in chains:
 " Inglorious bondage to the mind,
 " Heaven born, sublime, and unconfin'd!
 " She's independent, fair, and great,
 " And justly claims a large estate;
 " She asks no borrow'd aids to shine;
 " She boasts within a golden mine;
 " But, like the treasures of Peru,
 " Her wealth lies deep, and far from view.
 " Say, shall the man who knows her worth,
 " Debase her dignity and birth?
 " Or e'er repine at Heaven's decree,
 " Who kindly gave her leave to be;
 " Call'd her from nothing into day,
 " And built her tenement of clay?
 " Hear and accept me for your guide
 " (Reason shall ne'er desert your side);
 " Who listens to my wiser voice,
 " Can't but applaud his Maker's choice;
 " Pleas'd with that first and sov'reign Cause,
 " Pleas'd with unerring Wisdom's laws:
 " Secure, since sov'reign goodness reigns;
 " Secure, since sov'reign pow'r obtains.
 " With curious eyes review thy frame;
 " This science shall direct thy claim.
 " Dost thou indulge a double view,
 " A long, long life, and happy too?
 " Perhaps a farther boon you crave—
 " To lie down easy in the grave.
 " Know, then, my dictates must prevail,
 " Or surely each fond wish shall fail.
 " Come, then, is happiness thy aim?
 " Let mental joys be all thy game.

" Repeat the search, and mend your pace,
 " The capture shall reward the chase.
 " Let ev'ry minute, as it springs,
 " Convey fresh knowledge on its wings;
 " Let ev'ry minute, as it flies,
 " Record thee good, as well as wise.
 " While such pursuits your thoughts engage,
 " In a few years you'll live an age.
 " Who measures life by rolling years?
 " Fools measure by revolving spheres.
 " Go thou, and fetch th' unerring rule
 " From Virtue's and from Wisdom's school.
 " Who well improves life's shortest day
 " Will scarce regret its setting ray;
 " Contented with his share of light,
 " Nor fear nor wish th' approach of night:
 " And when disease assaults the heart,
 " When sickness triumphs over art,
 " Reflection on a life well past
 " Shall prove a cordial to the last:
 " This med'cine shall the soul sustain,
 " And soften or suspend the pain;
 " Shall break Death's fell tyrannic pow'r,
 " And calm the troubled dying hour."
 Blest rules of cool prudential age!
 I listen'd, and rever'd the sage;
 When lo! a form divinely bright
 Descends, and bursts upon my sight;
 A seraph of illustrious birth
 (RELIGION was her name on earth);
 Supremely sweet her radiant face,
 And blooming with celestial grace!
 Three shining seraphs form'd her train,
 Wav'd their light wings, and reach'd the plain;
 Faith, with sublime and piercing eye,
 And pinions flutt'ring for the sky;
 Here Hope, that smiling angel, stands,
 And golden anchors grace her hands;
 There Charity in robes of white,
 Fairest and fav'rite maid of light!
 The seraph spake—" 'Tis reason's part
 " To govern and to guard the heart;
 " To lull the wayward soul to rest,
 " When hopes and fears distract the breast;
 " Reason may claim this doubtful strife,
 " And steer thy bark through various life.
 " But when the storms of Death are nigh,
 " And midnight darkness veils the sky,
 " Shall reason then direct thy sail,
 " Disperse the clouds, or sink the gale?
 " Stranger, this skill alone is mine,
 " Skill that transcends his scanty line.
 " That hoary sage has counsell'd right,
 " Be wise, nor scorn his friendly light.
 " Revere thyself—thou'rt near allied
 " To angels on thy better side.
 " How various e'er their ranks or kinds,
 " Angels are but unbodied minds:
 " When the partition walls decay,
 " Men emerge angels from their clay;
 " Yes, when the frailer body dies,
 " The soul asserts her kindred skies:
 " But minds, though sprung from heavenly race,
 " Must first be tutor'd for the place:

“ (The joys above are understood
 “ And relish’d only by the good.)
 “ Who shall assume this guardian care?
 “ Who shall secure their birthright there?
 “ Souls are my charge—to me ’tis given
 “ To train them for their native heaven.
 “ Know, then—Who bow the early knee,
 “ And give the willing heart to me;
 “ Who wisely, when temptation waits,
 “ Elude her frauds, and spurn her baits;
 “ Who dare to own my injur’d cause,
 “ Though fools deride my sacred laws;
 “ Or scorn to deviate to the wrong,
 “ Though Persecution lifts her thong;
 “ Though all the sons of hell conspire
 “ To raise the stake, and light the fire—
 “ Know, that for such superior souls
 “ There lies a bliss beyond the poles;
 “ Where spirits shine with purer ray,
 “ And brighten to meridian day;
 “ Where love, where boundless friendship rules,
 “ (No friends that change, no love that cools!)
 “ Where rising floods of knowledge roll,
 “ And pour, and pour upon the soul!
 “ But where’s the passage to the skies?—
 “ The road through Death’s black valley lies.
 “ Nay, do not shudder at my tale;
 “ Though dark the shades, yet safe the vale.
 “ This path the best of men have trod,
 “ And who’d decline the road to God?
 “ Oh! ’tis a glorious boon to die!
 “ This favor can’t be priz’d too high.”

While thus she spake, my looks express’d
 The raptures kindling in my breast:
 My soul a fix’d attention gave;
 When the stern monarch of the grave
 With haughty strides approach’d—amaz’d
 I stood, and trembled as I gaz’d.
 The seraph calm’d each anxious fear,
 And kindly wip’d the falling tear;
 Then hasten’d with expanded wing
 To meet the pale, terrific king.
 But now what milder scenes arise!
 The tyrant drops his hostile guise:
 He seems a youth divinely fair;
 In graceful ringlets waves his hair;
 His wings their whit’ning plumes display,
 His burnish’d plumes reflect the day;
 Light flows his shining azure vest,
 And all the angel stands confest.

I view’d the change with sweet surprise,
 And, oh! I panted for the skies;
 Thank’d Heaven that e’er I drew my breath,
 And triumph’d in the thoughts of Death.

Introduction to the FABLES. Part the First.

§ 77. The Shepherd and the Philosopher.

REMOTE from cities liv’d a swain,
 Unvex’d with all the cares of gain;
 His head was silver’d o’er with age,
 And long experience made him sage;

In summer’s heat, and winter’s cold,
 He fed his flock, and penn’d the fold;
 His hours in cheerful labor flew,
 Nor envy nor ambition knew;
 His wisdom and his honest fame
 Through all the country rais’d his name.

A deep Philosopher (whose rules
 Of moral life were drawn from schools)
 The shepherd’s homely cottage sought,
 And thus explor’d his reach of thought:—

Whence is thy learning? Hath thy toil
 O’er books consum’d the midnight oil?
 Hast thou old Greece and Rome survey’d,
 And the vast sense of Plato weigh’d?
 Hath Socrates thy soul refin’d?
 And hast thou fathom’d Tully’s mind?
 Or, like the wise Ulysses, thrown
 By various fates on realms unknown,
 Hast thou through many cities stray’d,
 Their customs, laws, and manners weigh’d?

The Shepherd modestly replied:—
 I ne’er the path of learning tried:
 Nor have I roam’d in foreign parts
 To read mankind, their laws, and arts;
 For man is practis’d in disguise,
 He cheats the most discerning eyes:
 Who by that search shall wiser grow,
 When we ourselves can never know?
 The little knowledge I have gain’d,
 Was all from simple nature drain’d;
 Hence my life’s maxims took their rise,
 Hence grew my settled hate to vice.

The daily labors of the bee
 Awake my soul to industry.
 Who can observe the careful ant,
 And not provide for future want?
 My dog (the trustiest of his kind)
 With gratitude inflames my mind:
 I mark his true, his faithful way,
 And in my service copy Tray.
 In constancy and nuptial love,
 I learn my duty from the dove.
 The hen, who from the chilly air
 With pious wing protects her care,
 And ev’ry fowl that flies at large,
 Instructs me in a parent’s charge.

From nature too I take my rule,
 To shun contempt and ridicule:
 I never, with important air,
 In conversation overbear:
 Can grave and formal pass for wise,
 When men the solemn hour despise?
 My tongue within my lips I rein,
 For who talks much must talk in vain:
 We from the wordy torrent fly;
 Who listens to the chatt’ring pie?
 Nor would I, with felonious flight,
 By stealth invade my neighbour’s right:
 Rapacious animals we hate;
 Kites, hawks, and wolves, deserve their fate.
 Do not we just abhorrence find
 Against the toad and serpent kind?
 But envy, calumny, and spite
 Bear stronger venom in their bite.

Thus ev'ry object of creation
Can furnish hints to contemplation ;
And from the most minute and mean
A virtuous mind can morals glean.

Thy fame is just, the Sage replies ;
Thy virtue proves thee truly wise.
Pride often guides the author's pen ;
Books as affected are as men :
But he who studies nature's laws,
From certain truth his maxims draws ;
And those, without our schools, suffice
To make men moral, good, and wise.

To his Highness William Duke of Cumberland.

§ 78. FABLE I. The Lion, the Tiger, and the Traveller.

ACCEPT, young Prince, the moral lay,
And in these tales mankind survey ;
With early virtues plant your breast,
The specious arts of vice detest.

Princes, like beauties, from their youth
Are strangers to the voice of truth :
Learn to condemn all praise betimes ;
For flattery's the nurse of crimes.
Friendship by sweet reproof is shown
(A virtue never near a throne) ;
In courts such freedom must offend,
There none presumes to be a friend.
To those of your exalted station,
Each courtier is a dedication.
Must I too flatter like the rest,
And turn my morals to a jest ?
The Muse disdains to steal from those
Who thrive in courts by fulsome prose.
But shall I hide your real praise,
Or tell you what a nation says ?
They in your infant bosom trace
The virtues of your royal race,
In the fair dawning of your mind
Discern you gen'rous, mild, and kind.
They see you grieve to hear distress,
And pant already to redress.
Go on, the height of good attain,
Nor let a nation hope in vain :
For hence we justly may presage
The virtues of a riper age.
True courage shall your bosom fire,
And future actions own your sire.
Cowards are cruel, but the brave
Love mercy, and delight to save.

A Tiger, roaming for his prey,
Sprung on a Trav'ler in the way ;
The prostrate game a Lion spies,
And on the greedy tyrant flies :
With mingled roar resounds the wood,
Their teeth, their claws, distil with blood ;
Till, vanquish'd by the Lion's strength,
The spotted foe extends his length.
The man besought the shaggy lord,
And on his knees for life explor'd ;
His life the gen'rous hero gave :
Together walking to his cave,

The lion thus bespoke his guest :—
What hardy beast shall dare contest
My matchless strength ? You saw the fight,
And must attest my pow'r and right.
Forc'd to forego their native home,
My starving slaves at distance roam ;
Within these woods I reign alone,
The boundless forest is my own.
Bears, wolves, and all the savage brood,
Have dyed the regal den with blood.
These carcasses on either hand,
Those bones that whiten all the land.
My former deeds and triumphs tell,
Beneath these jaws what numbers fell.

True, says the man, the strength I saw
Might well the brutal nation awe :
But shall a monarch, brave like you,
Place glory in so false a view ?
Robbers invade their neighbours' right :
Be lov'd ; let justice bound your might.
Mean are ambitious heroes' boasts
Of wasted lands and slaughtered hosts :
Pirates their pow'r by murders gain ;
Wise kings by love and mercy reign.
To me your clemency hath shown
The virtue worthy of a throne.
Heaven gives you pow'r above the rest,
Like Heaven to succour the distress.

The case is plain, the monarch said ;
False glory hath my youth misled ;
For beasts of prey, a servile train,
Have been the flatt'ers of my reign.
You reason well. Yet tell me, friend,
Did ever you in courts attend ?
For all my fawning rogues agree,
That human heroes rule like me.

§ 79. FABLE II. The Spaniel and the Cameleon.

A SPANIEL, bred with all the care
That waits upon a fav'rite heir ;
Ne'er felt correction's rigid hand :
Indulg'd to disobey command,
In pamper'd ease his hours were spent ;
He never knew what learning meant.
Such forward airs, so pert, so smart,
Were sure to win his lady's heart :
Each little mischief gain'd him praise ;
How pretty were his fawning ways !

The wind was south, the morning fair,
He ventures forth to take the air :
He ranges all the meadow round,
And rolls upon the softest ground ;
When near him a Cameleon seen
Was scarce distinguish'd from the green.

Dear emblem of the flatt'ring host,
What, live with clowns ? a genius lost !
To cities and the court repair,
A fortune cannot fail thee there ;
Preferment shall thy talents crown :
Believe me, friend ; I know the town.

Sir, says the sycophant, like you,
Of old, politer life I knew :
Like you, a courtier born and bred,
Kings lean'd an ear to what I said.

My whisper always met success;
 The ladies prais'd me for address.
 I knew to hit each courtier's passion,
 And flatter'd ev'ry vice in fashion.
 But Jove, who hates the liar's ways,
 At once cut short my prosp'rous days;
 And, sentenc'd to retain my nature,
 Transform'd me to this crawling creature.
 Doom'd to a life obscure and mean,
 I wander in this sylvan scene.
 For Jove the heart alone regards;
 He punishes what man rewards.
 How different is thy case and mine!
 With men at least you sup and dine;
 While I, condemned to thinnest fare,
 Like those I flatter'd, feed on air.

§ 80. FABLE III. The Mother, the Nurse, and the Fairy.

GIVE me a son. The blessing sent,
 Were ever parents more content?
 How partial are their doating eyes!
 No child is half so fair and wise.
 Wak'd to the morning's pleasing care,
 The mother rose, and sought her heir.
 She saw the Nurse, like one possess'd,
 With wringing hands, and sobbing breast.

Sure some disaster has befall:
 Speak, nurse! I hope the boy is well?
 Dear Madam, think not me to blame;
 Invisible the Fairy came;
 Your precious babe is hence convey'd,
 And in the place a changeling laid.
 Where are the father's mouth and nose,
 The mother's eyes, as black as sloes?
 See here, a shocking, awkward creature,
 That speaks a fool in ev'ry feature.

The woman's blind, the mother cries;
 I see wit sparkle in his eyes.

Lord, Madam, what a squinting leer!
 No doubt the Fairy hath been here.

Just as she spoke, a pigmy Sprite,
 Pops through the key-hole, swift as light;
 Perch'd on the cradle's top he stands,
 And thus her folly reprimands:

Whence sprung the vain conceited lie,
 That we the world with fools supply?
 What! give our sprightly race away,
 For the dull helpless sons of clay!
 Besides, by partial fondness shown,
 Like you, we doat upon our own.
 Where yet was ever found a mother,
 Who'd give her booby for another?
 And should we change with human breed,
 Well might we pass for fools indeed.

§ 81. FABLE IV. The Eagle and the Assembly of Animals.

As Jupiter's all-seeing eye
 Survey'd the worlds beneath the sky,
 From this small speck of earth were sent
 Murmurs and sounds of discontent;

For ev'ry thing alive complain'd
 That he the hardest life sustain'd.
 Jove calls his Eagle. At the word
 Before him stands the royal bird.
 The bird, obedient, from heaven's height
 Downward directs his rapid flight;
 Then cited ev'ry living thing
 To hear the mandates of his king.

Ungrateful creatures! whence arise
 These murmurs which offend the skies?
 Why this disorder? say the cause;
 For just are Jove's eternal laws.
 Let each his discontent reveal;
 To yon sour Dog I first appeal.

Hard is my lot, the Hound replies:
 On what fleet nerves the Greyhound flies!
 While I, with weary step and slow,
 O'er plains, and vales, and mountains go.
 The morning sees my chace begun,
 Nor ends it till the setting sun.

When (says the Greyhound) I pursue,
 My game is lost, or caught in view;
 Beyond my sight the prey's secure:
 The Hound is slow, but always sure!
 And had I his sagacious scent,
 Jove ne'er had heard my discontent.

The Lion crav'd the Fox's art;
 The Fox the Lion's force and heart;
 The Cock implor'd the Pigeon's flight,
 Whose wings were rapid, strong, and light;
 The Pigeon strength of wing despis'd,
 And the Cock's matchless valor priz'd;
 The Fishes wish'd to graze the plain;
 The beasts to skim beneath the main.
 Thus, envious of another's state,
 Each blam'd the partial hand of Fate.

The Bird of Heaven then cried aloud:
 Jove bids disperse the murm'ring crowd;
 The God objects your idle prayers;
 Would ye, rebellious mutineers,
 Entirely change your name and nature,
 And be the very envied creature?
 What! silent all, and none consent?
 Be happy then, and learn content:
 Nor imitate the restless mind,
 And proud ambition of mankind.

§ 82. FABLE V. The wild Boar and the Ram.

AGAINST an elm a sheep was tied,
 The butcher's knife in blood was dyed;
 The patient flock, in silent fright,
 From far beheld the horrid sight:
 A savage Boar, who near them stood,
 Thus mock'd to scorn the fleecy brood:

All cowards should be serv'd like you;
 See, see, your murd'rer is in view!
 With purple hands, and reeking knife,
 He strips the skin yet warm with life:
 Your quarter'd sires, your bleeding dams,
 The dying bleat of harmless lambs,
 Call for revenge. O stupid race!
 The heart that wants revenge is base.

I grant, an ancient Ram replies,
 We bear no terror in our eyes:

Yet think us not of soul so tame,
Which no repeated wrongs inflame,
Insensible of ev'ry ill,
Because we want thy tusks to kill.
Know, those who violence pursue,
Give to themselves the vengeance due;
For in these massacres they find
The two chief plagues that waste mankind.
Our skins supplies the wrangling bar;
It wakes their slumb'ring sons to war;
And well revenge may rest contented,
Since drums and parchment were invented.

§ 83. FABLE VI. The Miser and Plutus.

THE wind was high, the window shakes;
With sudden start the Miser wakes;
Along the silent room he stalks;
Looks back, and trembles as he walks!
Each lock and ev'ry bolt he tries,
And ev'ry creek and corner pries;
Then opes the chest with treasure stor'd,
And stands in rapture o'er his hoard.
But now, with sudden qualms possest,
He wrings his hands, he beats his breast;
By conscience stung, he wildly stares,
And thus his guilty soul declares:

Had the deep earth her stores confin'd,
This heart had known sweet peace of mind.
But virtue's sold! Good gods! what price
Can recompense the pangs of vice?
O bane of good! seducing cheat!
Can man, weak man, thy pow'r defeat?
Gold banish'd honor from the mind,
And only left the name behind;
Gold sow'd the world with ev'ry ill;
Gold taught the murderer's sword to kill:
'Twas gold instructed coward hearts
In treachery's more pernicious arts.
Who can recount the mischiefs o'er?
Virtue resides on earth no more!

He spoke, and sigh'd. In angry mood,
Plutus, his god, before him stood.
The Miser, trembling, lock'd his chest;
The vision frown'd, and thus address'd:

Whence is this vile ungrateful rant,
Each sordid rascal's daily cant?
Did I, base wretch, corrupt mankind!
The fault's in thy rapacious mind.
Because my blessings are abus'd,
Must I be censur'd, curs'd, accus'd?
E'en virtue's self by knaves is made
A cloak to carry on the trade;
And pow'r (when lodg'd in their possession)
Grows tyranny, and rank oppression;
Thus, when the villain crams his chest,
Gold is the canker of the breast;
'Tis avarice, insolence, and pride,
And ev'ry shocking vice beside:
But when to virtuous hands 'tis given,
It blesses like the dews of heaven;
Like heaven, it hears the orphan's cries,
And wipes the tears from widows' eyes.
Their crimes on gold shall misers lay,
Who pawn'd their sordid souls for pay?

Let bravoës then (when blood is spilt)
Upbraid the passive sword with guilt.

§ 84. FABLE VII. The Lion, the Fox, and the Geese.

A LION, tir'd with state affairs,
Quite sick of pomp, and worn with cares;
Resolv'd (remote from noise and strife)
In peace to pass his latter life.

It was proclaim'd: the day was set:
Behold the gen'ral council met.
The Fox was viceroy nam'd. The crowd
To the new regent humbly bow'd.

Wolves, bears, and mighty tigers bend,
And strive who most shall condescend.
He straight assumes a solemn grace,
Collects his wisdom in his face.
The crowd admire his wit, his sense;
Each word hath weight and consequence.
The flatt'rer all his art displays,
He who hath pow'r is sure of praise.
A fox stepp'd forth before the rest,
And thus the servile throng address'd:—

How vast his talents, born to rule,
And train'd in virtue's honest school:
What clemency his temper sways!
How uncorrupt are all his ways!
Beneath his conduct and command
Rapine shall cease to waste the land;
His brain hath stratagem and art;
Prudence and mercy rule his heart.
What blessings must attend the nation
Under this good administration!

He said. A Goose who distant stood,
Harangu'd apart the cackling brood:—

Whene'er I hear a knave commend,
He bids me shun his worthy friend.
What praise! what mighty commendation!
But 'twas a Fox who spoke th' oration.
Foxes this government may prize,
As gentle, plentiful, and wise;
If they enjoy the sweets, 'tis plain,
We Geese must feel a tyrant reign.
What havock now shall thin our race,
When ev'ry petty clerk in place,
To prove his taste and seem polite,
Will feed on Geese both noon and night!

§ 85. FABLE VIII. The Lady and the Wasp.

WHAT whispers must the beauty bear!
What hourly nonsense haunts her ear!
Where'er her eyes dispense their charms,
Impertinence around her swarms.
Did not the tender nonsense strike,
Contempt and scorn might soon dislike:
Forbidding airs might thin the place;
The slightest flap a fly can chase.
But who can drive the num'rous breed!
Chase one, another will succeed;
Who knows a fool, must know his brother,
One fop will recommend another:
And with this plague she's rightly curst,
Because she listen'd to the first.

As Doris, at her toilet's duty,
Sat meditating on her beauty,
She now was pensive, now was gay,
And loll'd the sultry hours away.

As thus in indolence she lies,
A giddy Wasp around her flies.
He now advances, now retires,
Now to her neck and cheek aspires.
Her fan in vain defends her charms;
Swift he returns, again alarms:
For by repulse he bolder grew,
Perch'd on her lip, and sipp'd the dew.

She frowns, she frets. Good gods! she cries,
Protect me from these teasing flies!
Of all the plagues that heaven hath sent,
A Wasp is most impertinent.

The hov'ring insect thus complain'd:
Am I then slighted, scorn'd, disdain'd?
Can such offence your anger wake?
'Twas beauty caus'd the bold mistake.
Those cherry lips that breathe perfume,
That cheek so ripe with youthful bloom,
Made me with strong desire pursue
The fairest peach that ever grew.

Strike him not, Jenny, Doris cries,
Nor murder Wasps like vulgar flies:
For though he's free, (to do him right)
The creature's civil and polite.

In ecstasies away he posts;
Where'er he came the favor boasts;
Braggs how her sweetest tea he sips,
And shows the sugar on his lips.

The hint alarm'd the forward crew:
Sure of success, away they flew.
They share the dainties of the day,
Round her with airy music play;
And now they flutter, now they rest,
Now soar again, and skim her breast.
Nor were they banish'd till she found
That Wasps have stings, and felt the wound.

§ 86. FABLE IX. The Bull and the Mastiff.

SEEK you to train your fav'rite Boy?
Each caution, ev'ry care employ:
And ere you venture to confide,
Let his preceptor's heart be tried:
Weigh well his manners, life, and scope;
On these depends thy future hope.

As on a time, in peaceful reign,
A Bull enjoy'd the flow'ry plain,
A Mastiff pass'd; inflam'd with ire,
His eye-balls shot indignant fire;
He foam'd, he rag'd with thirst of blood,
Spurning the ground the monarch stood,
And roar'd aloud—Suspend the fight;
In a whole skin go sleep to-night:
Or tell me, ere the battle rage,
What wrongs provoke thee to engage?
Is it ambition fires thy breast,
Or avarice, that ne'er can rest?
From these alone unjustly springs
The world-destroying wrath of kings.

The surly Mastiff thus returns;
Within my bosom glory burns.

Like heroes of eternal name,
Whom poets sing, I fight for fame.
The butcher's spirit-stirring mind
To daily war—my youth inclin'd;
He train'd me to heroic deed;
Taught me to conquer or to bleed.

Curs'd Dog! the Bull replied; no more
I wonder at thy thirst of gore;
For thou (beneath a butcher train'd,
Whose hands with cruelty are stain'd,
His daily murders in thy view)
Must, like the tutor, blood pursue.
Take then thy fate. With goring wound,
At once he lifts him from the ground:
Aloft the sprawling hero flies;
Mangled he falls, he howls, and dies.

§ 87. FABLE X. The Elephant and the Bookseller.

THE man who with undaunted toils
Sails unknown seas to unknown soils,
With various wonders feasts his sight:
What stranger wonders does he write!
We read, and in description view
Creatures which Adam never knew:
For, when we risque no contradiction,
It prompts the tongue to deal in fiction;
Those things that startle me or you,
I grant are strange, yet may be true.
Who doubts that Elephants are found
For science and for sense renown'd?
Borri records their strength of parts,
Extent of thought, and skill in arts;
How they perform the law's decrees,
And save the state the hangman's fees:
And how by travel understand
The language of another land.
Let those who question this report,
To Pliny's ancient page resort;
How learn'd was that sagacious breed!
Who now like them the Greek can read!

As one of these, in days of yore,
Rummag'd a shop of learning o'er;
Not, like our modern dealers, minding
Only the margin's breadth and binding;
A book his curious eye detains,
Where with exactest care and pains
Were ev'ry beast and bird pourtray'd,
That e'er the search of man survey'd.
Their natures and their pow'rs were writ
With all the pride of human wit.
The page he with attention spread,
And thus remark'd on what he read:—

Man with strong reason is endow'd;
A beast scarce instinct is allow'd.
But let this author's work be tried:
'Tis plain that neither was his guide.
Can he discern the different natures,
And weigh the pow'r of other creatures,
Who by the partial work hath shown
He knows so little of his own?
How falsely is the spaniel drawn!
Did man from him first learn to fawn?

A dog proficient in the trade!
 He the chief flatt'rer nature made!
 Go, Man, the ways of courts discern,
 You'll find a spaniel still might learn.
 How can the Fox's theft and plunder
 Provoke his censure or his wonder?
 From courtier tricks, and lawyer's arts,
 The fox might well improve his parts.
 The lion, wolf, and tiger's brood,
 He curses for their thirst of blood:
 But is not man to man a prey?
 Beasts kill for hunger, men for pay.

The Bookseller, who heard him speak,
 And saw him turn a page of Greek,
 Thought, what a genius have I found?
 Then thus address'd with bow profound:—

Learn'd Sir, if you'd employ your pen
 Against the senseless sons of men,
 Or write the history of Siam,
 No man is better pay than I am;
 Or, since your learn'd in Greek, let's see Something against the Trinity.

When, wrinkling with a sneer his trunk,
 Friend, quoth the Elephant, you're drunk;
 E'en keep your money, and be wise;
 Leave man on man to criticise:
 For that you ne'er can want a pen
 Among the senseless sons of men.
 They unprovok'd will court the fray;
 Envy's a sharper spur than pay.
 No author ever spar'd a brother;
 Wits are game-cocks to one another.

§ 88. FABLE XI. The Peacock, the Turkey, and the Goose.

IN beauty faults conspicuous grow;
 The smallest speck is seen on snow.

As near a barn, by hunger led,
 A Peacock with the poultry fed;
 All view'd him with an envious eye,
 And mock'd his gaudy pageantry.
 He, conscious of superior merit,
 Contemns their base reviling spirit;
 His state and dignity assumes,
 And to the sun displays his plumes;
 Which, like the heav'ns o'er-arching skies,
 Are spangled with a thousand eyes:
 The circling rays, and varied light,
 At once confound their dazzled sight:
 On ev'ry tongue detraction burns,
 And malice prompts their spleen by turns.

Mark with what insolence and pride
 The creature takes his haughty stride,
 The Turkey cries. Can spleen contain?
 Sure never bird was half so vain!
 But, were intrinsic merit seen,
 We Turkeys have the whiter skin.

From tongue to tongue they caught abuse;
 And next was heard the hissing Goose:—
 What hideous legs! what filthy claws!
 I scorn to censure little flaws.
 Then what a horrid squalling throat!
 Ev'n owls are frighted at the note.

True—those are faults, the Peacock cries;
 My scream, my shanks, you may despise:
 But such blind critics rail in vain:
 What! overlook my radiant train!
 Know, did my legs (your scorn and sport)
 The Turkey or the Goose support,
 And did ye scream with harsher sound,
 Those faults in you had ne'er been found!
 To all apparent beauties blind,
 Each blemish strikes an envious mind.

Thus in assemblies have I seen
 A nymph of brightest charms and mien,
 Wake envy in each ugly face;
 And buzzing scandal fills the place.

§ 89. FABLE XII. Cupid, Hymen, and Plutus.

As Cupid in Cythera's grove
 Employ'd the lesser pow'rs of love;
 Some shape the bow, or fit the string;
 Some give the taper shaft its wing,
 Or turn the polish'd quiver's mould,
 Or head the darts with temper'd gold.
 Amidst their toil and various care,
 Thus Hymen, with assuming air,
 Address'd the god:—Thou purblind chit,
 Of awkward and ill-judging wit,
 If matches are not better made,
 At once I must forswear my trade.
 You send me such ill-coupled folks,
 That 'tis a shame to sell them yokes;
 They squabble for a pin, a feather,
 And wonder how they came together.
 The husband's sullen, dogged, shy;
 The wife grows flippant in reply;
 He loves command and due restriction,
 And she as well likes contradiction:
 She never slavishly submits;
 She'll have her will, or have her fits:
 He this way tugs, she t'other draws;
 The man grows jealous, and with cause:
 Nothing can save him but divorce:
 And here the wife complies of course.

When, says the boy, had I to do
 With either your affairs or you?
 I never idly spent my darts;
 You trade in mercenary hearts.
 For settlements the lawyer's fee'd;
 Is my hand witness to the deed?
 If they like cat and dog agree,
 Go rail at Plutus, not at me.

Plutus appear'd, and said—'Tis true,
 In marriage gold is all their view;
 They seek no beauty, wit, or sense;
 And love is seldom the pretence.
 All offer incense at my shrine,
 And I alone the bargain sign.
 How can Belinda blame her fate?
 She only ask'd a great estate.
 Doris was rich enough, 'tis true;
 Her lord must give her title too:
 And ev'ry man, or rich or poor,
 A fortune asks, and asks no more.

Av'rice, whatever shape it bears,
 Must still be coupled with its cares..

§ 90. FABLE XIII. The Tame Stag.

As a young Stag the thicket pass'd,
The branches held his antlers fast;
A clown, who saw the captive hung,
Across the horns his halter flung.

Now safely hamper'd in the cord,
He bore the present to his lord.
His lord was pleas'd; as was the clown,
When he was tipp'd with half-a-crown.
The stag was brought before his wife!
The tender lady begg'd his life.
How sleek the skin! how speck'd like ermine!
Sure never creature was so charming!

At first, within the yard confin'd,
He flies, and hides from all mankind;
Now, bolder grown, with fix'd amaze,
And distant awe, presumes to gaze:
Munches the linen on the lines,
And on a hood or apron dines;
He steals my little master's bread,
Follows the servants to be fed:
Nearer and nearer now he stands,
To feel the praise of patting hands;
Examines ev'ry fist for meat,
And, though repuls'd, disdains retreat;
Attacks again with levell'd horns,
And man, that was his terror, scorns.

Such is the country maiden's fright,
When first a red-coat is in sight;
Behind the door she hides her face;
Next time at distance eyes the lace;
She now can all his terrors stand,
Nor from his squeeze withdraws her hand.
She plays familiar in his arms,
And ev'ry soldier hath his charms,
From tent to tent she spreads her flame;
For custom conquers fear and shame.

§ 91. FABLE XIV. The Monkey who had seen the World.

A MONKEY, to reform the times,
Resolved to visit foreign climes:
For men in distant regions roam
To bring politer manners home.
So forth he fares, all toil defies;
Misfortune serves to make us wise.

At length the treach'rous snare was laid;
Poor Pug was caught, to town convey'd,
There sold. How envied was his doom,
Made captive in a lady's room!
Proud as a lover of his chains,
He day by day her favor gains.
Whene'er the duty of the day
The toilet calls, with mimic play
He twirls her knots, he cracks her fan,
Like any other gentleman.
In visits too his parts and wit,
When jests grew dull, were sure to hit.
Proud with applause, he thought his mind
In ev'ry courtly art refin'd;
Like Orpheus burnt with public zeal,
To civilize the Monkey weal:
So watch'd occasion, broke his chain,
And sought his native woods again.

The hairy sylvan's round him press,
Astonish'd at his strut and dress.
Some praise his sleeve; and others glote
Upon his rich embroider'd coat;
His dapper perriwig commending,
With the black tail behind depending:
His powder'd back, above, below,
Like hoary frost or fleecy snow;
But all with envy and desire
His flutt'ring shoulder-knot admire.

Hear and improve he pertly cries;
I come to make a nation wise.
Weigh your own worth, support your place,
The next in rank to human race.
In cities long I pass'd my days,
Convers'd with men, and learn'd their ways.
Their dress, their courtly manners see;
Reform your state, and copy me.
Seek ye to thrive?—in flatt'ry deal;
Your scorn, your hate, with that conceal.
Seem only to regard your friends,
But use them for your private ends.
Stint not to truth the flow of wit;
Be prompt to lie whene'er 'tis fit.
Bend all your force to spatter merit;
Scandal is conversation's spirit.
Boldly to ev'ry thing attend,
And men your talents shall commend.
I knew the great. Observe me right;
So shall you grow like man polite.

He spoke, and bow'd. With mutt'ring jaws
The wond'ring circle grinn'd applause.
Now, warm with malice, envy, spite,
Their most obliging friends they bite;
And, fond to copy human ways,
Practice new mischiefs all their days.
Thus the dull Lad, too tall for school,
With travel finishes the fool;
Studious of ev'ry coxcomb's airs,
He drinks, games, dresses, whores, and swears;
O'erlooks with scorn all virtuous arts;
For vice is fitted to his parts.

§ 92. FABLE XV. The Philosopher and the Pheasants.

THE Sage, awak'd at early day,
Through the deep forest took his way;
Drawn by the music of the groves,
Along the winding gloom he roves:
From tree to tree the warbling throats
Prolong the sweet alternate notes.
But where he pass'd he terror threw;
The song broke short, the warblers flew;
The thrushes chatter'd with affright,
And nightingales abhor'd his sight;
All animals before him ran,
To shun the hateful sight of man.

Whence is this dread of ev'ry creature?
Fly they our figure, or our nature?
As thus he walk'd in musing thought,
His ear imperfect accents taught;
With cautious steps he nearer drew:
By the thick shade conceal'd from view,

High on the branch a Pheasant stood ;
 Around her all her list'ning brood ;
 Proud of the blessings of her nest,
 She thus a mother's care express'd :
 No dangers here shall circumvent ;
 Within the woods enjoy content.
 Sooner the hawk or vulture trust
 Than Man, of animals the worst ;
 In him ingratitude you find ;
 A vice peculiar to the kind.
 The sheep, whose annual fleece is dyed
 To guard his health, and serve his pride,
 Forc'd from his fold and native plain,
 Is in the cruel shambles slain.
 The swarms who, with industrious skill,
 His hives with wax and honey fill ;
 In vain whole summer days employ'd,
 Their stores are sold, their race destroy'd.
 What tribute from the goose is paid !
 Does not her wing all science aid ?
 Does it not lovers' hearts explain,
 And drudge to raise the merchant's gain ?
 What now rewards this gen'ral use ?
 He takes the quills, and eats the goose.
 Man then avoid, detest his ways ;
 So safety shall prolong your days.
 When services are thus acquitted,
 Be sure we Pheasants must be spitted.

§ 93. FABLE XVI. The Pin and the Needle.

A PIN, who long had serv'd a beauty,
 Proficient in the toilet's duty,
 Had form'd her sleeve, confin'd her hair,
 Or given her knot a smarter air,
 Now nearest to her heart was plac'd,
 Now in her mantua's tail disgrac'd ;
 But could she partial fortune blame,
 Who saw her lover serv'd the same.

At length from all her honors cast,
 Through various turns of life she pass'd ;
 Now glitter'd on a tailor's arm,
 Now kept a beggar's infant warm ;
 Now, rang'd within a miser's coat,
 Contributes to his yearly groat :
 Now rais'd again from low approach,
 She visits in the doctor's coach !
 Here, there, by various fortune tost,
 At last in Gresham-hall was lost.
 Charm'd with the wonders of the show,
 On ev'ry side, above, below,
 She now of this or that inquires ;
 What least was understood admires.
 'Tis plain, each thing so struck her mind,
 Her head's of virtuoso kind.

And pray what's this, and this, dear Sir ?
 A Needle, says the interpreter.
 She knew the name : and thus the fool
 Address'd her as a tailor's tool :—

A needle with that filthy stone,
 Quite idle, all with rust o'ergrown !
 You better might employ your parts,
 And aid the sempstress in her arts.
 But tell me how the friendship grew,
 Between that paltry flint and you.

Friend, says the Needle, cease to blame ;
 I follow real worth and fame.
 Know'st thou the loadstone's pow'r and art,
 That virtue virtues can impart ?
 Of all his talents I partake ;
 How can I such a friend forsake !
 'Tis I direct the pilot's hand
 To shun the rocks and treach'rous sand ;
 By me the distant world is known,
 And either India is our own.
 Had I with milliners been bred,
 What had I been ? the guide of thread,
 And drudg'd as vulgar needles do,
 Of no more consequence than you.

§ 94. FABLE XVII. The Shepherd's Dog and the Wolf.

A WOLF, with hunger fierce and bold,
 Ravag'd the plains, and thinn'd the fold ;
 Deep in the wood secure he lay ;
 The thefts of night regal'd the day.
 In vain the shepherd's wakeful care
 Had spread the toils, and watch'd the snare ;
 In vain the Dog pursued his pace,
 The fleeter robber mock'd the chace.

As Lightfoot rang'd the forest round,
 By chance his foe's retreat he found
 A truce, replies the Wolf. 'Tis done.
 The Dog the parley thus begun :

How can that strong intrepid mind
 Attack a weak defenceless kind ?
 Those jaws should prey on nobler food,
 And drink the boar's and lion's blood ;
 Great souls with gen'rous pity melt,
 Which coward tyrants never felt.
 How harmless is our fleecy care !
 Be brave, and let thy mercy spare.

Friend, says the Wolf, the matter weigh ;
 Nature design'd us beasts of prey ;
 As such, when hunger finds a treat,
 'Tis necessary Wolves should eat.
 If, mindful of the bleating weal,
 Thy bosom burn with real zeal,
 Hence, and thy tyrant lord beseech ;
 To him repeat the moving speech :
 A Wolf eats sheep but now and then ;
 Ten thousands are devour'd by men.
 An open foe may prove a curse ;
 But a pretended friend is worse.

§ 95. FABLE XVIII. The Painter who pleased nobody and every body.

LEST men suspect your tale untrue,
 Keep probability in view.
 The trav'ller leaping o'er those bounds,
 The credit of his book confounds.
 Who with his tongue hath armies routed,
 Makes ev'n his real courage doubted :
 But flattery never seems absurd,
 The flatter'd always take your word :
 Impossibilities seem just ;
 They take the strongest praise on trust.
 Hyberboles, though ne'er so great,
 Will still come short of self-conceit.

So very like, a Painter drew,
That ev'ry eye the picture knew;
He hit complexion, feature, air,
So just, the life itself was there.
No flatt'ry with his colors laid,
To bloom restor'd the faded maid;
He gave each muscle all its strength;
The mouth, the chin, the nose's length,
His honest pencil touch'd with truth,
And mark'd the date of age and youth.
He lost his friends, his practice fail'd;
Truth should not always be reveal'd;
In dusty piles his pictures lay,
For no one sent the second pay.
Two bustos, fraught with ev'ry grace,
A Venus and Apollo's face,
He plac'd in view; resolv'd to please
Whoever sat, he drew from these;
From these corrected ev'ry feature,
And spirited each awkward creature.

All things were set; the hour was come,
His pallet ready o'er his thumb,
My Lord appear'd; and, seated right
In proper attitude and light,
The Painter look'd, he sketch'd the piece,
Then dipp'd his pencil, talk'd of Greece.
Of Titian's tints, of Guido's air;
Those eyes, my Lord, the spirit there
Might well a Raphael's hand require,
To give them all the native fire;
The features fraught with sense and wit,
You'll grant, are very hard to hit;
But yet with patience you shall view
As much as paint and art can do.
Observe the work. My Lord replied,
Till now I thought my mouth was wide;
Besides, my nose is somewhat long;
Dear Sir, for me 'tis far too young.

Oh pardon me! the artist cried,
In this the painters must decide.
The piece ev'n common eyes must strike;
I warrant it extremely like.

My Lord examin'd it anew;
No looking-glass seem'd half so true.

A Lady came, with borrow'd grace,
He from his Venus form'd her face.
Her lover prais'd the Painter's art;
So like the picture in his heart!
To ev'ry age some charm he lent;
Ev'n beauties were almost content.

Through all the town his art they prais'd;
His custom grew, his price was rais'd.
Had he the real likeness shown,
Would any man the picture own?
But when thus happily he wrought,
Each found the likeness in his thought.

§ 96. FABLE XIX. The Lion and the Cub.

How fond are men of rule and place,
Who court it from the mean and base!
These cannot bear an equal nigh,
But from superior merit fly.
They love the cellar's vulgar joke,
And lose their hours in ale and smoke,

There o'er some petty club preside;
So poor, so paltry is their pride!
Nay, ev'n with fools whole nights will sit,
In hopes to be supreme in wit.
If these can read, to these I write,
To set their worth in truest light.

A Lion-cub, of sordid mind,
Avoided all the lion-kind;
Fond of applause, he sought the feasts
Of vulgar and ignoble beasts;
With asses all his time he spent;
Their club's perpetual president:
He caught their manners, looks, and airs;
An ass in ev'ry thing but ears!
If e'er his highness meant a joke,
They grinn'd applause before he spoke;
But at each word what shouts of praise!
Good gods! how natural he brays!

Elate with flatt'ry and conceit,
He seeks his royal sire's retreat;
Forward, and fond to show his parts,
His highness brays; the lion starts:—

Puppy! that curs'd vociferation
Betrays thy life and conversation:
Coxcombs, an ever-noisy race,
Are trumpets of their own disgrace.

Why so severe? the Cub replies;
Our senate always held me wise.

How weak is pride! returns the sire;
All fools are vain when fools admire!
But know, what stupid asses prize,
Lions and noble beasts despise.

§ 97. FABLE XX. The old Hen and the Cock.

RESTRAIN your child; you'll soon believe
The text which says, "We sprung from Eve."

As an old Hen led forth her train,
And seem'd to peck to show the grain;
She rak'd the chaff, she scratch'd the ground,
And glean'd the spacious yard around.
A giddy Chick, to try her wings,
On the well's narrow margin springs,
And prone she drops. The mother's breast
All day with sorrow was possess'd.

A Cock she met; her son she knew,
And in her heart affection grew.

My son, says she, I grant your years
Have reach'd beyond a mother's cares.
I see you vig'rous, strong, and bold;
I hear with joy your triumphs told.
'Tis not from Cocks thy fate I dread;
But let thy ever-wary tread
Avoid yon well; the fatal place
Is sure perdition to our race.
Print this my counsel on thy breast:
To the just gods I leave the rest.

He thank'd her care; yet day by day
His bosom burn'd to disobey;
And ev'ry time the well he saw,
Scorn'd in his heart the foolish law:
Near and more near each day he drew,
And long'd to try the dang'rous view.

Why was this idle charge? he cries;
Let courage female fears despise.

Or did she doubt my heart was brave,
And therefore this injunction gave?
Or does her harvest store the place,
A treasure for her younger race?
And would she thus my search prevent?
I stand resolv'd, and dare th' event.

Thus said, he mounts the margin's round,
And pries into the depth profound.
He stretch'd his neck; and from below
With stretching neck advanc'd a foe:
With wrath his ruffled plumes he rears,
The foe with ruffled plumes appears:
Threat answer'd threat; his fury grew;
Headlong to meet the war he flew;
But when the wat'ry death he found,
He thus lamented as he drown'd:—

I ne'er had been in this condition,
But for my mother's prohibition.

§ 98. FABLE XXI. The Rat-Catcher and Cats.

THE rats by night such mischief did,
Betty was ev'ry morning chid:
They undermin'd whole sides of bacon;
Her cheese was sapp'd, her tarts were taken;
Her pasties, fenc'd with thickest paste,
Were all demolish'd and laid waste.
She curs'd the Cat for want of duty,
Who left her foes a constant booty.
An engineer of noted skill
Engag'd to stop the growing ill.

From room to room he now surveys
Their haunts, their works, their secret ways,
Finds where they 'scape an ambushade,
And whence the nightly sally's made.

An envious Cat, from place to place,
Unseen attends his silent pace.
She saw that, if his trade went on,
The purring race must be undone;
So secretly removes his baits,
And ev'ry stratagem defeats.

Again he sets the poison'd toils,
And Puss again the labour foils.

"What foe (to frustrate my designs)
"My schemes thus nightly countermines?"
Incens'd, he cries: "this very hour
"The wretch shall bleed beneath my pow'r."
So said—a pond'rous trap he brought,
And in the fact poor Puss was caught.

"Smuggler," says he, "thou shalt be made
"A victim to our loss of trade."

The captive Cat, with piteous mews,
For pardon, life, and freedom sues.

"A sister of the science spare;
"One int'rest is our common care."

"What insolence!" the man replied;
"Shall Cats with us the game divide?"
"Were all your interloping band
"Extinguish'd, or expell'd the land,
"We Rat-catchers might raise our fees,
"Sole guardians of a nation's cheese!"

A Cat, who saw the lifted knife,
Thus spoke, and sav'd her sister's life:

"In ev'ry age and clime we see,
"Two of a trade can ne'er agree.

"Each hates his neighbour for encroaching;
"Squire stigmatises squire for poaching;
"Beauties with beauties are in arms,
"And scandal pelts each other's charms;
"Kings too their neighbour kings dethrone,
"In hope to make the world their own.
"But let us limit our desires;
"Not war like beauties, kings, and 'squires;
"For though we both one prey pursue,
"There's game enough for us and you."

§ 99. FABLE XXII. The Goat without a Beard.

'Tis certain that the modish passions
Descends among the crowd, like fashions.
Excuse me, then, if pride, conceit,
(The manners of the fair and great,)
I give to monkeys, asses, hogs,
Fleas, owls, goats, butterflies, and dogs.
I say that these are proud; what then?
I never said they equal men.

A Goat (as vain as Goat can be) Affected singularity.

Whene'er a thymy bank he found,
He roll'd upon the fragrant ground;
And then with fond attention stood,
Fix'd o'er his image in the flood.

"I hate my frowsy beard," he cries;
"My youth is lost in this disguise.
"Did not the females know my vigor,
"Well might they loath this rev'rend figure."

Resolv'd to smooth his shaggy face,
He sought the barber of the place.
A flippant monkey, spruce and smart,
Hard-by profess'd the dapper art;
His pole with pewter basons hung;
Black rotten teeth in order strung;
Rang'd cups that in the window stood,
Lin'd with red rags, to look like blood,
Did well his threefold trade explain:
Who shav'd, drew teeth, and breath'd a vein.

The Goat he welcomes with an air,
And seats him in his wooden chair:
Mouth, nose, and cheek the lather hides;
Light, smooth, and swift the razor glides.

"I hope your custom, sir," says Pug;
"Sure never face was half so smug."

The Goat, impatient for applause,
Swift to the neigh'ring hill withdraws;
The shaggy people grinn'd and star'd:
"Heighday! what's here without a beard?
"Say, brother, whence the dire disgrace?
"What envious hand hath robb'd your face?"
—When thus the fop, with smiles of scorn:

"Are beards by civil nations worn?
"E'en Muscovites have mow'd their chins:
"Shall we, like formal Capuchins,
"Stubborn in pride, retain the mode,
"And bear about the hairy load?"

Whene'er we through the village stray,
"Are we not mock'd along the way,
"Insulted with loud shouts of scorn,
"By boys our beards disgrac'd and torn?"
"Were you no more with Goats to dwell,
"Brother, I grant you reason well,"

Replies a bearded chief—"Beside,
 "If boys can mortify thy pride,
 "How wilt thou stand the ridicule
 "Of our whole flock? Affected fool!
 "Coxcombs distinguish'd from the rest,
 "To all but coxcombs are a jest."

§ 100. FABLE XXIII. The Old Woman and her Cats.

Who friendship with a knave hath made,
 Is judg'd a partner in the trade.
 The matron who conducts abroad,
 A willing nymph, is thought a bawd;
 And if a modest girl is seen
 With one who cures a lover's spleen,
 We guess her not extremely nice,
 And only wish to know her price.
 'Tis thus that on the choice of friends,
 Our good or evil name depends.

A wrinkled Hag, of wicked fame,
 Beside a little smoky flame
 Sat hov'ring, pinch'd with age and frost:
 Her shrivell'd hands, with veins embost,
 Upon her knees her weight sustains,
 While palsy shook her crazy brains:
 She mumbles forth her backward pray'rs,
 An untam'd scold of fourscore years.
 About her swarm'd a num'rous brood
 Of Cats, who lank with hunger mew'd.

Teas'd with their cries, her choler grew;
 And thus she sputter'd: "Hence ye crew!
 "Fool that I was, to entertain
 "Such imps, such fiends, a hellish train;
 "Had ye been never hous'd and nurs'd,
 "I for a witch had ne'er been curs'd.
 "To you I owe that crowds of boys,
 "Worry me with eternal noise;
 "Straws laid across my pace retard;
 "The horse-shoe's nail'd (each threshold's guard),
 "The stunted broom the wenches hide,
 "For fear that I should up and ride;
 "They stick with pins my bleeding seat,
 "And bid me show my secret teat."

"To hear you prate would vex a saint:
 "Who hath most reason of complaint?"
 Replies a Cat. "Let's come to proof:
 "Had we ne'er starv'd beneath your roof,
 "We had, like others of our race,
 "In credit liv'd, as beasts of chace.
 "'Tis infamy to serve a hag;
 "Cats are thought imps, her broom a nag;
 "And boys against our lives combine,
 "Because 'tis said your cats have nine."

§ 101. FABLE XXIV. The Butterfly and Snail.

ALL upstarts insolent in place
 Remind us of their vulgar race.

As, in the sunshine of the morn,
 A Butterfly but newly born
 Sat proudly perking on a rose,
 With pert conceit his bosom glows;
 His wings, all glorious to behold,
 Bedropt with azure, jet, and gold,

Wide he displays; the spangled dew
 Reflects his eyes, and various hue.

His now-forgotten friend, a Snail,
 Beneath his house, with slimy trail,
 Crawls o'er the grass; whom when he spies,
 In wrath he to the gard'ner cries:—

"What means yon peasant's daily toil,
 "From choking weeds to rid the soil?
 "Why wake you to the morning's care?
 "Why with new arts correct the year?
 "Why glows the peach with crimson hue?
 "And why the plum's inviting blue?
 "Were they to feast his taste design'd,
 "That vermin of voracious kind?
 "Crush then the slow, the pilf'ring race;
 "So purge thy garden from disgrace."

"What arrogance!" the Snail replied;
 "How insolent is upstart pride!
 "Had thou not thus, with insult vain,
 "Provok'd my patience to complain,
 "I had conceal'd thy meaner birth,
 "Nor trac'd thee to the scum of earth.
 "For scarce nine suns had wak'd the hours
 "To swell the fruit and paint the flow'rs,
 "Since I thy humbler life survey'd,
 "In base and sordid guise array'd:
 "A hideous insect, vile, unclean,
 "You dragg'd a slow and noisome train;
 "And from your spider-bowels drew
 "Foul film, and spun the dirty clue.
 "I own my humble life, good friend;
 "Snail was I born, and Snail shall end.
 "And what's a Butterfly? At best
 "He's but a caterpillar drest;
 "And all thy race (a num'rous seed)
 "Shall prove of caterpillar breed."

§ 102. FABLE XXV. The Scold and the Parrot.

THE husband thus reprov'd his wife:—

"Who deals in slander, lives in strife.
 "Art thou the herald of disgrace,
 "Denouncing war to all thy race?
 "Can nothing quell thy thunder's rage,
 "Which spares no friend, nor sex, nor age?
 "That vixen tongue of yours, my dear,
 "Alarms our neighbours far and near.
 "Good gods! 'tis like a rolling river,
 "That murmur'ing flows, and flows for ever!
 "Ne'er tir'd, perpetual discord sowing!
 "Like fame, it gathers strength by going,"
 "Heighday!" the flippant tongue replies,
 "How solemn is the fool, how wise!
 "Is nature's choicest gift debarr'd?
 "Nay, frown not, for I will be heard.
 "Women of late are finely ridden;
 "A parrot's privilege forbidden!
 "You praise his talk, his squalling song;
 "But wives are always in the wrong."

Now reputations flew in pieces,
 Of mothers, daughters, aunts, and nieces:
 She ran the parrot's language o'er,
 Bawd, hussey, drunkard, slattern, whore;
 On all the sex she vents her fury;
 Tries and condemns without a jury.

At once the torrent of her words
Alarm'd cat, monkey, dogs, and birds ;
All join their forces to confound her !
Puss spits, the monkey chatters round her ;
The yelping cur her heels assaults ;
The magpye blabs out all her faults ;
Poll, in the uproar, from his cage,
With this rebuke out-scream'd her rage :

“ A Parrot is for talking priz'd,
“ But prattling women are despis'd.
“ She who attacks another's honor
“ Draws ev'ry living thing upon her.
“ Think, madam, when you stretch your lungs,
“ That all your neighbours too have tongues.
“ One slander must ten thousand get ;
“ The world with int'rest pays the debt.”

§ 103. FABLE XXVI. The Cur and the Mastiff.

A SNEAKING Cur, the master's spy,
Rewarded for his daily lie,
With secret jealousies and fears
Set all together by the ears.
Poor Puss to-day was in disgrace,
Another cat supplied her place ;
The Hound was beat, the Mastiff chid ;
The Monkey was the room forbid :
Each to his dearest friend grew shy,
And none could tell the reason why.

A plan to rob the house was laid :
The thief with love seduc'd the maid :
Cajol'd the Cur, and strok'd his head,
And bought his secrecy with bread.
He next the Mastiff's honor tried ;
Whose honest jaws the bribe defied.
He stretch'd his hand to proffer more ;
The surly dog his fingers tore.

Swift ran the Cur ; with indignation
The master took his information.
Hang him, the villain's curst, he cries ;
And round his neck the halter ties.

The Dog his humble suit prefer'd ;
And begg'd in justice to be heard.
The master sat. On either hand
The cited Dogs confronting stand.
The Cur the bloody tale relates,
And, like a lawyer, aggravates.

Judge not unheard, the Mastiff cried,
But weigh the cause of either side.
Think not that treach'ry can be just ;
Take not informers' words on trust.

They ope their hand to ev'ry pay,
And you and me by turns betray,

He spoke ; and all the truth appear'd :
The Cur was hang'd, the Mastiff clear'd.

§ 104. FABLE XXVII. The Sick Man and the Angel.

Is there no hope ? the sick man said ;
The silent doctor shook his head,
And took his leave with signs of sorrow,
Despairing of his fee to-morrow.

When thus the Man, with gasping breath ;
I feel the chilling wound of death.

Since I must bid the world adieu,
Let me my former life review.
I grant my bargains well were made,
But all men over-reach in trade ;
'Tis self-defence in each profession :
Sure self-defence is no transgression.
The little portion in my hands,
By good security on lands,
Is well increas'd. If, unawares,
My justice to myself and heirs
Hath let my debtor rot in jail,
For want of good sufficient bail ;
If I by writ, or bond, or deed,
Reduc'd a family to need,
My will hath made the world amends ;
My hope on charity depends.
When I am number'd with the dead,
And all my pious gifts are read,
By heaven and earth 'twill then be known
My charities were amply shown.

An Angel came. Ah ! friend, he cried,
No more in flatt'ring hope confide.
Can thy good deeds in former times
Outweigh the balance of thy crimes ?
What widow or what orphan prays
To crown thy life with length of days ?
A pious action's in thy pow'r,
Embrace with joy the happy hour.
Now, while you draw the vital air,
Prove your intention is sincere.

This instant give a hundred pound :
Your neighbours want, and you abound.

But why such haste ? the sick Man whines ;
Who knows as yet what Heaven designs ?
Perhaps I may recover still ;
That sum and more are in my will.

Fool ! says the Vision, now 'tis plain,
Your life, your soul, your heaven was gain.
From ev'ry side, with all your might,
You scrap'd, and scrap'd beyond your right ;
And after death would fain atone,
By giving what is not your own.

While there is life, there's hope, he cried ;
Then why such haste ? So groan'd and died.

§ 105. FABLE XXVIII. The Persian, the Sun, and the Cloud.

Is there a bard whom genius fires,
Whose ev'ry thought the god inspires ?
When envy reads the nervous lines,
She frets, she rails, she raves, she pines ;
Her hissing snakes with venom swell ;
She calls her venal train from hell :
The servile fiends her nod obey,
And all Curl's authors are in pay.
Fame calls up calumny and spite ;
Thus shadow owes its birth to light.

As prostrate to the god of day,
With heart devout a Persian lay,
His invocation thus began :—

Parent of light, all-seeing Sun !
Prolific beam, whose rays dispense
The various gifts of Providence !

Accept our praise, our daily pray'r,
Smile on our fields, and bless the year!

A Cloud, who mock'd his grateful tongue,
The day with sudden darkness hung;
With pride and envy swell'd aloud,
A voice thus thunder'd from the Cloud:

Weak is this gaudy god of thine,
Whom I at will forbid to shine.
Shall I nor vows nor incense know!
Where praise is due, the praise bestow.

With fervent zeal the Persian mov'd,
Thus the proud calumny reprov'd:
It was that god, who claims my pray'r,
Who gave thee birth and rais'd thee there;
When o'er his beams the veil is thrown,
Thy substance is but plainer shown.

A passing gale, a puff of wind,
Dispels thy thickest troops combin'd.

The gale arose; the vapor, tost
(The sport of winds) in air, was lost.
The glorious orb the day refines;
Thus envy breaks, thus merit shines.

§ 106. FABLE XXIX. The Fox at the Point of Death.

A Fox in life's extreme decay,
Weak, sick, and faint, expiring lay;
All appetite had left his maw,
And age disarm'd his mumbling jaw.
His num'rous race around him stand,
To learn their dying sire's command:
He rais'd his head with whining moan,
And thus was heard the feeble tone:—

Ah, sons! from evil ways depart;
My crimes lie heavy on my heart.
See, see, the murder'd geese appear!
Why are those bleeding turkeys there?
Why all around this cackling train,
Who haunt my ears for chickens slain?

The hungry Foxes round them star'd,
And for the promis'd feast prepar'd.

Where, sir, is all this dainty cheer?
Nor turkey, goose, nor hen is here:
These are the phantoms of your brain,
And your sons lick their lips in vain.

O gluttons! says the drooping sire,
Restrain inordinate desire;
Your liquorish taste you shall deplore,
When peace of conscience is no more.
Does not the hound betray our pace,
And gins and guns destroy our race?
Thieves dread the searching eye of pow'r,
And never feel the quiet hour.

Old age (which few of us shall know)
Now puts a period to my woe.
Would you true happiness attain,
Let honesty your passions rein;
So live in credit and esteem,
And the good name you lost redeem.

The counsel's good, a Fox replies,
Could we perform what you advise.
Think what our ancestors have done;
A line of thieves from son to son:

To us descends the long disgrace,
And infamy hath mark'd our race.
Though we, like harmless sheep, should feed,
Honest in thought, in word, and deed,
Whatever hen-roost is decreas'd,
We shall be thought to share the feast.
The change shall never be believ'd;
A lost good name is ne'er retriev'd.

Nay, then, replies the feeble Fox,
(But, hark! I hear a hen that crows!)
Go, but be moderate in your food;
A chicken too might do me good.

§ 107. FABLE XXX. The Setting Dog and the Partridge.

THE raging Dog the stubble tries,
And searches ev'ry breeze that flies;
The scent grows warm; with cautious fear
He creeps, and points the covey near:
The men, in silence, far behind,
Conscious of game, the net unbind.

A Partridge, with experience wise,
The fraudulent preparation spies:
She mocks their toils, alarms her brood;
The covey springs, and seeks the wood;
But ere her certain wing she tries,
Thus to the creeping Spaniel cries:

Thou fawning slave to man's deceit,
Thou pimp of lux'ry, sneaking cheat,
Of thy whole species the disgrace;
Dogs shall disown thee of their race!
For, if I judge their native parts,
They're born with open honest hearts;
And ere they serv'd man's wicked ends,
Were gen'rous foes, or real friends.

When thus the Dog, with scornful smile:—
Secure of wing, thou dar'st revile.
Clowns are to polish'd manners blind;
How ign'rant is the rustic mind!
My worth sagacious courtiers see,
And to preferment rise, like me.
The thriving pimp, who beauty sets,
Hath oft enhanc'd a nation's debts:
Friend sets his friend, without regard;
And ministers his skill reward:
Thus train'd by man, I learnt his ways,
And growing favor feasts my days.

I might have guess'd, the Partridge said,
The place where you were train'd and fed;
Servants are apt, and in a trice,
Ape to a hair their master's vice.
You came from court, you say? Adieu!
She said, and to the covey flew.

§ 108. FABLE XXXI. The Universal Apparition.

A RAKE, by ev'ry passion rul'd,
With ev'ry vice his youth had cool'd;
Disease his tainted blood assails;
His spirits droop, his vigor fails;
With secret ills at home he pines,
And, like infirm old age, declines.

As twing'd with pain he pensive sits;
And raves, and prays, and swears by fits;

A ghastly phantom, lean and wan,
Before him rose, and thus began :
My name, perhaps, hath reach'd your ear ;
Attend, and be advis'd by Care.
Nor love nor honor, wealth nor pow'r,
Can give the heart a cheerful hour
When health is lost. Be timely wise :
With health all taste of pleasure flies.

Thus said, the phantom disappears ;
The wary counsel wak'd his fears ;
He now from all excess abstains ;
With physic purifies his veins ;
And, to procure a sober life,
Resolves to venture on a wife.

But now again the Sprite ascends :
Where'er he walks his ear attends ;
Insinuates that beauty's frail ;
That perseverance must prevail ;
With jealousies his brain inflames,
And whispers all her lovers' names.
In other hours she represents
His household charge, his annual rents,
Increasing debts, perplexing duns,
And nothing for his younger sons.

Straight all his thought to gain he turns,
And with the thirst of lucre burns.
But, when possess'd of fortune's store,
The Spectre haunts him more and more ;
Sets want and misery in view,
Bold thieves, and all the murd'ring crew ;
Alarms him with eternal frights,
Infests his dream, or wakes his nights.
How shall he chase this hideous guest ?
Pow'r may perhaps protect his rest.
To pow'r he rose : again the Sprite
Besets him morning, noon, and night ;
Talks of ambition's tott'ring seat,
How envy persecutes the great ;
Of rival hate, of treach'rous friends,
And what disgrace his fall attends.

The court he quits, to fly from Care,
And seeks the peace of rural air :
His groves, his fields, amus'd his hours ;
He prun'd his trees, he rais'd his flow'rs.
But Care again his steps pursues ;
Warns him of blasts, of blighting dews,
Of plund'ring insects, snails, and rains,
And droughts that starv'd the labor'd plains.
Abroad, at home, the Spectre's there :
In vain we seek to fly from Care.
At length he thus the Ghost address'd :
Since thou must be my constant guest,
Be kind, and follow me no more ;
For Care by right should go before.

§ 109. FABLE XXXII. The Two Owls and the Sparrow.

Two formal Owls together sat,
Conferring thus in solemn chat :
How is the modern taste decay'd !
Where's the respect to wisdom paid ?
Our worth the Grecian sages knew ;
They gave our sires the honor due :

They weigh'd the dignity of fowls,
And pried into the depth of Owls.
Athens, the seat of learned fame,
With gen'ral voice rever'd our name ;
On merit title was conferr'd,
And all ador'd th' Athenian bird.

Brother, you reason well, replies
The solemn mate, with half-shut eyes :
Right—Athens was the seat of learning ;
And truly wisdom is discerning.
Besides, on Pallas' helm we sit,
The type and ornament of wit ;
But now, alas ! we're quite neglected,
And a pert sparrow's more respected.

A sparrow, who was lodg'd beside,
O'erhears them sooth each other's pride,
And thus he nimbly vents his heat :

Who meets a fool must find conceit.
I grant, you were at Athens grac'd :
And on Minerva's helm were plac'd :
But ev'ry bird that wings the sky,
Except an Owl, can tell you why.
From hence they taught their schools to know
How false we judge by outward show ;
That we should never looks esteem,
Since fools as wise as you might seem.
Would ye contempt and scorn avoid,
Let your vain glory be destroy'd :
Humble your arrogance of thought ;
Pursue the ways by Nature taught :
So shall you find delicious fare,
And grateful farmers praise your care ;
So shall sleek mice your chase reward,
And no keen cat find more regard.

§ 110. FABLE XXXIII. The Courtier and Proteus.

WHENE'ER a courtier's out of place,
The country shelters his disgrace ;
Where, doom'd to exercise and health,
His house and gardens own his wealth ;
He builds new schemes, in hope to gain
The plunder of another reign ;
Like Philip's son, would fain be doing,
And sighs for other realms to ruin.

As one of these (without his wand)
Pensive, along the winding strand
Employ'd the solitary hour,
In projects to regain his pow'r,
The waves in spreading circles ran,
Proteus arose, and thus began :

Came you from court ? for in your mien
A self-important air is seen.

He frankly own'd his friends had trick'd him,
And how he fell his party's victim.

Know, says the god, by matchless skill,
I change to ev'ry shape at will ;
But yet I'm told, at court you see
Those who presume to rival me.

Thus said—a snake, with hideous trail,
Proteus extends his scaly mail.

Know, says the man, though proud in place,
All courtiers are of reptile race.

Like you, they take that dreadful form,
Bask in the sun, and fly the storm;
With malice hiss, with envy glote,
And for convenience change their coat;
With new got lustre rear their head,
Though on a dunghill born and bred.

Sudden the god a lion stands;
He shakes his mane, he spurns the sands;
Now a fierce lynx, with fiery glare,
A wolf, an ass, a fox, a bear.

Had I ne'er lived at court, he cries,
Such transformation might surprise;
But there, in quest of daily game,
Each abler courtier acts the same.
Wolves, lions, lynxes, while in place,
Their friends and fellows are their chase.
They play the bear's and fox's part;
Now rob by force, now steal with art.
They sometimes in the senate bray;
Or, chang'd again to beasts of prey,
Down from the lion to the ape
Practise the frauds of ev'ry shape.

So said, upon the god he flies;
In cords the struggling captive ties.

Now, Proteus, now, (to truth compell'd)
Speak, and confess thy art excell'd.
Use strength, surprise, or what you will,
The courtier finds evasions still,
Not to be bound by any ties,
And never forc'd to leave his lies.

§ 111. FABLE XXXIV. The Mastiff.

THOSE who in quarrels interpose,
Must often wipe a bloody nose.

A Mastiff, of true English blood,
Lov'd fighting better than his food;
When dogs were snarling for a bone,
He long'd to make the war his own;
And often found (when two contend)
To interpose obtain'd his end:
He glory'd in his limping pace;
The scars of honor seam'd his face;
In ev'ry limb a gash appears,
And frequent fights retrench'd his ears.

As on a time he heard from far
Two Dogs engag'd in noisy war,
Away he scours, and lays about him,
Resolv'd no fray should be without him.
Forth from his yard a tanner flies,
And to the bold intruder cries:

A cudgel shall correct your manners;
Whence sprung this cursed hate to tanners?
While on my dog you vent your spite,
Sirrah! 'tis me you dare not bite.
To see the battle thus perplex'd,
With equal rage a butcher vex'd,
Hoarse screaming from the circled crowd,
To the curs'd Mastiff cries aloud:

Both Hockley-hole and Mary-bone
The combats of my Dog have known.
He ne'er, like bullies coward-hearted,
Attacks in public to be parted.
Think not, rash fool, to share his fame;
Be his the honor or the shame.

Thus said, they swore, and rav'd like thunder;
Then dragg'd their fasten'd Dogs asunder;
While clubs and kicks from ev'ry side
Rebounded from the Mastiff's hide.

All reeking now with sweat and blood,
A while the parted warriors stood,
Then pour'd upon the meddling foe,
Who, worried, howl'd, and sprawl'd below!
He rose; and limping from the fray,
By both sides mangled, sneak'd away.

§ 112. FABLE XXXV. The Barley-mow and the Dunghill.

How many saucy airs we meet
From Temple-bar to Aldgate-street!
Proud rogues, who shar'd the South-sea prey,
And spring like mushrooms in a day!
They think it mean to condescend
To know a brother or a friend;
They blush to hear a mother's name,
And by their pride expose their shame.

As cross his yard, at early day,
A careful farmer took his way,
He stopp'd, and, leaning on his fork,
Observ'd the flail's incessant work.
In thought he measur'd all his store,
His geese, his hogs, he number'd o'er;
In fancy weigh'd the fleeces shorn,
And multiplied the next year's corn.

A Barley-mow, which stood beside,
Thus to its musing master cried:

Say, good Sir, is it fit or right
To treat me with neglect and slight?
Me, who contribute to your cheer,
And raise your mirth with ale and beer:
Why thus insulted, thus disgrac'd,
And that vile Dunghill near me plac'd?
Are those poor sweepings of a groom,
That filthy sight, that nauseous fume,
Meet objects here? Command it hence:
A thing so mean must give offence.

The humble Dunghill thus replied:
Thy master hears, and mocks thy pride:
Insult not thus the meek and low;
In me thy benefactor know:
My warm assistance gave thee birth,
Or thou hadst perish'd low in earth;
But upstarts to support their station,
Cancel at once all obligation.

§ 113. FABLE XXXVI. Pythagoras and the Countryman.

PYTHAG'RAS rose at early dawn,
By soaring meditation drawn;
To breathe the fragrance of the day,
Through flow'ry fields he took his way.
In musing contemplation warm,
His steps misled him to a farm,
Where, on the ladder's topmost round,
A peasant stood: the hammer's sound
Shook the weak barn. Say, friend, what care
Calls for thy honest labor there?

The Clown, with surly voice, replies:
Vengeance aloud for justice cries.

This kite, by daily rapine fed,
My hens' annoy, my turkeys' dread,
At length his forfeit life hath paid;
See on the wall his wings display'd;
Here nail'd, a terror to his kind,
My fowls shall future safety find;
My yard the thriving poultry feed,
And my barn's refuse fat the breed.

Friend, says the Sage, the doom is wise;
For public good the murd'rer dies.
But if these tyrants of the air
Demand a sentence so severe;
Think how the glutton man devours;
What bloody feasts regale his hours!
O, impudence of pow'r and might,
Thus to condemn a hawk or kite,
When thou perhaps, carniv'rous sinner,
Hadst pullets yesterday for dinner!

Hold! cried the Clown, with passion heated,
Shall kites and men alike be treated?
When Heaven the world with creatures stor'd,
Man was ordain'd their sov'reign lord.

Thus tyrants boast, the sage replied,
Whose murders spring from power and pride.
Own then this manlike kite is slain
Thy greater lux'ry to sustain;
For "Petty rogues submit to fate,
"That great ones may enjoy their state."

§ 114. FABLE XXXVII. The Farmer's Wife and the Raven.

WHY are those tears? why droops your head?
Is then your other husband dead?
Or does a worse disgrace betide;
Hath no one since his death applied?

Alas! you know the cause too well:
The salt is spilt, to me it fell.
Then to contribute to my loss,
My knife and fork were laid across;
On Friday too! the day I dread!
Would I were safe at home in bed!
Last night (I vow to heaven 'tis true)
Bounce from the fire a coffin flew.
Next post some fatal news shall tell;
God send my Cornish friends be well!

Unhappy widow, cease thy tears,
Nor feel affliction in thy fears:
Let not thy stomach be suspended;
Eat now, and weep when dinner's ended!
And when the butler clears the table,
For thy desert I'll read my fable.

Betwixt her swagging panniers' load
A farmer's wife to market rode,
And jogging on, with thoughtful care,
Summ'd up the profits of her ware;
When, starting from her silver dream,
Thus far and wide was heard her scream:

That Raven on yon left-hand oak
(Curse on his ill-betiding croak!)
Bodes me no good. No more she said,
When poor blind Ball, with stumbling tread,

* Garth's Dispensary.

Fell prone; o'erturn'd the panniers lay,
And her mash'd eggs bestrew'd the way.
She, sprawling in the yellow road,
Rail'd, swore, and curs'd: Thou croaking toad,
A murrain take thy whoreson throat!
I knew misfortune in the note.

Dame, quoth the Raven, spare your oaths,
Unclench your fist, and wipe your clothes.
But why on me those curses thrown?
Goody, the fault was all your own;
For had you laid this brittle ware
On Dun, the old sure-footed mare,
Though all the Ravens of the hundred
With croaking had your tongue out-thunder'd,
Sure-footed Dun had kept his legs,
And you, good woman, sav'd your eggs.

§ 115. FABLE XXXVIII. The Turkey and the Ant.

IN other men we faults can spy,
And blame the mote that dims their eye;
Each little speck and blemish find;
To our own stronger errors blind.

A Turkey, tir'd of common food,
Forsook the barn, and sought the wood;
Behind her ran her infant train,
Collecting here and there a grain.
Draw near, my birds, the mother cries,
This hill delicious fare supplies;
Behold, the busy Negro race:
See, millions blacken all the place!
Fear not. Like me with freedom eat;
An Ant is most delightful meat.
How bless'd, how envied were our life,
Could we but 'scape the poult'rer's knife!
But man, curs'd man! on Turkey preys,
And Christmas shortens all our days;
Sometimes with oysters we combine,
Sometimes assist the sav'ry chine.
From the low peasant to the lord,
The Turkey smokes on ev'ry board.
Sure men for gluttony are curs'd,
Of the seven deadly sins the worst.

An Ant, who climb'd beyond his reach,
Thus answer'd from the neighb'ring beech:
Ere you remark another's sin,
Bid thy own conscience look within;
Control thy more voracious bill,
Nor for a breakfast nations kill.

§ 116. FABLE XXXIX. The Father and Jupiter.

THE Man to Jove his suit preferr'd:
He begg'd a wife; his pray'r was heard.
Jove wonder'd at his bold addressing:
For how precarious is the blessing!

A wife he takes. And now for heirs
Again he worries Heaven with prayers.
Jove nods assent. Two hopeful boys
And a fine girl reward his joys.

No more solicitous he grew,
And set their future lives in view;
He saw that all respect and duty
Were paid to wealth, to pow'r, and beauty.

Once more he cries, Accept my pray'r;
 Make my lov'd progeny thy care.
 Let my first hope, my fav'rite boy,
 All fortune's richest gifts enjoy.
 My next with strong ambition fire:
 May favor teach him to aspire,
 Till he the step of pow'r ascend,
 And courtiers to their idol bend!
 With ev'ry grace, with ev'ry charm,
 My daughter's perfect features arm.
 If Heaven approve, a Father's blest:
 Jove smiles, and grants his full request.

The first, a miser at the heart,
 Studious of ev'ry griping art,
 Heaps hoards on hoards with anxious pain,
 And all his life devotes to gain.
 He feels no joy, his cares increase,
 He neither wakes nor sleeps in peace;
 In fancied want (a wretch complete!)
 He starves, and yet he dares not eat.

The next to sudden honors grew:
 The thriving art of courts he knew:
 He reach'd the height of pow'r and place,
 Then fell the victim of disgrace.

Beauty with early bloom supplies
 His daughter's cheek, and points her eyes.
 The vain coquette each suit disdains,
 And glories in her lovers' pains.
 With age she fades, each lover flies,
 Contemn'd, forlorn, she pines and dies.

When Jove the Father's grief survey'd,
 And heard him Heaven and Fate upbraid,
 Thus spoke the god: By outward show
 Men judge of happiness and woe:
 Shall ignorance of good and ill
 Dare to direct th' Eternal Will?
 Seek virtue: and, of that possest,
 To Providence resign the rest.

§ 117. FABLE XL. The Two Monkeys.

THE learned, full of inward pride,
 The Fops of outward show deride:
 The Fop, with learning at defiance,
 Scoffs at the pedant, and the science:
 The Don, a formal, solemn strutter,
 Despises Monsiear's airs and flutter;
 While Monsieur mocks the formal fool,
 Who looks, and speaks, and walks by rule.
 Britain, a medley of the twain,
 As pert as France, as grave as Spain,
 In fancy wiser than the rest,
 Laughs at them both, of both the jest.
 Is not the poet's chiming close
 Censur'd by all the sons of prose?
 While bards of quick imagination
 Despise the sleepy prose narration.
 Men laugh at apes, they men contemn,
 For what are we but apes to them?

Two Monkeys went to Southwark fair,
 No critics had a sourer air:
 They forc'd their way through draggled folks,
 Who gap'd to catch jack-pudding's jokes;
 Then took their tickets for the show,
 And got by chance the foremost row.

To see their grave, observing face,
 Provok'd a laugh through all the place.

Brother, says Pug, and turn'd his head,
 The rabble's monstrously ill-bred!

Now through the booth loud hisses ran;
 Nor ended till the show began.

The tumbler whirls the flip-flap round,
 With somersets he shakes the ground;
 The cord beneath the dancer springs;
 Aloft in air the vaulter swings;
 Distorted now, now prone depends,
 Now through his twisted arm ascends:
 The crowd in wonder and delight,
 With clapping hands applaud the sight.

With smiles, quoth Pug, If pranks like these
 The giant apes of reason please,
 How would they wonder at our arts!
 They must adore us for our parts.
 High on the twig I've seen you cling,
 Play, twist, and turn in airy ring;
 How can those clumsy things, like me,
 Fly with a bound from tree to tree?
 But yet, by this applause we find
 These emulators of our kind
 Discern our worth, our parts regard,
 Who our mean mimics thus reward.

Brother, the grinning mate replies,
 In this I grant that man is wise.
 While good example they pursue,
 We must allow some praise is due;
 But when they strain beyond their guide,
 I laugh to scorn the mimic pride;
 For how fantastic is the sight,
 To meet men always bolt upright,
 Because we sometimes walk on two!
 I hate the imitating crew.

§ 118. FABLE XLI. The Owl and the Farmer.

AN Owl of grave deport and mien,
 Who (like the Turk) was seldom seen,
 Within a barn had chose his station,
 As fit for prey and contemplation.
 Upon a beam aloft he sits,
 And nods, and seems to think, by fits.
 So have I seen a man of news
 Or Post-boy or Gazette peruse;
 Smoke, nod, and talk with voice profound,
 And fix the fate of Europe round.
 Sheaves pil'd on sheaves hid all the floor:
 At dawn of morn, to view his store,
 The Farmer came. The hooting guest
 His self-importance thus express'd:

Reason in man is mere pretence:
 How weak, how shallow is his sense!
 To treat with scorn the Bird of Night,
 Declares his folly or his spite.
 Then too, how partial is his praise!
 The lark's, the linnet's chirping lays,
 To his ill-judging ears are fine,
 And nightingales are all divine.
 But the more knowing feather'd race
 See wisdom stamp'd upon my face.
 Whene'er to visit light I deign,
 What flocks of fowl compose my train!

Like slaves, they crowd my flight behind,
And own me of superior kind.

The Farmer laugh'd, and thus replied:
Thou dull important lump of pride,
Dar'st thou, with that harsh grating tongue,
Depreciate birds of warbling song?
Indulge thy spleen. Know, men and fowl
Regard thee as thou art, an Owl.
Besides, proud blockhead, be not vain
Of what thou call'st thy slaves and train.
Few follow wisdom, or her rules;
Fools in derision follow fools.

§ 119. FABLE XLII. The Jugglers.

A JUGGLER long through all the town
Had rais'd his fortune and renown:
You'd think (so far his art transcends)
The devil at his fingers' ends.

Vice heard his fame, she read his bill;
Convinc'd of his inferior skill,
She sought his booth, and from the crowd
Defied the man of art aloud:

Is this then he so fam'd for sleight?
Can this slow bungler cheat your sight?
Dares he with me dispute the prize?
I leave it to impartial eyes.

Provok'd, the Juggler cried, 'Tis done;
In science I submit to none.

Thus said, the cups and balls he play'd,
By turns this here, that there, convey'd;
The cards, obedient to his words,
Are by a fillip turn'd to birds.
His little boxes change the grain;
Trick after trick deludes the train.
He shakes his bag, he shows all fair;
His fingers spread, and nothing there;
Then bids it rain with show'rs of gold:
And now his iv'ry eggs are told;
But when from thence the hen he draws,
Amaz'd spectators hum applause.

Vice now stepp'd forth, and took the place
With all the forms of his grimace.

This magic looking-glass she cries,
(There, hand it round) will charm your eyes.
Each eager eye the sight desir'd,
And ev'ry man himself admir'd.

Next, to a senator addressing,
See this bank-note; observe the blessing:
Breathe on the bill. Heigh, pass! 'tis gone;
Upon his lips a padlock shone.

A second puff the magic broke;
The padlock vanish'd, and he spoke.

Twelve bottles rang'd upon the board,
All full, with heady liquor stor'd,
By clean conveyance disappear;
And now, two bloody swords are there.

A purse she to a thief expos'd;
At once his ready fingers clos'd.
He opes his fist, the treasure's fled;
He sees a halter in its stead.

She bids ambition hold a wand;
He grasps a hatchet in his hand.

A box of charity she shows:
Blow here; and a churchwarden blows.

'Tis vanish'd with conveyance neat,
And on the table smokes a treat.

She shakes the dice, the board she knocks,
And from all pockets fills her box.

She next a meagre rake address'd:
This picture see; her shape, her breast!
What youth, and what inviting eyes:
Hold her, and have her. With surprise,
His hand expos'd a box of pills,
And a loud laugh proclaim'd his ills.

A counter in a miser's hand
Grew twenty guineas at command.
She bids his heir the sum retain,
And 'tis a counter now again.
A guinea with her touch you see
Take ev'ry shape, but Charity:
And not one thing you saw, or drew,
But chang'd from what was first in view.

The Juggler now, in grief of heart,
With this submission own'd her art:
Can I such matchless sleight withstand?
How practise hath improv'd your hand!
But now and then I cheat the throng;
You ev'ry day, and all day long.

§ 120. FABLE XLIII. The Council of Horse.

UPON a time, a neighing Steed,
Who graz'd among a num'rous breed,
With mutiny had fir'd the train,
And spread dissension through the plain.
On matters that concern'd the state
The council met in grand debate.

A Colt, whose eye-balls flam'd with ire,
Elate with strength and youthful fire,
In haste stepp'd forth before the rest,
And thus the list'ning throng address'd:

Good gods! how abject is our race,
Condemn'd to slav'ry and disgrace!
Shall we our servitude retain,
Because our sires have borne the chain?
Consider, friends, your strength and might;
'Tis conquest to assert your right.
How cumbrous is the gilded coach!
The pride of man is our reproach.
Were we design'd for daily toil,
To drag the plough-share through the soil,
To sweat in harness through the road,
To groan beneath the carrier's load?
How feeble are the two-legg'd kind!
What force is in our nerves combin'd!
Shall then our nobler jaws submit
To foam and champ the galling bit?
Shall haughty man my back bestride?
Shall the sharp spur provoke my side?
Forbid it, Heavens! Reject the rein;
Your shame, your infamy disdain.

Let him the lion first control,
And still the tiger's famish'd growl.
Let us, like them, our freedom claim,
And make him tremble at our name.

A gen'ral nod approv'd the cause,
And all the circle neigh'd applause.

When lo! with grave and solemn pace,
A Steed advanc'd before the race;

With age and long experience wise,
Around he cast his thoughtful eyes;
And to the murmurs of the train,
Thus spoke the Nestor of the plain:

When I had health and strength like you,
The toils of servitude I knew;
Now grateful man rewards my pains,
And gives me all these wide domains.
At will I crop the year's increase;
My latter life is rest and peace.
I grant, to man we lend our pains,
And aid him to correct the plains:
But doth not he divide the care,
Through all the labors of the year?
How many thousand structures rise,
To fence us from inclement skies!
For us he bears the sultry day,
And stores up all our winter's hay.
He sows, he reaps the harvest's grain;
We share the toil, and share the gain.
Since ev'ry creature was decreed
To aid each other's mutual need,
Appease your discontented mind,
And act the part by Heaven assign'd.
The tumult ceas'd. The Colt submitted;
And, like his ancestors, was bitted.

§ 121. FABLE XLIV. The Hound and the Huntsman.

IMPERTINENCE at first is borne
With heedless slight, or smiles of scorn;
Teas'd into wrath, what patience bears
The noisy fool who perseveres?
The morning wakes, the Huntsman sounds,
At once rush forth the joyful hounds.
They seek the wood with eager pace;
Through bush, through brier, explore the chase.
Now, scatter'd wide, they try the plain,
And snuff the dewy turf in vain.
What care, what industry, what pains!
What universal silence reigns!
Ringwood, a dog of little fame,
Young, pert, and ignorant of game,
At once displays his babbling throat;
The pack, regardless of the note,
Pursue the scent; with louder strain
He still persists to vex the train.

The Huntsman to the clamor flies;
The smacking lash he smartly plies.
His ribs all whelk'd, with howling tone
The Puppy thus express'd his moan:
I know the music of my tongue
Long since the pack with envy stung.
What will not spite? These bitter smarts
I owe to my superior parts.

When puppies prate, the Huntsman cried,
They show both ignorance and pride;
Fools may our scorn, not envy raise;
For envy is a kind of praise.

Had not thy forward noisy tongue
Proclaim'd thee always in the wrong,
Thou mightst have mingled with the rest,
And ne'er thy foolish noise confess'd.

But fools, to talking ever prone,
Are sure to make their follies known.

§ 122. FABLE XLV. The Poet and the Rose.

I HATE the man who builds his name
On ruins of another's fame.
Thus prudes by characters o'erthrown
Imagine that they raise their own.
Thus scribblers, covetous of praise,
Think slander can transplant the bays.
Beauties and bards have equal pride:
With both all rivals are decried.
Who praises Lesbia's eyes and feature,
Must call her sister awkward creature;
For the kind flattery's sure to charm,
When we some other nymph disarm.

As in the cool of early day
A Poet sought the sweets of May,
The garden's fragrant breath ascends,
And ev'ry stalk with odour bends.
A Rose he pluck'd, he gaz'd, admir'd,
Thus singing, as the Muse inspir'd:
Go, Rose, my Chloe's bosom grace:

How happy should I prove,
Might I supply that envied place
With never-fading love!
There, Phoenix-like, beneath her eye,
Involv'd in fragrance, burn and die!
Know, hapless flow'r, that thou shalt find

More fragrant roses there;
I see thy with'ring head reclin'd
With envy and despair!
One common fate we both must prove;
You die with envy, I with love.

Spare your comparisons, replied
An angry Rose who grew beside:
Of all mankind you should not flout us;
What can a Poet do without us?
In ev'ry love-song roses bloom;
We lend you color and perfume.
Does it to Chloe's charms conduce,
To found her praise on our abuse?
Must we, to flatter her, be made
To wither, envy, pine, and fade?

§ 123. FABLE XLVI. The Cur, the Horse, and the Shepherd's Dog.

THE lad of all-sufficient merit
With modesty ne'er damps his spirit;
Presuming on his own deserts,
On all alike his tongue exerts;
His noisy jokes at random throws,
And pertly spatters friends and foes.
In wit and war the bully race
Contribute to their own disgrace.
Too late the forward youth shall find
That jokes are sometimes paid in kind;
Or, if they canker in the breast,
He makes a foe who makes a jest.

A village-cur, of snappish race,
The pertest puppy of the place,
Imagin'd that his treble throat
Was blest with music's sweetest note;

In the mid road he basking lay,
The yelping nuisance of the way;
For not a creature pass'd along,
But had a sample of his song.

Soon as the trotting steed he hears,
He starts, he cocks his dapper ears;
Away he scours, assaults his hoof;
Now near him snarls, now barks aloof;
With shrill impertinence attends;
Nor leaves him till the village ends.

It chanc'd, upon his evil day,
A Pad came pacing down the way:
The cur, with never-ceasing tongue,
Upon the passing trav'ler sprung.
The Horse, from scorn provok'd to ire,
Flung backward: rolling in the mire
The Puppy howl'd, and bleeding lay;
The Pad in peace pursued his way.

A Shepherd's Dog, who saw the deed,
Detesting the vexatious breed,
Bespoke him thus: When coxcombs prate,
They kindle wrath, contempt, or hate;
Thy teasing tongue had judgement tied,
Thou had'st not like a Puppy died.

§ 124. FABLE XLVII. The Court of Death.

DEATH, on a solemn night of state,
In all his pomp of terror sate:
Th' attendants of his gloomy reign,
Diseases dire, a ghastly train!
Crowd the vast Court. With hollow tone,
A voice thus thunder'd from the throne;

This night our minister we name,
Let ev'ry servant speak his claim;
Merit shall bear this ebon wand.—
All, at the word, stretch'd forth their hand.

Fever, with burning heat possest,
Advanc'd, and for the wand address'd:

I to the weekly bills appeal,
Let those express my fervent zeal:
On ev'ry slight occasion near,
With violence I persevere.

Next Gout appears, with limping pace,
Pleads how he shifts from place to place;
From head to foot how swift he flies,
And ev'ry joint and sinew plies;
Still working when he seems supprest—
A most tenacious stubborn guest.

A haggard Spectre from the crew
Crawls forth, and thus asserts his due:
'Tis I who taint the sweetest joy,
And in the shape of Love destroy:
My shanks, sunk eyes, and noseless face,
Prove my pretention to the place.

Stone urg'd his ever-growing force;
And next Consumption's meagre corse,
With feeble voice that scarce was heard,
Broke with short coughs, his suit preferr'd:
Let none object my ling'ring way,
I gain, like Fabius, by delay;
Fatigue and weaken ev'ry foe
By long attack—secure, though slow.

Plague represents his rapid pow'r,
Who thinn'd a nation in an hour.

All spoke their claim, and hop'd the wand.
Now expectation hush'd the band,
When thus the monarch from the throne:

Merit was ever modest known.
What, no Physician speaks his right?
None here! but fees their toils requite.
Let then Intemp'rance take the wand,
Who fills with gold their zealous hand.
You, Fever, Gout, and all the rest
(Whom wary men as foes detest),
Forego your claim; no more pretend;
Intemp'rance is esteem'd a friend;
He shares their mirth, their social joys,
And as a courted guest destroys.
The charge on him must justly fall,
Who finds employment for you all.

§ 125. FABLE XLVIII. The Gardener and the Hog.

A GARD'NER of peculiar taste
On a young Hog his favor plac'd,
Who fed not with the common herd;
His tray was to the hall preferr'd.
He wallow'd underneath the board,
Or in his master's chamber snor'd;
Who fondly strok'd him ev'ry day,
And taught him all the puppy's play.
Where'er he went, the grunting friend
Ne'er fail'd his pleasure to attend.

As on a time the loving pair
Walk'd forth to tend the garden's care,
The Master thus address'd the Swine:
My house, my garden, all is thine;
On turnips feast whene'er you please,
And riot in my beans and pease;
If the potatoe's taste delights,
Or the red carrot's sweet invites,
Indulge thy morn and ev'ning hours,
But let due care regard my flow'rs.

My tulips are my garden's pride,
What vast expence those beds supplied!

The Hog, by chance, one morning roam'd
Where with new ale the vessels foam'd:
He munches now the streaming grains;
Now with full swill the liquor drains.

Intoxicating fumes arise;
He reels, he rolls his winking eyes;
Then, stagg'ring, through the garden scours,
And treads down painted ranks of flow'rs.
With delving snout he turns the soil,
And cools his palate with the spoil.

The Master came, the ruin spied;
Villain, suspend thy rage! he cried:
Hast thou, thou most ungrateful sot!
My charge, my only charge forgot?
What, all my flow'rs! No more he said,
But gaz'd, and sigh'd, and hung his head.

The Hog with stutt'ring speech returns,
Explain, Sir, why your anger burns;
See there, untouch'd, your tulips strown,
For I devour'd the roots alone.

At this the Gard'ner's passion grows;
From oaths and threats he fell to blows.
The stubborn brute the blows sustains,
Assaults his leg, and tears his veins.

Ah, foolish swain! too late you find,
That sties were for such friends design'd.
Homeward he limps with painful pace,
Reflecting thus on past disgrace.
Who cherishes a brutal mate
Shall mourn the folly soon or late.

§ 126. FABLE XLIX. The Man and the Flea.

WHETHER in earth, in air, or main,
Sure ev'ry thing alive is vain!

Does not the hawk all fowls survey
As destin'd only for his prey?
And do not tyrants, prouder things,
Think men were born for slaves to kings?

When the crab views the pearly strands,
Or Tagus, bright with golden sands;
Or crawls beside the coral grove,
And hears the ocean roll above;
Nature is too profusé, says he,
Who gave all these to pleasure me!

When bord'ring pinks and roses bloom,
And ev'ry garden breathes perfume;
When peaches glow with sunny dyes,
Like Laura's cheek when blushes rise;
When with huge figs the branches bend,
When clusters from the vine depend;
The snail looks round on flow'r and tree,
And cries, All these were made for me!

What dignity's in human nature!
Says Man, the most conceited creature,
As from a clift he cast his eyes,
And view'd the sea and arched skies:
The sun was sunk beneath the main;
The moon and all the starry train,
Hung the vast vault of heaven. The Man—
His contemplation thus began:

When I behold this glorious show,
And this wide wat'ry world below,
The scaly people of the main,
The beasts that range the wood or plain,
The wing'd inhabitants of air,
The day, the night, the various year,
And know all these by Heaven design'd
As gifts to pleasure human kind;
I cannot raise my worth too high:
Of what vast consequence am I!

Not of th' importance you suppose,
Replies a Flea upon his nose:
Be humble, learn thyself to scan;
Know, pride was never made for man.
'Tis vanity that swells thy mind,
What, heaven and earth for thee design'd!
For thee, made only for our need,
That more important Fleas might feed.

§ 127. FABLE L. The Hare and many Friends.

FRIENDSHIP, like love, is but a name,
Unless to one you stint the flame.
The child, whom many fathers share,
Hath seldom known a father's care.
'Tis thus in friendship; who depend
On many, rarely find a friend.

A hare, who in a civil way
Complied with ev'ry thing, like GAY,

Was known by all the bestial train
Who haunt the wood, or graze the plain.
Her care was, never to offend;
And ev'ry creature was her friend.

As forth she went, at early dawn,
To taste the dew-besprinkled lawn,
Behind she hears the hunter's cries,
And from the deep-mouth'd thunder flies:
She starts, she stops, she pants for breath;
She hears the near advance of death;
She doubles to mislead the hound,
And measures back her mazy round;
Till, fainting in the public way,
Half dead with fear, she gasping lay.

What transport in her bosom grew,
When first the Horse appear'd in view!

Let me, says she, your back ascend,
And owe my safety to a friend.
You know my feet betray my flight:
To friendship ev'ry burthen's light.

The Horse replied, Poor honest Puss!
It grieves my heart to see thee thus:
Be comforted, relief is near;
For all your friends are in the rear.
She next the stately Bull implor'd,
And thus replied the mighty lord:
Since every beast alive can tell
That I sincerely wish you well,
I may, without offence, pretend
To take the freedom of a friend.
Love calls me hence! a fav'rite cow
Expects me near yon barley-mow;
And when a lady's in the case,
You know all other things give place.
To leave you thus might seem unkind;
But see, the Goat is just behind.

The Goat remark'd her pulse was high,
Her languid head, her heavy eye;
My back, says he, may do you harm;
The Sheep's at hand, and wool is warm.
The Sheep was feeble, and complain'd
His sides a load of wool sustain'd:
Said he was slow, confess'd his fears;
For hounds eat sheep as well as hares.

She now the trotting Calf address'd,
To save from death a friend distress'd.
Shall I, says he, of tender age,
In this important care engage?
Older and abler pass'd you by:
How strong are those! how weak am I!
Should I presume to bear you hence,
Those friends of mine may take offence.
Excuse me, then. You know my heart,
But dearest friends, alas! must part.
How shall we all lament! Adieu!
For, see, the hounds are just in view.

YOUNG'S NIGHT THOUGHTS.

§ 128. NIGHT I. Sleep.

TIR'D Nature's sweet restorer, balmy Sleep!
He, like the world, his ready visit pays
Where Fortune smiles; the wretched he forsakes:

Swift on his downy pinion flies from woe,
And lights on lids unsullied with a tear.

From short (as usual) and disturb'd repose
I wake: How happy they who wake no more!
Yet that were vain, if dreams infest the grave.
I wake, emerging from a sea of dreams
Tumultuous; where my wreck'd, desponding
thought,

From wave to wave of fancy'd misery
At random drove, her helm of reason lost:
Though now restor'd, 'tis only change of pain,
A bitter change; severer for severe:
The day too short for my distress! and night,
Ev'n in the zenith of her dark domain,
Is sunshine, to the color of my fate.

§ 129. Night.

NIGHT, sable goddess! from her ebon throne,
In rayless majesty, now stretches forth
Her leaden sceptre o'er a slumb'ring world:
Silence, how dead! and darkness, how profound!
Nor eye, nor list'ning ear an object finds;
Creation sleeps. 'Tis as the general pulse
Of life stood still, and Nature made a pause
An awful pause, prophetic of her end.
And let her prophecy be soon fulfill'd:
Fate! drop the curtain: I can lose no more.

§ 130. Invocation to Silence and Darkness.

SILENCE and Darkness! solemn sisters! twins
From ancient Night, who nurse the tender
thought

To reason, and on reason build resolve,
(That column of true majesty in man)
Assist me: I will thank you in the grave;
The grave, your kingdom: There this frame shall fall

A victim sacred to your dreary shrine.
But what are ye? Thou who didst put to flight
Primeval Silence, when the morning stars
Exulting, shouted o'er the rising ball;
O Thou! whose word from solid darkness struck
That spark, the sun; strike wisdom from my soul.
My soul which flies to thee, her trust, her treasure,
As misers to their gold, while others rest.

Through this opaque of nature, and of soul,
This double night, transmit one pitying ray,
To lighten and to cheer: O lead my mind,
(A mind that fain would wander from its woe)
Lead it through various scenes of Life and Death,
And from each scene, the noblest truths inspire.
Nor less inspire my conduct than my song;
Nor let the vial of thy vengeance, pour'd
On this devoted head, be pour'd in vain.

§ 131. Time.

THE bell strikes one: We take no note of time,
But from its loss. To give it then a tongue,
Is wise in man. As if an angel spoke,
I feel the solemn sound. If heard aright,
It is the knell of my departed hours;
Where are they? With the years beyond the
It is the signal that demands dispatch; [Flood.
How much is to be done! my hopes and fears
Start up alarm'd, and o'er life's narrow verge

Look down—on what? A fathomless abyss;
A dread eternity! how surely mine!
And can eternity belong to me,
Poor pensioner on the bounties of an hour?

§ 132. Man.

How poor! how rich! how abject! how august!
How complicate! how wonderful is Man!
How passing wonder HE who made him such!
Who centred in our make such strange extremes!
From different natures marvellously mixt,
Connexion exquisite of distant worlds!
Distinguish'd link in being's endless chain!
Midway from nothing to the Deity!
A beam ethereal sullied, and absorb'd!
Though sullied, and dishonor'd, still divine!
Dim miniature of greatness absolute!
An heir of glory! a frail child of dust!
Helpless immortal! insect infinite!
A worm! a god! I tremble at myself;
And in myself am lost! At home a stranger,
Thought wanders up and down, surpris'd, aghast,
And wond'ring at her own: how reason reels!
O what a miracle to man is man!
Triumphantly distress'd, what joy, what dread!
Alternately transported and alarm'd!
What can preserve my life, or what destroy?
An angel's arm can't snatch me from the grave;
Legions of angels can't confine me there.

§ 133. Dreams.

'Tis past conjecture; all things rise in proof:
While o'er my limbs Sleep's soft dominion spread,
What though my soul fantastic measures trod
O'er fairy fields; or mourn'd along the gloom
Of pathless woods; or down the craggy steep
Hurl'd headlong, swam with pain the mantled pool;
Or scal'd the cliff or danc'd on hollow winds,
With antic shapes, wild natives of the brain?
Her ceaseless flight, tho' devious, speaks her nature
Of subtler essence than the trodden clod;
Active, aerial, tow'ring, unconfin'd,
Unfetter'd with her gross companion's fall:
Ev'n silent night proclaims my soul immortal:
Ev'n silent night proclaims eternal day.
For human weal, heaven husbands all events,
Dull sleep instructs, nor sport vain dreams in vain.

§ 134. Vanity of Lamentation over the Dead.

WHY then their loss deplore, that are not lost?
Why wanders wretched thought their tombs
In infidel distress? Are angels there? [around,
Slumbers, rak'd up in dust, ethereal fire?
They live! they greatly live a life on earth
Unkindled, unconceiv'd; and from an eye
Of tenderness, let heavenly pity fall
On me, more justly number'd with the dead.
This is the desert, this the solitude:
How populous! how vital is the grave!
This is creation's melancholy vault,
The vale funereal, the sad cypress gloom;
The land of apparitions, empty shades!
All, all on earth is shadow, all beyond

Is substance ; the reverse is folly's creed :
How solid all, where change shall be no more !

§ 135. Life and Eternity.

THIS is the bud of being, the dim dawn ;
Life's theatre as yet is shut, and death,
Strong death alone can heave the massy bar,
This gross impediment of clay remove,
And make us embryos of existence free.
From real life, but little more remote
Is he, not yet a candidate for light,
The future embryo, slumbering in his sire.
Embryos we must be, till we burst the shell,
Yon ambient azure shell, and spring to life,
The life of gods—O transport ! and of man.

Yet man, fool man ! here buries all his thoughts ;
Inters celestial hopes without one sigh :
Prisoner of earth, and pent beneath the moon,
Here pinions all his wishes : wing'd by heaven
To fly at infinite, and reach it there,
Where seraphs gather immortality,
On life's fair tree, fast by the throne of God.
What golden joys ambrosial clust'ring glow
In His full beam, and ripen for the just,
Where momentary ages are no more ! [expire !
Where time, and pain, and chance, and death
And is it in the flight of threescore years,
To push eternity from human thought,
And smother souls immortal in the dust !
A soul immortal, spending all her fires,
Wasting her strength in strenuous idleness,
Thrown into tumult, raptur'd, or alarm'd,
At aught this scene can threaten or indulge,
Resembles ocean into tempest wrought,
To waft a feather or to drown a fly.

Where falls this censure ? It o'erwhelms myself.
How was my heart encrusted by the world !
O how self-fetter'd was my groveling soul !
How, like a worm, was I wrapt round and round
In silken thought, which reptile Fancy spun,
Till darken'd Reason lay quite clouded o'er
With soft conceit of endless comfort here,
Nor yet put forth her wings to reach the skies !

Our waking dreams are fatal : how I dreamt
Of things impossible ! (could sleep do more ?)
Of joys perpetual in perpetual change !
Of stable pleasures on the tossing wave !
Eternal sunshine in the storms of life !
How richly were my noon-tide trances hung
With gorgeous tapestries of pictur'd joys !
Joy behind joy, in endless perspective !
Till at Death's toll, whose restless iron tongue
Calls daily for his millions at a meal,
Starting I woke, and found myself undone !
Where now my phrensy's pompous furniture !
The cobweb'd cottage with its ragged wall
Of mouldering mud, is royalty to me !
The spider's thread is cable to man's tie
On earthly bliss ; it breaks at every breeze.

§ 136. Time and Death.

O YE blest scenes of permanent delight !
Full above measure ! lasting beyond bound
Could you, so rich in rapture, fear an end,

That ghastly thought would drink up all your joy,
And quite unparadise the realms of light.
Safe are you lodg'd above these rolling spheres,
The baleful influence of whose giddy dance
Sheds sad vicissitude on all beneath.

Here teems with revolutions every hour ;
And rarely for the better ; or the best,
More mortal than the common births of fate :
Each moment has its sickle, emulous
Of Time's enormous scythe, whose ample sweep
Strikes empires from the root ; each moment plies
His little weapon in the narrower sphere
Of sweet domestic comfort, and cuts down
The fairest bloom of sublunary bliss.

Bliss ! sublunary bliss ! proud words and vain !
Implicit treason to divine decree !

A bold invasion of the rights of heaven !
I clasp'd the phantoms, and I found them air !
O had I weigh'd it ere my fond embrace,
What darts of agony had miss'd my heart !

Death ! great proprietor of all ! 'tis thine
To tread out empire, and to quench the stars :
The sun himself by thy permission shines ;
And, one day, thou shalt pluck him from his
Amid such mighty plunder, why exhaust [sphere.
Thy partial quiver on a mark so mean ?
Why thy peculiar rancour wreak'd on me ?
Insatiate archer ! could not one suffice ?
Thy shaft flew thrice, and thrice my peace was slain ; [horn.

And thrice, ere thrice yon moon had fill'd her
O Cynthia ! why so pale ? Dost thou lament
Thy wretched neighbour ? grieve, to see thy wheel
Of ceaseless change outwhirl'd in human life ?

In ev'ry varied posture, place, and hour,
How widow'd every thought of every joy !
Thought, busy thought ! too busy for my peace,
Through the dark postern of time long elaps'd,
Led softly, by the stillness of the night,
Strays, wretched rover ! o'er the pleasing past,
In quest of wretchedness, perversely strays ;
And finds all desert now ; and meets the ghosts
Of my departed joys, a numerous train !

I rue the riches of my former fate,
Sweet comfort's blasted clusters make me sigh :
I tremble at the blessings once so dear ;
And ev'ry pleasure pains me to the heart.
Yet why complain ? or why complain for one ?
I mourn for millions : 'tis the common lot ;
In this shape, or in that, has fate entail'd
The mother's throes on all of woman born,
Not more the children, than sure heirs of pain.

§ 137. Oppression, Want, and Disease.

WAR, famine, pest, volcano, storm, and fire,
Intestine broils, oppression with her heart
Wrapt up in triple brass, besiege mankind.
God's image, disinherited of day,
Here plung'd in mines, forgets a sun was made ;
There beings, deathless as their haughty lord,
Are hammer'd to the galling oar for life ;
And plough the winter's wave, and reap despair
Some, for hard masters, broken under arms,
In battle lopt away, with half their limbs,

Beg bitter bread through realms their valor sav'd,
 If so the tyrant, or his minion, doom;
 Want and incurable Disease (fell pair!)
 On hopeless multitudes remorseless seize
 At once; and make a refuge of the grave:
 How groaning hospitals eject their dead!
 What numbers groan for sad admission there!
 What numbers, once in Fortune's lap high-fed,
 Solicit the cold hand of charity!
 To shock us more, solicit it in vain!

Not Prudence can defend, or Virtue save;
 Disease invades the chastest temperance;
 And punishment the guiltless; and alarm
 Thro' thickest shades pursues the fond of peace:
 Man's caution often into danger turns,
 And, his guard falling, crushes him to death.
 Not Happiness itself makes good her name;
 Our very wishes give us not our wish.
 How distant oft the thing we dote on most,
 From that for which we dote, felicity!

The smoothest course of nature has its pains,
 And truest friends, thro' error, wound our rest;
 Without misfortune, what calamities!
 And what hostilities without a foe!
 Nor are foes wanting to the best on earth.
 But endless is the list of human ills,
 And sighs might sooner fail, than cause to sigh.

§ 138. Reflections on viewing a Map of the World.

A PART how small of the terraqueous globe
 Is tenanted by man! the rest a waste,
 Rocks, deserts, frozen seas, and burning sands;
 Wild haunts of monsters, poisons, stings, and
 Such is earth's melancholy map! but, far [death.
 More sad; this earth is a true map of man:
 So bounded are its haughty lord's delights
 To woe's wide empire; where deep troubles toss,
 Loud sorrows howl; envenom'd passions bite;
 Ravenous calamities our vitals seize,
 And threat'ning fate wide opens to devour.

§ 139. Sympathy.

WHAT then am I, who sorrow for myself?
 In age, in infancy, from others' aid
 Is all our hope; to teach us to be kind.
 That, Nature's first, last lesson to mankind:
 The selfish heart deserves the pain it feels;
 More generous sorrow, while it sinks, exalts;
 And conscious virtue mitigates the pang.
 Nor Virtue, more than Prudence, bids me give Swoln thought a second channel; who divide,
 They weaken too, the torrent of their grief.

Take then, O world! thy much indebted tear:
 How sad a sight is human happiness [hour!
 To those whose thought can pierce beyond an
 O thou! whate'er thou art, whose heart exults!
 Wouldst thou I should congratulate thy fate?
 I know thou wouldst; thy pride demands it from
 Let thy pride pardon, what thy nature needs, [me.
 The salutary censure of a friend:
 Thou happy wretch! by blindness art thou blest;
 By dotage dandled to perpetual smiles:
 Know, smiler! at thy peril art thou pleas'd;
 Thy pleasure is the promise of thy pain.

Misfortune, like a creditor severe,
 But rises in demand for her delay;
 She makes a scourge of past prosperity,
 To sting thee more, and double thy distress.

§ 140. The Instability and Insufficiency of Human Joys.

LORENZO! Fortune makes her court to thee,
 Thy fond heart dances, while the syren sings.
 I would not damp, but to secure thy joys.
 Think not that fear is sacred to the storm:
 Stand on thy guard against the smiles of fate.
 Is heaven tremendous in its frown! Most sure:
 And in its favors formidable too;
 Its favors here are trials, not rewards:
 A call to duty, not discharge from care;
 And should alarm us, full as much as woes;
 O'er our scann'd conduct give a jealous eye;
 Awe Nature's tumult, and chastise her joys,
 Lest, while we clasp we kill them; nay, invert,
 To worse than simple misery, their charms.
 Revolted joys, like foes in civil war,
 Like bosom friendships to resentment sour'd,
 With rage envenom'd rise against our peace.

Beware what earth calls happiness; beware
 All joys, but joys that never can expire:
 Who builds on less than an immortal base,
 Fond as he seems, condemns his joys to death.
 Mine died with thee, Philander! thy last sigh
 Dissolv'd the charm; the disenchanted earth
 Lost all her lustre. Where, her glittering towers?
 Her golden mountains, where? all darken'd down
 To naked waste; a dreary vale of tears!
 The great magician's dead! thou poor, pale piece
 Of outcast earth, in darkness! what a change
 From yesterday! thy darling hope so near,
 (Long-labor'd prize!) death's subtle seed within (Sly treach'rous miner!) working in the dark,
 Smil'd at thy well-concerted scheme, and beck-
 The worm to riot on that rose so red, [on'd
 Unfaded ere it fell; one moment's prey!

§ 141. Man short-sighted.

THE present moment terminates our sight;
 Clouds thick as those on doomsday, drown the
 We penetrate, we prophesy in vain. [next;
 Time is dealt out by particles; and each,
 Ere mingled with the streaming sands of life,
 By fate's inviolable oath is sworn
 Deep silence, "Where eternity begins."

§ 142. Presumption of depending on To-morrow.

BY Nature's law, what may be, may be now;
 There's no prerogative in human hours.
 In human hearts what bolder thought can rise,
 Than man's presumption on to-morrow's dawn?
 Where is to-morrow? In another world.
 For numbers this is certain; the reverse
 Is sure to none; and yet on this Perhaps,
 This Peradventure, infamous for lies,
 As on a rock of adamant, we build
 Our mountain hopes; spin out eternal schemes,
 And, big with life's futurities, expire.

§ 143. Sudden Death.

NOT ev'n Philander had bespoke his shroud;
 Nor had he cause, a warning was deny'd.
 How many fall as sudden, not as safe!
 As sudden, though for years admonish'd home?
 Of human ills the last extreme beware,
 Beware, Lorenzo! a slow-sudden death.
 How dreadful that deliberate surprise!
 Be wise to-day, 'tis madness to defer;
 Next day the fatal precedent will plead;
 Thus on, till wisdom is push'd out of life.
 Procrastination is the thief of time,
 Year after year it steals, till all are fled,
 And to the mercies of a moment leaves
 The vast concerns of an eternal scene!
 If not so frequent, would not this be strange?
 That 'tis so frequent, this is stranger still.

§ 144. Man's Proneness to postpone Improvement.

OF man's miraculous mistakes, this bears
 The palm, "that all men are about to live."
 For ever on the brink of being born.
 All pay themselves the compliment to think
 They, one day, shall not drivel; and their pride
 On this reversion takes up ready praise;
 At least their own; their future selves applauds:
 How excellent that life they ne'er will lead!
 Time lodg'd in their own hands is folly's vails;
 That lodg'd in fate's, to wisdom they consign.
 All promise is poor dilatory man,
 And that thro' every stage: when young, indeed,
 In full content, we sometimes nobly rest,
 Unanxious for ourselves; and only wish,
 As duteous sons, our fathers were more wise.
 At thirty man suspects himself a fool;
 Knows it at forty, and reforms his plan;
 At fifty chides his infamous delay,
 Pushes his prudent purpose to resolve;
 In all the magnanimity of thought
 Resolves, and re-resolves; then dies the same.

§ 145. Man insensible of his own Mortality.

AND why? Because he thinks himself immortal.
 All men think all men mortal, but themselves;
 Themselves, when some alarming shock of fate
 Strikes through their wounded hearts the sudden dread;
 But their hearts wounded, like the wounded air,
 Soon close; where pass'd the shaft, no trace is found.
 As, from the wing no scar the sky retains;
 The parted wave no furrow from the keel;
 So dies in human hearts the thought of death:
 Ev'n with the tender tear which nature sheds
 O'er those we love, we drop it in their grave.
 Can I forget Philander? That were strange;
 O my full heart! but should I give it vent,
 The longest night, though longer far, would fail,
 And the lark listen to my midnight song.

§ 146. NIGHT II. Avarice of Time recommended.

HE mourns the dead, who lives as they desire.
 Where is that thrift, that avarice of Time,

(Blest av'rice) which the thought of death inspires.

O time! than gold more sacred; more a load
 Than lead, to fools; and fools reputed wise.
 What moment granted man without account?
 What years are squander'd, wisdom's debt unpaid?

Haste, haste, he lies in wait, he's at the door,
 Insidious death! should his strong hand arrest,
 No composition sets the prisoner free.
 Eternity's inexorable chain

Fast binds; and vengeance claims the full arrear.
 How late I shudder'd on the brink! how late
 Life call'd for her last refuge in despair!

For what calls thy disease? For moral aid.
 Thou think'st it folly to be wise too soon.
 Youth is not rich in time; it may be, poor:
 Part with it as with money, sparing; pay
 No moment, but in purchase of its worth;
 And what its worth, ask death-beds; they can
 Part with it as with life, reluctant; big [tell.
 With holy hope of nobler time to come.

Is this our duty, wisdom, glory, gain?
 And sport we like the natives of the bough,
 When vernal suns inspire? Amusement reigns
 Man's great demand: to trifle is to live:
 And is it then a trifle, too, to die?—

Who wants amusement in the flame of battle?
 Is it not treason to the soul immortal,
 Her foes in arms, eternity the prize?
 Will toys amuse, when med'cines cannot cure?
 When spirits ebb, when life's enchanting scenes
 Their lustre lose, and lessen in our sight?
 (As lands, and cities with their glittering spires
 To the poor shatter'd bark, by sudden storm
 Thrown off to sea, and soon to perish there)
 Will toys amuse?—no: thrones will then be toys,

And earth and skies seem dust upon the scale.
 Redeem we time?—its loss we dearly buy:
 What pleads Lorenzo for his high-priz'd sports?
 He pleads time's numerous blanks; he loudly pleads

The straw-like trifles on life's common stream.
 From whom those blanks and trifles, but from thee?

No blank, no trifle, nature made or meant:
 Virtue, or purpos'd virtue, still be thine:
 This cancels thy complaint at once; this leaves
 In act no trifle, and no blank in time.

This greatens, fills, immortalizes all!
 This, the blest art of turning all to gold;
 This, the good heart's prerogative to raise
 A royal tribute, from the poorest hours:
 Immense revenue! every moment pays.
 If nothing more than purpose in thy power,
 Thy purpose firm, is equal to the deed:
 Who does the best his circumstance allows,
 Does well, acts nobly, angels could no more.
 Our outward act, indeed, admits restraint;
 'Tis not in things o'er thought to domineer:
 Guard well thy thoughts; our thoughts are heard in heaven.

On all important time, through every age,

Though much, and warm, the wise have urg'd;
 the man
 Is yet unborn who duly weighs an hour.
 "I've lost a day"—the prince who nobly cry'd,
 Had been an emperor without his crown:
 He spoke, as if deputed by mankind.
 So should all speak: so reason speaks in all:
 From the soft whispers of that God in man,
 Why fly to folly, why to phrensy fly,
 For rescue from the blessings we possess?
 Time, the supreme!—Time is eternity;
 Pregnant with all eternity can give,
 Pregnant with all that makes archangels smile.
 Who murders time, he crushes in the birth
 A pow'r ethereal, only not ador'd.

§ 147. Inconsistency of Man.

Al! how unjust to nature, and himself,
 Is thoughtless, thankless, inconsistent man!
 Like children babbling nonsense in their sports,
 We censure nature for a span too short;
 That span too short, we tax as tedious too;
 Torture invention, all expedients tire,
 To lash the ling'ring moments into speed,
 And whirl us (happy riddance) from ourselves.
 Art, brainless art! our furious charioteer,
 Drives headlong towards the precipice of death.
 Death, most our dread, death thus more dreadful
 O what a riddle of absurdity! [made.
 Leisure is pain! takes off our chariot wheels:
 How heavily we drag the load of life!
 Blest leisure is our curse; like that of Cain,
 It makes us wander; wander earth around
 To fly that tyrant, Thought. As Atlas groan'd
 The world beneath, we groan beneath an hour.
 We cry for mercy to the next amusement:
 Yet when Death kindly tenders us relief,
 We call him cruel; years to moments shrink.
 Time, in advance, behind him hides his wings.
 And seems to creep, decrepit with his age;
 Behold him, when past by; what then is seen
 But his broad pinions swifter than the winds?
 And all mankind, in contradiction strong,
 Rueful, aghast! cry out at his career.

§ 148. Waste of Time.

LEAVE to thy foes these errors, and these ills:
 To nature just, their cause and cure explore;
 No niggard, nature; men are prodigals.
 We throw away our suns, as made for sport;
 We waste, not use our time: we breathe, not live;
 And barely breathing, man, to live ordain'd,
 Wrings, and oppresses with enormous weight.
 And why? Since time was giv'n for use, not waste,
 Enjoin'd to fly, with tempest, tide, and stars,
 To keep his speed, nor ever wait for man;
 Time's use was doom'd a pleasure; waste, a pain;
 That man might feel his error, if unseen;
 And, feeling, fly to labor for his cure. [sign'd;
 Life's cares are comforts; such by Heav'n de-
 He that has none, must make them, or be wretch-
 Cares are employments; and without employ [ed.
 The soul is on a rack, the rack of rest;
 To souls most adverse; action all their joy.

Here, then, the riddle, mark'd above, unfolds;
 Then time turns torment, when man turns a fool.
 We rave, we wrestle with great nature's plan;
 We thwart the Deity; and 'tis decreed,
 Who thwart his will, shall contradict their own.
 Hence our unnatural quarrel with ourselves;
 Our thoughts at enmity; our bosom-broil.

We push time from us; and we wish him back;
 Life we think long, and short; death seek, and

Oh the dark days of vanity! while here, [shun.
 How tasteless! and how terrible when gone!
 Gone? they ne'er go; when past, they haunt us
 The spirit walks of ev'ry Day deceas'd, [still;
 And smiles an angel, or a fury frowns.

Nor death nor life delights us. If time past,
 And time possess, both pain us, what can please?
 That which the Deity to please ordain'd,
 Time us'd. The man who consecrates his hours,
 By vigorous effort, and an honest aim,
 At once he draws the sting of life and death:
 He walks with nature; and her paths are peace.

Our error's cause, and cure, are seen: see next
 Time's nature, origin, importance, speed,
 And thy great gain from urging his career.—
 He looks on time as nothing: Nothing else
 Is truly man's: what wonders can he do?
 And will: to stand blank neuter he disdains.
 Not on those terms was time (heaven's stranger!)
 On his important embassy to man. [sent

When the dread sire, on emanation bent,
 And big with nature, rising in his might,
 Call'd forth creation (for then time was born),
 By Godhead streaming through a thousand worlds:
 Not on those terms, from the great days of heaven,
 From old eternity's mysterious orb,
 Was time cut off; and cast beneath the skies:
 The skies which watch him in his new abode,
 Measuring his motions by revolving spheres:
 Hours, days, and months, and years, his children, play

Like numerous wings, around him, as he flies:
 Or rather, as unequal plumes, they shape
 His ample pinions, swift as darted flame,
 To gain his goal, to reach his ancient rest,
 And join anew eternity his sire; [hing'd
 When worlds, that count his circles now, un-
 (Fate the loud signal sounding) headlong rush
 To timeless night, and chaos, whence they rose.

Why spur the speedy? why with levities
 New-wing thy short, short day's too rapid flight?
 Man flies from time, and time from man: too
 In sad divorce this double flight must end; [soon
 And then, where are we? where, Lorenzo!
 then,

Thy sports? thy pomp?—I grant thee, in a state
 Not unambitious; in the ruffled shroud,
 Thy Parian tomb's triumphant arch beneath.
 Has death his fopperies? Then well may life
 Put on her plume, and in her rainbow shine.

§ 149. False Delicacy.

YE well-array'd! ye lilies of our land!
 Ye lilies male! who neither toil, nor spin;
 Ye delicate! who nothing can support,

Yourselves most insupportable ! for whom
The winter rose must blow, and silky soft
Favonius breathe still softer, or be chid ;
And other worlds send odors, sauce, and song,
And robes, and notions, fram'd in foreign looms !
O ye who deem one moment unamus'd,
A misery, say, dreamers of gay dreams !
How will you weather an eternal night,
Where such expedients fail ? where wit's a fool ;
Mirth mourns ; dreams vanish ; laughter sinks in tears.

§ 150. Conscience.

O TREACHEROUS conscience ! while she seems to sleep,
On rose and myrtle, lull'd with syren song ;
While she seems, nodding o'er her charge, to drop
On headlong appetite the slacken'd rein,
The sly informer minutes every fault,
And her dread diary with horror fills.
Not the gross act alone employs her pen :
She dawning purposes of heart explores,
Unnoted, notes each moment misapply'd ;
In leaves more durable than leaves of brass,
Writes our whole history ; which death shall read
In every pale delinquent's private ear ;
And judgement publish : publish to more worlds
Than this : and endless age in groans resound.
And think'st thou still thou canst be wise too soon ?

§ 151. Man's Supineness.

TIME flies, death urges, knells call, heaven in-
Hell threatens ; all exerts ; in effort, all ; [vites,
More than creation labors !—Labors more ?
And is there in creation, what, amidst
This tumult universal, wing'd dispatch,
And ardent energy, supinely yawns !— [fate,
Man sleeps ; and man alone ; and man, whose
Fate irreversible, entire, extreme, [gulph
Endless, hair-hung, breeze-shaken, o'er the
A moment trembles ; drops ! man the sole cause
Of this surrounding storm ! and yet he sleeps,
As the storm rock'd to rest.—Throw years away !
Throw empires, and be blameless ! moments seize,
Heaven's on their wing : a moment we may wish
When worlds want wealth to buy. Bid day stand
Bid him drive back his car, recall, retake [still,
Fate's hasty prey ! implore him, re-import
The period past ; re-give the given hour !
Lorenzo—O for yesterday to come !

Such is the language of the man awake ;
And is his ardor vain ? Lorenzo, no !
To-day is yesterday return'd ; return'd
Full power'd to cancel, expiate, raise, adorn,
And reinstate us on the rock of peace.
Let it not share its predecessor's fate ;
Nor like its elder sisters, die a fool.
Shall we be poorer for the plenty pour'd ?
More wretch'd for the clemencies of Heaven ?

§ 152. The Depravity of Man.

WHERE shall I find him ? angels ; tell me where !
You know him ! he is near you : point him out ;
Shall I see glories beaming from his brow ?

Or trace his footsteps by the rising flow'rs ?
Your golden wings, now hov'ring o'er him, shed
Protection, now, are waving in applause
To that blest son of foresight ! lord of fate !
That awful independent on To-morrow !
Whose work is done ; who triumphs in the past ;
Whose yesterdays look backwards with a smile ;
Nor, like the Parthian, wound him as they fly.
If not by guilt, they wound us by their flight,
If folly bounds our prospect by the grave :
All feeling of futurity benumb'd !
All relish of realities expir'd :
Renounc'd all correspondence with the skies ;
Imbruted every faculty divine ;
Heart-buried in the rubbish of the world ;
The world, that gulph of souls, immortal souls,
Souls elevate, angelic, wing'd with fire
To reach the distant skies, and triumph there
On thrones, which shall not mourn their masters
chang'd,
Though we from earth ; ethereal they that fell.
Such veneration due, O man, to man !

§ 153. Instability of Life.

WHO venerate themselves the world despise.
For what, gay friend ! is this escutcheon'd world,
Which hangs out Death is one eternal night ?
A night that glooms us in the noontide ray,
And wraps our thoughts, at banquets, in the Life's little stage is a small eminence, [shroud.
Inch high the grave above ; that home of man,
Where dwells the multitude : we gaze around,
We read their monuments ; we sigh ; and while
We sigh, we sink ; and are what we deplor'd ;
Lamenting, or lamented, all our lot !
Is death at distance ? No : he has been on thee ;
And given sure earnest of his final blow.
Those hours which lately smil'd, where are they now ? [drown'd
Pallid to thought, and ghastly ! drown'd, all
In that great deep, which nothing dissembogues ;
And, dying, they bequeath'd thee small renown.
The rest are on the wing : how fleet their flight !
Already has the fatal train took fire ;
A moment, and the world's blown up to thee ;
The sun is darkness, and the stars are dust.

§ 154. Vanity of Human Enjoyments, taught by Experience.

'Tis greatly wise to talk with our past hours ;
And ask them, what report they bore to heaven ;
And how they might have borne more welcome
news.
Their answers form what men Experience call :
If Wisdom's friend, her best ; if not, worst foe.
O reconcile them ! kind Experience cries,
“ There's nothing here, but what as nothing weighs ;
The more our joy, the more we know it vain ;
And by success are tutor'd to despair.”
Nor is it only thus, but must be so :
Who knows not this, though grey, is still a child.
Loose then from earth the grasp of fond desire,
Weigh anchor, and some happier clime explore.

§ 155. Death unavoidable.

SINCE by life's passing breath, blown up from earth,

Light as the summer's dust, we take in air
A moment's giddy flight, and fall again;
Join the dull mass, increase the trodden soil,
And sleep till earth herself shall be no more;
Since then, (as emmets their small world o'er-thrown)

We, sore amaz'd, from out earth's ruin crawl,
And rise to fate extreme, of foul or fair,
As man's own choice, controller of the skies!
As man's despotic will, this hour, decrees;
Should not each warning give a strong alarm?
Warning, far less than that of bosom torn
From bosom, bleeding o'er the sacred dead?
Should not each dial strike us as we pass,
Portentuous, as the written wall, which struck,
O'er midnight bowls, the proud Assyrian pale?
Like that, the dial speaks; and points to thee;
"O man, thy kingdom is departing from thee;
"And, while it lasts, is emptier than my shade."
Know, like the Median, fate is in thy walls:
Man's make incloses the sure seeds of death;
Life feeds the murderer: ingrate! he thrives
On her own meal; and then his nurse devours.

§ 156. Life compared to the Sun-dial.

THAT solar shadow, as it measures life,
It life resembles too: life speeds away
From point to point, though seeming to stand still.
The cunning fugitive is swift by stealth:
Too subtle is the movement to be seen,
Yet soon man's hour is up, and we are gone.
Warnings point out our danger; gnomons, time;
As these are useless when the sun is set,
So those, but when more glorious reason shines.
Reason should judge in all; in reason's eye,
That sedentary shadow travels hard:
But all mankind mistake their time of day;
Even age itself: fresh hopes are hourly sown
In furrow'd brows. So gentle life's descent,
We shut our eyes, and think it is a plain:
We take fair days in winter, for the spring:
We turn our blessings into bane; since oft
Man must compute that age he cannot feel,
He scarce believes he's older for his years.
Thus, at life's latest eve, we keep in store
One disappointment sure, to crown the rest;
The disappointment of a promis'd hour.

§ 157. Death of the good Man.

So sung Philander, O! the cordial warmth,
And elevating spirit, of a friend,
For twenty summers ripening by my side;
All feculence of falsehood long thrown down;
All social virtues rising in the soul;
As crystal clear; and smiling, as they rise!
On earth how lost! Philander is no more.

How blessings brighten as they take their flight!
His flight Philander took. It were profane
To quench a glory lighted at the skies,
And cast in shadows his illustrious close.
Strange, the theme most affecting, most sublime,
Momentous most to man, should sleep unsung!

Man's highest triumph! man's profoundest fall!
The death-bed of the just! is yet undrawn
By mortal hand; it merits a divine:
Angels should paint it, angels ever there;
There, on a post of honor, and of joy.

The chamber where the good man meets his
Is privileg'd beyond the common walk [fate
Of virtuous life, quite in the verge of heaven.
Fly, ye profane! or else draw near with awe,
For here, resistless demonstration dwells;
Here tir'd dissimulation drops her mask,
Here real and apparent are the same.
You see the man; you see his hold on heaven;
Heaven waits not the last moment, owns its friends

On this side death; and points them out to men;
A lecture, silent, but of sovereign pow'r,
To vice, confusion; and to virtue, peace!

Whatever farce the boastful hero plays,
Virtue alone has majesty in death;
And greater still, the more the tyrant frowns,
Philander! he severely frown'd on thee.

"No warning given! unceremonious fate!

"A sudden rush from life's meridian joys!

"A restless bed of pain! a plunge opaque-

"Beyond conjecture! feeble nature's dread!

"Strong reason shudders at the dark unknown!

"A sun extinguish'd! a just-opening grave!

"And oh! the last, last: what? (can words express? [friend!"

"Thought reach it?) the last—silence of a
Through nature's wreck, through vanquish'd agonies, [gloom.

Like the stars struggling through this midnight
What gleams of joy, what more than human peace!

Where the frail mortal? the poor abject worm?
No, not in death, the mortal to be found.
His comforters he comforts; great in ruin,
With unreluctant grandeur, gives, not yields
His soul sublime; and closes with his fate.

How our hearts burnt within us at the scene!
Whence this brave bound o'er limits fixt to man!
His God sustains him in his final hour!
His final hour brings glory to his God!
Man's glory heaven vouchsafes to call its own.
Amazement strikes! devotion bursts to flame!
Christians adore! and infidels believe.

At that black hour, which general horror sheds
On the low level of the inglorious throng,
Sweet peace, and heavenly hope, and humble
Divinely beam on his exalted soul; [joy,
Destruction gild, and crown him for the skies.
Life, take thy chance; but oh for such an end!

§ 158. NIGHT III. Picture of Narcissa, Description of her Funeral, and a Reflection upon Man.

SWEET harmonist! and beautiful as sweet!
And young as beautiful! and soft as young!
And gay as soft! and innocent as gay!
And happy (if aught happy here) as good!
For fortune fond had built her nest on high.
Like birds quite exquisite of note and plume,

Transfix'd by fate (who loves a lofty mark)
How from the summit of the grove she fell,
And left it unharmonious! all its charms
Extinguish'd in the wonders of her song!
Her song still vibrates in my ravish'd ear,
Still melting there, and with voluptuous pain
(O to forget her!) thrilling through my heart!

Song, Beauty, Youth, Love, Virtue, Joy! this
Of bright ideas, flow'rs of Paradise, [group
As yet unforfeit! in one blaze we bind,
Kneel, and present it to the skies; as all
We guess of heaven; and these were all her own:
And she was mine; and I was—was!—most
Gay title of the deepest misery! [blest!
As bodies grow more pond'rous robb'd of life,
Good lost weighs more in grief than gain'd in joy.
Like blossom'd trees o'erturn'd by vernal storm,
Lovely in death the beauteous ruin lay;
And if in death still lovely, lovelier there;
Far lovelier! pity swells the tide of love.
And will not the severe excuse a sigh?
Scorn the proud man that is asham'd to weep;
Our tears indulg'd indeed deserve our shame.
Ye that e'er lost an angel, pity me.

Soon as the lustre languish'd in her eye,
Dawning a dimmer day on human sight;
And on her cheek, the residence of spring,
Pale omen sat, and scatter'd fears around
On all that saw, (and who could cease to gaze
That once had seen?)—with haste, parental haste,
I flew, I snatch'd her from the rigid north,
Her native bed, on which black Boreas blew,
And bore her nearer to the sun; the sun
(As if the sun could envy) check'd his beam,
Denied his wonted succour; nor with more
Regret beheld her drooping, than the bells
Of lilies; fairest lilies, not so fair!

Queen lilies! and ye painted populace
Who dwell in fields, and lead ambrosial lives;
In morn and ev'ning dew your beauties bathe,
And drink the sun; which gives your cheeks to glow;
And out-blush (mine excepted) every fair;
You gladlier grew, ambitious of her hand,
Which often cropp'd your odors, incense meet
To thought so pure! Ye lovely fugitives!
Coæval race with man! for man you smile;
Why not smile at him too? You share indeed
His sudden pass, but not his constant pain.

So man is made, nought ministers delight,
But what his glowing passions can engage;
And glowing passions, bent on aught below,
Must soon or late with anguish turn the scale;
And anguish, after rapture, how severe!
Rapture? Bold man! who tempts the wrath di-
By plucking fruit denied to mortal taste, [vine,
While here, presuming on the rights of heaven.
For transport dost thou call on ev'ry hour,
Lorenzo? At thy friend's expense be wise;
Lean not on earth, 'twill pierce thee to the heart:
A broken reed at best, but oft a spear;
On its sharp point peace bleeds, and hope expires.

Turn, hopeless thoughts! turn from her:— thought repell'd

Resenting rallies, and wakes every woe.
Snatch'd ere thy prime, and in thy bridal hour!
And when kind fortune, with thy lover smil'd!
And when high-flavor'd thy fresh op'ning joys!
And when blind man pronounc'd thy bliss complete!

And on a foreign shore, where strangers wept!
Strangers to thee; and, more surprising still,
Strangers to kindness wept: their eyes let fall
Inhuman tears; strange tears! that trickled
down

From marble hearts! obdurate tenderness!
A tenderness that call'd them more severe;
In spite of nature's soft persuasion, steel'd;
While nature melted, superstition rav'd;
That mourn'd the dead, and this denied a grave.

Their sighs incens'd, sighs foreign to the will!
Their will the tiger suck'd, outrag'd the storm.
For, oh! the curs'd ungodliness of zeal!
While sinful flesh relented, spirit nurs'd
In blind infallibility's embrace,
The sainted spirit petrified the breast;
Denied the charity of dust, to spread
O'er dust! a charity their dogs enjoy.

What could I do? what succour? what re-
With pious sacrilege a grave I stole, [source?
With impious piety that grave I wrong'd;
Short in my duty, coward in my grief!
More like her murderer than friend, I crept
With soft suspended step, and muffled deep
In midnight darkness, whisper'd my last sigh.
I whisper'd what should echo through their realms;

Nor writ her name whose tomb should pierce
the skies.

Presumptuous fear! how durst I dread her foes,
While nature's loudest dictates I obey'd?
Pardon necessity, blest shade! Of grief
And indignation rival bursts I pour'd;
Half execration mingled with my pray'r;
Kindled at man, while I his God ador'd;
Sore grudg'd the savage land her sacred dust;
Stamp'd the curs'd soil; and with humanity
(Denied Narcissa) wish'd them all a grave.

Glow's my resentment into guilt? What guilt
Can equal violations of the dead?

The dead how sacred! Sacred is the dust
Of this heaven-labor'd form, erect, divine;
This heaven-assum'd majestic robe of earth
He deign'd to wear, who hung the vast expanse
With azure bright, and cloth'd the sun in gold.
When ev'ry passion sleeps that can offend;
When strikes us ev'ry motive that can melt;
When man can wreak his rancour uncontroll'd,
That strongest curb on insult and ill-will;
Then, spleen to dust? the dust of innocence?
An angel's dust?—This Lucifer transcends:
When he contended for the patriarch's bones,
'Twas not the strife of malice, but of pride;
The strife of pontiff pride, not pontiff gall.

Far less than this is shocking, in a race
Most wretched but from streams of mutual love,
And uncreated but for love divine;
And, but for love divine, this moment lost,

By fate resorb'd, and sunk in endless night.
 Man hard of heart to man! of horrid things
 Most horrid! 'Mid stupendous, highly strange!
 Yet oft his courtesies are smother wrongs;
 Pride brandishes the favors he confers,
 And contumelious his humanity:
 What then his vengeance? hear it not, ye stars!
 And thou, pale moon, turn paler at the sound!
 Man is to man the sorest, surest ill.
 A previous blast foretels the rising storm;
 O'erwhelming turrets threaten ere they fall;
 Volcanos bellow ere they disembody;
 Earth trembles ere her yawning jaws devour;
 And smoke betrays the wide-consuming fire:
 Ruin from man is most conceal'd when near,
 And sends the dreadful tidings in the blow.
 Is this the flight of fancy? Would it were!
 Heaven's Sovereign saves all beings but himself,
 That hideous sight, a naked human heart!

§ 159. NIGHT IV. Death not to be dreaded.

How deep implanted in the breast of man
 The dread of death! I sing its sov'reign cure.
 Why start at death? where is he? death
 arriv'd,
 Is past: not come, or gone, he's never here.
 Ere hope, sensation fails; black-boding man
 Receives, not suffers, death's tremendous blow.
 The knell, the shroud, the mattock, and the grave; [worm;
 The deep damp vault, the darkness, and the
 These are the bugbears of a winter's eve,
 The terrors of the living, not the dead.
 Imagination's fool, and error's wretch,
 Man makes a death which nature never made;
 Then on the point of his own fancy falls;
 And feels a thousand deaths, in fearing one.

§ 160. Death desirable to the Aged.

BUT was death frightful, what has age to fear?
 If prudent, age should meet the friendly foe,
 And shelter in his hospitable gloom.
 I scarce can meet a monument but holds
 My younger: every date cries—"Come away!"
 And what recalls me? Look the world around,
 And tell me what? the wisest cannot tell.
 Should any born of woman give his thought
 Full range, on just dislike's unbounded field;
 Of things, the vanity; of men, the flaws;
 Flaws in the best: the many, flaw all o'er;
 As leopards spotted, or as Æthiops, dark;
 Vivacious ill; good dying immature;
 And at its death bequeathing endless pain;
 His heart, though bold, would sicken at the sight,
 And spend itself in sighs for future scenes.
 But grant to life some perquisites of joy;
 A time there is, when, like a thrice-told tale,
 Long-rifled life of sweet can yield no more,
 But from our comment on the comedy,
 Pleasing reflections on parts well-sustain'd,
 Or purpos'd emendations where we fail'd,
 Or hopes of plaudits from our candid judge,

When, on their exit, souls are bid unrobe,
 And drop this mask of flesh behind the scene.
 With me, that time is come; my world is dead:

A new world rises, and new manners reign:
 What a pert race starts up! the strangers gaze,
 And I at them; my neighbour is unknown.

§ 161. Folly of Human Pursuits.

BLEST be that hand divine, which gently laid
 My heart at rest beneath this humble shed!
 The world's a stately bark, on dangerous seas,
 With pleasure seen, but boarded at our peril;
 Here, on a single plank, thrown safe ashore,
 I hear the tumult of the distant throng,
 As that of seas remote, or dying storms;
 And meditate on scenes, more silent still;
 Pursue my theme, and fight the fear of death.
 Here like a shepherd, gazing from his hut,
 Touching his reed, or leaning on his staff,
 Eager ambition's fiery chace I see;
 I see the circling hunt of noisy men
 Burst law's inclosure, leap the mounds of right,
 Pursuing and pursued, each other's prey;
 As wolves, for rapine; as the fox for wiles;
 Till death, that mighty hunter, earths them all.
 Why all this toil for triumphs of an hour?
 What, though we wade in wealth, or soar in fame?
 Earth's highest station ends in "here he lies,"
 And "dust to dust" concludes her noblest song.
 If this song lives, posterity shall know
 One, though in Britain born, with courtiers bred,
 Who thought even gold might come a day too late;
 Nor on his subtle death-bed plann'd his scheme
 For future vacancies in church or state;
 Some avocation deeming it—to die;
 Unbit by rage canine of dying rich;
 Guilt's blunder! and the loudest laugh of hell.

§ 162. Folly of the Love of Life in the Aged.

O MY coevals! remnant of yourselves!
 Poor human ruins, tott'ring o'er the grave!
 Shall we, shall aged men, like aged trees,
 Strike deeper their vile root, and closer cling,
 Still more enamour'd of this wretch'd soil? [out,
 Shall our pale, wither'd hands, be still stretch'd
 Trembling, at once, with eagerness and age?
 With avarice, and convulsions grasping hard?
 Grasping at air, for what has earth beside?
 Man wants but little; nor that little long;
 How soon must he resign his very dust,
 Which frugal nature lent him for an hour?
 Years unexperienc'd rush on numerous ills;
 And soon as man, expert from time, has found
 The key of life, it opes the gates of death.
 When in this vale of years I backward look,
 And miss such numbers, numbers too of such,
 Firmer in health, and greener in their age,
 And stricter on their guard, and fitter far
 To play life's subtle game, I scarce believe
 I still survive; and am I fond of life,
 Who scarce can think it possible I live?

Alive by miracle! if still alive,
Who long have buried what gives life to live,
Firmness of nerve, and energy of thought.
Life's lee is not more shallow, than impure
And vapid; sense and reason show the door,
Call for my bier, and point me to the dust.

§ 163. Address to the Deity.

O THOU great arbiter of life and death!
Nature's immortal, immaterial sun!
Whose all-prolific beam late call'd me forth
From darkness, teeming darkness, where I lay
The worm's inferior, and, in rank, beneath
The dust I tread on, high to bear my brow,
To drink the spirit of the golden day,
And triumph in existence; and couldst know
No motive but my bliss; with Abraham's joy,
Thy call I follow to the land unknown;
I trust in thee, and know in whom I trust;
Or life or death is equal; neither weighs;
All weight in this—O let me live to thee!

§ 164. Fears of Death extinguished by Man's Redemption.

THOUGH nature's terrors, thus, may be repress;
Still frowns grim death; guilt points the tyrant's spear.

Who can appease its anguish? how it burns!
What hand the barb'd, envenom'd thought can draw?

What healing hand can pour the balm of peace,
And turn my sight undaunted on the tomb?

With joy,—with grief, that healing hand I
Ah! too conspicuous! it is fix'd on high! [see;
On high?—What means my phrensy? I blaspheme.

Alas! how low! how far beneath the skies!
The skies it form'd; and now it bleeds for me—
But bleeds the balm I want—yet still it bleeds:
Draw the dire steel—ah no!—the dreadful blessing

What heart or can sustain, or dares forego?
There hangs all human hope: that nail supports
Our falling universe: that gone, we drop:
Horror receives us, and the dismal wish
Creation had been smother'd in her birth.
Darkness his curtain, and his bed the dust,
When stars and sun are dust beneath his throne!
In heaven itself can such indulgence dwell?

O what a groan was there! A groan not his.
He seisd our dreadful right, the load sustain'd,
And heav'd the mountain from a guilty world.
A thousand worlds so bought, were bought too
Sensations new in angels' bosoms rise! [dear.
Suspend their song; and silence is in heaven.

O for their song to reach my lofty theme!
Inspire me, Night, with all thy tuneful spheres!
Much rather, Thou! who dost those spheres inspire;

Lest I blaspheme my subject with my song.

Thou most indulgent, most tremendous, power!
Still more tremendous for thy wondrous love!
That arms, with awe more awful, thy commands;

And foul transgression dips in sevenfold night;

How our hearts tremble at thy love immense!
In love immense, inviolably just!

O'er guilt (how mountainous!), with out-stretch'd arms

Stern justice, and soft-smiling love, embrace,
Supporting, in full majesty, thy throne,
When seem'd its majesty to need support,
Or that, or man, inevitably lost.

What, but the fathomless of thought divine,
Could labor such expedient from despair,
And rescue both? Both rescue! both exalt!
O how are both exalted by the deed!

A wonder in omnipotence itself!

A mystery, no less to gods than men!

Not, thus our infidels th' Eternal draw;

A God all o'er, consummate, absolute,
Full-orb'd, in his whole round of rays complete;
They set at odds heaven's jarring attributes;
And with one excellence another wound;
Maim heaven's perfection, break its equal beams,
Bid mercy triumph over—God himself,
Undeify'd by their opprobrious praise;

A God all mercy, is a God unjust.

Ye brainless wits, ye baptiz'd infidels,
The ransom was paid down; the fund of heaven
Amazing, and amaz'd, pour'd forth the price,
All price beyond: though curious to compute,
Archangels fail'd to cast the mighty sum:
Its value vast, ungrasp'd by minds create,
For ever hides, and glows in the supreme.

And was the ransom paid? It was: and paid
(What can exalt the bounty more?) for you.

The sun beheld it—no, the shocking scene
Drove back his chariot; midnight veil'd his face
Not such as this; not such as nature makes;
A midnight, nature shudder'd to behold;
A midnight new! from her Creator's frown!
Sun! didst thou fly thy Maker's pain? or start
At that enormous load of human guilt, [cross;
Which bow'd his blessed head; o'erwhelm'd his Made groan the centre; burst earth's marble
womb,

With pangs, strange pangs! deliver'd of her dead?
Hell howl'd; and heav'n, that hour, let fall a tear;
Heav'n wept, that man might smile! heaven bled
That man might never die—

What heart of stone but glows at thoughts like these? [mount

Such contemplations mount us: and should
The mind still higher; nor ever glance on man,
Unraptur'd, uninflam'd; where roll my thoughts
To rest from wonders? How my soul is caught!
Heav'n's sov'reign blessings clust'ring from the cross,

Rush on her, in a throng, and close her round,
The prisoner of amaze!—In his blest life,
I see the path, and, in his death, the price,
And in his great ascent, the proof supreme
Of immortality.—And did he rise?

Hear, O ye nations! hear, it, O ye dead!
He rose! he rose! he burst the bars of death!
Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates,
And give the king of glory to come in!
Who is the king of glory? he who left

His throne of glory, for the pang of death :
Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates,
And give the king of glory to come in !
Who is the king of glory ? he who slew
The ravenous foe, that gorg'd all human race !
The king of glory, he, whose glory fill'd
Heav'n with amazement at his love to man ;
And with divine complacency beheld
Powers most illumin'd wilder'd in the theme.

The theme, the joy, how then shall man sustain ? [throne !

Oh the burst gates ! crush'd sting ! demolish'd
Last gasp of vanquish'd death. Shout, earth and heaven,

This sum of good to man : whose nature, then,
Took wing, and mounted with him from the tomb !

Then, then, I rose ; then first humanity
Triumphant pass'd the crystal ports of light,
And seiz'd eternal youth. Mortality
Was then transferr'd to death ; and heaven's du-Unalienably seal'd to this frail frame, [ration
This child of dust.—Man, all-immortal ! hail ;
Hail, heaven ! all lavish of strange gifts to man !
Thine all the glory ! man's the boundless bliss.

Where am I rapt by this triumphant theme,
On christian joy's exulting wing, above
Th' Aonian mount ?—Alas ! small cause for
What if to pain, immortal ? if extent [joy !
Of being, to preclude a close of woe ?

Where, then, my boast of immortality ?
I boast it still, though cover'd o'er with guilt ;
For guilt, not innocence, his life he pour'd.
'Tis guilt alone can justify his death ;
Nor that, unless his death can justify
Relenting guilt in heaven's indulgent sight.

If sick of folly, I relent ; he writes
My name in heaven, with that inverted spear
(A spear deep dipt in blood !) which pierc'd his
And open'd there a font for all mankind [side,
Who strive, who combat crimes, to drink, and live :

This, only this, subdues the fear of death.

§ 165. Greatness of the Redemption.

AND what is this ?—Survey the wondrous
cure :

And, at each step, let higher wonder rise !

“ Pardon for infinite offence ! and pardon

“ Through means that speak its value infinite !

“ A pardon bought with blood ! with blood divine !

“ With blood divine of him I made my foe ;

“ Persisted to provoke ! though woo'd and aw'd,

“ Bless'd, and chastis'd, a flagrant rebel still !

“ A rebel 'midst the thunders of his throne !

“ Nor I alone ! a rebel universe !

“ My species up in arms ! not one exempt !

“ Yet for the foulest of the soul he dies.”

Bound every heart ! and every bosom burn !

Oh what a scale of miracles is here !

Its lowest round, high-planted on the skies :

Its tow'ring summit lost beyond the thought
Of man or angel : Oh that I could climb

The wonderful ascent with equal praise !
Praise ardent, cordial, constant, to high heaven
More fragrant than Arabia sacrific'd ;
And all her spicy mountains in a flame.

§ 166. Praise, bestowed on Men, due to Heaven.

FROM courts and thrones return, apostate praise !
Thou prostitute ! to thy first love return.

Thy first, thy greatest, once, unrivall'd theme.

Back to thy fountain ! to that parent power,
Who gives the tongue to sound, the thought to soar,

The soul to be. Men homage pay to men,
Thoughtless beneath whose dreadful eye they
In mutual awe profound of clay to clay, [bow,
Of guilt to guilt, and turn their backs on thee,
Great sire ! whom thrones celestial ceaseless sing.
Oh the presumption, of man's awe for man !
Man's author ! end ! restorer ! law ! and judge !
Thine, all ; day thine, and thine this gloom of
night,

With all her wealth, with all her radiant worlds :
What night eternal, but a frown from thee ?

What heav'n's meridian glory, but thy smile ?
And shall not praise be thine ? not human praise,
While heav'n's high host on Hallelujahs live ?

§ 167. Magnificence and Omnipresence of the Deity.

OH may I breathe no longer, than I breathe
My soul in praise to him who gave me soul,
And all her infinite of prospect fair, [thee !
Cut through the shades of hell, great love ! by Where shall that praise begin, which ne'er should end ?

Where'er I turn, what claim on all applause !
How is night's sable mantle labor'd o'er !
How richly wrought, with attributes divine !
What wisdom shines ! what love ! This midnight pomp,

This gorgeous arch, with golden worlds inlay'd,
Built with divine ambition ! nought to thee :

For others this profusion : thou apart,

Above, beyond ! oh tell me, mighty mind,

Where art thou ? shall I dive into the deep ?

Call to the sun, or ask the roaring winds,

For their Creator ? shall I question loud

The thunder, if in that th' Almighty dwells ?

Or holds the furious storms in straiten'd reins,

And bids fierce whirlwinds wheel his rapid car ?

What mean these questions ?—trembling I retract ;

My prostrate soul adores the present God :

Praise I a distant Deity ? he tunes [tains ;

My voice (if tun'd) ; the nerve, that writes, sus-

Wrapp'd in his being, I resound his praise :

But though past all diffus'd, without a shore,

His essence : local is his throne (as meet),

To gather the disperst, to fix a point,

A central point, collective of his sons,

Since finite every nature but his own.

The nameless He, whose nod is nature's birth ;
And nature's shield, the shadow of his hand ;

Her dissolution, his suspended smile ;
The great first last ! pavilion'd high he sits
In darkness, from excessive splendor born.
His glory, to created glory, bright,
As that to central horrors ; he looks down
On all that soars ; and spans immensity.

§ 168. Inability of sufficiently praising God.

DOWN to the centre should I send my thought Through beds of glittering ore, and glowing gems,

Their beggar'd blaze wants lustre for my lay ;
Goes out in darkness : if, on tow'ring wing,
I send it through the boundless vault of stars ;
The stars, though rich, what dross their gold to
thee,

Great ! good ! wise ! wonderful ! eternal King ?
If to those conscious stars thy throne around,
Praise ever-pouring, and imbibing bliss,
I ask their strain ; they want it, more they want ;
Languid their energy, their ardor cold,
Indebted still, their highest rapture burns ;
Short of its mark, defective, though divine.

Still more—This theme is man's, and man's alone :

Their vast appointments reach it not ; they see
On earth a bounty, not indulg'd on high ;
And downward look for heaven's superior praise !
First-born of ether ! high in fields of light !
View man, to see the glory of your God !
You sung creation (for in that you shar'd) ;
How rose in melody, the child of love !
Creation's great superior, man ! is thine ;
Thine is redemption ; eternize the song !
Redemption ! 'twas creation more sublime ;
Redemption ! 'twas the labor of the skies ;
Far more than labor—It was death in heaven.

Here pause and ponder ; was there death in heaven ?

What then on earth ? on earth which struck the blow ?

Who struck it ? Who ?—O how is man enlarg'd, Seen through this medium ! How the pigmy tow'rs !

How counterpois'd his origin from dust !
How counterpois'd to dust his sad return !
How voided his vast distance from the skies !
How near he presses on the seraph's wing !
How this demonstrates through the thickest cloud
Of guilt, and clay condens'd, the son of heav'n !
The double son ; the made, and the re-made !
And shall heaven's double property be lost ?
Man's double madness only can destroy him.
To man the bleeding cross has promis'd all ;
The bleeding cross has sworn eternal grace :
Who gave his life, what grace shall he deny ?
O ye, who from this Rock of Ages leap
Disdainful, plunging headlong in th' abyss !
What cordial joy, what consolation strong,
Whatever winds arise, or billows roll,
Our interest in the master of the storm ?
Cling there, and in wreck'd nature's ruins
smile ;

While vile apostates tremble in a calm.

§ 169. Man.

MAN ! know thyself ; all wisdom centres there,
To none man seems ignoble, but to man ;
Angels that grandeur, men o'erlook, admire :
How long shall human nature be their book,
Degenerate mortal ! and unread by thee ?

The beam dim reason sheds shows wonders there ;
What high contents ! illustrious faculties !
But the grand comment which displays at full
Our human height, scarce sever'd from divine,
By heaven compos'd, was publish'd on the cross !

Who looks on that, and sees not in himself
An awful stranger, a terrestrial god ?

A glorious partner with the Deity
In that high attribute, immortal life !

I gaze, and as I gaze, my mounting soul
Catches strange fire ! eternity ! at thee.

He, the great father ! kindled at one flame
The world of rationals ; one spirit pour'd
From spirit's awful fountain : pour'd himself
Through all their souls ; but not in equal stream
Profuse, or frugal of th' inspiring God,
As his wise plan demanded : and when past
Their various trials in their various spheres,

If they continue rational, as made,
Resorbs them all into himself again ; [crown.

His throne their centre, and his smile their Why doubt we then the glorious truth to Angels are men of a superior kind ; [sing ?

Angels are men in lighter habit clad,
High o'er celestial mountains wing'd in flight :

And men are angels, loaded for an hour,
Who wade this miry vale, and climb with pain,
And slippery step, the bottom of the steep :
Yet summon'd to the glorious standard soon,
Which flames eternal crimson through the skies.

§ 170. Religion.

RELIGION's all. Descending from its sire
To wretched man, the goddess in her left
Holds out this world, and in her right, the next :
Religion ! the sole voucher man is man :
Supporter sole of man above himself.

Religion ! providence ! an after state !
Here is firm footing ; here is solid rock ;
This can support us ; all is sea besides ;
Sinks under us ; bestorms, and then devours.
His hand the good man fastens on the skies,
And bids earth roll, nor feels her idle whirl.

Religion ! thou the soul of happiness ;
And groaning Calvary of thee ! There shine
The noble truths ; there strongest motives sting !
Can love allure us ? or can terror awe ?

He weeps !—the falling drop puts out the sun ;
He sighs—the sigh earth's deep foundation
If, in his love, so terrible, what then [shakes.

His wrath inflam'd ? his tenderness on fire ?
Can prayer, can praise avert it ?—Thou, my all !

My theme ! my inspiration ! and my crown !
My strength in age ! my rise in low estate !

My soul's ambition, pleasure, wealth ! my world !
My light in darkness ! and my life in death !
My boast through time ! bliss through eternity !

Eternity too short to speak thy praise,
Or fathom thy profound of love to man !

§ 171. God's Love to Man.

O HOW omnipotence is lost in love !
Father of angels ! but the friend of man !
Thou, who didst save him, snatch the smoking brand
From out the flames, and quench it in thy blood !
How art thou pleas'd by bounty to distress !
To make us groan beneath our gratitude,
To challenge, and to distance, all return !
Of lavish love stupendous heights to soar,
And leave praise panting in the distant vale !
But since the naked will obtains thy smile,
Beneath this monument of praise unpaid,
For ever lie entomb'd my fear of death,
And dread of ev'ry evil, but thy frown.

O for an humbler heart and loftier song !
Thou, my much-injur'd theme ! with that soft eye
Which melted o'er doom'd Salem, deign to look
Compassion to the coldness of my breast,
And pardon to the winter in my strain.

§ 172. Lukewarm Devotion.

OH ye cold hearted, frozen formalists !
On such a theme 'tis impious to be calm ;
Shall Heaven which gave us ardor, and has shown
Its own for man so strongly, not disdain
What smooth emollients in theology,
Recumbent virtue's downy doctors preach,
That prose of piety, a lukewarm praise ?
Rise odors sweet from incense uninflam'd ?
Devotion, when lukewarm, is undevout.

§ 173. Death, where is thy Sting ?

OH when will death (now stingless), like a friend,
Admit me of that choir ? Oh when will death,
This mould'ring, old partition-wall thrown
Give beings, one in nature, one abode ? [down,
Oh death divine, that gives us to the skies !
Great future ! glorious patron of the past,
And present, when shall I thy shrine adore ?
From Nature's continent immensely wide,
Immensely blest, this little isle of life
Divides us. Happy day, that breaks our chain ;
That re-admits us, through the guardian hand
Of elder brothers, to our Father's throne ;
Who hears our Advocate, and through his wounds

Beholding man, allows that tender name.
'Tis this makes Christian triumph a command :
'Tis this makes joy a duty to the wise.

Hast thou ne'er seen the comet's flaming flight ?
Th' illustrious stranger passing, terror sheds
On gazing nations, from this fiery train
Of length enormous, takes his ample round
Through depths of ether, coasts unnumber'd
worlds,

Of more than solar glory ; doubles wide
Heav'n's mighty cape, and then revisits earth,
From the long travel of a thousand years.
Thus, at the destin'd period, shall return

He, once on earth, who bids the comet blaze ;
And with him all our triumph o'er the tomb.

§ 174. Faith enforced by our Reason.

NATURE is dumb on this important point :
Or hope precarious in low whisper breathes :
Faith speaks aloud, distinct ; even adders hear,
But turn and dart into the dark again.
Faith builds a bridge across the bridge of death,
To break the shock blind nature cannot shun,
And lands thought smoothly on the farther shore.
Death's terror is the mountain Faith removes ;
That mountain barrier between man and peace :
'Tis Faith disarms destruction ; and absolves
From ev'ry clamorous charge the guiltless tomb.

Why shouldst thou disbelieve ?—'tis Reason bids,

"All-sacred Reason."—Hold her sacred still ;
Nor shalt thou want a rival in thy flame.
Reason ! my heart is thine : deep in its folds,
Live thou with life ; live dearer of the two.
My reason rebaptiz'd me, when adult ;
Weigh'd true and false in her impartial scale ;
And made that choice, which once was but my fate.

Reason pursued is faith : and unpursued
Where proof invites, 'tis reason then no more ;
And such our proof, that, or our faith is right,
Or reason lies, and Heaven design'd it wrong :
Absolve we this ? What then is blasphemy ?

Fond as we are, and justly fond of faith,
Reason, we grant, demands our first regard,
The mother honor'd, as the daughter dear :
Reason the root, fair faith is but the flow'r :
The fading flow'r shall die ; but reason lives
Immortal, as her Father in the skies.

Wrong not the Christian, think not reason yours :
'Tis reason our great Master holds so dear ;
'Tis reason's injur'd rights his wrath resents.
Believe, and show the reason of a man ;
Believe, and taste the pleasure of a God ;
Believe, and look with triumph on the tomb :
Through reason's wounds alone, thy faith can die ;

Which dying, tenfold terrors gives to death,
And dips in venom his twice-mortal sting.

§ 175. False Philosophy.

LEARN hence what honors due to those who push

Our antidote aside ; those friends to reason,
Whose fatal love stabs every joy, and leaves
Death's terror heighten'd gnawing on his heart ;
Those pompous sons of reason idoliz'd,
And vilify'd at once ; of reason dead,
Then deified, as monarchs were of old. [sounds,
While love of truth through all their camp re-
They draw pride's curtain o'er the noon-tide ray,
Spike up their inch of reason, on the point
Of philosophic wit, call'd argument,
And then, exulting in their taper, cry,

"Behold the sun ;" and, Indian-like, adore.
Talk they of morals ? O thou bleeding Love ;
Thou maker of new morals to mankind !

The grand morality is love of thee.
 A Christian is the highest style of man.
 And is there, who the blessed cross wipes off
 As a foul blot from his dishonour'd brow?
 If angels tremble, 'tis at such a sight:
 The wretch they quit, desponding of their charge,
 More struck with grief or wonder, who can tell?

§ 176. The mere Man of the World.

YE sold to sense, ye citizens of earth,
 (For such alone the Christian banner fly)
 Know ye how wise your choice, how great your gain?

Behold the picture of earth's happiest man:
 "He calls his wish, it comes; he sends it back,
 "And says, he call'd another; that arrives,
 "Meets the same welcome; yet he still calls on,
 "Till one calls him, who varies not his call,
 "But holds him fast, in chains of darkness bound,

"Till nature dies, and judgement sets him free:
 "A freedom far less welcome than his chain."

But grant man happy; grant him happy long;
 Add to life's highest prize her latest hour;
 That hour, so late, comes on in full career:
 How swift the shuttle flies that weaves thy shroud!

Where is the fable of thy former years?
 Thrown down the gulph of time; as far from
 thee

As they had ne'er been thine; the day in hand,
 Like a bird struggling to get loose, is going;
 Scarcè now possess, so suddenly 'tis gone;
 And each swift moment fled, is death advanc'd
 By strides as swift: Eternity is all;
 And whose eternity? Who triumphs here,
 Bathing for ever in the font of bliss,
 For ever basking in the Deity?

Conscience, reply: O give it leave to speak;
 For it will speak ere long. Oh hear it now:
 While useful its advice, its accents mild.
 Truth is deposited with man's last hour;
 An honest hour, and faithful to her trust—
 Truth, eldest daughter of the Deity;
 Truth, of his council when he made the worlds,
 Nor less when he shall judge the worlds he made:
 Though silent long, and sleeping ne'er so sound,
 That Heaven-commission'd hour no sooner calls,
 Than from her cavern in the soul's abyss,
 The goddess bursts in thunder and in flame:
 "Men may live fools, but fools they cannot die."

§ 177. NIGHT V. Darkness.

LET Indians, and the gay, like Indians, fond
 Of feather'd fopperies, the sun adore:
 Darkness has more divinity for me:
 It strikes thought inward, it drives back the soul
 To settle on herself, our point supreme!
 There lies our theatre; there sits our judge,
 Darkness the curtain drops o'er life's dull scene;
 'Tis the kind hand of Providence stretcht out
 'Twixt man and vanity; 'tis Reason's reign,
 And Virtue's too; these tutelary shades
 Are man's asylum from the tainted throng.

§ 178. The Futility of Man's Resolutions.

VIRTUE for ever frail as fair below,
 Her tender nature suffers in the crowd,
 Nor touches on the world without a stain.
 The world's infectious; few bring back at eve
 Immaculate the manners of the morn:
 Something we thought, is blotted; we resolv'd,
 Is shaken; we renounc'd, returns again.
 Each salutation may slide in a sin
 Unthought before, or fix a former flaw.
 Nor is it strange, light, motion, concourse, noise,
 All scatter us abroad; thought outward bound,
 Neglectful of our home affairs, flies off
 In fume and dissipation, quits her charge,
 And leaves the breast unguarded to the foe.

§ 179. The Power of Example.

PRESENT example gets within our guard,
 And acts by double force, by few repell'd.
 Ambition fires ambition; love of gain
 Strikes like a pestilence from breast to breast;
 Riot, pride, perfidy, blue vapors breathe!
 And inhumanity is caught from man,
 From smiling man. A slight, a single glance,
 And shot at random, often has brought home
 A sudden fever to the throbbing heart
 Of envy, rancour, or impure desire.
 We see, we hear with peril; safety dwells
 Remote from multitude; the world's a school
 Of wrong, and what proficients swarm around!
 We must or imitate or disapprove;
 Must list as their accomplices or foes; [peace.
 That stains our innocence; this wounds our
 From nature's birth, hence, wisdom has been smit
 With sweet recess, and languish'd for the shade.

§ 180. Midnight.

THIS sacred shade, and solitude, what is it?
 'Tis the felt presence of the Deity.
 Few are the faults we flatter when alone:
 Vice sinks in her allurements, is ungilt,
 And looks, like other objects, black by night.
 By night an atheist half believes a God.
 Night is fair Virtue's immemorial friend;
 The conscious moon, through every distant age,
 Has held a lamp to Wisdom, and let fall
 On contemplation's eye her purging ray.
 Hail, precious moments! stol'n from the black waste
 Of murder'd time; auspicious midnight, hail!
 The world excluded, every passion hush'd,
 And open'd a calm intercourse with heav'n;
 Here the soul sits in council, ponders past,
 Predestines future actions; sees, not feels,
 Tumultuous life; and reasons with the storm;
 All her lies answers, and thinks down her charms.

§ 181. Little to be expected from Man.

WHAT are we! how unequal! now we soar,
 And now we sink: how dearly pays the soul
 For lodging ill; too dearly rents her clay!
 Reason, a baffled counsellor! but adds

The blush of weakness to the bane of woe.
The noblest spirit fighting her hard fate,
In this damp, dusky region, charg'd with storms,
But feebly flutters, yet untaught to fly.

'Tis vain to seek in men for more than man.
Though proud in promise, big in previous
thought,

Experience damps our triumph. I, who late,
Emerging from the shadows of the grave,
Threw wide the gates of everlasting day,
And call'd mankind to glory, down I rush,
In sorrow drown'd—but not, in sorrow, lost.
How wretched is the man, who never mourn'd!
I dive for precious pearls, in sorrow's stream:
Not so the thoughtless man that only grieves,
Takes all the torment, and rejects the gain,
(Inestimable gain!) and gives Heaven leave
To make him but more wretched, not more wise.

§ 182. Wisdom.

If wisdom is our lesson, (and what else
Ennobles man? what else have angels learnt?)
Grief, more proficient in thy school are made,
Than genius or proud learning ere could boast.
Voracious learning, often over-fed,
Digests not into sense her motley meal.
This forager on others' wisdom leaves
Her native farm, her reason, quite untill'd:
With mixt manure she surfeits the rank soil,
Dung'd, but not drest; and rich to beggary:
A pomp untameable of weeds prevails:
Her servant's wealth encumber'd wisdom
mourns.

And what says Genius? "Let the dull be wise;"

It pleads exemption from the laws of sense;
Considers Reason as a leveller,
And scorns to share a blessing with the crowd.
That wise it could be, thinks an ample claim
To glory, and to pleasure gives the rest.
Wisdom less shudders at a fool than wit.

But Wisdom smiles, when humbled mortals weep.

When sorrow wounds the breast, as ploughs the glebe,

And hearts obdurate feel her softening shower;
Her seed celestial then glad Wisdom sows,
Her golden harvest triumphs in the soil.

If so, I'll gain by my calamity,
And reap rich compensation from my pain
I'll range the plenteous intellectual field,
And gather every thought of sovereign power,
To chase the moral maladies of man; [skies,
Thoughts, which may bear transplanting to the
Though natives of this coarse penurious soil,
Nor wholly wither there, where seraphs sing;
Refin'd, exalted, not annull'd in heaven.

§ 183. Reflections in a Church-yard.

SAY, on what themes shall puzzled choice descend?

"Th' importance of contemplating the tomb;

"Why men decline it; Suicide's foul birth;
"The various kinds of grief; the faults of age:
"And Death's dread character—invite my song."

And first, th' importance of our end survey'd.
Friends counsel quick dismissal of our grief;
Mistaken kindness! our hearts heal too soon.
Are they more kind than He who struck the blow?
Who bid it do his errand in our hearts,
And banish peace till nobler guests arrive,
And bring it back a true and endless peace?
Calamities are friends: as glaring day
Of these unnumber'd lustres robs our sight;
Prosperity puts out unnumber'd thoughts
Of import high, and light divine to man.

The man how blest, who, sick of gaudy scenes.
(Scenes apt to thrust between us and ourselves!)
Is led by choice to take his favorite walk
Beneath Death's gloomy, silent cypress shades,
Unpierc'd by Vanity's fantastic ray;
To read his monuments, to weigh his dust,
Visit his vaults, and dwell among the tombs!
Lorenzo, read with me Narcissa's stone;
Few orators so tenderly can touch
The feeling heart. What pathos in the date!
Apt words can strike, and yet in them we see
Faint images of what we here enjoy.
What cause have we to build on length of life?
Temptations seise when fear is laid asleep;
And ill-foreboding is our strongest guard.

See from her tomb, Truth sallies on my soul,
And puts Delusion's dusky train to flight;
Dispels the mists our sultry passions raise,
And shows the real estimate of things,
Which no man, unafflicted, ever saw;
Pulls off the veil from Virtue's rising charms;
Detects Temptation in a thousand lies.
Truth bids me look on men, as autumn's leaves,
And all they bleed for, as the summer's dust,
Driven by the whirlwind: lighted by her beams,
I widen my horizon, gain new powers,
See things invisible, feel things remote,
Am present with futurities; think nought
To man so foreign, as the joys possess,
Nought so much his as those beyond the grave.

No folly keeps its color in her sight:
Pale worldly wisdom loses all her charms.
How differ worldly wisdom, and divine?
Just as the waning and the waxing moon;
More empty worldly wisdom every day;
And every day more fair her rival shines.
But soon our term for wisdom is expir'd,
And everlasting fool is writ in fire,
Or real wisdom wafts us to the skies.

What grave prescribes the best?—a friend's;
and yet

From a friend's grave how soon we disengage,
Even to the dearest, as his marble, cold!
Why are friends ravish'd from us? 'tis to bind,
By soft affection's ties, on human hearts,
The thought of death, which reason, too supine,
Or misemploy'd, so rarely fastens there.
Nor reason, nor affection, no, nor both
Combin'd can break the witchcrafts of the world.
Behold th' inexorable hour at hand!

Behold th'inexorable hour forgot!
And to forget it, the chief aim of life;
Though well to ponder it is life's chief end.

§ 184. Little Attention paid to the Warnings of Death.

Is Death, that ever threat'ning, ne'er remote,
That all-important, and that only sure,
(Come when he will) an unexpected guest?
Nay, though invited by the loudest calls
Of blind imprudence, unexpected still,
Though numerous messengers are sent before
To warn his great arrival? What the cause,
The wondrous cause, of this mysterious ill?
All heaven looks down astonish'd at the sight.

§ 185. Life compared to a Stream.

Is it, that life has sown her joys so thick,
We can't thrust in a single care between?
Is it, that life has such a swarm of cares,
The thought of death can't enter for the throng?
Is it that time steals on with downy feet,
Nor wakes indulgence from her golden dream?
To-day is so like yesterday, it cheats;
We take the lying sister for the same.
Life glides away, Lorenzo, like a brook;
For ever changing, unperceiv'd the change.
In the same brook none ever bath'd him twice:
To the same life none ever twice awoke.
We call the brook the same; the same we think
Our life, though still more rapid in its flow;
Nor mark the much irrevocably laps'd,
And mingled with the sea. Or shall we say (Retaining still the brook to bear us on)
That life is like a vessel on the stream?
In life embark'd, we smoothly down the tide
Of time descend, but not on time intent,
Amus'd, unconscious of the gliding wave;
Till on a sudden we perceive a shock;
We start, awake, look out; our bark is burst.

Is this the cause death flies all human thought?
Or is it judgement by the will struck blind,
That domineering mistress of the soul!
Or is it fear turns startled reason back,
From looking down a precipice so steep?
'Tis dreadful; and the dread is wisely plac'd,
By nature conscious of the make of man.
A dreadful friend it is, a terror kind,
A flaming sword to guard the tree of life.
By that unaw'd, man on each pique of pride,
Or gloom of humor, would give rage the rein,
Bound o'er the barrier, rush into the dark,
And mar the schemes of Providence below.

§ 186. Suicide.

WHAT groan was that? There took his gloomy
flight,
On wing impetuous, a black sullen soul,
Blasted from hell with horrid lust of death.
Thy friend, the brave, the gallant Altamont
So call'd, so thought—and then he fled the field.
Less base the fear of death, than fear of life.
O Britain! infamous for suicide;
An island in thy manners! far disjoin'd

From the whole world of rationals beside,
In ambient waves plunge thy polluted head,
Wash the dire stain, nor shock the continent.

But thou be shock'd, while I detect the cause
Of self-assault, expose the monster's birth,
And bid abhorrence hiss it round the world.
Blame not thy clime, nor chide the distant sun;
Immoral climes kind nature never made.
The cause I sing in Eden might prevail,
And proves it is thy folly, not thy fate.

The soul of man (let man in homage bow
Who names his soul) a native of the skies!
High-horn, and free, her freedom should maintain,

Unsold, unmortgag'd for earth's little bribes.
Th' illustrious stranger, in this foreign land
Like strangers, jealous of her dignity,
Studious of home, and ardent to return,
Of earth suspicious, earth's enchanted cup
With cool reserve light-touching, should indulge
On immortality her godlike taste;
There take large draughts; make her chief banquet there.

But some reject this sustenance divine;
To beggarly vile appetites descend;
Ask alms of earth for gifts that came from heaven;
Sink into slaves; and sell, for present hire,
Their rich reversion, and (what shares its fate)
Their native freedom, to the prince who sways
This nether world. And when his payments fail,
When his full basket gorges them no more;
Or their pall'd palates loath the basket full,
Are, instantly, with wild demoniac rage,
For breaking all the chains of Providence,
And bursting their confinement; though fast barr'd

By laws divine and human; guarded strong
With horrors doubled to defend the pass
The blackest nature or dire guilt can raise;
And moated round with fathomless destruction,
Sure to receive, and whelm them in their fall.

Such, Britons! is the cause, to you unknown,
Or worse, o'erlook'd; o'erlook'd by magistrates,
Thus criminals themselves. I grant the deed
Is madness; but the madness of the heart.
And what is that? our utmost bound of guilt.
A sensual, unreflecting life is big
With monstrous births, and suicide, to crown
The black infernal brood. The bold to break
Heaven's law supreme, and desperately rush
Through sacred nature's murder, on their own,
Because they never think of death, they die.
When by the bed of languishment we sit,
Or, o'er our dying friends, in anguish hang,
Wipe the cold dew, or stay the sinking head,
Number their moments, and in ev'ry clock
Start at the voice of an eternity;
See the dim lamp of life just feebly lift
An agonizing beam, at us to gaze.
Then sink again, and quiver into death,
(That most pathetic herald of our own!)
How read we such sad scenes? as sent to man
In perfect vengeance? no; in pity sent,
To melt him down, like wax, and then impress,

Indelible, death's image on his heart;
 Bleeding for others, trembling for himself.
 We bleed, we tremble; we forget, we smile:
 The mind turns fool, before the cheek is dry:
 Our quick returning folly cancels all;
 As the tide rushing rases what is writ
 In yielding sands, and smooths the letter'd shore.

§ 187. Tears.

LORENZO! hast thou ever weigh'd a sigh?
 Or studied the philosophy of tears?
 Hast thou descended deep into the breast,
 And seen their source? If not, descend with me,
 And trace these briny riv'lets to their springs.

Our funeral tears from different causes rise:
 Of various kinds they flow. From tender hearts,
 By soft contagion call'd, some burst at once,
 And stream obsequious to the leading eye.
 Some ask more time, by curious art distill'd.
 Some hearts, in secret hard, unapt to melt,
 Struck by the public eye, gush out amain.
 Some weep to share the fame of the deceas'd,
 So high in merit, and to them so dear: [share.
 They dwell on praises, which they think they
 Some mourn in proof that something they could love.

They weep not to relieve their grief, but show.
 Some weep in perfect justice to the dead,
 As conscious all their love is in arrear.
 Some mischievously weep, not unappris'd,
 Tears, sometimes, aid the conquest of an eye.
 As seen through crystal, how their roses glow,
 While liquid pearl runs trickling down their cheek.

By kind construction some are deem'd to weep,
 Because a decent veil conceals their joy.

Some weep in earnest; and yet weep in vain;
 As deep in indiscretion, as in woe.

Passion, blind passion! impotently pours
 Tears, that deserve more tears; while reason sleeps,
 Or gazes, like an idiot, unconcern'd;
 Nor comprehends the meaning of the storm.
 They weep impetuous, as the summer storm,
 And full as short! The cruel grief soon tam'd,
 They make a pastime of the stingless tale!
 Far as the deep-resounding knell, they spread
 The dreadful news, and hardly feel it more.
 No grain of wisdom pays them for their woe.
 When the sick soul, her wonted stay withdrawn,
 Reclines on earth, and sorrows in the dust;
 Instead of learning there her true support,
 She crawls to the next shrub, or bramble vile,
 The stranger weds, and blossoms, as before,
 In all the fruitless fopperies of life.

§ 188. Inattention to the Voice of Death.

WHAT thus infatuates? what enchantment plants
 The phantom of an age 'twixt us and death,
 Already at the door? He knocks, we hear him,
 And yet we will not hear. What mail defends
 Our untouch'd hearts? what miracle turns off
 The pointed thought, which from a thousand
 Is daily darted, and is daily shunn'd? [quivers
 We stand as in a battle, throngs on throngs

Around us falling; wounded oft ourselves;
 Though bleeding with our wounds, immortal
 We see time's furrows on another's brow, [still!
 And death intrench'd, preparing his assault;
 How few themselves, in that just mirror, see!

Absurd Longevity! More, more, it cries:
 More life, more wealth, more trash of every kind!
 And wherefore mad for more, when relish fails?
 Shall folly labor hard to mend the bow,
 While nature is relaxing ev'ry string?
 Ask thought for joy; grow rich and hoard within.
 Think you the soul, when this life's rattles cease,
 Has nothing of more manly to succeed?
 Contract the taste immortal; learn even now
 To relish what alone subsists hereafter:
 Divine or none, henceforth, your joys for ever.
 Of age, the glory is to wish to die.

That wish is praise and promise; it applauds
 Past life, and promises our future bliss.
 What weakness see not children in their sires?
 Grand-climacterical absurdities!

Grey-hair'd authority to faults of youth,
 How shocking! it makes folly thrice a fool;
 And our first childhood might our last despise.

What folly can be ranker? like our shadows,
 Our wishes lengthen, as our sun declines.
 No wish should loiter, then, this side the grave.
 Our hearts should leave the world, before the Calls for our carcasses to mend the soil. [knell
 Enough to live in tempest, die in port;
 Age should fly concourse, cover in retreat
 Defects of judgement, and the will subdue;
 Walk thoughtful on the silent, solemn shore
 Of that vast ocean it must sail so soon;
 And put good works on board; and wait the wind
 That shortly blows us into worlds unknown;
 If unconsider'd, too, a dreadful scene!

§ 189. Little Learning required to be Good.

BUT you are learn'd; in volumes deep you sit;
 In wisdom shallow: pompous ignorance!
 Learn well to know how much need not be known; [sense.

And what that knowledge, which impairs your
 Our needful knowledge, like our needful food,
 Unhedg'd, lies open in life's common field;
 And bids all welcome to the vital feast.

You scorn what lies before you in the page
 Of nature and experience, moral truth;
 And dive in science for distinguish'd names,
 Sinking in virtue, as you rise in fame.

Your learning, like the lunar beam, affords
 Light, but not heat; it leaves you undevout.
 If you would learn death's character, attend.

All casts of conduct, all degrees of health,
 All dies of fortune, and all dates of age,
 Together shook in his impartial urn,
 Come forth at random. Or if choice is made,
 The choice is quite sarcastic, and insults
 All bold conjecture, and fond hopes of man.

§ 190. The Caprice and universal Power of Death.

LIKE other tyrants, Death delights to smite,

What smitten most proclaims the pride of power,
And arbitrary nod. His joy supreme,
To bid the wretch survive the fortunate;
The feeble wrap th' athletic in his shroud;
And weeping fathers build their children's tomb;
Me thine, Narcissa!—what though short thy date?

Virtue, not rolling suns, the mind matures.
That life is long, which answers life's great end.
The time that bears no fruit, deserves no name:
The man of wisdom is the man of years.
In hoary youth Methusalems may die,
O how misdated on their flattering tombs!

All more than common menaces an end;
A blaze betokens brevity of life.
To plant the soul on her eternal guard,
In awful expectation of our end, [but so
Thus runs Death's dread commission; "Strike,
"As most alarms the living by the dead."
Hence stratagem delights him, and surprise,
And cruel sport with man's securities.

Not simple conquest, triumph is his aim, [most.
And where least fear'd, there conquest triumphs

What are his arts to lay our fears asleep!
Tiberian arts his purposes wrap up
In deep dissimulation's darkest night.
Like princes unconfest in foreign courts,
Who travel under cover, Death assumes
The name and look of life, and dwells among us.
Behind the rosy bloom he loves to lurk,
Or ambush in a smile; or wanton dive
In dimples deep; love's eddies, which draw in Unwary hearts, and sink them in despair.

Most happy they whom least his arts deceive.
One eye on death, and one full fix'd on heaven,
Becomes a mortal and immortal man.

Where is not death? sure as night follows day,
Death treads in pleasure's footsteps round the world, [shuns,

When pleasure treads the paths which reason
When against reason riot shuts the door,
And gaiety supplies the place of sense.
Then foremost at the banquet and the ball,
Death leads the dance, or damps the deadly die;
Nor ever fails the midnight bowl to crown.

Gaily carousing to his gay compeers,
Inly he laughs, to see them laugh at him,
As absent far: and when the revel burns,
When fear is banish'd, and triumphant thought
Calling for all the joys beneath the moon,
Against him turns the key: and bids him sup
With their progenitors—He drops his mask;
Frowns out at full; they start, despair, expire!

Scarce with more sudden terror and surprise,
From his black mask of nitre, touch'd by fire
He bursts, expands, roars, blazes, and devours.
And is not this triumphant treachery,
And more than simple conquest in the fiend?

And now, gay trifler, dost thou wrap thy soul
In soft security, because unknown
Which moment is commission'd to destroy?
In death's uncertainty thy danger lies.
Is death uncertain? therefore thou be fix'd;
Fix'd as a sentinel, all eye, all ear,

All expectation of the coming foe.
Rouse, stand in arms, nor lean against thy spear,
Lest slumber steal one moment o'er thy soul,
And fate surprise thee nodding. Watch, be strong;
Thus give each day the merit, and renown,
Of dying well; though doom'd but once to die;
Nor let life's period hidden (as from most),
Hide too from thee the precious use of life.

Does wealth with youth and gaiety conspire
To weave a triple wreath of happiness?
That shining mark invites the tyrant's spear,
As if to damp our elevated aims,
And strongly preach humility to man.
O how portentous is prosperity!
How, comet-like, it threatens while it shines!
Few years but yield us proof of Death's ambition
To cull his victims from the fairest fold,
And sheath his shafts in all the pride of life.
When flooded with abundance, purpled o'er
With recent honours, bloom'd with every bliss;
Set up in ostentation, made to gaze,
The gaudy centre of the public eye;
When fortune, thus, has toss'd her child in air,
Snatch'd from the covert of an humble state,
How often have I seen him dropp'd at once,
Our morning's envy, and our ev'ning's sigh!
As if her bounties were the signal giv'n,
The flow'ry wreath, to mark the sacrifice,
And call Death's arrows on the destin'd prey.

§ 191. NIGHT VI. The Death of Narcissa.

SHE (for I know not yet her name in heaven)
Not early, like Narcissa, left the scene;
Nor sudden, like Philander. What avail?
This seeming mitigation but inflames;
This fancy'd medicine heightens the disease.
The longer known, the closer still she grew;
And gradual parting is a gradual death.

O the long dark approach through years of pain,
Death's gallery, with sable terror hung;
Sick hope's pale lamp its only glimmering ray!
There fate my melancholy walk ordain'd.
How oft I gaz'd, prophetically sad!
How oft I saw her dead while yet in smiles!
In smiles she sunk her grief to lessen mine:
She spoke me comfort, and increas'd my pain.
Like powerful armies trenching at a town,
By slow and silent, but resistless sap,
In his pale progress gently gaining ground,
Death urg'd his deadly siege: in spite of art,
Of all the balmy blessings nature lends
To succour frail humanity. Ye stars!
And thou, O moon! bear witness; many a night
He tore the pillow from beneath my head,
Tied down my sore attention to the shock,
By ceaseless depredations on a life,
Dearer than that he left me, Dreadful post
Of observation! darker every hour!
Less dread the day that drove me to the brink,
And pointed at eternity below.
When my soul shudder'd at futurity,
When, on a moment's point, th' important die
Of life and death, spun doubtful, ere it fell,
And turn'd up life; my title to more woe.

But why more woe? more comfort let it be.
 Nothing is dead, but that which wish'd to die;
 Nothing is dead, but wretchedness and pain:
 Nothing is dead, but what encumber'd, gall'd,
 Block'd up the pass, and barr'd from real life.
 Where dwells that wish most ardent of the wise?
 Too dark the sun to see it; highest stars
 Too low to reach it; death, great death alone,
 O'er stars and sun triumphant, lands us there.

Nor dreadful our transition; though the mind,
 An artist at creating self-alarms,
 Rich in expedients for inquietude,
 Is prone to paint it dreadful. Who can take Death's portrait true? the tyrant never sat.
 Our sketch, all random strokes, conjecture all;
 Close shuts the grave, nor tells one single tale.
 Death, and his image rising in the brain,
 Bear faint resemblance; never are alike;
 Fear shakes the pencil, Fancy loves excess,
 Dark Ignorance is lavish of her shades;
 And these the formidable picture draw.

But grant the worst; 'tis past; new prospects
 And drop a veil eternal o'er her tomb. [rise;
 Far other views our contemplation claim,
 Views that o'erpay the rigors of our life;
 Views that suspend our agonies in death.
 Wrapt in the thought of immortality,
 Long life might lapse, age unperceiv'd come on;
 And find the soul unsated with her theme:
 Its nature, proof, importance, fire my song.

§ 192. Reflections on Man and Immortality.

THY nature, Immortality, who knows?
 And yet who knows it not? It is but life
 In stronger thread of brighter color spun,
 And spun for ever; black and brittle here!
 How short our correspondence with the sun!
 And while it lasts, inglorious! our best deeds,
 How wanting in their weight! our highest joys,
 Small cordials to support us in our pain,
 And give us strength to suffer. But how great
 To mingle interests, converse, amities,
 With all the sons of Reason, scatter'd wide
 Through habitable space, wherever born,
 Howe'er endow'd! to live free citizens
 Of universal Nature! to lay hold
 By more than feeble faith on the Supreme!
 To call heaven's rich unfathomable mines
 Our own! to rise in science as in bliss,
 Initiate in the secrets of the skies!
 To read creation; read its mighty plan
 In the bare bosom of the Deity!
 The plan and execution to collate!
 To see, before each glance of piercing thought,
 All cloud, all shadow blown remote; and leave
 No mystery—but that of love divine,
 Which lifts us on the seraph's flaming wing,
 From earth's Aceldama, this field of blood,
 Of inward anguish, and of outward ill,
 From darkness, and from dust, to such a scene!
 Love's element! true joy's illustrious home!
 From earth's sad contrast (now deplor'd) more fair. [great.

These are the thoughts that aggrandise the

How great (while yet we tread the kindred clod,
 And every moment fear to sink beneath
 The clod we tread; soon trodden by our sons)—
 How great, in the wild whirl of time's pursuits,
 To stop, and pause, involv'd in high presage;
 Through the long vista of a thousand years,
 To stand contemplating our distant selves,
 As in a magnifying mirror seen,
 Enlarg'd, ennobled, elevate, divine!
 To prophesy our own futurities!
 To gaze in thought on what all thought transcends!
 To talk, with fellow-candidates, of joys,
 As far beyond conception as desert,
 Ourselves th' astonish'd talkers and the tale!
 When mount we? when these shackles cast?
 when quit

This cell of the creation? this small nest,
 Stuck in a corner of the universe,
 Wrapt up in fleecy cloud, and fine-spun-air?
 Fine-spun to sense, but gross and feculent
 To souls celestial; souls ordain'd to breathe
 Ambrosial gales, and drink a purer sky;
 Greatly triumphant on time's farther shore.

In an eternity what scenes shall strike!
 What webs of wonder shall unravel there!
 What full day pour on all the paths of heaven,
 And light th' Almighty's footsteps in the deep!
 How shall the blessed day of our discharge
 Unwind, at once, the labyrinths of fate,
 And straighten its inextricable maze!

If inextinguishable thirst in man
 To know; how rich, how full our banquet here!
 Here, not the moral world alone unfolds;
 The world material lately seen in shades,
 And in those shades, by fragments only seen,
 And seen those fragments by the laboring eye,
 Unbroken, now, illustrious, and entire,
 Its ample sphere, its universal frame,
 In full dimensions, swells to the survey;
 And enters, at one glance, the ravish'd sight.
 How shall the stranger man's illumin'd eye,
 In the vast ocean of unbounded space,
 Behold an infinite of floating worlds
 Divide the crystal waves of ether pure,
 In endless voyage, without port! the least
 Of these disseminated orbs how great!
 Yet what are these to the stupendous whole?
 As particles, as atoms ill-perceiv'd.

If admiration is a source of joy, [heaven.
 What transport hence! Yet this the least in
 What this to that illustrious robe He wears,
 Who toss'd this mass of wonders from his hand,
 A specimen, an earnest of his power!
 'Tis, to that glory, whence all glory flows,
 As the mead's meanest flow'ret to the sun,
 Which gave it birth. But what, this Sun of heaven!

This bliss supreme of the supremely blest!
 Death, only death, the question can resolve.
 By death cheap-bought th' ideas of our joy!
 The bare ideas! solid happiness
 So distant from its shadow chas'd below! [fire,
 And chase we still the phantom through the O'er bog, and brake, and precipice, 'till death?

And toil we still for sublunary pay?
 Defy the dangers of the field, and flood,
 Or, spider-like, spin out our precious all,
 Our more than vitals spin in curious webs
 Of subtle thought, and exquisite design;
 (Fine net-work of the brain!) to catch a fly?
 The momentary buz of vain renown!
 A name, a mortal immortality.

§ 193. Genius connected with Ignominy.

GENIUS and art, ambition's boasted wings,
 Our boast but ill deserve. A feeble aid!
 Heart-merit wanting, mount we ne'er so high,
 Our height is but the gibbet of our name.
 When I behold a genius bright and base,
 Of towering talents, and terrestrial aims;
 Methinks, I see, as thrown from her high sphere,
 The glorious fragments of a soul immortal,
 With rubbish mixt, and glittering in the dust.

Hearts are proprietors of all applause,
 Right ends, and means, make wisdom: worldly-
 Is but half-witted; at its highest praise. [wise

§ 194. Exalted Station.

—WHAT is station high?
 'Tis a proud mendicant; it boasts, and begs;
 It begs an alms of homage from the throng,
 And oft the throng denies its charity.
 Monarchs and ministers are awful names;
 Whoever wear them, challenge our devoir.
 Religion, public order, both exact
 External homage, and a supple knee,
 To beings pompously set up, to serve
 The meanest slave; all more is merit's due;
 Her sacred and inviolable right,
 Nor ever paid the monarch, but the man.
 Our hearts ne'er bow but to superior worth;
 Nor ever fail of their allegiance there.
 Fools indeed drop the man in their account,
 And vote the mantle into majesty.
 Let the small savage boast his silver fur;
 His royal robe unborrow'd, and unbought,
 His own, descending fairly from his sires.
 Shall man be proud to wear his livery,
 And souls in ermine scorn a soul without?
 Can place or lessen us or aggrandise?
 Pigmies are pigmies still, though perch'd on Alps,
 And pyramids are pyramids in vales.
 Each man makes his own stature, builds himself:
 Virtue alone out-builds the pyramids;
 Her monuments shall last, when Egypt's fall.

Of these sure truths dost thou demand the cause?
 The cause is lodg'd in immortality.
 Hear, and assent. Thy bosom burns for pow'r;
 'Tis thine. And art thou greater than before?
 Then thou before was something less than man.
 Has thy new post betray'd thee into pride?
 That pride defames humanity, and calls [raise.
 The being mean, which staffs or strings can § 195. True Greatness.

THAT prince, and that alone, is truly great,
 Who draws the sword reluctant, gladly sheaths;
 On empire builds what empire far outweighs,

And makes his throne a scaffold to the skies.
 Why this so rare? because forgot of all
 The day of death; that venerable day, [nounce
 Which sits as judge: that day which shall pro-
 On all our days, absolve them, or condemn.
 Lorenzo! never shut thy thought against it;
 Be levees ne'er so full, afford it room,
 And give it audience in the cabinet.
 That friend consulted, flatteries apart,
 Will tell thee fair, if thou art great or mean.

To doat on aught may leave us, or be left,
 Is that ambition? then let flames descend,
 Point to the centre their inverted spires:
 When blind ambition quite mistakes her road,
 And downward pores, for that which shines
 Substantial happiness, and true renown; [above,
 Then, like an idiot gazing on the brook,
 We leap at stars, and fasten in the mud;
 At glory grasp, and sink in infamy.

§ 196. The Torment of Ambition.

AMBITION! powerful source of good and ill!
 Thy strength in man, like length of wing in birds,

When disengag'd from earth, with greater ease
 And swifter flight, transports us to the skies.
 By toys entangled, or in guilt bemir'd,
 It turns a curse; it is our chain, and scourge,
 In this dark dungeon, where confin'd we lie,
 Close-grated by the sordid bars of sense;
 All prospect of eternity shut out;
 And but for execution ne'er set free.

§ 197. True Riches.

WITH error in ambition, justly charg'd,
 Find we Lorenzo wiser in his wealth? [me," Where thy true treasure? Gold says, "not in
 And, "not in me," the diamond. Gold is poor;
 India's insolvent: seek it in thyself;
 Seek in thy naked self, and find it there:
 In being so descended, form'd, endow'd;
 Sky-born, sky-guided, sky-returning race!
 Erect, immortal, rational, divine!
 In senses, which inherit earth and heavens;
 Enjoy the various riches nature yields:
 Far nobler! give the riches they enjoy;
 Give taste to fruits; and harmony to groves;
 Their radiant beams to gold, and gold's bright
 fire;
 Take in at once the landscape of the world,
 At a small inlet, which a grain might close,
 And half create the wondrous world they see.
 Our senses, as our reason, are divine.
 But for the magic organ's powerful charm,
 Earth were a rude, uncolor'd chaos still.
 Ours is the cloth, the pencil, and the paint,
 Which beautifies creation's ample dome.
 Say then, shall man, his thoughts all sent abroad,
 Superior wonders in himself forgot,
 His admiration waste on objects round,
 When heaven makes him the soul of all he sees?
 Absurd! not rare! so great, so mean, is man.
 What wealth in senses such as these! what
 In fancy, fir'd to form a fairer scene [wealth

Than sense surveys! in memory's firm record,
Which, should it perish, could this world recall
From the dark shadows of o'erwhelming years!
In colors fresh, originally bright
Preserve its portrait, and report its fate!
What wealth in intellect, that sovereign power!
Which sense, and fancy summons to the bar;
Interrogates, approves, or reprehends:
And from the mass those underlings import,
From their materials sifted, and refin'd,
Forms art, and science, government, and law.

What wealth in souls that soar, dive, range
around.
Disdaining limit, or from place, or time;
And hear at once, in thought extensive, hear
Th' almighty fiat, and the trumpet's sound!
Bold, on creation's outside walk, and view
What was, and is, and more than e'er shall be;
Commanding, with omnipotence of thought,
Creations new, in fancy's field to rise!
Souls, that can grasp whate'er th' Almighty made;
And wander wild through things impossible;
What wealth, in faculties of endless growth,
In liberty to choose, in power to reach,
And in duration (how thy riches rise!)
Duration to perpetuate—boundless bliss!

§ 198. The Vanity of Wealth.

HIGH-BUILT abundance, heap on heap! for what?
To breed new wants, and beggar us the more;
Then make a richer scramble for the throng?
Soon as this feeble pulse, which leaps so long,
Almost by miracles, is tir'd with play,
Like rubbish, from dislodging engines thrown,
Our magazines of hoarded trifles fly;
Fly diverse; fly to foreigners, to foes;
New masters court, and call the former fool
(How justly!) for dependence on their stay.
Wide scatter first, our play-things, then our dust.

Much learning shows how little mortals
know:
Much wealth, how little worldlings can enjoy:
At best it babies us with endless toys;
And keeps us children till we drop to dust.
As monkeys at a mirror stand amaz'd,
They fail to find what they so plainly see;
Thus men in shining riches see the face
Of happiness, nor know it is a shade;
But gaze, and touch, and peep, and peep again,
And wish, and wonder it is absent still.

How few can rescue opulence from want!
Who lives to nature, rarely can be poor;
Who lives to fancy, never can be rich.
Poor is the man in debt; the man of gold,
In debt to fortune, trembles at her pow'r.
The man of reason smiles at her, and death.
O what a patrimony, this! a being
Of such inherent strength and majesty,
Not worlds possess can raise it; worlds destroy'd
Can't injure; which hold on its glorious course,
When thine, O nature, ends; too blest to mourn
Creation's obsequies. What treasure, this!
The monarch is a beggar to the man.

§ 199. Immortality.

IMMORTAL! ages past, yet nothing gone!
Morn without eve! a race without a goal!
Unshorten'd by progression infinite!
Futurity for ever future! life
Beginning still, where computation ends!
'Tis the description of a Deity!
'Tis the description of the meanest slave.
Immortal! what can strike the sense so strong,
As this the soul? it thunders to the thought;
Reason amazes; gratitude o'erwhelms;
No more we slumber on the brink of fate;
Rous'd at the sound, th' exulting soul ascends,
And breathes her native air; an air that feeds
Ambition high, and fans ethereal fires;
Quick-kindles all that is divine within us;
Nor leaves one loitering thought beneath the stars.

Immortal! was but one immortal, how
Would others envy! how would thrones adore!
Because 'tis common, is the blessing lost?
How this ties up the bounteous hand of Heaven!
O vain, vain, vain! all else: eternity!
A glorious, and a needful refuge that,
From vile imprisonment in abject views.
'Tis immortality, 'tis that alone,
Amidst life's pains, abasements, emptiness,
The soul can comfort, elevate, and fill.
Eternity depending covers all;
Sets earth at distance, casts her into shades;
Blends her distinctions; abrogates her pow'rs;
The low, the lofty, joyous, and severe,
Fortune's dread frowns, and fascinating smiles,
Make one promiscuous and neglected heap,
The man beneath; if I may call him man,
Whom immortality's full force inspires.
Nothing terrestrial touches his high thought;
Suns shine unseen, and thunders roll unheard,
By minds quite conscious of their high descent,
Their present province, and their future prize;
Divinely darting upward every wish,
Warm on the wing, in glorious absence lost.
Doubt you this truth? why labors your belief?

If earth's whole orb by some due distanc'd eye
Was seen at once, her tow'ring Alps would sink,
And levell'd Atlas leave an even sphere.
Thus earth, and all that earthly minds admire,
Is swallow'd in eternity's vast round.
To that stupendous view when souls awake,
So large of late, so mountainous to man,
Time's toys subside; and equal all below.

§ 200. Man ignorant of his real Greatness.

IN spite of all the truths the Muse has sung,
Are there who wrap the world so close about
them,
They see no farther than the clouds; and dance
On heedless vanity's fantastic toe,
Till, stumbling at a straw in their career,
Headlong they plunge, where end both dance and song?
Are there on earth (let me not call them men)

Who lodge a soul immortal in their breasts,
Unconscious as the mountain of its ore,
Or rock, of its inestimable gem? [these
When rocks shall melt, and mountains vanish,
Shall know their treasure; treasure, then, no
more.

§ 201. Disbelief of a Future State.

ARE there (still more amazing!) who resist
The rising thought? who smother in its birth
The glorious truth? who struggle to be brutes?
Who through this bosom-barrier burst their
way,

And, with rever'd ambition, strive to sink?
Who labor downwards through th' opposing
pow'rs,

Of instinct, reason, and the world against them,
To dismal hopes, and shelter in the shock
Of endless night? night darker than the grave's?
Who fight the proofs of immortality?

To contradict them, see all nature rise!
What object, what event, the moon beneath,
But argues, or endears, an after-scene?
To reason proves, or weds it to desire?

All things proclaim it needful; some advance
One precious step beyond, and prove it sure.
A thousand arguments swarm round my pen,
From heaven, and earth, and man. Indulge a
By nature, as her common habit worn. [few,

Thou! whose all-providential eye surveys,
Whose hand directs, whose Spirit fills, and Creation, and holds empire far beyond! [warms
Eternity's inhabitant august!

Of two eternities amazing Lord!
One past, ere man's or angel's had begun;
Aid, while I rescue from the foe's assault
Thy glorious immortality in man.

§ 202. Man's Immortality proved by Nature.

NATURE, thy daughter, ever-changing birth
Of thee the great Immutable, to man
Speaks wisdom; is his oracle supreme;
And he who most consults her, is most wise.
Look nature through, 'tis revolution all. [night
All change, no death. Day follows night; and
The dying day; stars rise, and set, and rise;
Earth takes th' example. See the summer gay,
With her green chaplet, and ambrosial flow'rs,
Droops into pallid autumn; winter grey,
Horrid with frost, and turbulent with storm,
Blows autumn, and his golden fruits away,
Then melts into the spring; soft spring with breath

Favonian, from warm chambers of the south,
Recalls the first. All, to re-flourish, fades:
As in a wheel, all sinks, to re-ascend:
Emblems of man, who passes, not expires.

With this minute distinction, emblems just,
Nature revolves, but man advances; both
Eternal; that a circle, this a line.

That gravitates, this soars. Th' aspiring soul
Ardent, and tremulous, like flame ascends;
Zeal, and humility, her wings to heaven.
The world of matter, with its various forms,

All dies into new life. Life born from death
Rolls the vast mass, and shall for ever roll.
No single atom, once in being lost,
With change of counsel charges the Most High.
Matter, immortal? and shall spirit die?

Above the nobler, shall less noble rise?
Shall man alone, from whom all else revives,
No resurrection know? shall man alone,
Imperial man! be sown in barren ground,
Less privileg'd than grain, on which he feeds?
Is man, in whom alone is power to prize
The bliss of being, or with previous pain
Deplore its period, by the spleen of fate,
Severely doom'd death's single unredeem'd?

§ 203. NIGHT VII. Discontent.

WHY discontent for ever harbor'd there;
Incurable consumption of our peace!
Resolve me, why, the cottager, and king,
He whom sea-sever'd realms obey, and he
Who steals his own dominion from the waste,
Repelling winter's blast with mud and straw,
Disquietude alike, draw sigh for sigh,
In fate so distant, in complaint so near.

Is it, that things terrestrial can't content?
Deep in rich pasture, will thy flocks complain?
Not so; but to their master is deny'd
To share their sweet serene. Man, ill at ease,
In this, not his own place, this foreign field,
Where nature foddors him with other food
Than was ordain'd his cravings to suffice,
Poor in abundance, famish'd at a feast, [joy'd.
Sighs on for something more, when most en-
Is heaven then kinder to thy flocks than thee?
Not so; thy pasture richer, but remote;
In part, remote; for that remoter part
Man bleats from instinct, though, perhaps, debauch'd

By sense, his reason sleeps, nor dreams the cause.
The cause how obvious, when his reason wakes!
His grief is but his grandeur in disguise;
And discontent is immortality.

Shall sons of ether, shall the blood of heav'n,
Set up their hopes on earth, and stable here
With brutal acquiescence in the mire?
No, no, my friend: they shall be nobly pain'd;
The glorious foreigners distress, shall sigh
On thrones; and thou congratulate the sigh:
Man's misery declares him born for bliss;
His anxious heart asserts the truth I sing.

Our heads, our hearts, our passions, and our
pow'rs,

Speak the same language; call us to the skies;
Unripen'd these, in this inclement clime,
Scarce rise above conjecture, and mistake;
And for this land of trifles, those too strong,
Tumultuous rise, and tempest human life:
What prize on earth can pay us for the storm?
Meet objects for our passions Heav'n ordain'd,
Objects that challenge all their fire, and leave
No fault, but in defect: blest Heav'n! avert
A bounded ardor for unbounded bliss!
O for a bliss unbounded! far beneath
A soul immortal, is a mortal joy.

Nor are our powers to perish, immature ;
But, after feeble effort here, beneath
A brighter sun, and in a nobler soil,
Transplanted from this sublunary bed,
Shall flourish fair, and put forth all their bloom.

§ 204. Reason and Instinct.

REASON progressive, instinct is complete ;
Swift instinct leaps ; slow reason feebly climbs.
Brutes soon their zenith reach ; their little all
Flows in at once ; in ages they no more
Could know, or do, or covet, or enjoy.
Was man to live coeval with the sun,
The patriarch-pupil would be learning still ;
Yet, dying, leave his lesson half unlearned.
Men perish in advance, as if the sun
Should set ere noon, in eastern oceans drown'd.
To man, why, stepdame nature, so severe ?
Why thrown aside thy master-piece half-
wrought,
While meaner efforts thy last hand enjoy ?
Or, if abortively poor man must die, [dread ?
Nor reach what reach he might, why die in
Why curst with foresight ? wise to misery ?
Why of his proud prerogative the prey ?
Why less pre-eminent in rank than pain ?—
His immortality alone can tell,
Full ample fund to balance all amiss,
And turn the scale in favor of the just.

§ 205. Human Hope.

HIS immortality alone can solve
That darkest of ænigmas, human hope ;
Of all the darkest if at death we die.
Hope, eager hope, th' assassin of our joy,
All present blessings treading under foot,
Is scarce a milder tyrant than despair.
With no past toils content, still planning new,
Hope turns us o'er to death alone for ease.
Possession, why more tasteless than pursuit ?
Why is a wish far dearer than a crown ?
That wish accomplish'd, why the grave of bliss ?
Because in the great future bury'd deep,
Beyond our plans of empire and renown,
Lies all that man with ardour should pursue ;
And he who made him, bent him to the right.

Man's heart th' Almighty to the future sets
By secret and inviolable springs ;
And make his hope his sublunary joy.
Man's heart eats all things, and is hungry still ;
" More, more, the glutton cries : " for something
So rages appetite, if man can't mount, [new
He will descend. He starves on the possess.
Hence the world's master, from ambition's spire,
In Caprea plung'd ; and div'd beneath the brute.
In that rank sty why wallow'd empire's son
Supreme ? Because he could no higher fly ;
His riot was ambition in despair.

See restless hope, for ever on the wing !
High perch'd o'er every thought that falcon sits,
To fly at all that rises in her sight ;
And never stooping, but to mount again !
Next moment, she betrays her aim's mistake,
And owns her quarry lodg'd beyond the grave.

There should it fail us (it must fail us there,
If being fails) more mournful riddles rise,
And virtue vies with hope in mystery.
Why virtue ? Where its praise, its being, fled ?
Virtue is true self-interest pursued ;
What true self-int'rest of quite mortal man ?
To close with all that makes him happy here,
If vice (as sometimes) is our friend on earth,
Then vice is virtue, 'tis our sov'reign good.

The rigid guardian of a blameless heart,
So long rever'd, so long reputed wise,
Is weak ; with rank knight-errandries o'errun.
Why beats thy bosom with illustrious dreams
Of gallant enterprise, and glorious death ?
Die for thy country ?—thou romantic fool !
Seize, seize the plank thyself ; and let her sink !
Thy country ! what to thee ? (I speak with awe)
The Godhead, what ? though he should bid thee bleed ?

If, with thy blood, thy final hope is split,
Nor can Omnipotence reward the blow,
Be deaf ; preserve thy being ; disobey.

§ 206. The Madness of Infidelity.

SINCE virtue's recompense is doubtful, here,
If man dies wholly, well may we demand,
Why is man suffer'd to be good in vain ?
Why to be good in vain, is man enjoind ?
Why to be good in vain, is man betray'd ?
Betray'd by traitors lodg'd in his own breast,
By sweet complacencies from virtue felt ?
Why whispers nature lies on virtue's part ?
Or if blind instinct (which assumes the name
Of sacred conscience) plays the fool in man,
Why reason made accomplice in the cheat ?
Why are the wisest, loudest in her praise ?
Can man by reason's beam be laid astray ?
Or, at his peril, imitate his God ?
Since virtue sometimes ruins us on earth,
Or, both are true, or man survives the grave.

Or man survives the grave, or own, Lorenzo,
Thy boast supreme, a wild absurdity.
Dauntless thy spirit ; cowards are thy scorn.
Grant man immortal, and thy scorn is just.
The man immortal, rationally brave,
Dares rush on death,—because he cannot die.
But if man loses all, when life is lost ;
He lives a coward, or a fool expires.
A daring infidel (and such there are,
From pride, example, lucre, rage, revenge,
Or pure heroical defect of thought),
Of all earth's madmen, most deserves a chain.

When to the grave we follow the renown'd
For valor, virtue, science, all we love, [beam
And all we praise ; for worth, whose noontide
Mends our ideas of ethereal pow'rs ;
Dream we, that lustre of the moral world
Goes out in stench, and rottenness the close ?
Why was he wise to know, and warm to praise,
And strenuous to transcribe, in human life,
The mind almighty ? could it be, that fate,
Just when the lineaments began to shine,
Should snatch the draught, and blot it out for ever ?
Shall we, this moment, gaze on God in man ?

The next, lose man for ever in the dust?
From dust we disengage, or man mistakes;
And there, where least his judgement fears a flaw!

Wisdom, and worth, how boldly he commends!
Wisdom and worth are sacred names; rever'd,
Where not embrac'd; applauded! deified!
Why not compassion'd too? If spirits die,
Both are calamities, inflicted both
To make us but more wretched; wisdom's eye,
Acute, for what? To spy more miseries;
And worth, so recompens'd, new points their stings.

Or man the grave surmounts, or gain is loss,
And worth exalted humbles us the more.
Were then capacities divine conferr'd,
As a mock diadem, in savage sport,
Rank insult of our pompous poverty, [fair?
Which reaps but pain, from seeming claims so
In future age lies no redress? and shuts
Eternity the door on our complaint!

If so, for what strange ends were mortals made?
The worst to wallow, and the best to weep.
Can we conceive a disregard in Heaven,
What the worst perpetrate, or best endure?

This cannot be. To love, and know, in man
Is boundless appetite, and boundless pow'r;
And these demonstrate boundless objects too.
Objects, pow'rs, appetites, heav'n suits in all;
Nor, nature through, e'er violates this sweet,
Eternal concord, on her tuneful string.
Is man the sole exception from her laws?
Eternity struck off from human hope,
Man is a monster, the reproach of heav'n,
A stain, a dark impenetrable cloud
On nature's beauteous aspect; and deforms,
(Amazing blot!) deforms her with her lord.

Or own the soul immortal, or invert
All order. Go, mock-majesty! go, man,
And bow to thy superiors of the stall;
Through every scene of sense superior far:
They graze the turf untill'd; they drink the stream

Unbrew'd, and ever full, and unimbitter'd
With doubts, fears, fruitless hopes, regrets, despairs,

Mankind's peculiar! reason's precious dow'r!
No foreign clime they ransack for their robes,
Nor brothers cite to the litigious bar:
Their good is good entire, unmixt, unmarr'd;
They find a paradise in ev'ry field,
On boughs forbidden, where no curses hang;
Their ill no more than strikes the sense, un-
stretcht

By previous dread, or murmur in the rear;
When the worst comes, it comes unfear'd; one stroke

Begins and ends their woe: they die but once;
Blest, incommunicable privilege! [stars,
For which who rules the globe, and reads the Philosopher, or hero, sighs in vain.

Account for this prerogative in brutes:
No day, no glimpse of day to solve the knot,
But what beams on it from eternity.

O sole and sweet solution! that unties
The difficult, and softens the severe;
The cloud on nature's beauteous face dispels;
Restores bright order; casts the brute beneath;
And re-inthrones us in supremacy
Of joy, ev'n here: admit immortal life,
And virtue is knight-errantry no more:
Each virtue brings in hand a golden dow'r,
Far richer in reversion: hope exults;
And, though much bitter in our cup is thrown,
Predominates, and gives the taste of heav'n.
O wherefore is the Deity so kind?
Heav'n our reward—for heav'n enjoy'd below.

Still unsubdu'd thy stubborn heart? For there
The traitor lurks, who doubts the truth I sing:
Reason is guiltless; will alone rebels.
What, in that stubborn heart, if I should find
New, unexpected witnesses against thee?
Ambition, and the fateless love of gain! [soul
Canst thou suspect that these, which make the
The slave of earth, should own her heir of
heav'n?

Canst thou suspect, what makes us disbelieve
Our immortality, should prove it sure?

§ 207. Ambition and Fame.

FIRST, then, ambition summon to the bar:
Ambition's shame, extravagance, disgust,
And inextinguishable nature, speak:
Each much deposes: hear them in their turn.

Thy soul how passionately fond of fame!
How anxious that fond passion to conceal!
We blush detected in designs on praise,
Though for best deeds, and from the best of men:
And why? because immortal. Art divine
Has made the body tutor to the soul:
Heav'n kindly gives our blood a moral flow;
Bids it ascend the glowing cheek, and there
Upbraid that little heart's inglorious aim,
Which stoops to court a character from man;
While o'er us, in tremendous judgement sit Far more than man, with endless praise, and blame.

Ambition's boundless appetite out-speaks
The verdict of its shame. When souls take fire
At high presumptions of their own desert,
One age is poor applause; the mighty shout,
The thunder by the living few begun,
Late time must echo; worlds unborn resound:
We wish our names eternally to live:
Wild dream! which ne'er had haunted human
thought,

Had not our natures been eternal too.
Instinct points out an int'rest in hereafter;
But our blind reason sees not where it lies;
Or, seeing, gives the substance for the shade.
Fame is the shade of immortality,
And in itself a shadow; soon as caught,
Contemn'd; it shrinks to nothing in the grasp.
Consult the ambitious; 'tis ambition's cure.
"And is this all?" cry'd Cæsar at his height,
Disgusted. This third proof ambition brings
Of immortality. The first in fame,
Observe him near, your envy will abate;

Sham'd at the disproportion vast between
The passion, and the purchase, he will sigh
At such success, and blush at his renown:
And why? because far richer prize invites
His heart; far more illustrious glory calls.

And can ambition a fourth proof supply?
It can, and stronger than the former three.
Though disappointments in ambition pain,
And though success disgusts, yet still we strive
In vain to pluck it from us: man must soar:
An obstinate activity within,
An insuppressive spring will toss him up,
In spite of fortune's load. Not kings alone,
Each villager has his ambition too:
No Sultan prouder than his fetter'd slave:
Slaves build their little Babylons of straw,
Echo the proud Assyrian, in their hearts,
And cry,—“Behold the wonders of my might!”
And why? because immortal as their lord:
And souls immortal must for ever heave
At something great; the glitter, or the gold;
The praise of mortals, or the praise of heav'n.

§ 208. Avarice.

Thus far ambition. What says avarice?
This her chief maxim, which has long been thine:

“The wise and wealthy are the same.” I grant it.

To store up treasure, with incessant toil,
This is man's province, this his highest praise:
To this great end keen instinct stings him on;
To guide that instinct, reason! is thy charge;
'Tis thine to tell us where true treasure lies:
But reason, failing to discharge her trust,
A blunder follows, and blind industry
O'erloading, with the cares of distant age,
The jaded spirits of the present hour,
Providing for eternity below.

Whence inextinguishable thirst of gain?
From inextinguishable life in man:
Man, if not meant by worth to reach the skies,
Had wanted wing to fly so far in guilt.
Sour grapes I grant ambition, avarice;
Yet still their root is immortality.
These its wild growths religion can reclaim,
Refine, exalt, throw down their pois'nous lee,
And make them sparkle in the bowl of bliss.

§ 209. Address to Unbelievers.

“Know all; know infidels, unapt to know,
'Tis immortality your nature solves;
'Tis immortality deciphers man,
And opens all the myst'ries of his make.
Without it half his instincts are a riddle:
Without it, all his virtues are a dream:
His very crimes attest his dignity;
His sateless appetite of gold, and fame,
Declares him born for blessings infinite.
What, less than infinite, makes unabsurd
Passions, which all on earth but more infinite?
Fierce passions so mismeasur'd to this scene,
Stretch'd out, like eagles' wings, beyond our nest,
Far, far, beyond the worth of all below,

For earth too large, presage a nobler flight,
And evidence our title to the skies.”

§ 210. The Passions.

Ye gentle theologues, of calmer kind!
Whose constitution dictates to your pen,
Who, cold yourselves, think ardor comes from hell!

Think not our passions from corruption sprung,
Though to corruption now they lend their wings:
That is their mistress, not their mother. All
(And justly) reason deem divine: I see
I feel a grandeur in the passions too, [end;
Which speaks their high descent, and glorious
Which speaks them rays of an eternal fire.
In paradise itself they burnt as strong,
Ere Adam fell; the wiser in their aim.
What though our passions are run mad, and stoop
With low terrestrial appetite, to graze
On trash, on toys, dethron'd from high desire;
Yet still, through their disgrace, no feeble ray
Of greatness shines, and tells us whence they fell:
But these, when reason moderates the rein,
Shall re-ascend, re-mount their former sphere.

But grant their phrensy lasts; their phrensy
To disappoint one providential end; [fails
Was reason silent, boundless passion speaks
A future scene of boundless objects too,
And brings glad tidings of eternal day.
Eternal day! 'tis that enlightens all;
And all by that enlighten'd, proves it sure.
Consider man as an immortal being,
Intelligible, all; and all is great:
Consider man as mortal, all is dark,
And wretched; reason weeps at the survey.

§ 211. Proofs of Immortality. Man's Happiness consists in the Hope of it.

Much has been urg'd; and dost thou call for more?

Call; and with endless questions be distress,
All unresolvable, if earth is all.

“Why life, a moment; infinite, desire?
Our wish eternity; our home, the grave?
Heaven's promise dormant lies in human hope;
Who wishes life immortal, proves it too.
Why happiness pursu'd, though never found?
Man's thirst of happiness declares it is,
(For nature never gravitates to nought;)
That thirst unquench'd declares it is not here.
Why cordial friendship rivetted so deep,
As, hearts to pierce at first, at parting rend,
If friend and friendship vanish in an hour?
Is not this torment in the mask of joy?
—Why by reflection marr'd the joys of sense?
Why past and future preying on our hearts,
And putting all our present joys to death?
Why labors reason? instinct were as well;
Instinct far better; what can choose can err;
O how infallible the thoughtless brute!
Reason with inclination why at war?
Why sense of guilt? why conscience up in arms?”
Conscience of guilt, is prophecy of pain,
And bosom-counsel to decline the blow.
Reason with inclination ne'er had jarr'd,

If nothing future paid forbearance here.
 Thus on—these, and a thousand pleas uncall'd,
 All promise, some insure, a second scene;
 Which, was it doubtful, would be dearer far
 Than all things else most certain; was it false,
 What truth on earth so precious as the lie?
 This world it gives us, let what will ensue;
 This world it gives, in that high cordial, hope;
 The future of the present is the soul:
 How this life groans, when sever'd from the next!
 Poor, mutilated wretch, that disbelieves!
 By dark distrust his being cut in two,
 In both parts perishes; life void of joy,
 Sad prelude of eternity in pain!

§ 212. Misery of Unbelief.

COULDEST thou persuade me, the next life would fail

Our ardent wishes; how should I pour out
 My bleeding heart in anguish, new, as deep!
 Oh! with what thoughts, thy hope, and my de-
 Abhor'd Annihilation, blasts the soul, [spair,
 And wide extends the bounds of human woe!
 In this black channel would my ravings run:

“Grief from the future borrow'd peace, ere-while.

The future vanish'd, and the present pain'd!
 Fall, how profound! hurl'd headlong, hurl'd at once

To night! to nothing! darker still than night.
 If 'twas a dream, why wake me, my worst foe?
 O for delusion! O for error still! [plant

Could vengeance strike much stronger than to
 A thinking being in a world like this,
 Not over-rich before, now beggar'd quite;
 More curst than at the fall? The sun goes out!
 The thorns shoot up! what thorns in ev'ry
 thought!

Why sense of better? it imbitters worse:
 Why sense? why life? if but to sigh, then sink
 To what I was? twice nothing! and much woe!
 Woe, from heaven's bounties! woe, from what was wont

To flatter most, high intellectual powers.

“Thought, virtue, knowledge! blessings, by thy scheme,

All poison'd into pains. First knowledge, once
 My soul's ambition, now her greatest dread.
 To know myself, true wisdom?—no, to shun
 That shocking science, parent of despair!
 Avert thy mirror; if I see, I die.

“Know my Creator! Climb his blest abode
 By painful speculation, pierce the veil,
 Dive in his nature, read his attributes,
 And gaze in admiration—on a foe
 Obtruding life, withholding happiness?
 From the full rivers that surround his throne,
 Not letting fall one drop of joy on man;
 Man gasping for one drop, that he might cease
 To curse his birth, nor envy reptiles more!
 Ye sable clouds! ye darkest shades of night;
 Hide him, for ever hide him, from my thought,
 Once all my comfort; source and soul of joy!

“Know his achievements! study his renown!

Contemplate this amazing universe,
 Dropt from his hand, with miracles replete!
 For what? 'Mid miracles of nobler name,
 To find one miracle of misery!
 To find the being, which alone can know,
 And praise his works, a blemish on his praise!
 Through nature's ample range, in thought to stray

And start at man, the single mourner there,
 Breathing high hope! chain'd down to pangs,
 and death!

“Knowing is suff'ring: and shall virtue share
 The sigh of knowledge? virtue shares the sigh.
 By straining up the steep of excellent,
 By battles fought, and from temptation won,
 What gains she, but the pang of seeing worth,
 Angelic worth, soon shuffled in the dark
 With ev'ry vice, and swept to brutal dust?

“Duty! Religion! these, our duty done,
 Imply reward, Religion is mistake:
 Duty! there's none, but to repel the cheat.
 Ye cheats! away; ye daughters of my pride!
 Who feign yourselves the fav'rites of the skies:
 Ye tow'ring hopes! abortive energies!
 That toss and tumble in my lying breast,
 To scale the skies, and build presumption there,
 As I were heir of an eternity:
 Vain, vain ambitions! trouble me no more.
 As bounded as my being, be my wish.
 All is inverted, wisdom is a fool;
 Sense! take the rein; blind passion! drive us on;
 And, ignorance! befriend us on our way;
 Yes; give the pulse full empire; live the brute,
 Since, as the brute, we die: the sum of man,
 Of godlike man! to revel, and to rot.

“But not on equal terms with other brutes:
 Their revels a more poignant relish yield,
 And safer too; they never poisons choose.
 Instinct, than reason, makes more wholesome meals,

And sends all-marring murmur far away.
 For sensual life they best philosophise;
 Theirs, that serene, the sages sought in vain:
 'Tis man alone expostulates with heaven;
 His, all the pow'r, and all the cause to mourn.
 Shall human eyes alone dissolve in tears?
 And bleed, in anguish, none but human hearts?
 The wide-stretch'd realm of intellectual woe,
 Surpassing sensual far, is all our own.
 In life so fatally distinguish'd, why
 Cast in one lot, confounded, lump't, in death?

“And why then have we thought? To toil and eat, [thought.
 Then make our bed in darkness, needs no
 What superfluities are reas'ning souls!
 Oh give eternity! or thought destroy,—
 But without thought our curse were half unfelt!
 Its blunted edge would spare the throbbing heart;
 And therefore 'tis bestow'd. I thank thee, reason,
 For aiding life's too small calamities,
 And giving being to the dread of death.
 Such are thy bounties!—Was it then too much
 For me, to trespass on the brutal rights?
 Too much for heav'n to make one emmet more?

Too much for chaos to permit my mass
A longer stay with essences unwrought,
Unfashioned, untormented into man?
Wretched preferment to this round of pains!
Wretched capacity of phrensy, thought!
Wretched capacity of dying, life!
Life, thought, worth, wisdom, all (oh foul revolt!)

Once friends to peace, gone over to the foe.

“Death then has chang’d its nature, too; O
death,

Come to my bosom, thou best gift of heav’n!
Best friend of man! since man is man no more.
Why in this thorny wilderness so long,
Since there’s no promis’d land’sambrosial bow’r?
But why this sumptuous insult o’er our heads?
Why this illustrious canopy display’d?
Why so magnificently lodg’d despair?
At stated periods sure returning, roll,
These glorious orbs, that mortals may compute
Their length of labors, and of pains; nor lose
Their misery’s full measure?—smiles with flow’rs,
And fruits promiscuous, ever-teeming earth,
That man may languish in luxurious scenes,
And in an Eden mourn his with’ring joys?
Claim earth and skies man’s admiration, due
For such delights? blest animals! too wise
To wonder; and too happy to complain!

“Our doom decreed demands a mournful
scene;

Why not a dungeon dark for the condemn’d?
Why not the dragon’s subterranean den,
For man to howl in? why not his abode
Of the same dismal color with his fate?
A Thebes, a Babylon, at vast expense
Of time, toil, treasure, art, for owls and adders,
As congruous, as, for man, this lofty dome,
Which prompts proud thought, and kindles high desire;

If from her humble chamber in the dust, [flames,
While proud thought swells, and high desire in-
The poor worm calls us for her inmates there;
And round us death’s inexorable hand
Draws the dark curtain close; undrawn no more.

“Undrawn no more? behind the cloud of
Once I beheld a sun; a sun which gilt [death,
That sable cloud, and turn’d it all to gold:
How the grave’s alter’d! fathomless as hell!
Annihilation! how it yawns before me!
Next moment I may drop from thought, from
The privilege of angels, and of worms, [sense,
An outcast from existence! and this spirit,
This all-pervading, this all-conscious soul,
This particle of energy divine,
Which travels nature, flies from star to star,
And visits gods, and emulates their pow’rs,
For ever is extinguish’d. Horror! death!
Death of that death I fearless once survey’d,
When horror universal shall descend,
And heaven’s dark concave urn all human race,
On that enormous, unrefunding tomb,
How just this verse! this monumental sigh!

*Beneath the lumber of demolish’d worlds
Of matter, never dignify’d with life,*

*Here lie proud rationals; the sons of heav’n!
The lords of earth! the property of worms!
Beings of yesterday, and not to-morrow!
Who liv’d in terror, and in pangs expir’d.”*

And art thou then a shadow? less than shadow?
A nothing? less than nothing? To have been,
And not to be, is lower than unborn.
Art thou ambitious? why then make the worm
Thine equal? runs thy taste of pleasure high?
Why patronise sure death of every joy?
Charm riches? why choose begg’ry in the grave,
Of ev’ry hope a bankrupt! and for ever!
Dar’st thou persist? And is there nought on earth
But a long train of transitory forms,
Rising, and breaking, millions in an hour?
Bubbles of a fantastic lord, blown up
In sport, and then in cruelty destroy’d?
Oh! for what crime, unmerciful Lorenzo,
Destroys thy scheme the whole of human race?
Kind is fell Lucifer compar’d to thee:
Oh! spare this waste of being half divine;
And vindicate th’ economy of heav’n,

§ 213. The Annihilation of Man, incompatible with the Goodness of God.

HEAV’N is all love; all joy in giving joy;
It never had created, but to bless;
And shall it then strike off the list of life,
A being blest, or worthy so to be?
Heav’n starts at an annihilating God.

§ 214. The Guilty alone wish for Annihilation.

Is that, all nature starts at, thy desire?
Art such a clod, to wish thyself all clay?
What is that dreadful wish?—the dying groan
Of nature murder’d by the blackest guilt:
What deadly poison has thy nature drank?
To nature undebauch’d no shock so great;
Nature’s first wish is endless happiness;
Annihilation is an after-thought,
A monstrous wish, unborn, till virtue dies.
And oh! what depth of horror lies inclos’d!
For non-existence no man ever wish’d,
But first he wish’d the Deity destroy’d.

§ 215. No spiritual Substance annihilated.

THINK’ST thou omnipotence a naked root,
Each blossom fair of Deity destroy’d?
Nothing is dead; nay, nothing sleeps; each soul
That ever animated human clay,
Now wakes; is on the wing; and when the call
Of that loud trump collects us round heav’n’s
Conglob’d we bask in everlasting day. [throne.

How bright this prospect shines! how gloomy
thine!

A trembling world! and a devouring God!
Earth, but the shambles of omnipotence!
Heav’n’s face all stain’d with causeless massacres
Of countless millions, born to feel the pang
Of being lost. Lorenzo! can it be?
This bids us shudder at the thoughts of life.
Who would be born to such a phantom world,
Where nought substantial, but our misery?
A world, where dark, mysterious vanity

Of good and ill the distant colors blends,
 Confounds all reason, and all hope destroys;
 A world so far from great (and yet how great
 It shines to thee!) there's nothing real in it;
 Being, a shadow! consciousness, a dream!
 A dream how dreadful! universal blank.
 Before it, and behind! poor man a spark
 From non-existence struck by wrath divine,
 Glitt'ring a moment, nor that moment sure,
 'Midst upper, nether, and surrounding night,
 His sad, sure, sudden, and eternal tomb.

§ 216. The World a System of Theology.

THE skies above proclaim immortal man,
 And man immortal all below resounds.
 The world's a system of theology,
 Read by the greatest strangers to the schools;
 If honest, learn'd; and sages o'er a plough.
 What then is unbelief? 'tis an exploit:
 A strenuous enterprise: to gain it, man
 Must burst through ev'ry bar of common sense,
 Of common shame, magnanimously wrong;
 And what rewards the sturdy combatant?
 His prize, repentance; infamy, his crown.

§ 217. Virtue the Fruit of Immortality.

THE virtues grow on immortality;
 That root destroy'd, they wither and expire;
 A Deity believ'd will nought avail;
 Rewards and punishments make God ador'd;
 And hopes and fears give conscience all her
 As in the dying parent dies the child, [pow'r.
 Virtue with immortality expires.
 Who tells me he denies his soul immortal,
 Whate'er his boast, has told me, he's a knave.
 His duty, 'tis to love himself alone,
 Nor care, though mankind perish, if he smiles.
 And are there such?—Such candidates there are

For more than death; for utter loss of being;
 Is it in words to paint you? O ye fall'n!
 Fall'n from the wings of reason, and of hope!
 Erect in stature, prone in appetite!
 Patrons of pleasure, posting into pain!
 Boasters of liberty, fast-bound in chains!
 More senseless than th' irrationals you scorn!
 Far more undone! O ye most infamous
 Of beings, from superior dignity!
 And are you, too, convinc'd, your souls fly
 In exhalation soft, and die in air,
 From the full flood of evidence against you?
 In the coarse drudgeries, and sinks of sense,
 Your souls have quite worn out the make of
 heav'n,
 By vice new-cast, and creatures of your own.

§ 218. Free-thinking.

THIS is free-thinking, unconfin'd to parts,
 To send the soul, on curious travel bent,
 Through all the provinces of human thought;
 To dart her flight through the whole sphere of
 man;
 To look on truth, unbroken, and entire;
 Truth in the system, the full orb; where truths

By truths enlighten'd, and sustain'd, afford
 An arch-like, strong foundation, to support
 Th' incumbent weight of absolute, complete
 Conviction; here, the more we press, we stand
 More firm; who most examine, most believe.
 Parts, like half sentences, confound; the whole
 Conveys the sense, and God is understood,
 Who not in fragments writes to human race:
 Read his whole volume, sceptic! then reply.

This, this is thinking free, a thought that grasps

Beyond a grain, and looks beyond an hour.
 Turn up thine eyes, survey this midnight scene;
 What are earth's kingdoms to yon boundless orbs,
 Of human souls, one day, the destin'd range?
 And what yon boundless orbs to godlike man?
 Those numerous worlds that throng the firmament,

And ask more space in heaven, can roll at large
 In man's capacious thought, and still have room
 For ampler orbs, for new creations, there.
 Can such a soul contract itself, to gripe
 A point of no dimension, or no weight?
 It can; it does: the world is such a point;
 And of that point how small a part enslaves!

How small a part—of nothing, shall I say?
 Why not?—friends, our chief treasure, how they drop!

How the world falls to pieces round about us,
 And leaves us in a ruin of our joy!
 What says this transportation of my friends?
 It bids me love the place where now they dwell,
 And scorn this wretched spot, they leave so poor.
 Eternity's vast ocean lays before thee;
 Give thy mind sea-room; keep it wide of earth,
 That rock of souls immortal; cut thy cord;
 Weigh anchor; spread thy sails; call ev'ry wind;
 Eye thy great Pole-star; make the land of life.

§ 219. Rational and Animal Life.

Two kinds of life has double-natur'd man,
 And two of death; the last far more severe.
 Life animal is nurtur'd by the sun;
 Thrives on its bounties, triumphs in its beams.
 Life rational subsists on higher food,
 Triumphant in his beams who made the day.
 When we leave that sun, and are left by this,
 (The fate of all who die in stubborn guilt,)
 'Tis utter darkness; strictly, double death.
 We sink by no judicial stroke of heav'n,
 But nature's course; as sure as plummets fall.

If then that double death should prove thy lot,
 Blame not the bowels of the Deity:
 Man shall be blest, as far as man permits.
 Not man alone, all rationals heav'n arms
 With an illustrious, but tremendous, pow'r,
 To counteract its own most gracious ends;
 And this, of strict necessity, not choice.
 That pow'r deny'd, men, angels, were no more
 But passive engines, void of praise or blame.
 A nature rational implies the pow'r
 Of being bless'd, or wretched, as we please;
 Else idle reason would have nought to do;
 And he that would be barr'd capacity

Of pain, courts incapacity of bliss.
 Heav'n wills our happiness, allows our doom;
 Invites us ardently, but not compels;
 Man falls by man, if finally he falls;
 And fall he must, who learns from death alone
 The dreadful secret,—that he lives for ever.

Why this to thee? thee yet perhaps in doubt
 Of second life? but wherefore doubtful still?
 Eternal life is nature's ardent wish:
 What ardently we wish, we soon believe:
 Thy tardy faith declares that wish destroy'd:
 What has destroy'd it?—shall I tell thee, what?
 When fear'd the future, 'tis no longer wish'd;
 And when unwish'd, we strive to disbelieve.

§ 220. The Gospel.

INSTEAD of racking fancy, to refute,
 Reform thy manners, and the truth enjoy.—
 From purer manners, to sublimer faith,
 Is nature's unavoidable ascent;
 An honest deist, where the Gospel shines,
 Matur'd to nobler, in the Christian ends.
 When that blest change arrives, e'en cast aside
 This song superfluous; life immortal strikes
 Conviction, in a flood of light divine.
 A Christian dwells, like Uriel in the sun:
 Meridian evidence puts doubt to flight;
 And ardent hope anticipates the skies.
 Read, and revere the sacred page; a page
 Where triumphs immortality; a page
 Which not the whole creation could produce;
 Which not the conflagration shall destroy:
 In nature's ruins not one letter lost:
 'Tis printed in the minds of gods for ever.

§ 221. The Mystery of a Future State, no Argument against it.

STILL seems it strange, that thou shouldst live for ever?

Is it less strange, that thou shouldst live at all?
 This is a miracle; and that no more.
 Who gave beginning, can exclude an end;
 Deny thou art, then doubt if thou shalt be.
 A miracle, with miracles inclos'd,
 Is man! and starts his faith at what is strange?
 What less than wonders from the Wonderful?
 What less than miracles from God can flow?
 Admit a God,—that mystery supreme!
 That cause uncaus'd! all other wonders cease;
 Nothing is marvellous for him to do:
 Deny him—all is mystery besides.
 We nothing know, but what is marvellous;
 Yet what is marvellous, we can't believe.
 So weak our reason, and so great our God,
 What most surprises in the sacred page,
 Or full as strange, or stranger, must be true.
 Faith is not reason's labor, but repose.

§ 222. Hope.

HOPE, of all passions, most befriends us here;
 Joy has her tears, and transport has her death;
 Hope, like a cordial, innocent, though strong,
 Man's heart, at once, inspirits and serenest,

Nor makes him pay his wisdom for his joys;
 'Tis all our present state can safely bear,
 Health to the frame! and vigor to the mind!
 And to the modest eye chastis'd delight!
 Like the fair summer-evening, mild, and sweet!
 'Tis man's full cup: his paradise below!

§ 223. NIGHT VIII. Worldly Pursuits.

ON life's gay stage, one inch above the grave,
 The proud run up and down in quest of eyes;
 The sensual, in pursuit of something worse;
 The grave, of gold; the politic, of pow'r;
 And all, of other butterflies, as vain.
 As eddies draw things frivolous and light,
 How is man's heart by vanity drawn in;
 On the swift circle of returning toys,
 Whirl'd, straw-like, round and round, and then ingulph'd,
 Where gay delusion darkens to despair!

§ 224. Human Life compared to the Ocean.

OCEAN! thou dreadful and tumultuous home
 Of dangers, at eternal war with man!
 Death's capital! where most he domineers,
 With all his chosen terrors frowning round,
 (Though lately feasted high at Albion's cost,)
 Wide op'ning, and loud roaring still for more!
 Too faithful mirror! how dost thou reflect
 The melancholy face of human life!
 The strong resemblance tempts me farther still:
 And, haply, Britain may be deeper struck
 By moral truth, in such a mirror seen,
 Which nature holds for ever at her eye.
 Self-flatter'd, unexperienced, high in hope,
 When young, with sanguine cheer and streamers
 We cut our cable, launch into the world, [gay,
 And fondly dream each wind and star our friend;
 All in some darling enterprise embark'd;
 But where is he can fathom its event?
 Amid a multitude of artless hands,
 Ruin's sure perquisite! her lawful prize!
 Some steer aright: but the black blast blows hard,
 And puffs them wide of hope: with hearts of proof,
 Full against wind and tide, some win their way;
 And when strong effort has deserv'd the port,
 And tugg'd it into view, 'tis won! 'tis lost!
 They strike; and, while they triumph, they expire.

In stress of weather, most; some sink outright;
 O'er them and o'er their names the billows close;
 To-morrow knows not they were ever born:
 Others a short memorial leave behind,
 Like a flag floating, when the bark's ingulph'd;
 It floats a moment, and is seen no more:
 One Cæsar lives, a thousand are forgot.
 How few, beneath auspicious planets born,
 With swelling sails make good the promis'd port,
 With all their wishes freighted! Yet ev'n these,
 Freight with all their wishes, soon complain;
 They still are men; and when is man secure?
 As fatal time, as storm! the rush of years
 Beats down their strength: their numberless escapes

In ruin end; and now their proud success
But plants new terrors on the victor's brow:
What pain to quit the world just made their own!
Their nest so deeply down'd, and built so high!
Too low they build, who build beneath the stars.

§ 225. The Love of Distinction.

AMBITION! pleasure! let us talk of these:
Dost grasp at greatness? first know what it is:
Think'st thou thy greatness in distinction lies?
Not in the feather, wave it e'er so high,
Is glory lodg'd: 'tis lodg'd in the reverse;
In that which joins, in that which equals all,
The monarch and his slave—"A deathless soul,
Unbounded prospect, and immortal kin,
A father God, and brothers in the skies!"

We wisely strip the steed we mean to buy:
Judge we, in their caparisons, of men?
It nought avails thee, where, but what thou art;
All the distinctions of this little life
Are quite cutaneous, foreign to the man:
When through death's streights earth's subtile
serpents creep,
Which wriggle into wealth, or climb renown,
They leave their party-color'd robe behind,
All that now glitters, while they rear aloft
Their brazen crests, and hiss at us below:
How mean that snuff of glory fortune lights,
And death puts out! dost thou demand a test;
A test at once infallible and short,
Of real greatness? that man greatly lives,
Whate'er his fate or fame, who greatly dies;
High flush'd with hope, where heroes shall despair.

§ 226. Pleasure.

THOUGH somewhat disconcerted, steady still
To the world's cause, with half a face of joy,
Lorenzo cries, "Be, then, ambition cast;
Ambition's dearer far stands unimpeach'd,
Gay pleasure! proud ambition is her slave;
Who can resist her charms?"—Or, should?
Lorenzo!

What mortal shall resist, where angels yield?
Pleasure's the mistress of ethereal pow'rs;
Pleasure's the mistress of the world below;
How would all stagnate, but for pleasure's ray!
What is the pulse of this so busy world?
The love of pleasure: that, through ev'ry vein,
Throws motion, warmth; and shuts out death
from life.

Though various are the tempers of mankind,
Pleasure's gay family holds all in chains.
Some most affect the black; and some the fair;
Whate'er the motive, pleasure is the mark:
For her, the black assassin draws his sword;
For her, dark statesmen trim their midnight-
To which no single sacrifice may fall; [lamp,
The Stoic proud, for pleasure, pleasure scorn'd;
For her, affliction's daughters grief indulge,
And find, or hope, a luxury in tears:
For her, guilt, shame, toil, danger, we defy;
And, with an aim voluptuous, rush on death:
Thus universal her despotic power.

Patron of pleasure! I thy rival am;
Pleasure, the purpose of my gloomy song:
Pleasure is nought but virtue's gayer name—
I wrong her still, I rate her worth too low:
Virtue the root, and pleasure is the flow'r.

The love of pleasure is man's eldest-born,
Born in his cradle, living to his tomb:
Wisdom, her younger sister, though more grave,
Was meant to minister, and not to mar
Imperial pleasure, queen of human hearts.

§ 227. Rise of Pleasure.

FIRST, pleasure's birth, rise, strength, and grandeur see:
Brought forth by wisdom, nurs'd by discipline,
By patience taught, by perseverance crown'd,
She rears her head majestic; round her throne,
Erected in the bosom of the just,
Each virtue, listed, form her manly guard.
For what are virtues? (formidable name!)
What, but the fountain, or defence of joy?
Great legislator! scarce so great as kind!
If men are rational, and love delight,
Thy gracious law but flatters human choice:
In the transgression lies the penalty;
And they the most indulge, who most obey.

§ 228. The End of Pleasure.

Of pleasure, next, the final cause explore;
Its mighty purpose, its important end:
Not to turn human brutal, but to build
Divine on human, pleasure came from heav'n:
In aid to reason was the goddess sent,
To call up all its strength by such a charm.
Pleasure first succours virtue; in return,
Virtue gives pleasure an eternal reign.
What, but the pleasure of food, friendship, faith,
Supports life natural, civil, and divine?
It serves ourselves, our species, and our God.
Glide then for ever, pleasure's sacred stream!
Through Eden as Euphrates ran, it runs,
And fosters ev'ry growth of happy life;
Makes a new Eden where it flows.—

§ 229. Virtue and Piety.

"Is virtue, then, and piety the same?"
No—piety is more; 'tis virtue's source;
Mother of ev'ry worth, as that of joy.
With piety begins all good on earth.
Conscience, her first law broken, wounded lies,
Enfeebled, lifeless, impotent to good;
A feign'd affection bounds her utmost power.
Some we can't love, but for th' Almighty's sake;
A foe to God was ne'er true friend to man.
On piety, humanity is built;
And, on humanity much happiness;
And yet still more on piety itself.
A Deity believ'd, is joy begun;
A Deity ador'd, is joy advanc'd;
A Deity belov'd, is joy matur'd.
Each branch of piety delight inspires:
Faith builds a bridge from this world to the next,
O'er Death's dark gulph, and all its horror hides;
Praise, the sweet exhalation of our joy,

That joy exalts, and makes it sweeter still ;
Prayer ardent opens heaven, lets down a stream
Of glory, on the consecrated hour
Of man, in audience with the Deity.
Who worships the great God, that instant joins
The first in heav'n, and set his foot on hell.

§ 230. Resources of a dejected Mind.

ART thou dejected? is thy mind o'ercaſt?
Thy gloom to chase, go, fix ſome weighty truth; [good;
Chain down ſome paſſion; do ſome gen'rous
Teach ignorance to ſee, or grief to ſmile!
Correct thy friend; befriend thy greateſt foe;
Or, with warm heart, and confidence divine,
Spring up, and lay ſtrong hold on him who made thee—

Thy gloom is scatter'd, sprightly spirits flow,
Though wither'd is thy vine, and harp unstrung.

Dost call the bowl, the viol, and the dance,
Loud mirth, mad laughter? wretched comforters!
Physicians! more than half of thy disease.
Laughter, though never censur'd yet as sin,
Is half-immoral. Is it much indulg'd?
By venting spleen, or dissipating thought,
It shows a scorner, or it makes a fool;
And sins, as hurting others, or ourselves.

The house of laughter makes a house of woe :
What cause for triumph, where such ills abound ?
What for dejection, where presides a pow'r,
Who call'd us into being to be bless'd ?
So grieve, as conscious, grief may rise to joy ;
So joy, as conscious, joy to grief may fall.
Most true ; a wise man never will be sad ;
But neither will sonorous, bubbling mirth
A shallow stream of happiness betray :
Too happy to be sportive, he's serene.

Retire, and read thy Bible, to be gay:
There truths abound of sov'reign aid to peace:
Ah! do not prize them less, because inspir'd;
If not inspir'd, that pregnant page had stood,
'Time's treasure! and the wonder of the wise!
But these, thou think'st are gloomy paths to joy.

True joy in sunshine ne'er was found at first :
They first, themselves offend, who greatly please;
And travel only gives us sound repose.
Heav'n sells all pleasure ; effort is the price ;
The joys of conquest are the joys of man ;
And glory the victorious laurel spreads
O'er pleasure's pure, perpetual, placid stream.

§ 231. A Man of Pleasure is a Man of Pains.

THERE is a time, when toil must be preferr'd,
Or joy, by mistim'd fondness is undone.
A man of pleasure is a man of pains.
Thou wilt not take the trouble to be bless'd.
False joys, indeed, are born from want of thought;
From thought's full bent and energy, the true;
And that demands a mind in equal poise,
Remote from gloomy grief, and glaring joy.
Much joy not only speaks small happiness,
But happiness that shortly must expire:
Can joy, unbottom'd in reflection, stand?

And in a tempest can reflection live?
Can joy like thine secure itself an hour?
Can joy like thine meet accident unshock'd,
Or ope the door to honest poverty?
Or talk with threat'ning death, and not turn pale?
In such a world, and such a nature, these
Are needful fundamentals of delight:
These fundamentals give delight indeed;
Delight, pure, delicate, and durable;
Delight, unshaken, masculine, divine;
A constant, and a sound, but serious joy.

Is joy the daughter of severity?
It is; yet far my doctrine from severe:
"Rejoice for ever; it becomes a man;
Exalts, and sets him nearer to the gods;
Rejoice for ever," Nature cries, "Rejoice;"
And drinks to man, in her nectareous cup,
Mix'd up of delicacies for ev'ry sense;
To the great Founder of the bounteous feast
Drinks glory, gratitude, eternal praise:
And he that will not pledge her, is a churl.
Ill firmly to support, good fully taste,
Is the whole science of felicity:
Yet sparing pledge; her bowl is not the best
Mankind can boast: A rational repast;
Exertion, vigilance, a mind in arms,
A military discipline of thought,
To foil temptation in the doubtful field;
An ever-waking ardor for the right,
'Tis these first give, then guard a cheerful heart.
Nought that is right, think little; well aware,
What reason bids, God bids: by his command,
How aggrandis'd the smallest thing we do!
Thus nothing is insipid to the wise;
To thee insipid all, but what is mad;
Joys season'd high, and tasting strong of guilt.

§ 232. Earthly Happiness.

CONSISTENT wisdom ever wills the same ;
Thy fickle wish is ever on the wing :
Sick of herself is folly's character ;
As wisdom's is a modest self applause,
A change of evils is thy good supreme ;
Nor, but in motion, canst thou find thy rest.
Man's greatest strength is shown in standing still :
The first sure symptom of a mind in health,
Is rest of heart, and pleasure felt at home.
False pleasure from abroad her joys imports ;
Rich from within, and self-sustain'd, the true :
The true is fix'd, and solid, as a rock ;
Slipp'ry the false, and tossing, as the wave.
'Tis love o'erflowing makes an angel here :
Such angels all, entitled to repose [frowns,
On him who governs fate. Though tempest
Though nature shakes, how soft to lean on
heav'n !
To lean on Him on whom archangels lean !
With inward eyes, and silent as the grave,
They stand collecting ev'ry beam of thought,
Till their hearts kindle with divine delight ;
For all their thoughts, like angels seen of old
In Israel's dreams, come from and go to heav'n :
Hence are they studious of sequester'd scenes,
While noise and dissipation comfort thee.

§ 233. Joy.

VAIN are all sudden sallies of delight;
 Convulsions of a weak, distemper'd joy.
 Joy's a fix'd state; a tenor, not a start;
 Bliss there is none, but unprecious bliss,
 That is the gem; sell all, and purchase that.
 Reason perpetuates joy that reason gives,
 And makes it as immortal as herself:
 To mortals, nought immortal, but their worth.

§ 234. Follies of Imagination.

IN this is seen imagination's guilt: [thee,
 But who can count her follies? She betrays
 To think in grandeur there is something great.
 For works of curious art, and ancient fame,
 Thy genius hungers, elegantly pain'd;
 And foreign climes must cater for thy taste.
 Hence what disaster!—Though the price was paid,
 That persecuting priest, the Turk of Rome
 Detain'd thy dinner on the Latian shore;
 And your magnificence is starv'd to death.
 Hence, just resentment, indignation, ire!—

§ 235. Pleasure consists in Goodness.

PLEASURE, we both agree, is man's chief good;
 Our only contest, what deserves the name.
 Give pleasure's name to nought, but what has pass'd

Th' authentic seal of reason, which defies
 The tooth of time; when past, a pleasure still;
 Dearer on trial, lovelier for its age,
 And doubly to be priz'd, as it promotes
 Our future, while it forms our present joy.
 Some joys the future overcast; and some Throw all their beams that way, and gild the tomb:

Some joys endear eternity: some give
 Abhor'd annihilation dreadful charms.
 Are rival joys contending for thy choice?
 Consult thy whole existence, and be safe;
 That oracle will put all doubt to flight:
 Be good,—and let heav'n answer for the rest.

Yet, with a sigh o'er all mankind, I grant,
 In this our day of proof, our land of hope,
 The good man has his clouds that intervene;
 Clouds that obscure his sublunary day,
 But never conquer. Ev'n the best must own,
 Patience and resignation are the pillars
 Of human peace on earth: remote from thee,
 Till this heroic lesson thou hast learn'd;
 To frown at pleasure, and to smile in pain,
 Fir'd at the prospect of unclouded bliss.
 Heav'n in reversion, like the sun as yet
 Beneath th' horizon, cheers us in this world;
 It sheds, on souls susceptible of light,
 The glorious dawn of our eternal day.

Now see the man immortal; him, I mean,
 Who lives as such; whose heart, full bent on
 heav'n,

Leans all that way his bias to the stars. [raise
 The world's dark shades, in contrast set, shall

His lustre more; though bright, without a soil.
 Observe his awful portrait, and admire;
 Nor stop at wonder; imitate and live.

§ 236. Picture of a Good Man.

WITH aspect mild, and elevated eye,
 Behold him seated on a mount serene,
 Above the fogs of sense, and passion's storm;
 All the black cares and tumults of this life,
 Like harmless thunders, breaking at his feet.
 Earth's genuine sons, the sceptred and the slave,
 A mingled mob! a wand'ring herd! he sees
 Bewilder'd in the vale; in all unlike!
 His full reverse in all; what higher praise?
 What stronger demonstration of the right?

The present all their care; the future his:
 When public welfare calls, or private want,
 They give to fame; his bounty he conceals:
 Their virtues varnish nature; his exalt:
 Theirs, the wild chase of false felicities;
 His, the compos'd possession of the true:
 Alike throughout is his consistent peace,
 All of one color, and an even thread;
 While party-color'd shreds of happiness,
 With hideous gaps between, patch up for them
 A madman's robe; each puff of fortune blows
 The tatters by, and shows their nakedness.

He sees with other eyes than theirs; where they

Behold a sun, he spies a Deity;
 What makes them only smile, makes him
 [adore;

Where they see mountains, he but atoms sees;
 An empire, in his balance, weighs a grain:
 They things terrestrial worship, as divine;
 His hopes immortal blow them by, as dust,
 That dims his sight, and shortens his survey,
 Which longs, in infinite, to lose all bound:
 Titles and honors (if they prove his fate)
 He lays aside to find his dignity:
 They triumph in externals (which conceal
 Man's real glory) proud of an eclipse;
 He nothing thinks so great in man, as man;
 Too dear he holds his interest, to neglect
 Another's welfare, or his right invade;
 Their int'rest, like a lion's, lives on prey;
 They kindle at the shadow of a wrong;
 Wrong he sustains with temper, looks on heav'n,
 Nor stoops to think his injurer his foe;
 Nought, but what wounds his virtue, wounds
 his peace:

A cover'd heart their character defends;
 A cover'd heart denies him half his praise:
 With nakedness his innocence agrees;
 While their broad foliage testifies their fall:
 Their no-joys end, where his full feast begins;
 His joys create, theirs murder, future bliss:
 To triumph in existence, his alone;
 And his alone, triumphantly to think
 His true existence is not yet begun:
 His glorious course was, sterday, complete;
 Death when was welcome, yet life still is sweet.

§ 237. The Fall of the Good Man.

BUT nothing charms, Lorenzo, like the firm
Undaunted breast:—And whose is that high
praise?

They yield to pleasure, though they danger brave,
And show no fortitude, but in the field;
If there they show it, 'tis for glory shown:
Nor will that cordial always man their hearts:
A cordial his sustains, that cannot fail:
By pleasure unsubdu'd, unbroke by pain,
He shares in that omnipotence he trusts:
All-bearing, all-attempting, till he falls,
And, when he falls, writes VICI on his shield;
From magnanimity, all fear above:
From nobler recompence, above applause.

§ 238. Wit and Wisdom.

WIT, how delicious to man's dainty taste!—
'Tis precious, as the vehicle of sense;
But, as its substitute, a dire disease:
Pernicious talent! flatter'd by mankind,
Yet hated too; they think the talent rare.
Wisdom is rare, Lorenzo! wit abounds;
Passion can give it; sometimes wine inspires
The lucky flash; and madness rarely fails.
Whatever cause the spirit strongly stirs,
Confers the bays, and rivals thy renown;
Chance often hits it; and, to pique thee more,
See dullness blund'ring on vivacities.
But wisdom, awful wisdom! which inspects,
Discerns, compares, weighs, separates, infers,
Seizes the right, and holds it to the last!
How rare! In senates, synods, sought in vain;
Or, if there found, 'tis sacred to the few.
While a loud prostitute to multitudes,
Frequent as fatal, wit. In civil life,
Wit makes an enterpriser; sense, a man:
Sense is our helmet, wit is but the plume;
The plume exposes, 'tis our helmet saves:
Sense is the diamond, weighty, solid, sound;
When cut by wit, it casts a brighter beam;
Yet, wit apart, it is a diamond still: [nought;
Wit, widow'd of good sense, is worse than
It hoists more sail to run against a rock.

How ruinous the rock I warn thee shun,
Where syrens sit, to sing thee to thy fate!
Let not the cooings of the world allure thee;
Which of her lovers ever found her true?
Happy! of this bad world who little know;
She gives but little; nor that little, long.
There is, I grant, a triumph of the pulse;
A dance of spirits, a mere froth of joy,
That mantles high, that sparkles and expires,
Leaving the soul more vapid than before;
An animal ovation! such as holds
No commerce with our reason, but subsists
On juices through the well-tun'd tubes, well-
strain'd;

A nice machine! scarce ever tun'd aright;
But when it jars, the syrens sing no more,
The demi-god is thrown beneath the man,
In coward gloom immers'd, or fell despair.

§ 239. False Gaiety ends in Despair.

THEY grin; but wherefore? and how long they laugh!

Half ignorance, their mirth; and half a lie:
To cheat the world, and cheat themselves, they smile.

Hard either task! The most abandon'd own,
That others, if abandon'd, are undone:
Then, for themselves, the moment reason wakes,
O how laborious is their gaiety!
They scarce can muster patience for the farce;
And pump sad laughter, till the curtain falls:
Scarce, did I say? Some cannot sit it out;
Oft their own daring hands the curtain draw,
And show us what their joy, by their despair.

The clotted hair! gor'd breast! blaspheming eye!

Its impious fury still alive in death!
Shut, shut the shocking scene.—But heav'n denies

A cover to such guilt; and so should man.
Look round, Lorenzo! see the reeking blade,
Th' envenom'd phial, and the fatal ball;
The strangling cord, and suffocating stream;
The loathsome rottenness and foul decays
From raging riot (slower suicides!),
And pride in these, more execrable still!—
How horrid all to thought!—But horrors, these,
That vouch the truth, and aid my feeble song.

§ 240. NIGHT IX. Reflections on Death.

WHERE the prime actors of the last year's scene;

Their port so proud, their buskin, and their plume?

How many sleep, who kept the world awake
With lustre, and with noise? Has Death proclaim'd

A truce, and hung his sated lance on high?
'Tis brandish'd still; nor shall the present year
Be more tenacious of her human leaf,
Or spread of feeble life a thinner fall.

But needless monuments to wake the
thought;

Life's gayest scenes speak man's mortality,
Though in a style more florid, full as plain,
As mausoleums, pyramids, and tombs.
What are our noblest ornaments, but deaths
Turn'd flatterers of life, in paint, or marble;
The well-stain'd canvas, or the featur'd stone?
Our fathers grace, or rather haunt, the scene;
Joy peoples her pavilion from the dead.

“Profest diversions! cannot these escape?”
Far from it; these present us with a shroud,
And talk of death, like garlands o'er the grave.
As some bold plunderers for buried wealth,
We ransack tombs for pastime; from the dust
Call up the sleeping hero; bid him tread
The scene for our amusement: how like gods
We sit; and, wrapt in immortality,
Shed gen'rous tears on wretches born to die;
Their fate deploring, to forget our own!

§ 241. The World a Grave.

WHAT is the world itself? thy world?—a grave?

Where is the dust that has not been alive?
The spade, the plough, disturb our ancestors;
From human mould we reap our daily bread:
The globe around earth's hollow surface shakes,
And is the ceiling of her sleeping sons:
O'er devastation we blind revels keep;
Whole buried towns support the dancer's heel:
The moist of human frame the sun exhales;
Winds scatter, through the mighty void, the dry;
Earth re-possesses part of what she gave,
And the freed spirit mounts on wings of fire;
Each element partakes our scatter'd spoils;
As nature wide, our ruins spread: man's death
Inhabits all things, but the thought of man.

§ 242. The Triumphs of Death.

NOR man alone; his breathing bust expires;
His tomb is mortal; empires die; Where now
The Roman? Greek? They stalk, an empty
name!

Yet few regard them in this useful light;
Though half our learning is their epitaph.
When down thy vale, unlock'd by midnight
thought,

That loves to wander in thy sunless realms,
O Death! I stretch my view; what visions rise!
What triumphs! toils imperial! arts divine!
In wither'd laurels, glide before my sight!
What lengths of far-fam'd ages, billow'd high
With human agitation, roll along
In unsubstantial images of air!
The melancholy ghosts of dead renown,
Whisp'ring faint echoes of the world's applause;
With penitential aspect, as they pass,
All point at earth, and hiss at human pride.

§ 243. Deluge and Conflagration.

BUT, O Lorenzo! far the rest above,
Of ghastly nature, and enormous size,
One form assaults my sight, and chills my blood,
And shakes my frame: of one departed world
I see the mighty shadow; oozy wreath
And dismal sea-weed crown her; o'er her urn
Reclin'd, she weeps her desolated realms,
And bloated sons; and, weeping, prophesies
Another's dissolution, soon, in flames.

Deluge and Conflagration, dreadful pow'rs!
Prime ministers of vengeance! chain'd in caves
Distinct, apart the giant-furies roar;
Apart, or, such their horrid rage for ruin,
In mutual conflict would they rise, and wage
Eternal war, till one was quite devour'd:
But not for this ordain'd their boundless rage;
When heaven's inferior instruments of wrath,
War, famine, pestilence, are found too weak
To scourge a world for her enormous crimes;
These are let loose, alternate; down they rush,
Swift and tempestuous, from th' eternal throne,
With irresistible commission arm'd,
The world, in vain corrected, to destroy,
And ease creation of the shocking scene.

§ 244. The Last Day.

SEEST thou, Lorenzo! what depends on man?
The fate of nature; as, for man, her birth:
Earth's actors change earth's transitory scenes,
And make creation groan with human guilt:
How must it groan, in a new deluge whelm'd;
But not of waters! At the destin'd hour,
By the loud trumpet summon'd to the charge,
See, all the formidable sons of fire,
Eruptions, earthquakes, comets, lightnings, play
Their various engines; all at once disgorge
Their blazing magazines; and take by storm
This poor terrestrial citadel of man.

Amazing period: when each mountain-height
Out-burns Vesuvius; rocks eternal pour
Their melted mass, as rivers once they pour'd;
Stars rush; and final Ruin fiercely drives
Her ploughshare o'er creation!—while aloft
More than astonishment! if more can be!
Far other firmament than e'er was seen,
Than e'er was thought by man! far other stars!
Stars animate, that govern these of fire:
Far other sun!—A sun, O how unlike
The babe of Bethlem! How unlike the man
That groan'd on Calvary!—Yet, He it is;
That man of sorrows! O how chang'd! What pomp!

In grandeur terrible, all heaven descends!
A swift archangel, with his golden wing,
As blots and clouds, that darken and disgrace
The scene divine, sweeps stars and suns aside:
And now, all dross remov'd, heav'n's own pure
Full on the confines of our ether, flames. [day, While (dreadful contrast!) far, how far beneath!

Hell bursting, belches forth her blazing seas,
And storms sulphureous; her voracious jaws
Expanding wide, and roaring for her prey.

At midnight, when mankind is wrapp'd in
peace,
And worldly fancy feeds on golden dreams,
Man, starting from his couch, shall sleep no
more,

Above, around, beneath, amazement all!
Terror and glory join'd in their extremes!
Our God in grandeur, and our world on fire!
All nature struggling in the pangs of death!
Dost thou not hear her? dost thou not deplore
Her strong convulsions, and her final groan?
Where are we now? Ah me! the ground is gone
On which we stood!—Lorenzo! while thou mayst,

Provide more firm support, or sink for ever!
Where? how? from whence? Vain hope! it is too late!

Where, where, for shelter, shall the guilty fly,
When consternation turns the good man pale?

Great day! for which all other days were made; [earth;
For which earth rose from chaos; man from
And an Eternity, the date of Gods,
Descended on poor earth-created man!
Great day of dread, decision, and despair!
At thought of thee, each sublunary wish

Lets go its eager grasp, and drops the world;
And catches at each reed of hope in heav'n.
Already is begun the grand assize,
In us, in all: deputed conscience scales
The dread tribunal, and forestalls our doom;
Forestalls; and by forestalling, proves it sure.
Why on himself should man void judgement
Is idle nature laughing at her sons? [pass?
Who conscience sent, her sentence will support,
And God above assert that God in man.

§ 245. Thoughtlessness of the last Day.

THRICE happy they, that enter now the court
Heav'n opens in their bosoms: but, how rare!
Ah me! that magnanimity, how rare!
What hero, like the man who stands himself;
Who dares to meet his naked heart alone?
Who hears intrepid the full charge it brings,
Resolv'd to silence future murmurs there?
The coward flies; and, flying, is undone.

Shall all, but man, look out with ardent eye,
For that great day, which was ordain'd for man?
O day of consummation! mark supreme
(If men are wise) of human thought! nor least,
Or in the sight of angels, or their King!
Angels, whose radiant circles, height o'er height,
As in a theatre, surround this scene,
Intent on man and anxious for his fate,
Angels look out for thee; for thee, their Lord,
To vindicate his glory; and for thee,
Creation universal calls aloud,
To disinvolve the moral world, and give
To nature's renovation brighter charms.

Shall man alone, whose fate, whose final fate,
Hangs on that hour, exclude it from his thought?
I think of nothing else; I see! I feel it!
All nature, like an earthquake, trembling round!
I see the Judge enthron'd! the flaming guard!
The volume open'd! open'd ev'ry heart!
A sun-beam pointing out each secret thought!
No patron! intercessor none! now past
The sweet, the element, mediatorial hour!
For guilt no plea! to pain no pause! no bound!
Inexorable, all! and all extreme!
Nor man alone; the foe of God and man,
From his dark den, blaspheming, drags his chain,
And rears his brazen front, with thunder scar'd;
Like meteors in a stormy sky, how roll
His baleful eyes! he curses whom he dreads,
And deems it the first moment of his fall.

§ 246. Eternity and Time.

'Tis present to my thought!—And, yet, where is it?

Say, Thou great close of human hopes and fears!
Great key of hearts! great finisher of fates!
Great end, and great beginning! say, where art
Art thou in time, or in eternity? [Thou?
Nor in eternity, nor time, I find thee!
These, as two monarchs, on their borders meet,
(Monarchs of all elaps'd, or un-arriv'd!)
As in debate, how best their pow'rs ally'd
May swell the grandeur, or discharge the wrath,
Of him, whom both their monarchies obey.

Time, this vast fabric for him built (and doom'd
With him to fall) now bursting o'er his head;
His lamp, the sun, extinguish'd, calls his sons
From their long slumber, from earth's heaving
womb,

To second birth; upstarting from one bed,
He turns them o'er, eternity! to thee:
Then (as a king depos'd disdains to live)
He falls on his own scythe; nor falls alone;
His greatest foe falls with him; time, and he
Who murder'd all time's offspring, death, expire.

Time was! eternity now reigns alone!
And lo! her twice ten thousand gates thrown wide,

With banners, streaming as the comet's blaze,
And clarions, louder than the deep in storms,
Pour forth their myriads, potentates, and pow'rs,
Of light, of darkness: in a middle field,
Wide as creation! there to mark th' event
Of that great drama, whose preceding scenes
Detain'd them close spectators, through a length
Of ages, rip'ning to this grand result;
Ages, as yet unnumber'd but by God;
Who, now, pronouncing sentence, vindicates
The rights of virtue, and his own renown.

Eternity, the various sentence past,
Assigns the sever'd throng distinct abodes,
Sulphureous or ambrosial: What ensues?
The goddess, with determin'd aspect, turns
Her adamant key's enormous size
Through destiny's inextricable wards,
Deep-driving ev'ry bolt, on both their fates:
Then from the crystal battlements of heav'n,
Down, down, she hurls it through the dark pro-
found,

Ten thousand thousand fathom; there to rust,
And ne'er unlock her resolution more.
The deep resounds, and hell, through all her
glooms,
Returns, in groans, the melancholy roar.

§ 247. The Unreasonableness of Complaint.

WHAT then am I?—

Amidst applauding worlds,
And worlds celestial, is there found on earth
A peevish, dissonant, rebellious string,
Which jars in the grand chorus, and complains?
All, all is right, by God ordain'd, or done;
And who, but God, resum'd the friends he gave?
And have I been complaining, then, so long?—
Complaining of his favours; pain, and death?
Who without pain's advice would e'er be good?
Who without death, but would be good in vain?
Pain is to save from pain! all punishment,
To make for peace! and death to save from
death!

And second death to guard immortal life;
To rouse the careless, the presumptuous awe,
And turn the tide of souls another way;
By the same tenderness divine ordain'd,
That planted Eden, and high-bloom'd for man,
A fairer Eden, endless in the skies.

§ 248. Grief and Joy.

LET impious grief be banish'd, joy indulg'd ;
 But chiefly then, when grief puts in her claim :
 Joy from the joyous frequently betrays,
 Oft lives in vanity, and dies in woe :
 Joy amidst ills, corroborates, exalts ;
 'Tis joy and conquest : joy, and virtue too :
 A noble fortitude in ills delights
 Heav'n, earth, ourselves ; 'tis duty, glory, peace.
 Affliction is the good man's shining scene ;
 Prosperity conceals his brightest ray :
 As night to stars, woe lustre gives to man :
 Heroes in battle, pilots in the storm,
 And virtue in calamities, admire.
 The crown of manhood is a winter joy ;
 An ever-green, that stands the northern blast,
 And blossoms in the rigor of our fate.

§ 249. Night.

—O MAJESTIC Night !
 Nature's great ancestor ! day's elder-born !
 And fated to survive the transient sun !
 A starry cloud thy raven-brow adorns, [loom,
 An azure zone, thy waist ; clouds, in heav'n's
 Wrought through varieties of shape and shade,
 In ample folds of drapery divine, [out,
 Thy flowing mantle form, and, heav'n through-
 Voluminously pour thy pompous train :
 Thy gloomy grandeurs claim a grateful verse,
 And, like a sable curtain starr'd with gold,
 Drawn o'er my labors past, shall close the scene.

§ 250. Regularity of the Heavenly Bodies.

NOR think thou seest a wild disorder here ;
 Through this illustrious chaos, to the sight,
 Arrangement neat, the chastest order, reign.
 The path prescrib'd, inviolably kept,
 Upbraids the lawless sallies of mankind :
 Worlds, ever thwarting, never interfere ;
 They rove for ever, without error rove :
 Confusion unconfus'd ! nor less admire
 This tumult untumultuous ; all on wing,
 In motion, all ! yet what profound repose !
 What fervid action, yet no noise ! as aw'd
 To silence by the presence of their Lord ;
 Or hush'd, by his command, in love to man,
 And bid let fall soft beams on human rest,
 Restless themselves. On yon cerulean plain,
 In exultation to their God and thine,
 They dance, they sing eternal jubilee,
 Eternal celebration of his praise :
 But since their song arrives not at our ear,
 Their dance perplex'd exhibits to the sight
 Fair hieroglyphic of his peerless power :
 Mark, how the labyrinthian turns they take,
 The circles intricate, and mystic maze,
 Weave the grand cipher of Omnipotence ;
 To Gods how great ! how legible to man !

§ 251. Miracles.

AND yet Lorenzo calls for miracles,
 To give his tott'ring faith a solid base :
 Why call for less than is already thine ?

Say, which imports more plenitude of power,
 Or nature's laws to fix, or to repeal ?
 To make a sun, or stop his mid-career ?
 To countermand his orders, and send back
 The flaming courier to the frightened east,
 Or bid the moon, as with her journey tir'd,
 In Ajalon's soft, flow'ry vale repose ?
 Great things are these ; still greater, to create.
 From Adam's bow'r look down through the whole train
 Of miracles ;—resistless is their pow'r ?
 They do not, cannot, more amaze the mind,
 Than this, call'd un-miraculous survey
 Say'st thou, "The course of nature governs
 The course of nature is the art of God : [all ?"
 The miracles thou call'st for, this attest ;
 For, say, could nature nature's course control ?

§ 252. Nature the Foe of Scepticism.

OPEN thy bosom, set thy wishes wide,
 And let in manhood ; let in happiness ;
 Admit the boundless theatre of thought
 From nothing up to God ; which makes a man :
 Take God from nature, nothing great is left :
 Man's mind is in a pit, and nothing sees :
 Emerge from thy profound ; erect thine eye ;
 See thy distress ! how close art thou besieg'd ?
 Besieg'd by nature, the proud sceptic's foe !
 Inclos'd by these innumerable worlds,
 Sparkling conviction on the darkest mind,
 As in a golden net of providence,
 How art thou caught ! sure captive of belief !
 From this thy blest captivity, what art,
 What blasphemy to reason sets thee free ?
 This scene is heaven's indulgent violence :
 Canst thou bear up against the tide of glory ?
 What is earth bosom'd in the ambient orbs,
 But faith in God impos'd, and press'd on man ?
 God is a spirit ; spirit cannot strike
 These gross, material organs ; God by man
 As much is seen, as man a God can see
 In these astonishing exploits of power :
 What order, beauty, motion, distance, size !
 Apt means ! great ends ! consent to general good !
 Each attribute of these material gods
 A separate conquest gains o'er rebel thought ;
 And leads in triumph the whole mind of man.

§ 253. Reasons for Belief.

"WHAT am I ? and from whence ?—I nothing
 know,
 But that I am ; and, since I am, conclude
 Something eternal : had there e'er been nought,
 Nought still had been : eternal there must be :
 But what eternal ?—Why not human race ;
 And Adam's ancestors without an end ?
 That's hard to be conceiv'd ; since every link
 Of that long-chain'd succession is so frail ;
 Can every part depend, and not the whole ?
 Yet grant it true ; new difficulties rise ; [too ?
 Whence earth, and these bright orbs ?—eternal
 Grant matter was eternal ; still these orbs
 Would want some other father :—much design
 Is seen in all their motions, all their makes :

Design implies intelligence, and art ;
That can't be from themselves, or man : that art
Man scarce can comprehend, could man bestow ?
And nothing greater, yet allow'd, than man.—
Who, motion, foreign to the smallest grain,
Shot through vast masses of enormous weight ?
Who bid brute matter's restive lump assume
Such various forms, and gave it wings to fly ?
Has matter innate motion ? Then each atom,
Asserting its indisputable right
To dance, would form an universe of dust :
Has matter none ? Then whence these glorious forms,                                 [pos'd ?
And boundless flights, from shapeless, and re-
Has matter more than motion ? has it thought,
Judgement, and genius ? Is it deeply learn'd
In mathematics ? Has it fram'd such laws,
Which, but to guess, a Newton made immortal ?
If so, how each sage atom laughs at me,
Who think a clod inferior to a man !
If art, to form ; and council, to conduct ;
And that with greater far, than human skill ;
Resides not in each block,—a Godhead reigns.—
Grant then, invisible, eternal, mind ;
That granted, all is solved.—But, granting that,
Draw I not o'er me still a darker cloud ?
Grant I not that which I can ne'er conceive ?
A being without origin, or end !
Hail, human liberty ! There is no God.
Yet why ? on either scheme the knot subsists :
Subsist it must, in God, or human race ;
If in the last, how many knots beside,
Indissoluble all ?—why choose it there,
Where, chosen, still subsist ten thousand more ?
Reject it, where, that chosen, all the rest
Dispers'd, leave reason's whole horizon clear ?
What vast preponderance is here ! Can reason
With louder voice exclaim—Believe a God ?
What things impossible must man think true,
On any other system ? and how strange
To disbelieve, through mere credulity !"

§ 254. The Power of God infinite.

CAN man conceive beyond what God can do ?
Nothing, but quite-impossible, is hard ;
He summons into being, with like ease,
A whole creation, and a single grain. [born !—
Speaks he the word ? a thousand worlds are A thousand worlds ? there's space for millions
more ;
And in what space can his great fiat fail ?
Still seems my thought enormous ? Think again ;—
Experience self shall aid thy lame belief :
Glasses (that revelation to the sight !)
Have they not led us deep in the disclose
Of fine-spun nature, exquisitely small ;
And, though demonstrated, still ill-conceiv'd ?
If, then, on the reverse, the mind would mount
In magnitude, what mind can mount too far,
To keep the balance, and creation poise ?
Stupendous Architect ! Thou, Thou art all !
My soul flies up and down in thoughts of Thee,
And finds herself but at the centre still !

I Am, thy name! existence all thine own!
Creation's nothing; flatter'd much, if styl'd
"The thin, the fleeting atmosphere of God."

§ 255. The World sufficient for Man. Contemplation of the Heavens.

YET why drown fancy in such depths as these ?
Return, presumptuous rover ! and confess
The bounds of man : nor blame them, as too small :

Enjoy we not full scope in what is seen ?
Full ample the dominions of the sun !
Full glorious to behold ! how far, how wide,
The matchless monarch from his flaming throne,
Lavish of lustre, throws his beams about him,
Farther and faster, than a thought can fly,
And feeds his planets, with eternal fires ?
Beyond this city, why strays human thought ?
One wonderful, enough for man to know !
One firmament, enough for man to read !
Nor is instruction, here, our only gain ;
There dwells a nobler pathos in the skies,
Which warms our passions, proselytes our hearts.

How eloquently shines the glowing pole !
With what authority it gives its charge,
Remonstrating great truths in style sublime,
Though silent, loud ! heard earth around, above
The planets heard ; and not unheard in hell ;
Hell has its wonder, though too proud to praise.

Divine instructor! thy first volume, this,
For man's perusal; all in capitals!
In moon and stars (heaven's golden alphabet!)
Emblaz'd to seize the sight: who runs, may read;

Who reads, can understand: 'tis unconfin'd
To Christian land, or Jewry; fairly writ
In language universal, to mankind:

A language, lofty to the learn'd ; yet plain,
To those that feed the flock, or guide the plough,
Or from its husk strike out the bounding grain !
A language, worthy the great mind that speaks !
Preface, and comment, to the sacred page !

Stupendous book of wisdom, to the wise!
Stupendous book! and open'd, Night! by thee.

By thee much open'd, I confess, O Night!
Yet more I wish; say, gentle Night! whose beams

Give us a new creation, and present
The world's great picture, soften'd to the sight ;
Say, thou, whose mild dominion's silver key

Unlocks our hemisphere, and sets to view [day
Worlds without number, worlds conceal'd by
Behind the proud, and envious star of noon!

Canst thou not draw a deeper scene?—and show
The mighty potentate, to whom belong
These rich regalia, pompously display'd?

O for a glimpse of him my soul adores!
As the chas'd hart, amid the desert waste,
Pants for the living stream: for him who made

Pants for the living stream; for him who made
So pants the thirsty soul, amid the blank [her,
Of sublunary joys: say, goddess! where?
Where blazes his bright court? where burns his

Where blazes his bright court? where burns his throne?

Thou know'st; for thou art near him; by thee,
His grand pavilion, sacred fame reports, [round
The sable curtain's drawn, if not, can none
Of thy fair daughter-train, so swift of wing,
Who travel far, discover where he dwells?
A star his dwelling pointed out below:
Say, ye, who guide the wilder'd in the waves,
On which hand must I bend my course to find
him?

These courtiers keep the secret of their king;
I wake whole nights, in vain, to steal it from
In ardent contemplation's rapid car, [them.
From earth, as from my barrier, I set out:
How swift I mount; diminish'd earth recedes;
I pass the moon; and, from her farther side,
Pierce heaven's blue curtain; pause at every planet,

And ask for him, who gives their orbs to roll.
From Saturn's ring, I take my bolder flight,
Amid those sovereign glories of the skies,
Of independent, native lustre, proud,
The souls of system!—What behold I now?
A wilderness of wonders burning round;
Where larger suns inherit higher spheres;
Nor halt I here; my toil is but begun;
'Tis but the threshold of the Deity;
Or, far beneath it, I am grovelling still.

§ 256. Man's Science the Culture of his Heart.

'Tis not the curious, but the pious path,
That leads me to my point: Lorenzo! know,
Without or star or angel for their guide,
Who worship God, shall find him: humble
love,
And not proud reason, keeps the door of heaven;
Love finds admission, where proud science fails.
Man's science is the culture of his heart;
And not to lose his plummet in the depths
Of nature, or the more profound of God:
To fathom nature (ill attempted here!),
Past doubt, is deep philosophy above;
Higher degrees in bliss archangels take,
As deeper learn'd; the deepest, learning still:
For, what a thunder of omnipotence
Is seen in all! in man! in earth! in skies!
Teaching this lesson, pride is loth to learn—
“Not deeply to discern, not much to know;
“Mankind was born to wonder and adore.”

§ 257. The Greatness of God inexpressible.

“O WHAT a root! O what a branch is here!
O what a father! what a family!
Worlds! systems! and creations!—and creations,
In one agglomerated cluster, hung,
Great Vine! on thee; on thee the cluster hangs;
The filial cluster! infinitely spread
In glowing globes, with various being fraught;
Or, shall I say (for who can say enough?)
A constellation of ten thousand gems,
Set in one signet, flames on the right-hand
Of majesty divine; the blazing seal,
That deeply stamps, on all created mind,
Indelible, his sovereign attributes,
Omnipotence and love: nor stop we here,

For want of power in God, but thought in man.
If greater aught, that greater all is thine,
Dread Sire!—Accept this miniature of thee;
And pardon an attempt from mortal thought,
In which archangels might have fail'd, un-blam'd.”

§ 258. The Misery of Sin.

O THOU, ambitious of disgrace alone,
Rank coward to the fashionable world!
Art thou asham'd to bend thy knee to heaven?
Not all these luminaries, quench'd at once,
Were half so sad, as one benighted mind,
Which gropes for happiness, and meets despair.
How, like a widow in her weeds, the night,
Amid her glimmering tapers, silent sits!
How sorrowful, how desolate, she weeps
Perpetual dews, and saddens nature's scene!
A scene more sad sin makes the darken'd soul;
All comfort kills, nor leaves one spark alive.

§ 259. Reason.

THOUGH blind of heart, still open is thine eye;
Why such magnificence in all thou seest?
Of matter's grandeur, know, one end is this,
To tell the rational, who gazes on it—
Though that immensely great, still greater he,
Whose breast, capacious, can embrace, and lodge,
Unburthen'd, nature's universal scheme;
Can grasp creation with a single thought;
Creation grasp; and not exclude its sire—
To tell him farther—It behoves him much
To guard the important, yet depending, fate
Of being, brighter than a thousand suns;
One single ray of thought outshines them all.

§ 260. Man.

O THOU most awful being! and most vain!
Thy will, how frail! how glorious is thy power!
Though dread eternity has sown her seeds
Of bliss, and woe, in thy despotic breast;
Though heaven and hell depend upon thy
thought,
A butterfly comes cross, and both are fled.
My solemn night-born adjuration hear;
Hear, and I'll raise thy spirit from the dust.

§ 261. Death.

By silence, death's peculiar attribute!
By darkness, guilt's inevitable doom:
By darkness, and by silence, sisters dread!
That draw the curtain round night's ebon
And raise ideas, solemn as the scene: [throne,
By night, and all of awful, night presents
To thought, or sense, by these her trembling
fires,
By these bright orators, that prove and praise,
And press thee to revere, the Deity:
Perhaps, too, aid thee, when rever'd a while,
To reach his throne; as stages of the soul;
Through which, at different periods, she shall Refining gradual, for her final height; [pass,
And purging off some dross at every sphere:

By this dark pall thrown o'er the silent world:
By the world's kings, and kingdoms, most renown'd,
From short ambition's zenith set for ever;
By the long list of swift mortality,
From Adam downward to this evening's knell,
Which midnight waves in fancy's startled eye;
And shocks her with a hundred centuries
Round death's black banner throng'd, in human
thought:

By thousands, now, resigning their last breath,
And calling thee—wert thou so wise to hear:
By tombs o'er tombs arising, human earth;
Ejected, to make room for—human earth;
By pompous obsequies, that shun the day,
The torch funereal, and the nodding plume,
Boast of our ruin! triumph of our dust!
By the damp vault that weeps o'er royal bones;
And the pale lamp, that shows the ghastly dead,
More ghastly through the thick-incumbent gloom!

By visits (if there are) from darker scenes,
The gliding spectre! and the groaning grove!
By groans and graves, and miseries that groan
For the grave's shelter: by desponding men,
Senseless to pains of death, from pangs of guilt:
By guilt's last audit: by yon moon in blood,
The rocking firmament, the falling stars,
And thunder's last discharge, great nature's
By second chaos; and eternal night— [knell!
Be wise—nor let Philander blame my charm;
But own not ill-discharged my double debt,
Love to the living, duty to the dead.

§ 262. Reflections on Sleep.

BUT oh!—my spirits fail!—sleep's dewy hand
Has strok'd my drooping lids to soft repose:
Haste, haste, sweet stranger! from the peasant's cot!

The ship-boy's hammock, or the soldier's straw,
Whence sorrow never chas'd thee: with thee
bring

Not hideous visions, as of late; but draughts
Delicious of well-tasted, cordial, rest;
Man's rich restorative; his balmy bath,
That supplies, lubricates, and keeps in play,
The various movements of this nice machine.
Sleep winds us up for the succeeding dawn;
Fresh we spin on, till sickness clogs our wheels,
Or death quite breaks the spring, and motion
When will it end with me! [ends.

—Thou only know'st,

Thou, whose broad eye the future and the past
Joins to the present; thou, and thou alone,
All-knowing!—all unknown! and yet well
known!

Thee, though invisible, for ever seen!
And seen in all the great and the minute,
Each globe above, with its gigantic race,
Each flower, each leaf, with its small people swarm'd, [declare

To the first thought, that asks, from whence?
Their common source, thou fountain running
In rivers of communicated joy! [o'er

Who gav'st us speech for far, far humbler themes!

Say, by what name shall I presume to call
Him I see burning in these countless suns,
As Moses in the bush? illustrious mind!
How shall I name Thee?—how my laboring soul [birth!
Heaves underneath the thought, too big for § 263. Address to the Trinity.

GREAT system of perfections! mighty cause
Of nature, that luxuriant growth of God,
Father of this immeasurable mass
Of matter multiform; mov'd, or at rest:
Father of these bright millions of the night!
Of which the least full Godhead had proclaim'd,
Father of matter's temporary lords!
Father of spirits! nobler offspring! sparks
Of high, paternal glory; rich-endow'd
With various measures, and with various modes
Of instinct, reason, intuition; beams
More pale, or bright from day divine, that raise
Each over other in superior light,
Till the last ripens into lustre strong
Of next approach to Godhead: Father kind
Of intellectual beings; beings blest
With powers to please thee: not of passive ply
To laws they know not; beings lodg'd in seats
Of well-adapted joys; in different domes
Of this imperial palace for thy sons.
Or, oh! indulge, immortal King! indulge
A title, less august indeed, but more
Endearing; ah! how sweet in human ears;
Father of immortality to man!
And thou the next! yet equal! thou, by whom
That blessing was convey'd; far more! was bought;

Ineffable the price! by whom all worlds
Were made, and one redeem'd! illustrious light
From light illustrious! Thou, whose regal
On more than adamant basis fix'd, [power,
O'er more, far more, than diadems and thrones,
Inviolably reigns; beneath whose foot,
And by the mandate of whose awful nod,
All regions, revolutions, fortunes, fates,
Of high, of low, of mind, and matter roll
Through the short channels of expiring time,
Or shoreless ocean of eternity,
In absolute subjection!—and, O Thou,
The glorious third! distinct, not separate,
Beaming from both! incorporate with dust
By condescension, as thy glory, great;
Inshrin'd in man! of human hearts, if pure,
Divine inhabitant! the tie divine [pow'r!
Of heaven with distant earth!—mysterious
Reveal'd,—yet unreveal'd! darkness in light!
Number in unity! our joy! our dread!
Tri-une, unutterable, unconceiv'd,
Absconding yet demonstrable, great God!
Greater than greatest! with soft pity's eye,
From thy bright home, from that high firma-
ment,
Where thou, from all eternity, hast dwelt;
Beyond archangels' unassisted ken;

Through radiant ranks of essences unknown;
 Through hierarchies from hierarchies detach'd,
 Round various banners of omnipotence,
 With endless change of rapturous duties fir'd;
 Through wondrous beings interposing swarms,
 All clustr'ing at the call, to dwell in thee;
 Through this wide waste of worlds—look down
 —down—down,

On a poor breathing particle in dust,
 Or, lower, an immortal in his crimes:
 His crimes forgive! forgive his virtues too!
 Those smaller faults; half-converts to the right.
 Nor let me close these eyes, which never more
 May see the sun (though night's descending scale

Now weighs up morn) unpity'd and unblest!
 In thy displeasure dwells eternal pain;
 And, since all pain is terrible to man,
 Gently, ah, gently, lay me in my bed,
 My clay-cold bed! by nature, now, so near!
 And when (the shelter of thy wing implor'd)
 My senses, sooth'd, shall sink in soft repose;
 O sink this truth still deeper in my soul: [ever,
 Man's sickly soul, though turn'd, and toss'd for
 From side to side, can rest on nought but thee;
 Here, in full trust; hereafter, in full joy.
 Thou God and mortal! thence more God to
 man!

Thou canst not 'scape uninjur'd from our praise,
 Uninjur'd from our praise can he escape,
 Who, disembosom'd from the Father, bows
 The heaven of heavens, to kiss the distant earth!
 Breathes out in agonies a sinless soul!
 Against the cross, death's iron sceptre breaks!
 Throws wide the gates celestial to his foes!
 Their gratitude, for such a boundless debt,
 Deputes their suffering brothers to receive!
 Injoins it as our duty, to rejoice!
 And (to close all) omnipotently kind,
 Takes his delights among the sons of men.

What words are these?—And did they come from heav'n?
 And were they spoke to man? to guilty man?
 What are all mysteries to love like this?
 Rich prelibation of consummate joy!

§ 264. Conclusion.

THEN, farewell night! of darkness, now no
 more:
 Joy breaks, shines, triumphs; 'tis eternal day!
 Shall that which rises out of nought complain,
 Of a few evils, paid with endless joys?
 My soul! henceforth, in sweetest union join
 The two supports of human happiness,
 Which some, erroneous, think can never meet;
 True taste of life, and constant thought of death;
 Thy patron, he, whose diadem has dropp'd
 Yon gems of heav'n; eternity thy prize.
 How must a spirit, late escap'd from earth,
 The truth of things new-blazing in its eye,
 Look back, astonished, on the ways of men,
 Whose life's whole drift is to forget their graves!
 And when our present privilege is past,
 The same astonishment will seize us all.

What then must pain us, would preserve us now!
 Seize wisdom, ere 'tis torment to be wise;
 That is, seize wisdom, ere she seizes thee:
 For, what is hell? full knowledge of the truth,
 When truth, resisted long, is sworn our foe;
 And calls eternity to do her right.

Thus, darkness aiding intellectual light,
 And sacred silence whispering truths divine,
 And truths divine converting pain to peace,
 My song the midnight raven has outwing'd,
 And shot, ambitious of unbounded scenes,
 Beyond the flaming limits of the world,
 Her gloomy flight. But what avails the flight
 Of fancy, when our hearts remain below?
 Virtue abounds in flatterers and foes;
 Lorenzo! rise, at this auspicious hour; [man;
 An hour, when heaven's most intimate with
 When, like a falling star, the ray divine
 Glides swift into the bosom of the just;
 And just are all, determin'd to reclaim;
 Which sets that title high within thy reach.
 Awake, then: thy Philander calls: awake!
 Thou, who shalt wake, when the creation sleeps:
 When, like a taper, all these suns expire:
 When time, like him of Gaza, in his wrath
 Plucking the pillars that support the world,
 In nature's ample ruins lies entomb'd;
 And midnight, universal midnight! reigns.

§ 265. Solitude. Young.

O SACRED solitude! divine retreat!
 Choice of the prudent! envy of the great!
 By thy pure stream, or in thy waving shade,
 We court fair wisdom, that celestial maid:
 The genuine offspring of her lov'd embrace,
 (Strangers on earth) are innocence and peace:
 There, from the ways of men laid safe ashore,
 We smile to hear the distant tempest roar;
 There, blest with health, with business unper-
 plex'd,
 This life we relish, and ensure the next.
 There, too, the Muses sport; these numbers free,
 Pierian Eastbury! I owe to thee.

§ 266. The Day of Judgement. Young.

Lo! the wide theatre, whose ample space
 Must entertain the whole of human race,
 At Heaven's all-powerful edict is prepar'd,
 And fenc'd around with an immortal guard.
 Tribes, provinces, dominions, worlds, o'erflow
 The mighty plain, and deluge all below:
 And ev'ry age and nation pours along;
 Nimrod and Bourbon mingle in the throng;
 Adam salutes his youngest son; no sign
 Of all those ages which their births disjoin.
 How empty learning, and how vain is art,
 But as it mends the life, and guides the heart!
 What volumes have been swell'd, what time been spent,
 To fix a hero's birth-day or descent?
 What joy must it now yield, what rapture raise,
 To see the glorious race of ancient days?
 To greet those worthies, who perhaps have stood
 Illustrious on record before the flood?

Alas! a nearer care your soul demands:
Cæsar unnoted in your presence stands.

How vast the concourse! not in number more
The waves that break on the resounding shore,
The leaves that tremble in the shady grove,
The lamps that gild the spangled vaults above;
Those overwhelming armies, whose command
Said to one empire, fall; another, stand;
Whose rear lay wrapt in night, while breaking dawn

Rous'd the broad front, and call'd the battle on;
Great Xerxes' world in arms, proud Cannæ's field,

Where Carthage taught victorious Rome to yield,
(Another blow had broke the Fates decree,
And earth had wanted her fourth monarchy.)

Immortal Blenheim, fam'd Ramillia's host,
They all are here, and here they all are lost:
Their millions swell to be discern'd in vain,
Lost as a billow in th' unbounded main. [air:

This echoing voice now rends the yielding
"For judgement, judgement, sons of men, prepare!"

Earth shakes anew; I hear her groans profound,
And hell through all her trembling realms
resound.

Whoe'er thou art, thou greatest pow'r of earth,
Blest with most equal planets at thy birth,
Whose valor drew the most successful sword,
Most realms united in one common lord;
Who on the day of triumph, said'st, Be thine
The skies, Jehovah, all this world is mine;
Dare not to lift thine eye—Alas, my Muse!
How art thou lost! what numbers canst thou choose?

A sudden blush inflames the waving sky,
And now the crimson curtains open fly;
Lo! far within, and far above all height,
Where heaven's great Sov'reign reigns in worlds of light.

Whence nature He informs, and with one ray
Shot from his eye, does all her works survey, Creates, supports, confounds! where time and
place,

Matter, and form, and fortune, life, and grace,
Wait humbly at the footstool of their God,
And move obedient at his awful nod;
Whence he beholds us vagrant emmets crawl
At random on this air-suspended ball
(Speck of creation!): if he pour one breath,
The bubble breaks, and 'tis eternal death.

Thence issuing I behold (but mortal sight
Sustains not such a rushing sea of light!
I see on an empyreal flying throne
Sublimely rais'd, Heaven's everlasting Son; Crown'd with that majesty which form'd the world,

And the grand rebel flaming downward hurl'd,
Virtue, dominion, praise, omnipotence,
Support the train of their triumphant Prince.
A zone, beyond the thought of angels bright,
Around him, like the zodiac, winds its light.
Night shades the solemn arches of his brows,
And in his cheek the purple morning glows.

Where'er serene he turns propitious eyes,
Or we expect, or find, a paradise:
But if resentment reddens their mild beams,
The Eden kindles, and the world's in flames.
On one hand, knowledge shines in purest light,
On one, the sword of justice, fiercely bright.
Now bend the knee in sport, present the reed;
Now tell the scourg'd impostor he shall bleed!

Thus glorious, through the courts of heaven,
the Source

Of life and death eternal bends his source;
Loud thunders round him roll, and lightnings
play,

Th' angelic host is rang'd in bright array;
Some touch the string, some strike the sounding shell;

And mingling voices in rich concert swell;
Voices seraphic! blest with such a strain,
Could Satan hear, he were a god again.

Triumphant King of glory! Soul of bliss,
What a stupendous turn of fate is this!

O! whither art thou rais'd above the scorn
And indigence of him in Bethlem born?

A needless, helpless, unaccounted guest,
And but a second to the fodder'd beast! [laid,
How chang'd from him, who meekly prostrate
Vouchsaf'd to wash the feet himself had made!
From him who was betray'd, forsook, denied,
Wept, languish'd, pray'd, bled, thirsted, groan'd,
and died;

Hung, pierc'd and bare, insulted by the foe;
All heaven in tears above, earth unconcern'd
below!

And was't enough to bid the sun retire?
Why did not Nature at thy groan expire?

I see, I hear, I feel, the pangs divine;
The world is vanish'd—I am wholly thine!

Mistaken Caiaphas! ah! which blasphem'd,
Thou or thy pris'ner? which shall be condemn'd?
Well mightst thou rend thy garments, well ex-
Deep are the horrors of eternal flame! [claim,
But God is good! 'tis wondrous all! ev'n He
Thou gav'st to death, shame, torture, died for thee.

Now the descending triumph stops its flight
From earth full twice a planetary height.
There all the clouds condens'd, two columns raise Distinct with orient veins and golden blaze:
One fix'd on earth, and one in sea; and round
Its ample foot the swelling billows sound.
These an immeasurable arch support.
The grand tribunal of this awful court.
Sheets of bright azure from the purest sky,
Stream from the crystal arch, and round the columns fly.

Death, wrapt in chains, low at the basis lies,
And on the point of his own arrow dies.

Here high enthron'd the eternal Judge is plac'd
With all the grandeur of his Godhead grac'd;
Stars on his robes in beauteous order meet,
And the sun burns beneath his awful feet.

Now an archangel eminently bright,
From off his silver staff of wondrous height,
Unfurls the Christian flag, which waving flies,
And shuts and opens more than half the skies:

The cross so strong a red, it sheds a stain
Where'er it floats, on earth, and air, and main:
Flushes the hill, and sets on fire the wood,
And turns the deep-dyed ocean into blood.

Oh formidable glory! dreadful bright!
Refulgent torture to the guilty sight!
Ah, turn, unwary Muse, nor dare reveal
What horrid thoughts with the polluted dwell.
Say not (to make the sun shrink in his beam),
Dare not affirm, they wish it all a dream;
Wish or their souls may with their limbs decay,
Or God be spoil'd of his eternal sway.
But rather, if thou know'st the means, unfold
How they with transport might the scene behold.

Ah how but by repentance—by a mind
Quick and severe its own offence to find?
By tears, and groans, and never-ceasing care,
And all the pious violence of pray'r?
Thus then, with fervency till now unknown,
I cast my heart before th' eternal throne,
In this great temple, which the skies surround,
For homage to its Lord a narrow bound:

"O Thou! whose balance does the mountains
weigh,
Whose will the wild tumultuous seas obey,
Whose breath can turn those wat'ry worlds to
flame,
That flame to tempest, and that tempest tame;
Earth's meanest son, all trembling, prostrate falls,
And on the bounties of thy goodness calls.

"O! give the winds all past offence to sweep,
To scatter wide, or bury in the deep:
Thy pow'r, my weakness, may I ever see,
And wholly dedicate my soul to thee!
Reign o'er my will; my passions ebb and flow
At thy command, nor human motive know!
If anger boil, let anger be my praise,
And sin the graceful indignation raise.
My love be warm to succour the distress'd,
And lift the burden from the soul oppress'd.
O may my understanding ever read
This glorious volume, which thy wisdom made!
Who decks the maiden Spring with flow'ry pride?
Who calls forth Summer like a sparkling bride?
Who joys the mother Autumn's bed to crown?
And bids old Winter lay her honors down?
Not the great Ottoman, or greater Czar,
Not Europe's arbitress of peace and war.
May sea and land, and earth and heav'n be join'd,
To bring th' eternal Author to my mind!
When oceans roar, or awful thunders roll,
May thoughts of thy dread vengeance shake my soul!

When earth's in bloom, or planets proudly shine,
Adore, my heart, the Majesty divine!
Through ev'ry scene of life, or peace, or war,
Plenty, or want, thy glory be my care!
Shine we in arms, or sing beneath our vine?
Thine is the vintage, and the conquest thine;
Thy pleasure points the shaft and bends the bow,
The cluster blasts, or bids it brightly glow:
'Tis thou that lead'st our pow'ful armies forth,
And giv'st great Anne thy sceptre o'er the north.

"Grant I may ever, at the morning ray,
Open with pray'r the consecrated day;
Tune thy great praise, and bid my soul arise,
And with the mounting sun ascend the skies!
As that advances, let my zeal improve,
And glow with ardor of consummate love;
Nor cease at eve, but with the setting sun,
My endless worship shall be still begun.

"And, oh, permit the gloom of solemn night
To sacred thought may forcibly invite.
When this world's shut, and awful planets rise,
Call on our minds, and raise them to the skies.
Compose our souls with a less dazzling sight,
And show all nature in a milder light;
How ev'ry boist'rous thought in calms subsides;
How the smooth'd spirit into goodness glides!
O how divine, to tread the milky way
To the bright palace of the Lord of day!
His court admire, or for his favor sue;
Or leagues of friendship with his saints renew;
Pleas'd to look down, and see the world asleep,
While I long vigils to its Founder keep! [trot,

"Canst thou not shake the centre? Oh con-
Subdue by force, the rebel in my soul!
Thou, who canst still the raging of the flood,
Restrain the various tumults of my blood;
Teach me, with equal firmness, to sustain
Alluring pleasure, and assaulting pain.
O may I pant for thee in each desire,
And with strong faith foment the holy fire!
Stretch out my soul in hope, and grasp the prize
Which in Eternity's deep bosom lies!
At the great day of recompence behold,
Devoid of fear, the fatal book unfold!
Then, wafted upwards to the blissful seat,
From age to age my grateful song repeat;
My light, my life, my God, my Saviour see,
And rival angels in the praise of Thee.

Fables for the Female Sex. Moore.

§ 267. FABLE I. The Eagle and the Assembly of Birds.

To her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales.

THE moral lay, to beauty due,
I write, fair excellence, to you;
Well pleas'd to hope my vacant hours
Have been employ'd to sweeten yours.
Truth under fiction I impart,
To weed out folly from the heart,
And show the paths that lead astray
The wand'ring nymph from wisdom's way.

I flatter none. The great and good
Are by their actions understood;
Your monument, if actions raise,
Shall I deface by idle praise?
I echo not the voice of fame;
That dwells delighted on your name:
Her friendly tale, however true,
Were flatt'ry, if I told it you.

The proud, the envious, and the vain,
The jilt, the prude, demand my strain;
To these, detesting praise, I write,
And vent in charity my spite.

With friendly hand I hold the glass
To all, promiscuous, as they pass :
Should folly there her likeness view,
I fret not that the mirror's true :
If the fantastic form offend,
I made it not, but would amend.

Virtue, in ev'ry clime and age,
Spurns at the folly-soothing page;
While satire, that offends the ear
Of vice and passion, pleases her.

Premising this, your anger spare,
And claim the fable, you who dare.

The birds in place, by factions press'd,
To Jupiter their pray'rs address'd :
By specious lies the state was vex'd,
Their counsels libellers perplex'd ;
They begg'd (to stop seditious tongues)
A gracious hearing of their wrongs.
Jove grants the suit. The Eagle sate
Decider of the grand debate.

The Pie, to trust and pow'r prefer'd,
Demands permission to be heard.
Says he, prolixity of phrase
You know I hate. This libel says,
"Some birds there are, who, prone to noise,
Are hir'd to silence wisdom's voice ;
And, skill'd to chatter out the hour,
Rise by their emptiness to pow'r."
That this is aim'd direct at me,
No doubt you'll readily agree ;
Yet well this sage assembly knows,
By parts to government I rose.
My prudent counsels prop the state ;
Magpies were never known to prate.

The Kite rose up. His honest heart
In virtue's sufferings bore a part.
That there were birds of prey he knew :
So far the libeller said true ;
"Voracious, bold, to rapine prone,
Who knew no int'rest but their own ;
Who hov'ring o'er the farmer's yard,
Nor pigeon, chick, or duckling spar'd."
This might be true ; but, if applied
To him, in troth, the sland'rer lied.
Since ign'rance then might be misled,
Such things, he thought, were best unsaid.

The Crow was vex'd. As yester-morn
He flew across the new-sown corn,
A screaming boy was set for pay,
He knew, to drive the crows away ;
Scandal had found him out in turn,
And buzz'd about that crows love corn.

The Owl arose with solemn face,
And thus harangu'd upon the case :
That magpies prate, it may be true ;
A kite may be voracious too ;
Crows sometimes deal in new-sown pease ;
He libels not, who strikes at these :
The slander's here—"But there are birds,
Whose wisdom lies in looks, not words ;
Blund'ers, who level in the dark,
And always shoot beside the mark."
He names not me ; but these are hints,
Which manifest at whom he squints ;

I were indeed that blund'ring fowl,
To question if he meant an owl.

Ye wretches, hence ! the Eagle cries,
'Tis conscience, conscience that applies ;
The virtuous mind takes no alarm,
Secur'd by innocence from harm ;
While guilt, and his associate fear,
Are startled at the passing air.

§ 268. FABLE II. The Panther, the Horse, and other Beasts.

THE man who seeks to win the fair,
(So custom says) must truth forbear ;
Must fawn and flatter, cringe and lie,
And raise the goddess to the sky.
For truth is hateful to her ear ;
A rudeness which she cannot bear.
A rudeness ! Yes, I speak my thoughts ;
For truth upbraids her with her faults
How wretched, Chloe, then am I,
Who love you, and yet cannot lie ?
And still, to make you less my friend,
I strive your errors to amend !
But shall the senseless fop impart
The softest passion to your heart ;
While he, who tells you honest truth,
And points to happiness your youth,
Determines, by his care, his lot,
And lives neglected and forgot ?

Trust me, my dear, with greater ease,
Your taste for flatt'ry I could please ;
And similes in each dull line,
Like glow-worms in the dark, should shine.
What if I say your lips disclose
The freshness of the op'ning rose ?
Or that your cheeks are beds of flow'rs,
Enripen'd by refreshing show'rs ?
Yet certain as these flow'rs shall fade,
Time ev'ry beauty will invade.
The butterfly of various hue,
More than the flow'rs, resembles you ;
Fair, flutt'ring, fickle, busy thing,
To pleasure ever on the wing,
Gaily coquetting for an hour,
To die, and ne'er be thought of more.

Would you the bloom of youth should last ?
'Tis virtue that must bind it fast ;
An easy carriage, wholly free
From sour reserves or levity ;
Good-natur'd mirth, an open heart,
And looks unskill'd in any art ;
Humility enough to own
The frailties which a friend makes known ;
And decent pride enough to know
The worth that virtue can bestow.

These are the charms which ne'er decay,
Though youth and beauty fade away ;
And time, which all things else removes,
Still heightens virtue, and improves.

You'll frown, and ask, To what intent
This blunt address to you is sent ?
I'll spare the question, and confess
I'd praise you, if I lov'd you less.

But rail, be angry, or complain,
I will be rude while you are vain.

Beneath a lion's peaceful reign,
When beasts met friendly on the plain,
A Panther of majestic port
(The vainest female of the court)
With spotted skin, and eyes of fire,
Fill'd ev'ry bosom with desire.
Where'er she mov'd, a servile crowd
Of fawning creatures cring'd and bow'd :
Assemblies ev'ry week she held
(Like modern belles) with coxcombs fill'd ;
Where noise, and nonsense, and grimace,
And lies, and scandal, fill'd the place.

Behold the gay fantastic thing
Encircled by the spacious ring !
Low bowing, with important look,
As first in rank, the Monkey spoke :
" Gad take me, madam ! but I swear,
No angel ever looked so fair :
Forgive my rudeness, but I vow
You were not quite divine till now ;
Those limbs ! that shape ! and then those eyes !
O close them, or the gazer dies !"

Nay, gentle pug, for goodness hush,
I vow and swear you make me blush ;
I shall be angry at this rate ;
'Tis so like flatt'ry, which I hate.

The Fox, in deeper cunning vers'd,
The beauties of the mind rehears'd,
And talk'd of knowledge, taste, and sense,
To which the fair have vast pretence !
Yet well he knew them always vain,
Of what they strive not to attain ;
And play'd so cunningly his part,
That pug was rivall'd in his art.

The Goat avow'd his am'rous flame,
And burnt—for what he durst not name ;
Yet hop'd a meeting in the wood
Might make his meaning understood.
Half angry at the bold address,
She frown'd ; but yet she must confess
Such beauties might inflame his blood,
But still his phrase was somewhat rude.

The Hog her neatness much admir'd ;
The formal Ass her swiftness fir'd ;
While all to feed her folly strove,
And by their praises shar'd her love.

The Horse, whose gen'rous heart disdain'd
Applause by servile flatt'ry gain'd,
With graceful courage silence broke,
And thus with indignation spoke :

When flatt'ring monkeys fawn and prate,
They justly raise contempt or hate ;
For merit's turn'd to ridicule,
Applauded by the grinning fool.
The artful fox your wit commends,
To lure you to his selfish ends ;
From the vile flatt'rer turn away,
For knaves make friendships to betray :
Dismiss the train of fops and fools,
And learn to live by wisdom's rules :
Such beauties might the lion warm,
Did not your folly break the charm ;

For who could court that lovely shape,
To be the rival of an ape ?

He said, and snorting in disdain,
Spurn'd at the crowd, and sought the plain.

§ 269. FABLE III. The Nightingale and the Glow-worm.

THE prudent nymph, whose cheeks disclose
The lily and the blushing rose,
From public view her charms will screen,
And rarely in the crowd be seen ;
This simple truth shall keep her wise—
" The fairest fruits attract the flies."

One night a Glow-worm, proud and vain,
Contemplating her glitt'ring train,
Cried, Sure there never was in nature,
So elegant, so fine a creature.
All other insects that I see,
The frugal ant, industrious bee,
Or silk-worm, with contempt I view ;
With all that low, mechanic crew,
Who servilely their lives employ
In business, enemy to joy.
Mean, vulgar herd ! ye are my scorn ;
For grandeur only I was born,
Or sure am sprung from race divine,
And plac'd on earth to live and shine.
Those lights that sparkle so on high,
Are but the glow-worms of the sky ;
And kings on earth their gems admire,
Because they imitate my fire.

She spoke. Attentive on a spray,
A Nightingale forbore his lay ;
He saw the shining morsel near,
And flew, directed by the glare ;
A while he gaz'd, with sober look,
And thus the trembling prey bespoke :
Deluded fool, with pride elate !
Know, 'tis thy beauty brings thy fate :
Less dazzling, long thou mightst have lain
Unheeded on the velvet plain :
Pride, soon or late, degraded mourns,
And beauty wrecks whom she adorns.

§ 270. FABLE IV. Hymen and Death.

SIXTEEN, d'ye say ? Nay then, 'tis time ;
Another year destroys your prime.
But stay—the settlement ? " That's made."
Why then's my simple girl afraid ?
Yet hold a moment, if you can,
And heedfully the fable scan.

The shades were fled, the morning blush'd,
The winds were in their caverns hush'd,
When Hymen, pensive and sedate,
Held o'er the fields his musing gait.
Behind him, through the green-wood shade,
Death's meagre form the god survey'd ;
Who quickly, with gigantic stride,
Outwent his pace, and join'd his side.
The chat on various subjects ran,
Till angry Hymen thus began :

Relentless Death ! whose iron sway
Mortals reluctant must obey,

Still of thy pow'r shall I complain,
And thy too partial hand arraign?
When Cupid brings a pair of hearts,
All over stuck with equal darts,
Thy cruel shafts my hopes deride,
And cut the knot that Hymen tied.

Shall not the bloody and the bold,
The miser hoarding up his gold,
The harlot reeking from the stew,
Alone thy fell revenge pursue?
But must the gentle and the kind
Thy fury, undistinguish'd, find?

The monarch calmly thus replied:
Weigh well the cause, and then decide.
That friend of yours you lately nam'd,
Cupid alone, is to be blam'd;
Then let the charge be justly laid:
That idle boy neglects his trade,
And hardly once in twenty years
A couple to your temple bears.
The wretches, whom your office blends,
Silenus now, or Plutus sends;
Hence care, and bitterness, and strife,
Are common to the nuptial life.

Believe me! more than all mankind
Your vot'ries my compassion find.
Yet cruel am I call'd, and base,
Who seek the wretched to release;
The captive from his bonds to free,
Indissoluble but for me.
'Tis I entice him to the yoke;
By me your crowded altars smoke;
For mortals boldly dare the noose,
Secure that Death will set them loose.

§ 271. FABLE V. The Poet and his Patron.

WHY, Celia, is your spreading waist
So loose, so negligently lac'd?
Why must the wrapping bed-gown hide
Your snowy bosom's swelling pride?
How ill that dress adorns your head,
Distain'd and rumpled from the bed!
Those clouds that shade your blooming face
A little water might displace,
As nature ev'ry morn bestows
The crystal dew to cleanse the rose.
Those tresses, as the raven black,
That wav'd in ringlets down your back,
Uncomb'd, and injur'd by neglect,
Destroy the face which once they deck'd.

Whence this forgetfulness of dress?
Pray, madam, are you married?—Yes.
Nay, then indeed the wonder ceases;
No matter now how loose your dress is;
The end is won, your fortune's made;
Your sister now may take the trade.

Alas! what pity 'tis to find
This fault in half the female kind!
From hence proceeds aversion, strife,
And all that sours the wedded life.
Beauty can only point the dart,
'Tis neatness guides it to the heart;
Let neatness then and beauty strive
To keep a wav'ring flame alive.

'Tis harder far (you'll find it true)
To keep the conquest, than subdue;
Admit us once behind the screen,
What is there farther to be seen?
A newer face may raise the flame,
But ev'ry woman is the same.

Then study chiefly to improve
The charm that fix'd your husband's love.
Weigh well his humour. Was it dress
That gave your beauty pow'r to bless?
Pursue it still; be neater seen;
'Tis always frugal to be clean;
So shall you keep alive desire,
And time's swift wing shall fan the fire.

In garret high (as stories say)
A Poet sung his tuneful lay:
So soft, so smooth, his verse you'd swear
Apollo and the Muses there:
Through all the town his praises rung;
His sonnets at the playhouse sung;
High waving o'er his lab'ring head,
The goddess Want her pinions spread,
And with poetic fury fir'd,
What Plæbus faintly had inspir'd.

A noble youth, of taste and wit,
Approv'd the sprightly things he writ,
And sought him in his cobweb dome,
Discharg'd his rent, and brought him home.

Behold him at the stately board!
Who but the Poet and my Lord!
Each day deliciously he dines,
And greedy quaffs the gen'rous wines:
His sides were plump, his skin was sleek,
And plenty wanton'd on his cheek;
Astonish'd at the change so new,
Away th' inspiring goddess flew.

Now, dropt for politics and news,
Neglected lay the drooping Muse,
Unmindful whence his fortune came,
He stifled the poetic flame;
Nor tale, nor sonnet, for my lady,
Lampoon, nor epigram, was ready.

With just contempt his Patron saw (Resolv'd his bounty to withdraw);
And thus, with anger in his looks,
The late-repenting fool bespoke:

Blind to the good that courts thee grown,
Whence has the sun of favor shone?
Delighted with thy tuneful art,
Esteem was growing in my heart;
But idly thou reject'st the charm
That gave it birth, and kept it warm.

Unthinking fools alone despise
The arts that taught them first to rise.

§ 272. FABLE VI. The Wolf, the Sheep, and the Lamb.

DUTY demands, the parent's voice
Should sanctify the daughter's choice:
In that is due obedience shown;
To choose, belongs to her alone.

May horror seize his midnight hour,
Who builds upon a parent's pow'r;

And claims, by purchase vile and base,
The loathing maid for his embrace ;
Hence virtue sickens ; and the breast,
Where peace had built her downy nest,
Becomes the troubled seat of care,
And pines with anguish and despair,

A Wolf, rapacious, rough, and bold,
Whose nightly plunders thinn'd the fold,
Contemplating his ill-spent life,
And cloy'd with thefts, would take a wife.
His purpose known, the savage race
In num'rous crowds attends the place ;
For why, a mighty wolf he was,
And held dominion in his jaws.
Her fav'rite whelp each mother brought,
And humbly his alliance sought ;
But cold by age, or else too nice,
None found acceptance in his eyes.

It happen'd as at early dawn,
He solitary cross'd the lawn,
Stray'd from the fold, the sportive Lamb
Skipp'd wanton by her fleecy Dam ;
When Cupid, foe to man and beast,
Discharg'd an arrow at his breast.

The tim'rous breed the robber knew,
And trembling o'er the meadow flew ;
Their nimblest speed the Wolf o'ertook,
And courteous thus the Dam bespoke :
Stay, fairest, and suspend your fear ;
Trust me, no enemy is near :
These jaws, in slaughter oft imbru'd,
At length have known enough of blood ;
And kinder bus'ness brings me now,
Vanquish'd, at beauty's feet to bow.
You have a daughter—sweet, forgive
A Wolf's address—in her I live ;
Love from her eyes like lightning came,
And set my marrow all on flame ;
Let your consent confirm my choice,
And ratify our nuptial joys.

Me ample wealth and pow'r attend,
Wide o'er the plains my realms extend ;
What midnight robber dare invade
The fold, if I the guard am made ?
At home the shepherd's cur may sleep,
While I secure my master's sheep.—
Discourse like this attention claim'd ;
Grandeur the mother's breast inflam'd ;
Now fearless by his side she walk'd,
Of settlements and jointures talk'd ;
Propos'd, and doubled her demands,
Of flow'ry fields, and turnip-lands.
The Wolf agrees. Her bosom swells ;
To Miss her happy fate she tells ;
And, of the grand alliance vain,
Contemns her kindred of the plain.

The loathing Lamb with horror hears,
And wearies out her Dam with pray'rs ;
But all in vain ; mamma best knew
What unexperienc'd girls should do.
So, to the neighb'ring meadow carried,
A formal ass the couple married.

Torn from the tyrant mother's side,
The trembler goes, a victim-bride ;

Reluctant meets the rude embrace,
And bleats among the howling race.
With horror oft her eyes behold
Her murder'd kindred of the fold ;
Each day a sister lamb is serv'd,
And at the glutton's table carv'd ;
The crashing bones he grinds for food,
And slakes his thirst with streaming blood.

Love, who the cruel mind detests,
And lodges but in gentle breasts,
Was now no more. Enjoyment past,
The savage hunger'd for the feast ;
But (as we find in human race,
A mask conceals the villain's face)
Justice must authorise the treat ;
Till then he long'd, but durst not eat.

As forth he walk'd in quest of prey,
The hunters met him on the way :
Fear wings his flight ; the marsh he sought :
The snuffing dogs are set at fault.
His stomach baulk'd, now hunger gnaws,
Howling he grinds his empty jaws :
Food must be had, and Lamb is nigh ;
His maw invokes the fraudulent lie.
Is this (dissembling rage, he cried)
The gentle virtue of a bride ?
That, leagu'd with man's destroying race,
She sets her husband for the chace ?
By treach'ry prompts the noisy hound
To scent his footsteps on the ground ?
Thou trait'ress vile ! for this thy blood
Shall glut my rage, and dye the wood !
So saying, on the Lamb he flies,
Beneath his jaws the victim dies.

§ 273. FABLE VII. The Goose and the Swans.

I HATE the face, however fair,
That carries an affected air ;
The lisping tone, the shape constrain'd,
The studied look, the passion feign'd,
Are fopperies which only tend
To injure what they strive to mend.

With what superior grace enchants
The face which nature's pencil paints !
Where eyes, unexercis'd in art,
Glow with the meaning of the heart !
Where freedom and good-humor sit,
And easy gaiety and wit !
Though perfect beauty be not there,
The master lines, the finish'd air,
We catch from ev'ry look delight,
And grow enamour'd at the sight :
For beauty, though we all approve,
Excites our wonder more than love ;
While the agreeable strikes sure,
And gives the wounds we cannot cure.

Why then, my Amoret, this care,
That forms you, in effect, less fair ?
If nature on your cheek bestows
A bloom that emulates the rose,
Or from some heavenly image drew
A form Apelles never knew,
Your ill-judg'd aid will you impart,
And spoil by meretricious art ?

Or had you, nature's error, come
 Abortive from the mother's womb,
 Your forming care she still rejects,
 Which only heightens her defects.
 When such, of glitt'ring jewels proud,
 Still press the foremost in the crowd,
 At ev'ry public show are seen,
 With look awry, and awkward mien,
 The gaudy dress attracts the eye,
 And magnifies deformity.

Nature may underdo her part,
 But seldom wants the help of art;
 Trust her, she is your surest friend,
 Nor made your form for you to mend.

A Goose, affected, empty, vain,
 The shrillest of the cackling train,
 With proud and elevated crest,
 Precedence claim'd above the rest.

Says she, I laugh at human race,
 Who say geese hobble in their pace;
 Look here!—the sland'rous lie detect;
 No haughty man is so erect.

That peacock yonder! Lord, how vain
 The creature's of his gaudy train!
 If both were stript, I pawn my word
 A goose would be the finer bird.

Nature, to hide her own defects,
 Her bungled work with finery decks:
 Were geese set off with half that show,
 Would men admire the peacock? No.

Thus vaunting, 'cross the mead she stalks,
 The cackling breed attend her walks;
 The sun shot down her noon-tide beams.
 The Swans were sporting in the streams;
 Their snowy plumes and stately pride
 Provok'd her spleen. Why there, she cried,
 Again what arrogance we see!
 Those creatures! how they mimic me!
 Shall ev'ry fowl the water skim,
 Because we geese are known to swim!
 Humility they soon shall learn,
 And their own emptiness discern.

So saying, with extended wings,
 Lightly upon the wave she springs;
 Her bosom swells, she spreads her plumes,
 And the swan's stately crest assumes.
 Contempt and mockery ensued,
 And bursts of laughter shook the flood.

A Swan, superior to the rest,
 Sprung forth, and thus the fool address'd:

Conceited thing, elate with pride!
 Thy affectation all deride:
 These airs thy awkwardness impart,
 And show thee plainly as thou art.
 Among thy equals of the flock
 Thou hadst escap'd the public mock;
 And, as thy parts to good conduce,
 Been deem'd an honest hobbling goose.

Learn hence to study wisdom's rules;
 Know, foppery's the pride of fools;
 And, striving nature to conceal,
 You only her defects reveal.

§ 274. FABLE VIII. The Lawyer and Justice.

LOVE! thou divinest good below!
 Thy pure delights few mortals know:
 Our rebel hearts thy sway disown,
 While tyrant lust usurps thy throne.
 The bounteous God of nature made
 The sexes for each other's aid;
 Their mutual talents to employ,
 To lessen ills, and heighten joy.
 To weaker women he assign'd
 That soft'ning gentleness of mind,
 That can by sympathy impart
 Its likeness to the roughest heart.
 Her eyes with magic pow'r endued,
 To fire the dull, and awe the rude.
 His rosy fingers on her face
 Shed lavish ev'ry blooming grace,
 And stamp'd (perfection to display)
 His mildest image on her clay.

Man, active, resolute, and bold,
 He fashion'd in a different mould,
 With useful arts his mind inform'd,
 His breast with nobler passions warm'd;
 He gave him knowledge, taste, and sense,
 And courage for the fair's defence.
 Her frame, resistless to each wrong,
 Demands protection from the strong;
 To man she flies when fear alarms,
 And claims the temple of his arms.

By nature's Author thus declar'd
 The woman's sovereign and her guard,
 Shall man by treach'rous wiles invade
 The weakness he was meant to aid?
 While beauty, given to inspire
 Protecting love, and soft desire,
 Lights up a wild-fire in the heart,
 And to its own breast points the dart,
 Becomes the spoiler's base pretence
 To triumph over innocence.

The wolf, that tears the tim'rous sheep,
 Was never set the fold to keep;
 Nor was the tiger, or the pard,
 Meant the benighted traveller's guard;
 But man, the wildest beast of prey,
 Wears friendship's semblance to betray;
 His strength against the weak employs;
 And where he should protect, destroys.

Past twelve o'clock, the watchman cried;
 His brief the studious lawyer plied;
 The all-prevailing fee lay nigh,
 The earnest of to-morrow's lie.
 Sudden the furious winds arise,
 The jarring casement shatter'd flies;
 The doors admit a hollow sound,
 And rattling from their hinges bound;
 When Justice, in a blaze of light,
 Reveal'd her radiant form to sight.

The wretch with thrilling horror shook;
 Loose ev'ry joint, and pale his look;
 Not having seen her in the courts,
 Or found her mention'd in reports,
 He ask'd, with falt'ring tongue, her name,
 Her errand there, and whence she came?

Sternly the white-rob'd Shade replied
 (A crimson glow her visage dyed) ;
 Canst thou be doubtful who I am ?
 Is Justice grown so strange a name ?
 Were not your courts for Justice rais'd ?
 'Twas there, of old, my altars blaz'd.
 My guardian thee I did elect,
 My sacred temple to protect,
 That thou and all thy venal tribe,
 Should spurn the goddess for the bribe.
 Aloud the ruin'd client cries,
 Justice has neither ears nor eyes ;
 In foul alliance with the bar,
 'Gainst me the judge denounces war,
 And rarely issues his decree
 But with intent to baffle me.

She paus'd—her breast with fury burn'd ;
 The trembling Lawyer thus return'd :

I own the charge is justly laid,
 And weak th'excuse that can be made ;
 Yet search the spacious globe and see
 If all mankind are not like me.

The gown-man, skill'd in Romish lies,
 By faith's false glass deludes our eyes :
 O'er conscience rides without control,
 And robs the man to save his soul.

The doctor, with important face,
 By sly design mistakes the case ;
 Prescribes, and spins out the disease,
 To trick the patient of his fees.

The soldier rough with many a scar,
 And red with slaughter, leads the war ;
 If he a nation's trust betray,
 The foe has offer'd double pay.

When vice o'er all mankind prevails,
 And weighty int'rest turns the scales,
 Must I be better than the rest,
 And harbour Justice in my breast ?
 On one side only take the fee,
 Content with poverty and thee ?

Thou blind to sense, and vile of mind,
 Th'exasperated Shade rejoin'd,
 If virtue from the world is flown,
 Will others' faults excuse thy own ?
 For sickly souls the priest was made ;
 Physicians for the body's aid ;
 The soldier guarded liberty ;
 Man, woman, and the lawyer me.
 If all are faithless to their trust,
 They leave not thee the less unjust.
 Henceforth your pleadings I disclaim,
 And bar the sanction of my name ;
 Within your courts it shall be read,
 That Justice from the law is fled.

She spoke ; and hid in shades her face,
 Till Hardwicke sooth'd her into grace.

§ 275. FABLE IX. The Farmer, the Spaniel, and the Cat.

WHY knits my dear her angry brow ?
 What rude offence alarms you now ?
 I said that Delia's fair, 'tis true,
 But did I say she equall'd you ?
 Can't I another's face commend,
 Or to her virtues be a friend,

But instantly your forehead lours,
 As if her merit lessen'd yours ?
 From female envy never free,
 All must be blind because you see.

Survey the garden, fields, and bow'rs,
 The buds, the blossoms, and the flow'rs ;
 Then tell me where the woodbine grows
 That vies in sweetness with the rose ;
 Or where the lily's snowy white,
 That throws such beauties on the sight ?
 Yet folly is it to declare,
 That these are neither sweet nor fair.
 The crystal shines with fainter rays
 Before the diamond's brighter blaze ;
 And fops will say the diamond dies
 Before the lustre of your eyes :
 But I, who deal in truth, deny
 That neither shine when you are by.

When zephyrs o'er the blossom stray,
 And sweets along the air convey,
 Sha'n't I the fragrant breeze inhale,
 Because you breathe a sweeter gale ?

Sweet are the flow'rs that deck the field ;
 Sweet is the smell the blossoms yield ;
 Sweet is the summer gale that blows ;
 And sweet, though sweeter you, the rose.

Shall envy then torment your breast,
 If you are lovelier than the rest ?
 For while I give to each her due,
 By praising them I flatter you ;
 And praising most, I still declare
 You fairest, where the rest are fair.

As at his board a farmer sate,
 Replenish'd by his homely treat,
 His fav'rite Spaniel near him stood,
 And with his master shar'd the food ;
 The crackling bones his jaws devour'd,
 His lapping tongue the trenchers scour'd ;
 Till, sated now, supine he lay,
 And snor'd the rising fumes away.

The hungry Cat, in turn, drew near,
 And humbly crav'd a servant's share ;
 Her modest worth the master knew,
 And straight the fatt'ning morsel threw :
 Enrag'd, the snarling Cur awoke,
 And thus with spiteful envy spoke :

They only claim a right to eat,
 Who earn by services their meat ;
 Me, zeal and industry inflame
 To scour the fields and spring the game ;
 Or, plunged in the wint'ry wave,
 For man the wounded bird to save.
 With watchful diligence I keep
 From prowling wolves his fleecy sheep :
 At home his midnight hours secure,
 And drive the robber from the door :
 For this his breast with kindness glows,
 For this his hand the food bestows ;
 And shall thy indolence impart
 A warmer friendship to his heart,
 That thus he robs me of my due,
 To pamper such vile things as you !

I own (with meekness Puss replied)
 Superior merit on your side ;

Nor does my breast with envy swell,
 To find it recompens'd so well;
 Yet I, in what my nature can,
 Contribute to the good of man.
 Whose claws destroy the pilf'ring mouse?
 Who drives the vermin from the house?
 Or, watchful for the lab'ring swain,
 From lurking rats secures the grain?
 From hence, if he rewards bestow,
 Why should your heart with gall o'erflow?
 Why pine my happiness to see,
 Since there's enough for you and me?
 The words are just, the farmer cried,
 And spurn'd the snarler from his side.

§ 276. FABLE X. The Spider and the Bee.

THE nymph who walks the public streets,
 And sets her cap at all she meets,
 May catch the fool who turns to stare;
 But men of sense avoid the snare.

As on the margin of the flood,
 With silken line, my Lydia stood,
 I smil'd to see the pains she took
 To cover o'er the fraudulent hook.
 Along the forest as we stray'd,
 You saw the boy his lime-twigs spread;
 Guess'd you the reason of his fear,
 Lest, heedless, we approach too near?
 For as behind the bush we lay,
 The linnet flutter'd on the spray.

Needs there such caution to delude
 The scaly fry, and feather'd brood?
 And think you, with inferior art,
 To captivate the human heart?

The maid who modestly conceals
 Her beauties, while she hides, reveals.
 Give but a glimpse, and fancy draws Whate'er the Grecian Venus was.
 From Eve's first fig-leaf to brocade,
 All dress was meant for fancy's aid;
 Which evermore delighted dwells
 On what the bashful nymph conceals.

When Celia struts in man's attire,
 She shows too much to raise desire;
 But, from the hoop's bewitching round,
 Her very shoe has pow'r to wound.

The roving eye, the bosom bare,
 The forward laugh, the wanton air,
 May catch the fop: for gudgeons strike
 At the bare hook and bait alike;
 While salmon play regardless by,
 Till art, like nature, forms the fly.

Beneath a peasant's homely thatch
 A Spider long had held her watch;
 From morn to night with restless care,
 She spun her web, and wove her snare.
 Within the limits of her reign
 Lay many a headless captive slain;
 Or flutt'ring struggled in the toils,
 To burst the chains, and shun her wiles.

A straying Bee, that perch'd hard by,
 Beheld her with disdainful eye,
 And thus began: Mean thing! give o'er,
 And lay thy slender threads no more;

A thoughtless fly or two, or most,
 Is all the conquest thou canst boast;
 For bees of sense thy arts evade,
 We see so plain the nets are laid.

The gaudy tulip, that displays
 Her spreading foliage to gaze;
 That points her charms at all she sees,
 And yields to ev'ry wanton breeze,
 Attracts not me; where blushing grows,
 Guarded with thorns, the modest rose,
 Enamour'd round and round I fly,
 Or on her fragrant bosom lie;
 Reluctant she my ardor meets,
 And bashful renders up her sweets.

To wiser heads attention lend,
 And learn this lesson from a friend:
 She who with modesty retires,
 Adds fuel to her lover's fires;
 While such incautious jilts as you,
 By folly your own schemes undo.

§ 277. FABLE XI. The Young Lion and the Ape.

'Tis true, I blame your lover's choice,
 Though flatter'd by the public voice;
 And peevish grow, and sick, to hear
 His exclamations, O how fair!
 I listen not to wild delights,
 And transports of expected nights;
 What is to me your hoard of charms,
 The whiteness of your neck and arms?
 Needs there no acquisition more
 To keep contention from the door?
 Yes; past a fortnight, and you'll find
 All beauty cloy, but of the mind.

Sense and good humour ever prove
 The surest cords to fasten love;
 Yet, Phillis, simplest of your sex,
 You never think but to perplex;
 Coquetting it with ev'ry ape
 That struts abroad in human shape;
 Not that the coxcomb is your taste,
 But that it stings your lover's breast.
 To-morrow you resign the sway,
 Prepar'd to honor and obey:
 The tyrant mistress change for life,
 To the submission of a wife.

Your follies, if you can, suspend,
 And learn instruction from a friend:
 Reluctant hear the first address,
 Think often ere you answer Yes:
 But, once resolv'd, throw off disguise,
 And wear your wishes in your eyes;
 With caution ev'ry look forbear
 That might create one jealous fear,
 A lover's ripening hopes confound,
 Or give the gen'rous breast a wound;
 Condemn the girlish arts to tease,
 Nor use your power unless to please;
 For fools alone with rigor sway,
 When, soon or late, they must obey.

The King of Brutes, in life's decline,
 Resolv'd dominion to resign;
 The beasts were summon'd to appear,
 And bend before the royal heir.

They came ; a day was fix'd ; the crowd
Before their future monarch bow'd.

A dapper Monkey, pert and vain,
Stepp'd forth, and thus address'd the train :
Why cringe, my friends, with slavish awe,
Before this pageant king of straw ?
Shall we anticipate the hour,
And, ere we feel it, own his pow'r ?
The counsels of experience prize,
I know the maxims of the wise ;
Subjection let us cast away,
And live the monarchs of to-day ;
'Tis ours the vacant hand to spurn,
And play the tyrant each in turn.
So shall he right from wrong discern,
And mercy from oppression learn ;
At others' woes be taught to melt,
And loathe the ills himself has felt.

He spoke—his bosom swell'd with pride ;
The youthful Lion thus replied :

What madness prompts thee to provoke
My wrath, and dare th' impending stroke ?
Thou wretched fool ! can wrongs impart
Compassion to the feeling heart ?
Or teach the grateful breast to glow,
The hand to give, or eye to flow ?
Learn'd in the practice of their schools,
From women thou hast drawn thy rules :
To them return ; in such a cause,
From only such expect applause ;
The partial sex I don't condemn,
For liking those who copy them.

Wouldst thou the gen'rous lion bind ?
By kindness bribe him to be kind ;
Good offices their likeness get,
And payment lessens not the debt ;
With multiplying hand he gives
The good from others he receives ;
Or for the bad makes fair return,
And pays with int'rest scorn for scorn.

§ 278. FABLE XII. The Colt and the Farmer.

TELL me, Corinna, if you can,
Why so averse, so coy to man ?
Did Nature, lavish of her care,
From her best pattern form you fair,
That you, ungrateful to her cause,
Should mock her gifts, and spurn her laws ?
And, miser-like, withhold that store,
Which, by imparting, blesses more ?

Beauty's a gift by Heaven assign'd
The portion of the female kind ;
For this the yielding maid demands
Protection at her lover's hands ;
And though by wasting years it fade,
Remembrance tells him once 'twas paid.

And will you then this wealth conceal,
For age to rust, or time to steal ?
The summer of your youth to rove
A stranger to the joys of love ?
Then, when life's winter hastens on,
And youth's fair heritage is gone,
Dow'less to court some peasant's arms,
To guard your wither'd age from harms ;

No gratitude to warm his breast,
For blooming beauty once possess'd ;
How will you curse that stubborn pride
Which drove your bark across the tide,
And sailing before folly's wind,
Left sense and happiness behind !
Corinna, lest these whims prevail,
To such as you I write my tale.

A Colt, for blood and mettled speed
The choicest of the running breed,
Of youthful strength and beauty vain,
Refus'd subjection to the rein.
In vain the groom's officious skill
Oppos'd his pride, and check'd his will ;
In vain the master's forming care
Restrain'd with threats, or sooth'd with pray'r ;
Of freedom proud, and scorning man,
Wild o'er the spacious plains he ran.

Where'er luxuriant nature spread
Her flow'ry carpet o'er the mead,
Or bubbling streams soft gliding pass,
To cool and freshen up the grass,
Disdaining bounds, he cropt the blade,
And wanton'd in the spoil he made.

In plenty thus the summer pass'd,
Revolving winter came at last ;
The trees no more a shelter yield,
The verdure withers from the field,
Perpetual snows invest the ground,
In icy chains the streams are bound,
Cold, nipping winds, and rattling hail,
His lank unshelter'd sides assail.
As round he cast his rueful eyes,
He saw the thatch'd-roof cottage rise,
The prospect touch'd his heart with cheer,
And promis'd kind deliv'rance near.
A stable, erst his scorn and hate,
Was now become his wish'd retreat ;
His passion cool, his pride forgot,
A Farmer's welcome yard he sought.

The master saw his woeful plight,
His limbs that totter'd with his weight :
And, friendly, to the stable led,
And saw him litter'd, dress'd, and fed.
In slothful ease all night he lay,
The servants rose at break of day ;
The market calls—along the road
His back must bear the pond'rous load ;
In vain he struggles or complains,
Incessant blows reward his pains.
To-morrow varies but his toil ;
Chain'd to the plough, he breaks the soil ;
While scanty meals at night repay
The painful labors of the day.

Subdued by toil, with anguish rent,
His self-upbraidings found a vent.
Wretch that I am ! he sighing said,
By arrogance and folly led :
Had but my restive youth been brought
To learn the lesson nature taught,
Then had I, like my sires of yore,
The prize from ev'ry courser bore.
While man bestow'd rewards and praise,
And females crown'd my latter days.

Now lasting servitude's my lot,
My birth contemn'd, my speed forgot;
Doom'd am I, for my pride, to bear
A living death from year to year.

§ 279. FABLE XIII. The Owl and the Nightingale.

To know the mistress' humor right,
See if her maids are clean and tight;
If Betty waits without her stays,
She copies but her lady's ways.
When Miss comes in with boist'rous shout,
And drops no curtesy going out,
Depend upon 't, mamma is one
Who reads or drinks too much alone.

If bottled beer her thirst assuage,
She feels enthusiastic rage,
And burns with ardor to inherit
The gifts and workings of the spirit.
If learning crack her giddy brains,
No remedy but death remains.
Sum up the various ills of life,
And all are sweet to such a wife.
At home superior wit she vaunts,
And twits her husband with his wants;
Her ragged offspring all around,
Like pigs are wallowing on the ground;
Impatient ever of control,
She knows no order but of soul;
With books her litter'd floor is spread,
Of nameless authors, never read;
Foul linen, petticoats, and lace,
Fill up the intermediate space.
Abroad, at visitings, her tongue
Is never still, and always wrong;
All meanings she defines away,
And stands with truth and sense at bay.

If e'er she meets a gentle heart,
Skill'd in the housewife's useful art,
Who makes her family her care,
And builds contentment's temple there,
She starts at such mistakes in nature,
And cries, Lord help us! what a creature!

Melissa, if the moral strike,
You'll find the fable not unlike.

An Owl, puff'd up with self conceit,
Lov'd learning better than his meat;
Old manuscripts he treasur'd up,
And rummag'd ev'ry grocer's shop;
At pastry-cooks was known to ply,
And strip for science ev'ry pie.
For modern poetry, and wit,
He had read all that Blackmore writ;
So intimate with Curl was grown,
His learned treasures were his own;
To all his authors had access,
And sometimes would correct the press.
In logic he acquir'd such knowledge,
You'd swear him fellow of a college;
Alike to ev'ry art and science
His darling genius bid defiance,
And swallow'd wisdom with that haste
That cits do custards at a feast.

Within the shelter of a wood,
One evening as he musing stood;
Hard by, upon a leafy spray,
A Nightingale began his lay.
Sudden he starts with anger stung,
And screeching interrupts the song:
Pert, busy thing! thy airs give o'er,
And let my contemplation soar.
What is the music of thy voice,
But jarring dissonance and noise?
Be wise; true harmony thou'lt find
Not in the throat, but in the mind;
By empty chirping not attain'd,
But by laborious study gain'd.
Go, read the authors Pope explodes:
Fathom the depth of Cibber's odes;
With modern plays improve thy wit;
Read all the learning Henley writ;
And if thou needs must sing, sing then,
And emulate the ways of men;
So shalt thou grow, like me, refin'd,
And bring improvement to thy kind.

Thou wretch, the little warbler cried,
Made up of ignorance and pride!
Ask all the birds, and they'll declare
A greater blockhead wings not air.
Read o'er thyself, thy talents scan,
Science was only meant for man.
No senseless authors me molest,
I mind the duties of my nest,
With careful wing protect my young,
And cheer their evenings with a song:
Make short the weary traveller's way,
And warble in the poet's lay.

Thus, following nature and her laws,
From men and birds I claim applause;
While nurs'd in pedantry and sloth,
An Owl is scorn'd alike by both.

§ 280. FABLE XIV. The Sparrow and the Dove.

It was, as learn'd traditions say,
Upon an April's blithsome day,
When pleasure, ever on the wing,
Return'd, companion of the spring,
And cheer'd the birds with am'rous heat,
Instructing little hearts to beat;
A Sparrow, frolic, gay, and young,
Of bold address, and flippant tongue,
Just left his lady of a night,
Like him to follow new delight.

The youth, of many a conquest vain,
Flew off to seek the chirping train;
The chirping train he quickly found,
And with a saucy ease bow'd round.
For ev'ry she his bosom burns,
And this and that he woos by turns;
And here a sigh, and there a bill;
And here—those eyes, so form'd to kill!
And now, with ready tongue, he strings
Unmeaning, soft, resistless things;
With vows and dem-me's skill'd to woo
As other pretty fellows do.
Not that he thought this short essay
A prologue needful to his play;

No, trust me, says our learned letter,
He knew the virtuous sex much better :
But these he held as specious arts,
To show his own superior parts ;
The form of decency to shield,
And give a just pretence to yield.

Thus finishing his courtly play,
He mark'd the fav'rite of a day ;
With careless impudence drew near,
And whisper'd Hebrew in her ear ;
A hint, which, like the mason's sign,
The conscious can alone divine.

The flutt'ring nymph, expert at feigning,
Cried, Sir?—pray, Sir, explain your meaning—
Go prate to those that may endure ye!—
To me this rudeness!—I'll assure ye!
Then off she glided like a swallow,
As saying—you guess where to follow.

To such as know the party set,
'Tis needless to declare they met ;
The parson's barn, as authors mention,
Confess'd the fair had apprehension.
Her honor there secure from stain,
She held all farther trifling vain ;
No more affected to be coy,
But rush'd, licentious, on the joy.
Hist, love! the male companion cried ;
Retire a while, I fear we're spied ;
Nor was the caution vain : he saw
A Turtle rustling in the straw ;
While o'er her callow brood she hung,
And fondly thus address'd her young :

Ye tender objects of my care !
Peace, peace, ye little helpless pair ;
Anon he comes, your gentle sire,
And brings you all your hearts require.
For us, his infants, and his bride,
For us, with only love to guide,
Our lord assumes an eagle's speed,
And like a lion dares to bleed.
Nor yet by win'try skies confin'd,
He mounts upon the rudest wind,
From danger tears the vital spoil,
And with affection sweetens toil.
Ah cease, too vent'rous, cease to dare ;
In thine, our dearer safety spare !
From him, ye cruel falcons, stray ;
And turn, ye fowlers, far away !

Should I survive to see the day
That tears me from myself away ;
That cancels all that Heaven could give,
The life by which alone I live,
Alas, how more than lost were I,
Who in the thought already die.

Ye powers whom men and birds obey,
Great rulers of your creatures, say,
Why mourning comes, by bliss convey'd,
And e'en the sweets of love allay'd ?
Where grows enjoyment, tall and fair,
Around it twines entangling care ;
While fear for what our souls possess
Enervates ev'ry pow'r to bless ;
Yet friendship forms the bliss above ;
And, life, what art thou without love !

Our hero, who had heard apart,
Felt something moving in his heart ;
But quickly, with disdain, suppress'd
The virtue rising in his breast ;
And first he feign'd to laugh aloud ;
And next, approaching, smil'd and bow'd :
Madam, you must not think me rude ;
Good manners never can intrude ;
I vow I come through pure good-nature—
(Upon my soul a charming creature !)
Art these the comforts of a wife ?
This careful, cloister'd, moping life ?
No doubt that odious thing, call'd Duty,
Is a sweet province for a beauty.
Thou pretty ignorance! thy will
Is measur'd to thy want of skill ;
That good old-fashion'd dame, thy mother,
Has taught thy infant years no other ;
The greatest ill in the creation
Is sure the want of education.

But think ye—tell me without feigning—
Have all these charms no farther meaning !
Dame nature, if you don't forget her,
Might teach your ladyship much better.
For shame! reject this mean employment,
Enter the world and taste enjoyment,
Where time by circling bliss we measure ;
Beauty was form'd alone for pleasure :
Come, prove the blessing, follow me,
Be wise, be happy, and be free.

Kind sir, replied our matron chaste,
Your zeal seems pretty much in haste ;
I own, the fondness to be blest,
Is a deep thirst in ev'ry breast ;
Of blessings too I have my store,
Yet quarrel not should Heaven give more ;
Then prove the change to be expedient,
And think me, sir, your most obedient.

Here turning, as to one inferior,
Our gallant spoke, and smil'd superior :
Methinks, to quit your boasted station
Requires a world of hesitation ;
Where brats and bonds are held a blessing,
The case, I doubt, is past redressing.
Why, child, suppose the joys I mention
Were the mere fruits of my invention,
You've cause sufficient for your carriage,
In flying from the curse of marriage ;
That sly decoy ; with varied snares,
That takes your widgeons in by pairs ;
Alike to husband and to wife,
The cure of love, and bane of life ;
The only method of forecasting,
To make misfortune firm and lasting ;
The sin, by Heaven's peculiar sentence,
Unpardon'd through a life's repentance.
It is the double snake that weds
A common tail to diff'rent heads,
That lead the carcase still astray,
By dragging each a different way.
Of all the ills that may attend me,
From marriage, mighty gods, defend me !

Give me frank nature's wild demesne,
And boundless tract of air serene,

Where fancy, ever-wing'd for change,
Delights to sport, delights to range:
There, Liberty! to thee is owing
Whate'er of bliss is worth bestowing:
Delights still varied, and divine,
Sweet goddess of the hills! are thine.

What say you now, you pretty pink, you?
Have I for once spoke reason, think you?
You take me now for no romancer—
Come, never study for an answer!
Away, cast ev'ry care behind ye,
And fly where joy alone shall find ye.

Soft yet, returned our female fencer;
A question more, or so—and then, sir.
You've rallied me with sense exceeding,
With much fine wit, and better breeding;
But pray, sir, how do you contrive it?
Do those of your world never wive it?
“No, no.” How then? “Why, dare I tell,
“What does the bus'ness full as well?”
Do you ne'er love? “An hour at leisure.”
Have you no friendships? “Yes, for pleasure.”
No care for little ones? “We get 'em;
“The rest the mothers mind—and let 'em.”

Thou wretch, rejoin'd the kindling Dove,
Quite lost to life, as lost to love!
Whene'er misfortune comes, how just!
And come misfortunes surely must.
In the dread season of dismay,
In that your hour of trial, say,
Who then shall prop your sinking heart?
Who bear affliction's weightier part?

Say, when the black-bow'd welkin bends,
And winter's gloomy form impends,
To mourning turns all transient cheer,
And blasts the melancholy year;
For times at no persuasion stay,
Nor vice can find perpetual May;
Then where's that tongue by folly fed,
That soul of pertness whither fled?
All shrunk within thy lonely nest,
Forlorn, abandon'd, and unblest.
No friends, by cordial bonds allied,
Shall seek thy cold unsocial side;
No chirping prattlers to delight,
Shall turn the long-enduring night;
No bride her words of balm impart,
And warm thee at her constant heart.
Freedom, restrain'd by reason's force,
Is as the sun's unvarying course;
Benignly active, sweetly bright,
Affording warmth, affording light;
But, torn from virtue's sacred rules,
Becomes a comet, gaz'd by fools,
Foreboding cares, and storms, and strife,
And fraught with all the plagues of life.

Thou fool! by union ev'ry creature
Subsists, through universal nature;
And this, to beings void of mind,
Is wedlock of a meaner kind.
While womb'd in space, primeval clay
A yet unfashion'd embryo lay,
The Source of endless good above
Shot down his spark of kindling love;

Touch'd by the all-enlivening flame,
Then motion first exulting came;
Each atom sought its sep'rate class
Through many a fair enamour'd mass;
Love cast the central charm around,
And with eternal nuptials bound.
Then form and order o'er the sky
First train'd their bridal pomp on high;
The sun display'd his orb to sight,
And burnt with hymeneal light.

Hence nature's virgin-womb conceiv'd,
And with the genial burden heav'd;
Forth came the oak, her first-born heir,
And scal'd the breathing steep of air;
Then infant stems of various use,
Imbib'd her soft maternal juice;
The flow'rs, in early bloom disclos'd,
Upon her fragrant breast repos'd;
Within her warm embraces grew
A race of endless form and hue:
Then pour'd her lesser offspring round,
And fondly cloth'd the parent ground.

Nor here alone the virtue reign'd,
By matter's cumbring form detain'd;
But thence, subliming and refin'd,
Aspir'd, and reach'd its kindred mind.
Caught in the fond celestial fire,
The mind perceiv'd unknown desire;
And now with kind effusion flow'd,
And now with cordial ardors glow'd,
Beheld the sympathetic fair,
And lov'd its own resemblance there;
On all with circling radiance shone,
But cent'ring fix'd on one alone;
There clasp'd the heav'n-appointed wife,
And doubled every joy of life.

Here ever blessing, ever blest,
Resides this beauty of the breast;
As from his palace, here the god
Still beams effulgent bliss abroad;
Here gems his own eternal round,
The ring by which the world is bound;
Here bids his seat of empire grow,
And builds his little heav'n below.

The bridal partners thus allied,
And thus in sweet accordance tied,
One body, heart, and spirit live,
Enrich'd by ev'ry joy they give;
Like echo, from her vocal hold,
Return'd in music twenty-fold,
Their union, firm and undecay'd,
Nor time can shake, nor pow'r invade;
But, as the stem and scion stand
Ingrafted by a skilful hand,
They check the tempest's wint'ry rage,
And bloom and strengthen into age.
A thousand amities unknown,
And pow'rs perceiv'd by love alone,
Endearing looks and chaste desire,
Fan and support the mutual fire;
Whose flame, perpetual as refin'd,
Is fed by an immortal mind.

Nor yet the nuptial sanction ends;
Like Nile it opens, and descends;

Which, by apparent windings led,
We trace to its celestial head.
The fire, first springing from above,
Becomes the source of life and love,
And gives his filial heir to flow
In fondness down on sons below :
Thus, roll'd in one continued tide,
To time's extremest verge they glide ;
While kindred streams on either hand,
Branch forth in blessings o'er the land.

Thee, wretch ! no lisping babe shall name,
No late-returning brother claim,
No kinsman on thy sight rejoice,
No sister greet thy ent'ring voice ;
With partial eyes no parent see,
And bless their years restor'd in thee.

In age rejected or declin'd,
An alien e'en among thy kind,
The partner of thy scorn'd embrace
Shall play the wanton in thy face ;
Each spark unplume thy little pride,
All friendship fly thy faithless side.
Thy name shall like thy carcase rot,
In sickness spurn'd, in death forgot.

All-giving Pow'r ! great Source of life !
Oh hear the parent, hear the wife !
That life thou lendest from above,
Though little, make it large in love ;
O bid my feeling heart expand
To ev'ry claim, on ev'ry hand ;
To those from whom my days I drew,
To these in whom those days renew,
To all my kin, however wide,
In cordial warmth as blood allied,
To friends with steely fetters twin'd,
And to the cruel, not unkind !

But chief, the lord of my desire,
My life, myself, my soul, my sire,
Friends, children, all that wish can claim,
Chaste passion clasp, and rapture name—
O spare him, spare him, gracious Pow'r !
O give him to my latest hour !
Let me my length of life employ
To give my soul's enjoyment joy.
His love let mutual love excite,
Turn all my cares to his delight ;
And ev'ry needless blessing spare,
Wherein my darling wants a share.
When he with graceful action woos,
And sweetly bills, and fondly coos,
Ah ! deck me, to his eyes alone,
With charms attractive as his own ;
And, in my circling wings caress'd,
Give all the lover to my breast.
Then in our chaste connubial bed,
My bosom pillow'd for his head,
His eyes with blissful slumbers close,
And watch, with me, my lord's repose ;
Your peace around his temples twine,
And love him with a love like mine.

And, for I know his gen'rous flame,
Beyond what'er my sex can claim,
Me too to your protection take,
And spare me for my husband's sake.

Let one unruffled, calm delight
The loving and belov'd unite ;
One pure desire our bosoms warm,
One will direct, one wish inform ;
Through life, one mutual aid sustain ;
In death, one peaceful grave contain.

While swelling with the darling theme,
Her accents pour'd an endless stream,
The well-known wings a sound impart,
That reach'd her ear, and touch'd her heart ;
Quick dropp'd the music of her tongue,
And forth with eager joy she sprung.
As swift her ent'ring consort flew,
And plum'd, and kindled at the view ;
Their wings, their souls, embracing meet,
Their hearts with answering measure beat ;
Half lost in secret sweets, and bless'd
With raptures felt, but ne'er express'd.

Straight to her humble roof she led
The partner of her spotless bed ;
Her young, a flutt'ring pair, arise,
Their welcome sparkling in their eyes ;
Transported, to their sire they bound,
And hang with speechless action round :
In pleasure wrapt the parents stand,
And see their little wings expand ;
The sire his life-sustaining prize
To each expecting bill applies,
There fondly pours the wheaten spoil,
With transport giv'n, though won with toil ;
While all-collected at the sight,
And silent through supreme delight,
The fair high heaven of bliss beguiles,
And on her lord and infants smiles.

The Sparrow, whose attention hung
Upon the Dove's enchanting tongue,
Of all his little slights disarm'd,
And from himself by virtue charm'd,
When now he saw what only seem'd
A fact, so late a fable deem'd,
His soul to envy he resign'd,
His hours of folly to the wind ;
In secret wish a Turtle too,
And, sighing to himself, withdrew.

§ 281. FABLE XV. The Female Seducers.

'Tis said of widow, maid, and wife,
That honor is a woman's life ;
Unhappy sex ! who only claim
A being in the breath of fame ;
Which, tainted, not the quick'ning gales
That sweep Sabæa's spicy vales,
Nor all the healing sweets restore,
That breathe along Arabia's shore.

The traveller, if he chance to stray,
May turn uncensur'd to his way ;
Polluted streams again are pure,
And deepest wounds admit a cure :
But woman no redemption knows,
The wounds of honor never close.

Though distant ev'ry hand to guide,
Nor skill'd on life's tempestuous tide,
If once her feeble bark recede,
Or deviate from the course decreed,

In vain she seeks the friendless shore ;
Her swifter folly flies before !
The circling ports against her close,
And shut the wand'rer from repose ;
Till, by conflicting waves oppress'd,
Her found'ring pinnace sinks to rest.

Are there no offerings to atone
For but a single error ?—None.
Though woman is avow'd, of old,
Nay daughter of celestial mould,
Her temp'ring not without allay,
And form'd but of the finer clay,
We challenge from the mortal dame
The strength angelic natures claim ;
Nay more—for sacred stories tell,
That e'en immortal angels fell.

Whatever fills the teeming sphere
Of humid earth, and ambient air,
With varying elements endued,
Was form'd to fall, and rise renew'd.

The stars no fix'd duration know ;
Wide oceans ebb, again to flow ;
The moon repletes her waning face,
All beauteous from her late disgrace ;
And suns, that mourn approaching night,
Refulgent rise with new-born light.

In vain may death and time subdue,
While nature mints her race anew ;
And holds some vital spark apart,
Like virtue, hid in ev'ry heart.
'Tis hence reviving warmth is seen,
'To clothe a naked world in green.
No longer barr'd by winter's cold,
Again the gates of life unfold ;
Again each insect tries his wing,
And lifts fresh pinions on the spring ;
Again from ev'ry latent root
The latent stem and tendril shoot,
Exhaling incense to the skies,
Again to perish, and to rise.

And must weak woman then disown
The change to which a world is prone ?
In one meridian brightness shine,
And ne'er like ev'ning suns decline ?
Resolv'd and firm alone ? Is this
What we demand of woman ?—Yes.

But should the spark of vestal fire
In some unguarded hour expire ;
Or should the nightly thief invade
Hesperia's chaste and sacred shade,
Of all the blooming spoil possess'd,
The dragon Honor charm'd to rest,
Shall virtue's flame no more return ?
No more with virgin splendor burn ?
No more the ravag'd garden blow
With spring's succeeding blossom ?—No.
Pity may mourn, but not restore ;
And woman falls—to rise no more !

Within this sublunary sphere
A country lies—no matter where ;
The clime may readily be found
By all who tread poetic ground ;
A stream call'd Life, across it glides,
And equally the land divides ;

And here, of vice the province lies ;
And there the hills of virtue rise.

Upon a mountain's airy stand,
Whose summit look'd to either land,
An ancient pair their dwelling chose,
As well for prospect as repose ;
For mutual faith they long were fam'd,
And Temp'rance and Religion nam'd.

A num'rous progeny divine
Confess'd the honors of their line,
But in a little daughter fair
Was centred more than half their care ;
For Heaven to gratulate her birth,
Gave signs of future joy to earth ;
White was the robe this infant wore,
And Chastity the name she bore.

As now the maid in stature grew
(A flow'r just op'ning to her view)
Oft through her native lawns she stray'd,
And wrestling with the lambkins play'd ;
Her looks diffusive sweets bequeath'd,
The breeze grew purer as she breath'd ;
The morn her radiant blush assum'd,
The spring with earlier fragrance bloom'd ;
And nature yearly took delight,
Like her to dress the world in white.

But when her rising form was seen
To reach the crisis of fifteen,
Her parents up the mountain's head
With anxious step their darling led ;
By turns they snatch'd her to their breast,
And thus the fears of age express'd :

O joyful cause of many a care !
O daughter too divinely fair !
Yon world, on this important day,
Demands thee to a dang'rous way ;
A painful journey all must go,
Whose doubted period none can know ;
Whose due direction who can find,
Where reason's mute, and sense is blind !
Ah, what unequal leaders these,
Through such a wide, perplexing maze !
Then mark the warnings of the wise,
And learn what love and years advise.

Far to the right thy prospect bend,
Where yonder tow'ring hills ascend ;
Lo ! there the arduous path's in view
Which Virtue and her sons pursue ;
With toil o'er less'ning earth they rise,
And gain, and gain upon the skies.
Narrow's the way her children tread,
No walk for pleasure smoothly spread,
But rough, and difficult, and steep,
Painful to climb, and hard to keep.

Fruits immature those lands dispense,
A food indelicate to sense,
Of taste unpleasant : yet from those
Pure health, with cheerful vigor, flows ;
And strength, unfeeling of decay,
Throughout the long laborious way.

Hence, as they scale that heavenly road,
Each limb is lighten'd of its load ;
From earth refining still they go,
And leave the mortal weight below ;

Then spreads the strait, the doubtful clears,
And smooth the rugged path appears;
For custom turns fatigue to ease,
And, taught by virtue, pain can please.

At length the toilsome journey o'er,
And near the bright celestial shore,
A gulf, black, fearful, and profound,
Appears, of either world the bound,
Through darkness leading up to light;
Sense backwards shrinks, and shuns the sight;
For there the transitory train
Of time, and form, and care, and pain,
And matter's gross incumb'ring mass,
Man's late associates, cannot pass;
But, sinking, quit th' immortal charge,
And leave the wond'ring soul at large;
Lightly she wings her obvious way,
And mingles with eternal day.

Thither, oh thither wing thy speed,
Though pleasure charm, or pain impede;
To such th' all-bounteous Pow'r has given,
For present earth, a future heaven;
For trivial loss, unmeasur'd gain;
And endless bliss for transient pain.

Then fear, ah! fear to turn thy sight
Where yonder flow'ry fields invite:
Wide on the left the pathway bends,
And with pernicious ease descends!
There, sweet to sense, and fair to show,
New-planted Edens seem to blow,
Trees that delicious poison bear;
For death is vegetable there.

Hence is the frame of health unbrac'd,
Each sinew slack'ning at the taste,
The soul to passion yields her throne,
And sees with organs not her own;
While, like the slumb'rer in the night,
Pleas'd with the shadowy dream of light,
Before her alienated eyes
The scenes of fairy-land arise;
The puppet world's amusing show,
Dipp'd in the gaily-color'd bow,
Sceptres and wreaths, and glitt'ring things,
The toys of infants and of kings,
That tempt along the baneful plain,
The idly wise and lightly vain,
Till, verging on the gulfy shore,
Sudden they sink—and rise no more.

But list to what thy fates declare;
Though thou art woman, frail as fair,
If once thy sliding foot should stray,
Once quit yon heav'n-appointed way,
For thee, lost maid, for thee alone,
Nor pray'rs shall plead, nor tears atone;
Reproach, scorn, infamy, and hate,
On thy returning steps shall wait;
Thy form be loath'd by ev'ry eye,
And ev'ry foot thy presence fly.

Thus arm'd with words of potent sound,
Like guardian angels plac'd around,
A charm by truth divinely cast,
Forward our young advent'rer pass'd;
Forth from her sacred eyelids sent,
Like morn, fore-running radiance went,

While Honor, handmaid late assign'd
Upheld her lucid train behind.

Awe-struck, the much-admiring crowd
Before the virgin vision bow'd;
Gaz'd with an ever-new delight,
And caught fresh virtue at the sight;
For not of earth's unequal frame
They deem the heaven-compounded dame;
If matter, sure the most refin'd,
High wrought, and temper'd into mind,
Some darling daughter of the day,
And bodied by her native ray.

Where'er she passes, thousands bend,
And thousands where she moves attend;
Her ways observant eyes confess,
Her steps pursuing praises bless;
While to the elevated Maid
Oblations, as to heaven, are paid.

'Twas on an ever-blithsome day,
The jovial birth of rosy May,
When genial warmth, no more supprest,
Now melts the frost in ev'ry breast.
The cheek with secret flushing dyes,
And looks kind things from chastest eyes;
The sun with healthier visage glows,
Aside his clouded kerchief throws,
And dances up th' ethereal plain,
Where late he us'd to climb with pain,
While nature, as from bonds set free,
Springs out, and gives a loose to glee.

And now, for momentary rest,
The nymph her travell'd steps repress'd,
Just turn'd to view the stage attain'd,
And gloried in the height she gain'd.

Outstretch'd before her wide survey
The realms of sweet perdition lay,
And pity touch'd her soul with woe,
To see a world so lost below;
When straight the breeze began to breathe
Airs, gently wafted from beneath,
That bore commission'd witchcraft thence,
And reach'd her sympathy of sense;—
No sounds of discord, that disclose
A people sunk and lost in woes,
But as of present good possest,
The very triumph of the blest.
The maid in rapt attention hung,
While thus approaching sirens sung:

Hither, fairest, hither haste,
Brightest beauty, come and taste
What the pow'rs of bliss unfold,
Joys too mighty to be told:
Taste what ecstasies they give;
Dying raptures taste, and live.

In thy lap, disdaining measure,
Nature empties all her treasure,
Soft desires, that sweetly languish;
Fierce delights, that rise to anguish;
Fairest, dost thou yet delay?
Brightest beauty, come away.
List not, when the froward chide,
Sons of pedantry and pride,
Snarlers, to whose feeble sense
April's sunshine is offence;

Age and envy will advise
E'en against the joy they prize.

Come, in pleasure's balmy bowl
Slake the thirstings of thy soul,
Till thy raptur'd powers are fainting
With enjoyment past the painting;
Fairest, dost thou yet delay?

Brightest beauty, come away.

So sung the Sirens, as of yore,
Upon the false Ausonian shore;
And O! for that preventing chain
That bound Ulysses on the main,
That so our Fair One might withstand
The covert ruin, now at hand.

The song her charm'd attention drew,
When now the tempters stood in view;
Curiosity, with prying eyes,
And hands of busy bold emprise;
Like Hermes, feather'd were her feet;
And, like fore-running Fancy, fleet;
By search untaught, by toil untir'd,
To novelty she still aspir'd,
Tasteless of every good possest,
And but in expectation blest.

With her, associate, Pleasure came,
Gay Pleasure, frolic-loving dame,
Her mien all swimming in delight,
Her beauties half reveal'd to sight;
Loose flow'd her garments from the ground,
And caught the kissing winds around:
As erst Medusa's looks were known
To turn beholders into stone,
A dire reversion here they felt,
And in the eye of Pleasure melt.
Her glance, with sweet persuasion charm'd,
Unnerv'd the strong, the steel disarm'd;
No safety e'en the flying find,
Who, vent'rous, look but once behind.

Thus was the much-admiring Maid,
While distant, more than half betray'd.
With smiles, and adulation bland,
They join'd her side, and seiz'd her hand;
Their touch envenom'd sweets instill'd,
Her frame with new pulsations thrill'd,
While half consenting, half denying,
Reluctant now, and now complying,
Amidst a war of hopes and fears,
Of trembling wishes, smiling tears,
Still down and down, the winning pair
Compell'd the struggling, yielding Fair:
As when some stately vessel, bound
To blest Arabia's distant ground,
Borne from her courses, haply lights
Where Barca's flow'ry clime invites,
Conceal'd around whose treach'rous land
Lurk the dire rock and dang'rous sand;
The pilot warns, with sail and oar
To shun the much-suspected shore,
In vain; the tide, too subtly strong,
Still bears the wrestling bark along,
Till found'ring, she resigns to fate,
And sinks, o'erwhelm'd, with all her freight.

So, baffling ev'ry bar to sin,
And Heav'n's own pilot plac'd within,

Along the devious, smooth descent,
With pow'rs increasing as they went,
The dames, accustom'd to subdue,
As with a rapid current drew,
And o'er the fatal bounds convey'd
The lost, the long-reluctant Maid.

Here stop, ye fair ones, and beware,
Nor send your fond affections there;
Yet, yet your darling, now deplor'd,
May turn, to you and heav'n restor'd;
Till then, with weeping Honor wait,
The servant of her better fate;
With Honor, left upon the shore,
Her friend and handmaid now no more;
Nor, with the guilty world, upbraid
The fortunes of a wretch betray'd;
But o'er her failing cast a veil,
Rememb'ring you yourselves are frail.

And now from all-inquiring light,
Fast fled the conscious shades of night;
The Damsel, from a short repose,
Confounded at her plight, arose.

As when, with slumb'rous weight oppress'd,
Some wealthy miser sinks to rest,
Where felons eye the glitt'ring prey,
And steal his hoard of joys away;
He, borne where golden Indus streams,
Of pearl and quarry'd diamond dreams;
Like Midas, turn the glebe to ore,
And stands all rapt amidst his store;
But wakens, naked and despoil'd,
Of that for which his years had toil'd:
So far'd the Nymph, her treasure flown,
And turn'd, like Niobe, to stone;
Within, without, obscure and void,
She felt all ravag'd, all destroy'd:
And, O thou curs'd, insidious coast!
Are these the blessings thou canst boast?
These, Virtue! these the joys they find,
Who leave thy heav'n-topt hills behind?
Shade me, ye pines, ye caverns hide,
Ye mountains, cover me, she cried.

Her trumpet Slander rais'd on high,
And told the tidings to the sky;
Contempt discharg'd a living dart,
A side-long viper to her heart;
Reproach breath'd poisons o'er her face,
And soil'd and blasted ev'ry grace;
Officious Shame, her handmaid new,
Still turn'd the mirror to her view;
While those in crimes the deepest dyed
Approach'd to whiten at her side,
And ev'ry lewd insulting dame
Upon her folly rose to fame.

What should she do? Attempt once more
To gain the late deserted shore?
So trusting, back the Mourner flew;
As fast the train of fiends pursue.

Again the farther shore's attain'd,
Again the land of virtue gain'd;
But echo gathers in the wind,
And shows her instant foes behind.
Amaz'd, with headlong speed she tends,
Where late she left an host of friends;

Alas! those shrinking friends decline,
Nor longer own that form divine;
With fear they mark the following cry,
And from the lonely trembler fly;
Or backward drive her on the coast,
Where peace was wreck'd and honor lost.
From earth thus hoping aid in vain,
To Heaven not daring to complain;
No truce by hostile clamor given,
And from the face of friendship driven,
The Nymph sunk prostrate on the ground.
With all her weight of woes around.

Enthron'd within a circling sky,
Upon a mount o'er mountains high,
All radiant sat, as in a shrine,
Virtue, first effluence divine,
Far, far above the scenes of woe,
That shut this cloud-wrapt world below;
Superior goddess, essence bright,
Beauty of uncreated light,
Whom should mortality survey,
As doom'd upon a certain day,
The breath of frailty must expire,
The world dissolve in living fire,
The gems of heaven and solar flame,
Be quench'd by her eternal beam,
And nature, quick'ning in her eye,
To rise a new-born phoenix, die.

Hence, unreveal'd to mortal view,
A veil around her form she threw,
Which three sad sisters of the shade,
Pain, Care, and Melancholy made.
Through this her all-inquiring eye,
Attentive from her station high,
Beheld, abandon'd to despair,
The ruins of her fav'rite fair;
And with a voice, whose awful sound
Appall'd the guilty world around,
Bid the tumultuous winds be still,
To numbers bow'd each list'ning hill,
Uncurl'd the surging of the main,
And smooth'd the thorny bed of pain;
The golden harp of heaven she strung,
And thus the tuneful goddess sung:

Lovely Penitent arise,
Come, and claim thy kindred skies;
Come, thy sister angels say,
Thou hast wept thy stains away.

Let experience now decide
'Twixt the good and evil tried;
In the smooth, enchanted ground,
Say, unfold the treasures found.

Structures, rais'd by morning dreams;
Sands, that trip the flitting streams;
Down, that anchors on the air;
Clouds, that paint their changes there;

Seas, that smoothly dimpling lie,
While the storm impends on high,
Showing, in an obvious glass,
Joys that in possession pass;

Transient, fickle, light, and gay,
Flatt'ring only to betray;

What, alas, can life contain!
Life! like all its circles—vain.

Will the stork, intending rest,
On the billow build her nest?
Will the bee demand his store
From the bleak and bladeless shore?

Man alone, intent to stray,
Ever turns from wisdom's way;
Lays up wealth in foreign land,
Sows the sea, and ploughs the sand.

Soon this elemental mass,
Soon the encumb'ring world shall pass:
Form be wrapt in wasting fire,
Time be spent, and life expire.

Then, ye boasted works of men,
Where is your asylum then?
Sons of pleasure, sons of care,
Tell me mortals, tell me where?

Gone, like traces on the deep,
Like a sceptre grasp'd in sleep,
Dews exhal'd from morning glades,
Melting snows, and gliding shades.

Pass the world, and what's behind?
Virtue's gold, by fire refin'd;
From a universe deprav'd,
From the wreck of nature sav'd;

Like the life-supporting grain,
Fruit of patience and of pain,
On the swains' autumnal day,
Winnow'd from the chaff away.

Little trembler, fear no more,
Thou hast plenteous crops in store;
Seed, by genial sorrows sown,
More than all thy scorers own.

What though hostile earth despise,
Heaven beholds with gentler eyes;
Heaven thy friendless steps shall guide,
Cheer thy hours, and guard thy side.

When the fatal trump shall sound,
When th' immortals pour around,
Heaven shall thy return attest,
Hail'd by myriads of the blest.

Little native of the skies,
Lovely penitent, arise;
Calm thy bosom, clear thy brow,
Virtue is thy sister now.

More delightful are my woes
Than the rapture pleasure knows;
Richer far the weeds I bring,
Than the robes that grace a king.

On my wars of shortest date,
Crowns of endless triumph wait;
On my cares a period blest;
On my toils eternal rest.

Come, with Virtue at thy side;
Come, be ev'ry bar defied,
Till we gain our native shore;
Sister, come, and turn no more.

§ 282. FABLE XVI. Love and Vanity.

THE breezy morning breath'd perfume,
The wak'ning flow'rs unveil'd their bloom,
Up with the sun, from short repose,
Gay health and lusty labor rose;
The milkmaid caroll'd at her pail,
And shepherds whistled o'er the dale;
When Love, who led a rural life,
Remote from bustle, state, and strife,
Forth from his thatch-roof'd cottage stray'd,
And stroll'd along the dewy glade.

A Nymph, who lightly tripp'd it by,
To quick attention turn'd his eye;
He mark'd the gesture of the fair,
Her self-sufficient grace and air,
Her steps that mincing, meant to please,
Her studied negligence and ease;
And curious to inquire what meant
This thing of prettiness and paint,
Approaching spoke, and bow'd observant;
The lady slightly,—Sir, your servant.

Such beauty in so rude a place!
Fair one, you do the country grace;
At court no doubt the public care;
But Love has small acquaintance there.

Yes, Sir, replied the flutt'ring Dame,
This form confesses whence it came;
But dear variety, you know,
Can make us pride and pomp forego.
My name is Vanity. I sway
The utmost islands of the sea;
Within my court all honor centres;
I raise the meanest soul that enters,
Endow with latent gifts and graces,
And model fools for posts and places.

As Vanity appoints at pleasure,
The world receives its weight and measure;
Hence all the grand concerns of life,
Joys, cares, plagues, passions, peace, and strife.

Reflect how far my pow'r prevails,
When I step in where nature fails,
And ev'ry breach of sense repairing,
Am bounteous still where heaven is sparing.
But chief in all their arts and airs,
Their playing, painting, pouts, and pray'rs,
Their various habits and complexions,
Fits, frolics, foibles, and perfections,
Their robing, curling, and adorning,
From noon to night, from night to morning,

From six to sixty, sick or sound,
I rule the female world around.

Hold there a moment, Cupid cried,
Nor boast dominion quite so wide.
Was there no province to invade;
But that by Love and Meekness sway'd?
All other empire I resign;
But be the sphere of beauty mine.

For in the downy lawn of rest,
That opens on a woman's breast,
Attended by my peaceful train,
I choose to live, and choose to reign.

Far-sighted faith I bring along,
And truth, above an army strong;

And chastity of icy mould,
Within the burning tropics cold;
And lowliness, to whose mild brow,
The pow'r and pride of nations bow;
And modesty, with downcast eye,
That lends the morn her virgin dye;
And innocence, array'd in light;
And honor, as a tow'r upright;
With sweetly winning graces, more
Than poets ever dreamt of yore,
In unaffected conduct free,
All smiling sisters, three times three;
And rosy peace, the cherub blest,
That nightly sings us all to rest.

Hence, from the bud of nature's prime,
From the first step of infant time,
Woman, the world's appointed light,
Has skirted ev'ry shade with white;
Has stood for imitation high,
To ev'ry heart and ev'ry eye;
From ancient deeds of fair renown,
Has brought her bright memorials down:
To time affix'd perpetual youth,
And form'd each tale of love and truth.

Upon a new Promethean plan
She moulds the essence of a man,
Tempers his mass, his genius fires,
And, as a better soul, inspires.

The rude she softens, warms the cold,
Exalts the meek, and checks the bold,
Calls sloth from his supine repose,
Within the coward's bosom glows,
Of pride unplumes the lofty crest,
Bids bashful merit stand confest,
And, like coarse metal from the mines,
Collects, irradiates, and refines.
The gentle science she imparts,
All manners smooths, informs all hearts;
From her sweet influence are felt
Passions which please, and thoughts that melt;
To stormy rage she bids control,
And sinks serenely on the soul,
Softens Deucalion's flinty race,
And tunes the warring world to peace.

Thus, arm'd to all that's light and vain,
And freed from thy fantastic chain,
She fills the sphere by Heaven assign'd,
And, rul'd by me, o'er-rules mankind.

He spoke; the Nymph impatient stood,
And, laughing, thus her speech renew'd:

And pray, Sir, may I be so bold
To hope your pretty tale is told;
And next demand without a cavil,
What new Utopia do you travel?—
Upon my word these high-flown fancies,
Show depth of learning—in romances.

Why, what unfashion'd stuff you tell us
Of buckram dames and tiptoe fellows!
Go, child; and when you're grown maturer,
You'll shoot your next opinion surer.

O such a pretty knack at painting!
And all for soft'ning and for sainting;
Guess now, who can, a single feature,
Through the whole piece of female nature;

Then mark, my looser hand may fit
 The lines; too coarse for love to hit.
 'Tis said that woman, prone to changing,
 Through all the rounds of folly ranging,
 On life's uncertain ocean riding,
 Nor reason, rule, nor rudder guiding,
 Is like the comet's wand'ring light,
 Eccentric, ominous, and bright;
 Trackless, and shifting as the wind;
 A sea, whose fathom none can find;
 A moon, still changing and revolving;
 A riddle, past all human solving;
 A bliss, a plague, a heaven, a hell;
 A — something that no man can tell.

Now learn a secret from a friend,
 But keep your counsel, and attend.

Though in their tempers thought so distant,
 Nor with their sex nor selves consistent,
 'Tis but the difference of a name,
 And ev'ry woman is the same;
 For as the world, however varied,
 And through unnumber'd changes carried,
 Of elemental modes and forms,
 Clouds, meteors, colors, calms, and storms,
 Though in a thousand suits array'd,
 Is of one subject matter made;
 So, Sir, a woman's constitution,
 The world's enigma finds solution;
 And let her form be what you will,
 I am the subject essence still.

With the first spark of female sense,
 The speck of being, I commence,
 Within the womb make fresh advances,
 And dictate future qualms and fancies;
 Thence in the growing form expand,
 With childhood travel hand in hand,
 And give a taste for all their joys
 In gewgaws, rattles, pomp, and noise.

And now, familiar and unaw'd,
 I send the flutt'ring soul abroad,
 Prais'd for her shape, her air, her mien,
 The little goddess, and the queen,
 Takes at her infant shrine oblation,
 And drinks sweet draughts of adulation.

Now blooming, tall, erect, and fair,
 To dress becomes her darling care;
 The realms of beauty then I bound;
 I swell the hoop's enchanted round,
 Shrink in the waist's descending size,
 Heav'd in the snowy bosom rise,
 High on the flowing lappet sail,
 Or, curl'd in tresses, kiss the gale.
 Then to her glass I lead the fair,
 And show the lovely idol there;
 Where struck, as by divine emotion,
 She bows with most sincere devotion,
 And, numb'ring ev'ry beauty o'er,
 In secret bids the world adore.

Then all her parking and parading,
 Coquetting, dancing, masquerading;
 For balls, plays, courts, and crowds what passion,
 And churches, sometimes,—if the fashion;
 For woman's sense of right and wrong
 Is rul'd by the almighty throng;

Still turns to each meander tame,
 And swims the straw of ev'ry stream;
 Her soul intrinsic worth rejects,
 Accomplish'd only in defects;
 Such excellence is her ambition,
 Folly her wisest acquisition;
 And e'en from pity and disdain
 She'll cull some reason to be vain.

Thus, Sir, from ev'ry form and feature,
 The wealth and wants of female nature,
 And ev'n from vice, which you'd admire,
 I gather fuel to my fire;
 And on the very base of shame
 Erect my monument of fame.

Let me another truth attempt,
 Of which your godship has not dreamt.

Those shining virtues which you muster,
 Whence think you they derive their lustre?
 From native honor and devotion?
 O yes, a mighty likely notion!
 Trust me, from titled dames to spinners,
 'Tis I make saints, whoe'er make sinners;
 'Tis I instruct them to withdraw,
 And hold presumptuous man in awe;
 For female worth, as I inspire,
 In just degrees, still mounts the higher;
 And virtue, so extremely nice,
 Demands long toil and mighty price.
 Like Samson's pillars, fix'd elate,
 I bear the sex's tott'ring state;
 Sap these, and in a moment's space,
 Down sinks the fabric to its base.

Alike from titles and from toys
 I spring the fount of female joys;
 In ev'ry widow, wife, and miss,
 The sole artificer of bliss;
 For them each topic I explore,
 I cleave the sand of ev'ry shore;
 To them uniting Indias sail,
 Sabæa breathes her farthest gale;
 For them the bullion I refine,
 Dig sense and virtue from the mine,
 And from the bowels of invention
 Spin out the various arts you mention.

Nor bliss alone my pow'rs bestow,
 They hold the sov'reign balm of woe.
 Beyond the stoic's boasted art
 I soothe the heavings of the heart;
 To pain give splendor and relief,
 And gild the pallid face of grief.

Alike the palace and the plain
 Admit the glories of my reign;
 Through ev'ry age, in ev'ry nation,
 Taste, talents, tempers, state, and station.
 Whate'er a woman says, I say;
 Whate'er a woman spends, I pay;
 Alike I fill and empty bags,
 Flutter in finery and rags;

With light coquettes through folly range,
 And with the proud disdain to change.

And now you'd think, 'twixt you and I,
 That things were ripe for a reply—
 But soft, and while I'm in the mood,
 Kindly permit me, to conclude,

Their utmost mazes to unravel,
And touch the farthest step they travel.

When ev'ry pleasure's run aground,
And folly tir'd through many a round,
The nymph, conceiving discontent hence,
May ripen to an hour's repentance,
And vapors, shed in pious moisture,
Dismiss her to a church or cloister;
Then on I lead her, with devotion
Conspicuous in her dress and motion,
Inspire the heavenly-breathing air,
Roll up the lucid eye in pray'r,
Soften the voice, and in the face
Look melting harmony and grace.

Thus far extends my friendly pow'r,
Nor quits her in her latest hour;
The couch of decent pain I spread,
In form recline her languid head;
Her thoughts I methodise in death,
And part not with her parting breath;
Then do I set, in order bright,
A length of fun'ral pomp to sight,
The glitt'ring tapers and attire,
The plumes that whiten o'er the bier;
And last, presenting to her eye
Angelic fineries on high,
To scenes of painted bliss I waft her,
And form the heav'n she hopes hereafter.

In truth, rejoin'd love's gentle god,
You've gone a tedious length of road,
And, strange, in all the toilsome way
No house of kind refreshment lay;
No nymph, whose virtues might have tempted
To hold her from her sex exempted.

For one we'll never quarrel, man;
Take her, and keep her, if you can;
And pleas'd I yield to your petition,
Since ev'ry fair, by such permission,
Will hold herself the one selected;
And so my system stands protected.

O! deaf to virtue, deaf to glory,
To truths divinely vouch'd in story!
The godhead in his zeal return'd,
And, kindling at her malice, burn'd:
Then sweetly rais'd his voice, and told
Of heav'nly nymphs, rever'd of old;
Hypsipyle, who sav'd her sire,
And Portia's love, approv'd by fire;
Alike Penelope was quoted,
Nor laurell'd Daphne pass'd unnoted,
Nor Laodamia's fatal garter,
Nor fam'd Lucretia, honor's martyr,
Alceste's voluntary steel,
And Catharine, smiling on the wheel.
But who can hope to plant conviction
Where cavil grows on contradiction?
Some she evades or disavows,
Demurs to all, and none allows—
A kind of ancient thing call'd fables!
And thus the goddess turn'd the tables.

Now both in argument grew high,
And choler flash'd from either eye;
Nor wonder each refus'd to yield
The conquest of so fair a field.

When happily arriv'd in view
A goddess whom our grand-dames knew,
Of aspect grave, and sober gait,
Majestic, awful, and sedate,
As heaven's autumnal eve serene
When not a cloud o'ercasts the scene;
Once Prudence call'd, a matron fam'd,
And in old Rome Cornelia nam'd.
Quick at a venture both agree
To leave their strife to her decree.

And now by each the facts were stated,
In form and manner as related.

The case was short. They crav'd opinion,
Which held o'er females chief dominion:
When thus the goddess, answ'ring mild,
First shook her gracious head, and smil'd:

Alas, how willing to comply,
Yet how unfit a judge am I!
In times of golden date, 'tis true,
I shar'd the fickle sex with you;
But from their presence long precluded,
Or held as one whose form intruded,
Full fifty annual suns can tell,
Prudence has bid the sex farewell.

In this dilemma what to do,
Or who to think of, neither knew;
For both, still biass'd in opinion,
And arrogant of sole dominion,
Were forc'd to hold the case compounded,
Or leave the quarrel where they found it.

When in the nick, a rural fair,
Of inexperience'd gait and air,
Who ne'er had cross'd the neighb'ring lake,
Nor seen the world beyond a wake,
With cambric coif, and kerchief clean,
Tripp'd lightly by them o'er the green.

Now, now! cried love's triumphant child,
And at approaching conquest smil'd,
If Vanity will once be guided,
Our diff'rence soon may be decided;
Behold yon wench, a fit occasion
To try your force of gay persuasion.
Go you while I retire aloof,
Go, put those boasted pow'rs to proof;
And if your prevalence of art
Transcends my yet unerring dart,
I give the fav'rite contest o'er,
And ne'er will boast my empire more.

At once, so said, and so consented;
And well our goddess seem'd contented;
Nor pausing made a moment's stand,
But tripp'd, and took the girl in hand.

Meanwhile the godhead, unalarm'd,
As one to each occasion arm'd,
Forth from his quiver cull'd a dart,
That erst had wounded many a heart;
Then, bending, drew it to the head:
The bowstring twang'd, the arrow fled,
And to her secret soul address,
Transfix'd the whiteness of her breast.

But here the dame, whose guardian care
Had to a moment watch'd the fair,
At once her pocket-mirror drew,
And held the wonder full in view;

As quickly rang'd in order bright,
A thousand beauties rush to sight,
A world of charms, till now unknown,
A world reveal'd to her alone;
Enraptur'd stands the love-sick maid,
Suspended o'er the darling shade,
Here only fixes to admire,
And centres ev'ry fond desire.

§ 283. The Young Lady and Looking-Glass.
Wilkie.

YE deep philosophers, who can
Explain that various creature, Man,
Say, is there any point so nice
As that of off'ring an advice?
To bid your friend his errors mend,
Is almost certain to offend:
Though you in softest terms advise,
Confess him good, admit him wise,
In vain you sweeten the discourse,
He thinks you call him fool, or worse.
You paint his character, and try
If he will own it, and apply;
Without a name reprove and warn;
Here none are hurt, and all may learn:
This too must fail; the picture shown,
No man will take it for his own.
In moral lectures treat the case,
Say this is honest, that is base;
In conversation none will bear it;
And for the pupil, few come near it.
And is there then no other way
A moral lesson to convey?
Must all that shall attempt to teach,
Admonish, satirize, or preach?
Yes, there is one, an ancient art,
By sages found to reach the heart,
Ere science, with distinctions nice,
Had fix'd what virtue is, and vice.
Inventing all the various names
On which the moralist declaims:
They would by simple tales advise,
Which took the hearer by surprise;
Alarm'd his conscience unprepar'd,
Ere pride had put it on its guard;
And made him from himself receive
The lessons which they meant to give.
That this device will oft prevail,
And gain its end when others fail,
If any shall pretend to doubt,
The tale which follows makes it out.

There was a little stubborn dame,
Whom no authority could tame;
Restive, by long indulgence, grown,
No will she minded but her own:
At trifles oft she'd scold and fret,
Then in a corner take a seat,
And, sourly moping all the day,
Disdain alike to work or play.

Papa all softer arts had tried,
And sharper remedies applied;
But both were vain; for ev'ry course
He took, still made her worse and worse.

'Tis strange to think how female wit
So oft should make a lucky hit;
When man, with all his high pretence
To deeper judgement, sounder sense,
Will err, and measures false pursue—
'Tis very strange, I own, but true.—
Mamma observ'd the rising lass
By stealth retiring to the glass,
To practise little airs unseen,
In the true genius of thirteen:
On this a deep design she laid
To tame the humor of the maid;
Contriving, like a prudent mother,
To make one folly cure another.
Upon the wall, against the seat
Which Jessy us'd for her retreat,
Whene'er by accident offended,
A looking-glass was straight suspended,
That it might show her how deform'd
She look'd, and frightful, when she storm'd;
And warn her, as she priz'd her beauty,
To bend her humor to her duty.
All this the looking-glass achiev'd;
Its threats were minded and believ'd.

The Maid, who spurn'd at all advice,
Grew tame and gentle in a trice.
So, when all other means had fail'd,
The silent monitor prevail'd.

Thus, Fable to the human kind
Presents an image of the mind;
It is a mirror, where we spy
At large our own deformity;
And learn of course those faults to mend,
Which but to mention would offend.

§ 284. The Boy and the Rainbow. Wilkie.

DECLARE, ye sages, if ye find
'Mongst animals of ev'ry kind,
Of each condition, sort, and size,
From whales and elephants to flies,
A creature that mistakes his plan,
And errs, so constantly as Man.
Each kind pursues his proper good,
And seeks for pleasure, rest, and food:
As nature points, and never errs
In what it chooses and prefers;
Man only blunders, though possess
Of talents far above the rest.

Descend to instances, and try;
An ox will scarce attempt to fly,
Or leave his pasture in the wood,
With fishes to explore the flood.
Man only acts, of ev'ry creature,
In opposition to his nature.
The happiness of human kind
Consists in rectitude of mind;
A will subdu'd to reason's sway,
And passions practis'd to obey;
An open and a gen'rous heart,
Refin'd from selfishness and art;
Patience, which mocks at fortune's pow'r,
And wisdom never sad nor sour:
In these consists our proper bliss;
Else Plato reasons much amiss:

But foolish mortals still pursue
False happiness in place of true;
Ambition serves us for a guide,
Or lust, or avarice, or pride;
While Reason no assent can gain,
And Revelation warns in vain.
Hence through our lives, in ev'ry stage,
From infancy itself to age,
A happiness we toil to find,
Which still avoids us like the wind;
E'en when we think the prize our own,
At once 'tis vanish'd, lost, and gone.
You'll ask me why I thus rehearse
All Epictetus in my verse?
And if I fondly hope to please,
With dry reflections, such as these,
So trite, so hackney'd, and so stale?
I'll take the hint, and tell a tale.

One evening, as a simple swain
His flock attended on the plain,
The shining bow he chanc'd to spy,
Which warns us when a show'r is nigh.
With brightest rays it seem'd to glow:
Its distance eighty yards or so.
This bumpkin had, it seems, been told
The story of the cup of gold,
Which fame reports is to be found
Just where the Rainbow meets the ground;
He therefore felt a sudden itch
To seise the goblet, and be rich;
Hoping, yet hopes are oft but vain,
No more to toil through wind and rain,
But sit indulging by the fire,
'Midst ease and plenty, like a 'squire.
He mark'd the very spot of land
On which the Rainbow seem'd to stand,
And, stepping forwards at his leisure,
Expected to have found the treasure.
But as he mov'd, the color'd ray
Still chang'd its place, and slipp'd away,
As seeming his approach to shun:
From walking he began to run;
But all in vain, it still withdrew
As nimbly as he could pursue.
At last, through many a bog and lake,
Rough craggy road, and thorny brake,
It led the easy fool, till night
Approach'd, then vanish'd in his sight,
And left him to compute his gains,
With nought but labor for his pains.

§ 285. The Rake and the Hermit. Wilkie.

A YOUTH, a pupil of the town,
Philosopher and atheist grown,
Benighted once upon the road,
Found out a hermit's lone abode,
Whose hospitality in need
Reliev'd the trav'ler and his steed;
For both sufficiently were tir'd,
Well drench'd in ditches, and bemir'd.
Hunger the first attention claims;
Upon the coals a rasher flames;
Dry crusts, and liquor something stale,
Were added to make up a meal;

At which our trav'ler, as he sat,
By intervals began to chat.—
'Tis odd, quoth he, to think what strains
Of folly governs some folks' brains:
What makes you choose this wild abode?
You'll say, 'Tis to converse with God.
Alas, I fear, 'tis all a whim;
You never saw or spoke with him.
They talk of Providence's pow'r,
And say, it rules us ev'ry hour:
To me all nature seems confusion,
And such weak fancies mere delusion.
Say, if it rul'd and govern'd right,
Could there be such a thing as night;
Which, when the sun has left the skies,
Puts all things in a deep disguise?
If then a trav'ler chance to stray,
The least step from the public way,
He's soon in endless mazes lost,
As I have found it to my cost.
Besides, the gloom which nature wears
Assists imaginary fears,
Of ghosts and goblins from the waves,
Of sulph'rous lakes and yawning graves;
All sprung from superstitious seed,
Like other maxims of the creed.
For my part, I reject the tales
Which faith suggests when reason fails;
And reason nothing understands,
Unwarranted by eyes and hands.
These subtle essences, like wind,
Which some have dreamt of, and call mind,
It ne'er admits; nor joins the lie,
Which says men rot, but never die.
It holds all future things in doubt,
And therefore wisely leaves them out;
Suggesting what is worth our care,
To take things present as they are,
Our wisest course: the rest is folly,
The fruit of spleen and melancholy.—

Sir, quoth the Hermit, I agree
That Reason still our guide should be;
And will admit her as the test
Of what is true, and what is best;
But Reason sure would blush for shame
At what you mention in her name;
Her dictates are sublime and holy;
Impiety's the child of Folly;
Reason with measur'd steps and slow,
To things above to things below,
Ascends, and guides us through her sphere
With caution, vigilance, and care.
Faith in the utmost frontier stands,
And Reason puts us in her hands;
But not till her commission giv'n
Is found authentic, and from Heav'n.
'Tis strange that man, a reas'ning creature,
Should miss a God, in viewing nature;
Whose high perfections are display'd
In ev'ry thing his hands have made.
E'en when we think their traces lost,
When found again, we see them most.
The night itself, which you would blame
As something wrong in nature's frame,

Is but a curtain to invest
 Her weary children when at rest;
 Like that which mothers draw to keep
 The light off from a child asleep.
 Besides, the fears which darkness breeds
 (At least augments) in vulgar heads,
 Are far from useless: when the mind
 Is narrow, and to earth confin'd,
 They make the worldling think with pain
 On frauds, and oaths, and ill-got gain;
 Force from the ruffian's hand the knife
 Just rais'd against his neighbour's life;
 And in defence of virtue's cause,
 Assist each sanction of the laws.
 But souls serene, where wisdom dwells,
 And superstitious dread expels,
 The silent majesty of night
 Excites to take a nobler flight:
 With saints and angels to explore
 The wonders of creating pow'r;
 And lifts on contemplation's wings
 Above the sphere of mortal things.
 Walk forth, and tread those dewy plains
 Where night in awful silence reigns;
 The sky's serene, the air is still,
 The woods stand listening on each hill,
 To catch the sounds that sink and swell,
 Wide-floating from the ev'ning bell;
 While foxes howl, and beetles hum,
 Sounds which make silence still more dumb;
 And try if folly, rash and rude,
 Dare on the sacred hour intrude.
 Then turn your eyes to heav'n's broad frame,
 Attempt to quote those lights by name
 Which shine so thick, and spread so far;
 Conceive a sun in ev'ry star,
 Round which unnumber'd planets roll,
 While comets shoot athwart the whole;
 From system still to system ranging,
 Their various benefits exchanging,
 And shaking from their flaming hair
 The things most needed ev'ry where.—
 Explore this glorious scene, and say
 That night discovers less than day;
 That 'tis quite useless, and a sign
 That chance disposes, not design.
 Whoe'er maintains it, I'll pronounce
 Him either mad, or else a dunce;
 For reason, though 'tis far from strong,
 Will soon find out that nothing's wrong,
 From signs and evidences clear
 Of wise contrivance ev'ry where.
 The Hermit ended, and the youth
 Became a convert to the truth;
 At least he yielded, and confess'd
 That all was order'd for the best.

§ 286. The Youth and the Philosopher.
 W. Whitehead.

A GRECIAN youth of talents rare,
 Whom Plato's philosophic care
 Had form'd for virtue's nobler view,
 By precept and example too,

Would often boast his matchless skill
 To curb the steed, and guide the wheel;
 And as he pass'd the gazing throng
 With graceful ease, and smack'd the thong,
 The idiot wonder they express'd
 Was praise and transport to his breast.

At length, quite vain, he needs would show
 His master what his art could do;
 And bade his slaves the chariot lead
 To Academus' sacred shade.
 The trembling grove confess'd its fright,
 The wood-nymphs started at the sight;
 The Muses drop the learned lyre,
 And to their inmost shades retire.
 Howe'er the youth, with forward air,
 Bows to the sage, and mounts the ear;
 The lash resounds, the coursers spring,
 The chariot marks the rolling ring;
 And gathering crowds, with eager eyes,
 And shouts, pursue him as he flies.

Triumphant to the goal return'd,
 With nobler thirst his bosom burn'd;
 And now along th' indented plain
 The self-same track he marks again;
 Pursues with care the nice design,
 Nor ever deviates from the line.

Amazement seisd the circling crowd;
 The youths with emulation glow'd;
 E'en bearded sages hail'd the boy,
 And all but Plato gaz'd with joy.
 For he, deep-judging sage, beheld
 With pain the triumphs of the field:
 And when the charioteer drew nigh,
 And, flush'd with hope, had caught his eye,
 Alas! unhappy youth, he cried,
 Expect no praise from me (and sigh'd).
 With indignation I survey
 Such skill and judgement thrown away.
 The time profusely squander'd there
 On vulgar arts, beneath thy care,
 If well employ'd, at less expence,
 Had taught thee honor, virtue, sense,
 And rais'd thee from a coachman's fate
 To govern men, and guide the state.

§ 287. The Bee, the Ant, and the Sparrow.
 Dr. Cotton.

Addressed to Phœbe and Kitty C. at Boarding-School.

MY dears, 'tis said, in days of old
 That beasts could talk, and birds could scold:
 But now, it seems, the human race
 Alone engross the speaker's place.
 Yet lately, if report be true,
 (And much the tale relates to you)
 There met a Sparrow, Ant, and Bee,
 Which reason'd and convers'd as we.

Who reads my page will doubtless grant
 That Phe's the wise industrious Ant;
 And all with half an eye may see
 That Kitty is the busy Bee.
 Here then are two—but where's the third?
 Go search the school, you'll find the bird.

Y'our school! I ask your pardon, fair;
I'm sure you'll find no Sparrow there.

Now to my tale—One summer's morn
A Bee rang'd o'er the verdant lawn;
Studious to husband ev'ry hour,
And make the most of ev'ry flow'r.
Nimble from stalk to stalk she flies,
And loads with yellow wax her thighs;
With which the artist builds her comb,
And keeps all tight and warm at home;
Or from the cowslip's golden bells
Sucks honey, to enrich her cells:
Or ev'ry tempting rose pursues,
Or sips the lily's fragrant dew;
Yet never robs the shining bloom
Or of its beauty or perfume.
Thus she discharg'd in ev'ry way
The various duties of the day.

It chanc'd a frugal Ant was near,
Whose brow was wrinkled o'er by care;
A great œconomist was she,
Nor less laborious than the Bee;
By pensive parents often taught
What ills arise from want of thought;
That poverty on sloth attends;
On poverty the loss of friends;
Hence ev'ry day the Ant is found
With anxious steps to tread the ground;
With curious search to trace the grain,
And drag the heavy load with pain.

The active Bee with pleasure saw
The Ant fulfil her parent's law.
Ah! sister laborer, says she,
How very fortunate are we!
Who, taught in infancy to know
The comforts which from labor flow,
Are independent of the great,
Nor know the wants of pride and state.
Why is our food so very sweet?
Because we earn before we eat.
Why are our wants so very few?
Because we nature's calls pursue.
Whence our complacency of mind?
Because we act our parts assign'd.
Have we incessant tasks to do?
Is not all nature busy too?
Doth not the sun, with constant pace,
Persist to run his annual race?
Do not the stars, which shine so bright,
Renew their courses ev'ry night?
Doth not the ox obedient bow
His patient neck, and draw the plough?
Or when did e'er the gen'rous steed
Withhold his labor or his speed?
If you all nature's system scan,
The only idle thing is man.

A wanton Sparrow long'd to hear
Their sage discourse, and straight drew near.
The bird was talkative and loud,
And very pert and very proud;
As worthless and as vain a thing,
Perhaps, as ever wore a wing.
She found, as on a spray she sat,
The little friends were deep in chat;

That virtue was their fav'rite theme,
And toil and probity their scheme:
Such talk was hateful to her breast;
She thought them arrant prudes at best.

When to display her naughty mind,
Hunger with cruelty combin'd,
She view'd the Ant with savage eyes,
And hopp'd and hopp'd to snatch the prize.
The Bee, who watch'd her op'ning bill,
And guess'd her fell design to kill,
Ask'd her from what her anger rose,
And why she treated Ants as foes?

The Sparrow her reply began,
And thus the conversation ran:

Whenever I'm dispos'd to dine,
I think the whole creation mine;
That I'm a bird of high degree,
And ev'ry insect made for me.
Hence oft I search the emmet-brood
(For emmets are delicious food),
And oft, in wantonness and play,
I slay ten thousand in a day.
For truth it is, without disguise,
That I love mischief as my eyes.

Oh! fie! the honest Bee replied,
I fear you make base men your guide,
Of ev'ry creature sure the worst,
Though in creation's scale the first!
Ungrateful man! 'tis strange he thrives,
Who burns the Bees to rob their hives!
I hate his vile administration,
And so do all the emmet nation.
What fatal foes to birds are men,
Quite to the eagle from the wren!
Oh! do not men's example take,
Who mischief do for mischief's sake;
But spare the Ant—her worth demands
Esteem and friendship at your hands.
A mind with ev'ry virtue blest,
Must raise compassion in your breast.

Virtue! rejoind'd the sneering bird,
Where did you learn that Gothic word?
Since I was hatch'd, I never heard
That virtue was at all rever'd.
But say it was the ancients' claim,
Yet moderns disavow the name;
Unless, my dear, you read romances,
I cannot reconcile your fancies.
Virtue in fairy tales is seen
To play the goddess or the queen;
But what's a queen without the pow'r,
Or beauty, child, without a dow'r?
Yet this is all that virtue brags,
At best 'tis only worth in rags.
Such whims my very heart derides:
Indeed you make me burst my sides.
Trust me, Miss Bee—to speak the truth,
I've copied men from earliest youth;
The same our taste, the same our school,
Passion and appetite our rule;
And call me bird, or call me sinner,
I'll ne'er forego my sport or dinner.

A prowling cat the miscreant spies,
And wide expands her amber eyes:

Near and more near Grimalkin draws ;
 She wags her tail, protends her paws ;
 Then, springing on her thoughtless prey,
 She bore the vicious bird away.

Thus in her cruelty and pride,
 The wicked, wanton sparrow died.

§ 288. The Bears and Bees. Merrick.

As two young bears in wanton mood,
 Forth issuing from a neighb'ring wood,
 Came where th' industrious Bees had stor'd
 In artful cells their luscious hoard ;
 O'erjoy'd they seis'd with eager haste
 Luxurious on the rich repast.
 Alarm'd at this, the little crew
 About their ears vindictive flew.
 The beasts, unable to sustain
 Th' unequal combat, quit the plain ;
 Half blind with rage, and mad with pain,
 Their native shelter they regain ;
 There sit, and now, discreeter grown,
 Too late their rashness they bemoan ;
 And this by dear experience gain,
 That pleasure's ever bought with pain.
 So when the gilded baits of vice
 Are plac'd before our longing eyes,
 With greedy haste we snatch our fill,
 And swallow down the latent ill ;
 But when experience opes our eyes,
 Away the fancied pleasure flies :
 It flies, but oh ! too late we find
 It leaves a real sting behind.

§ 289. The Camelion. Merrick.

OFt has it been my lot to mark
 A proud conceited talking spark,
 With eyes, that hardly serv'd at most
 To guard their master 'gainst a post ;
 Yet round the world the blade has been,
 To see whatever could be seen.
 Returning from his finish'd tour,
 Grown ten times pterter than before,
 Whatever word you chance to drop,
 The travell'd fool your mouth will stop :
 " Sir, if my judgement you'll allow—
 " I've seen—and sure I ought to know"—
 So begs you'd pay a due submission,
 And acquiesce in his decision.

Two travellers of such a cast,
 As o'er Arabia's wilds they pass'd,
 And on their way in friendly chat
 Now talk'd of this, and then of that,
 Discours'd a while, 'mongst other matter,
 Of the camelion's form and nature.

" A stranger animal," cries one,
 " Sure never liv'd beneath the sun ;
 " A lizard's body, lean and long,
 " A fish's head, a serpent's tongue ;
 " Its foot with triple claw disjoin'd ;
 " And what a length of tail behind !
 " How slow its pace ! and then its hue—
 " Who ever saw so fine a blue ?"

' Hold there,' the other quick replies,
 "'Tis green,—I saw it with these eyes,

' As late with open mouth it lay,
 ' And warm'd it in the sunny ray ;
 ' Stretch'd at its ease the beast I view'd,
 ' And saw it eat the air for food !'
 " I've seen it, sir, as well as you,
 " And must again affirm it blue.
 " At leisure I the beast survey'd,
 " Extended in the cooling shade."
 "'Tis green, 'tis green, sir, I assure ye.'—
 " Green !" cries the other in a fury.—
 " Why, sir, d'ye think I've lost my eyes ?"
 ' 'Twere no great loss,' the friend replies,
 ' For, if they always serve you thus,
 ' You'll find them but of little use.'

So high at last the contest rose,
 From words they almost came to blows :
 When luckily came by a third—
 To him the question they referr'd ;
 And begg'd he'd tell them, if he knew,
 Whether the thing was green or blue.
 " Sirs," cries the umpire, " cease your pother,
 " The creature's neither one nor t' other :
 " I caught the animal last night,
 " And view'd it o'er by candle light :
 " I mark'd it well—'twas black as jet—
 " You stare—but, sirs, I've got it yet,
 " And can produce it."—" Pray, sir, do :
 ' I'll lay my life, the thing is blue.'
 " And I'll be sworn that when you've seen
 " The reptile, you'll pronounce him green."

' Well then, at once, to ease the doubt,' Replies the man, ' I'll turn him out :
 ' And when before your eyes I've set him,
 ' If you don't find him black, I'll eat him.'
 He said ; then full before their sight
 Produc'd the beast, and lo—'twas white.
 Both star'd ; the man look'd wondrous wise—
 " My children," the Camelion cries
 (Then first the creature found a tongue),
 " You all are right, and all are wrong :
 " When next you talk of what you view,
 " Think others see as well as you :
 " Nor wonder, if you find that none
 " Prefers your eye-sight to his own."

§ 290. The Monkeys. A Tale. Merrick.

WHOE'ER, with curious eye, has rang'd
 Through Ovid's tales, has seen
 How Jove, incens'd, to Monkeys chang'd
 A tribe of worthless men.

Repentant soon, th' offending race
 Entreat the injur'd pow'r
 To give them back the human face,
 And reason's aid restore.

Jove, sooth'd at length, his ear inclin'd,
 And granted half their pray'r ;
 But t'other half he bade the wind
 Disperse in empty air.

Scarce had the thund'rer giv'n the nod
 That shook the vaulted skies,
 With haughtier air the creatures strode,
 And stretch'd their dwindled size.

The hair in curls luxuriant now
 Around their temples spread ;
 The tail, that whilom hung below,
 Now dangled from the head.
 The head remains unchang'd within,
 Nor alter'd much the face ;
 It still retains its native grin,
 And all its old grimace.
 Thus half transform'd, and half the same,
 Jove bade them take their place
 (Restoring them their ancient claim)
 Among the human race.
 Man with contempt the brute survey'd,
 Nor would a name bestow ;
 But woman lik'd the motley breed,
 And call'd the thing a beau.

§ 291. Know Thyself. Arbuthnot.

WHAT am I ? how produc'd ? and for what end ?
 Whence drew I being ? to what period tend ?
 Am I th' abandon'd orphan of blind chance,
 Dropp'd by wild atoms in disorder'd dance ?
 Or from an endless chain of causes wrought,
 And of unthinking substance, born with thought ?
 By motion which began without a cause,
 Supremely wise, without design or laws ?
 Am I but what I seem, mere flesh and blood ?
 A branching channel, with a mazy flood ?
 The purple stream that through my vessels
 glides,
 Dull and unconcious flows, like common tides ;
 The pipes through which the circling juices stray,
 Are not that thinking I, no more than they :
 This frame, compacted with transcendent skill
 Of moving joints obedient to my will,
 Nurs'd from the fruitful glebe, like yonder tree,
 Waxes and wastes ; I call it mine, not me.
 New matter still the mould'ring mass sustains :
 The mansion chang'd, the tenant still remains ;
 And from the fleeting stream repair'd by food,
 Distinct, as is the swimmer from the flood.

What am I then ? sure of a noble birth ;
 By parents' right, I own as mother, Earth ;
 But claim superior lineage by my sire,
 Who warm'd th' unthinking clod with heavenly
 Essence divine, with lifeless clay allay'd, [fire ;
 By double nature, double instinct sway'd :
 With look erect, I dart my longing eye,
 Seem wing'd to part, and gain my native sky ;
 I strive to mount, but strive, alas ! in vain,
 Tied to this massy globe with magic chain.
 Now with swift thought I range from pole to pole,
 View worlds around their flaming centres roll :
 What steady pow'rs their endless motions guide
 Through the same trackless paths of boundless
 I trace the blazing comet's fiery tail, [void !
 And weigh the whirling planets in a scale ;
 These godlike thoughts while eager I pursue,
 Some glitt'ring trifle offer'd to my view,
 A gnat, an insect of the meanest kind,
 Erase the new-born image from my mind :
 Some beastly want, craving, importunate,
 Vile as the grinning mastiff at my gate,

Calls off from heavenly truth this reas'ning me,
 And tells me I'm a brute as much as he.
 If, on sublimer wings of love and praise,
 My soul above the starry vault I raise,
 Lur'd by some vain conceit, or shameful lust,
 I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust.
 The tow'ring lark thus, from her lofty strain,
 Stoops to an emmet, or a barley grain.
 By adverse gusts of jarring instincts tost,
 I rove to one, now to the other coast ;
 To bliss unknown my lofty soul aspires,
 My lot unequal to my vast desires.
 As 'mongst the hinds a child of royal birth
 Finds his high pedigree by conscious worth ;
 So man, amongst his fellow brutes expos'd,
 Sees he's a king, but 'tis a king depos'd.
 Pity him, beasts ! you by no law confin'd,
 And barr'd from devious paths by being blind ;
 Whilst man, through op'ning views, of various ways,

Confounded, by the aid of knowledge strays ;
 Too weak to choose, yet choosing still in haste,
 One moment gives the pleasure and distaste ;
 Bilk'd by past minutes, while the present cloy,
 The flatt'ring future still must give the joy :
 Not happy, but amus'd upon the road,
 And (like you) thoughtless of his last abode,
 Whether next sun his being shall restrain
 To endless nothing, happiness, or pain.
 Around me, lo ! the thinking thoughtless crew
 (Bewilder'd each) their diff'rent paths pursue ;
 Of them I ask the way ; the first replies,
 Thou art a god ; and sends me to the skies :
 Down on the turf, the next, thou two-legg'd beast,
 There fix thy lot, thy bliss and endless rest.
 Between these wide extremes the length is such,
 I find I know too little or too much. [mand,
 " Almighty Pow'r, by whose most wise com-
 " Helpless, forlorn, uncertain here I stand.
 " Take this faint glimm'ring of thyself away,
 " Or break into my soul with perfect day !"
 This said, expanded lay the sacred text,
 The balm, the light, the guide of souls perplex'd.
 Thus the benighted traveller, that strays
 Through doubtful paths, enjoys the morning rays :
 The nightly mist, and thick descending dew,
 Parting, unfolds the fields and vaulted blue.
 " O truth divine ! enlighten'd by thy ray,
 " I grope and guess no more, but see my way ;
 " Thou clear'dst the secret of my high descent,
 " And told'st me what those mystic tokens
 " meant ;
 " Marks of my birth, which I had worn in vain,
 " Too hard for worldly sages to explain.
 " Zeno's were vain, vain Epicurus' schemes,
 " Their systems false, delusive were their dreams ;
 " Unskill'd my twofold nature to divide,
 " One nurs'd my pleasure, and one nurs'd my
 pride ;
 " Those jarring truths which human art beguile,
 " Thy sacred page thus bids me reconcile."
 Offspring of God, no less thy pedigree,
 What thou once wert, art now, and still may be,
 Thy God alone can tell, alone decree ;

Faultless thou dropp'dst from his unerring skill,
 With the bare pow'r to sin, since free of will:
 Yet charge not with thy guilt his bounteous love,
 For who has pow'r to walk has pow'r to rove:
 Who acts by force impell'd can nought deserve;
 And wisdom short of infinite may swerve.
 Borne on thy new-imp'd wings, thou took'st
     thy flight,

Left thy Creator, and the realms of light;
 Disdain'd his gentle precept to fulfil,
 And thought to grow a god by doing ill:
 Though by foul guilt thy heav'nly form defac'd,
 In nature chang'd, from happy mansions chas'd,
 Thou still retain'st some sparks of heav'nly fire,
 Too faint to mount, yet restless to aspire;
 Angel enough to seek thy bliss again,
 And brute enough to make thy search in vain.
 The creatures now withdraw their kindly use,
 Some fly thee, some torment, and some seduce;
 Repast ill-suited to such different guests,
 For what thy sense desires, thy soul distastes:
 Thy lust, thy curiosity, thy pride,
 Curb'd or indulg'd, or baulk'd or gratified,
 Rage on, and make thee equally unblest
 In what thou want'st, and what thou hast
     possess'd;

In vain thou hop'st for bliss on this poor clod;
 Return and seek thy Father and thy God;
 Yet think not to regain thy native sky,
 Borne on the wings of vain philosophy!
 Mysterious passage! hid from human eyes
 Soaring you'll sink, and sinking you will rise:
 Let humble thoughts thy weary footsteps guide;
 Repair by meekness what you lost by pride.

§ 292. Lessons of Wisdom. Armstrong.

How to live happiest; how avoid the pains,
 The disappointments, and disgusts of those
 Who would in pleasure all their hours employ;
 The precepts here of a divine old man
 I could recite. Though old, he still retain'd
 His manly sense, and energy of mind.
 Virtuous and wise he was, but not severe;
 He still remember'd that he once was young;
 His easy presence check'd no decent joy.
 Him even the dissolute admir'd, for he
 A graceful looseness when he pleas'd put on,
 And laughing could instruct. Much had he
     read,
 Much more had seen; he studied from the life,
 And in th' original perus'd mankind.

Vers'd in the woes and vanities of life,
 He pitied man; and much he pitied those Whom falsely-smiling fate has curs'd with means

To dissipate their days in quest of joy.
 Our aim is happiness: 'tis yours, 'tis mine,
 He said, 'tis the pursuit of all that live;
 Yet few attain it, if 'twas e'er attain'd.
 But they the widest wander from the mark,
 Who through the flow'ry paths of saunt'ring
     joy

Seek this coy goddess; that from stage to stage
 Invites us still, but shifts as we pursue.

For, not to name the pains that pleasure brings
 To counterpoise itself, relentless Fate
 Forbids that we through gay voluptuous wilds
 Should ever roam; and were the Fates more kind,

Our narrow luxuries would soon be stale.
 Were these exhaustless, Nature would grow sick,

And, cloy'd with pleasure, squeamishly complain
 That all was vanity, and life a dream.

Let nature rest: be busy for yourself,
 And for your friend; be busy even in vain,
 Rather than tease her sated appetites.

Who never fasts, no banquet e'er enjoys;
 Who never toils or watches, never sleeps.
 Let nature rest: and when the taste of joy
 Grows keen, indulge; but shun satiety.

'Tis not for mortals always to be blest.
 But him the least the dull or painful hours
 Of life oppress, whom sober Sense conducts,
 And Virtue, through this labyrinth we tread.
 Virtue and Sense I mean not to disjoin;
 Virtue and Sense are one: and, trust me, he
 Who has not virtue, is not truly wise.

Virtue (for mere good-nature is a fool)
 Is sense and spirit, with humanity:

'Tis sometimes angry, and its frown confounds;
 'Tis e'en vindictive, but in vengeance just.
 Knaves fain would laugh at it; some great ones
 But at his heart the most undaunted son [dare;
 Of fortune dreads its name and awful charms.

To noblest uses this determines wealth;
 This is the solid pomp of prosperous days,
 The peace and shelter of adversity;
 And if you pant for glory, build your fame
 On this foundation, which the secret shock
 Defies of Envy and all-sapping Time.

The gaudy gloss of Fortune only strikes
 The vulgar eye: the suffrage of the wise,
 The praise that's worth ambition, is attain'd
 By sense alone, and dignity of mind.

Virtue, the strength and beauty of the soul,
 Is the best gift of Heaven: a happiness
 That even above the smiles and frowns of fate
 Exalts great Nature's favorites: a wealth
 That ne'er encumbers, nor to baser hands
 Can be transferr'd: it is the only good
 Man justly boasts of, or can call his own.
 Riches are oft by guilt and baseness earn'd;
 Or dealt by chance to shield a lucky knave,
 Or throw a cruel sunshine on a fool.

But for one end, one much neglected use,
 Are riches worth your care (for nature's wants
 Are few, and without opulence supplied)
 This noble end is, to produce the soul,
 To show the virtues in their fairest light;
 To make humanity the minister
 Of bounteous Providence; and teach the breast
 That generous luxury the gods enjoy.—
 Thus, in his graver vein, the friendly Sage Sometimes declaim'd. Of right and wrong he Truths as refin'd as ever Athens heard; [taught
 And (strange to tell!) he practis'd what he preach'd.

§ 293. Hymn to Cheerfulness—The Author being sick.—Dr. Akenside.

How thick the shades of evening close !
How pale the sky with weight of snows !
Haste, light the tapers, urge the fire,
And bid the joyless day retire !
—Alas, in vain I try within
To raise the dull, dejected scene ;
While rous'd by grief, these fiery pains
Tear the frail texture of my veins ;
While winter's voice, that storms around,
And yon deep death-bell's groaning sound
Renew my mind's oppressive gloom,
Till starting horror shakes the room.

Is there in Nature no kind power
To soothe affliction's lonely hour ?
To blunt the edge of dire disease,
And teach these wintry shades to please ?
Come, CHEERFULNESS, triumphant fair,
Shine through the painful cloud of care :
O sweet of language, mild of mien,
O Virtue's friend and Pleasure's queen !
Assuage the flames that burn my breast,
Attune my jarring thoughts to rest ;
And while thy gracious gifts I feel,
My song shall all thy praise reveal.

As once ('twas in Astrea's reign)
The vernal pow'rs renew'd their train,
It happen'd that immortal Love
Was ranging through the spheres above,
And downward hither cast his eye,
The year's returning pomp to spy :
He saw the radiant God of day
Lead round the globe the rosy May ;
The fragrant Airs and genial Hours
Were shedding round him dews and flowers ;
Before his wheels Aurora pass'd,
And Hesper's golden lamp was last.
But, fairest of the blooming throng,
When Health majestic mov'd along,
All gay with smiles, to see below
The joys which from her presence flow,
While earth enliven'd hears her voice,
And fields, and flocks, and swains rejoice ;
Then mighty Love her charms confess'd,
And soon his vows inclin'd her breast,
And, known from that auspicious morn,
The pleasing Cheerfulness was born,

Thou, Cheerfulness, by Heav'n design'd
To rule the pulse that moves the mind,
Whatever fretful passion springs,
Whatever chance or nature brings
To strain the tuneful poize within,
And disarrange the sweet machine ;
Thou, Goddess, with a master-hand
Dost each attemper'd key command,
Refine the soft and swell the strong,
Till all is concord, all is song.

Fair guardian of domestic life,
Best banisher of home-bred strife,

Nor sullen lip, nor taunting eye,
Deform the scene where thou art by :
No sickening husband damns the hour
That bound his joys to female pow'r :
No pining mother weeps the cares
That parents waste on hopeless heirs :
Th' officious daughters pleas'd attend ;
The brother rises to the friend :
By thee their board with flowers is crown'd,
By thee with songs their walks resound,
By thee their sprightly mornings shine,
And evening-hours in peace decline.

Behold the youth, whose trembling heart
Beats high with Love's unpitied smart ;
Though now he strays by rills and bowers,
And weeping wears the lonely hours ;
Or, if the nymph her audience deign,
Shames the soft story of his pain,
With slavish looks, discolored eyes,
And accents faltering into sighs ;
Yet thou, auspicious power, with ease
Canst yield him happier hearts to please,
Exalt his mien to manlier charms,
Instruct his tongue with nobler arms,
With more commanding passion move,
And teach the dignity of love.

Friend to the Muse and all her train,
For thee I court the Muse again ;
And may the votive lay disclose
How much to thy fair aid she owes !
See, when thy touch reveals her mine,
How pure the stores of fancy shine ;
Hark ! when thy breath her song impels,
How full the tuneful current swells.
Let Melancholy's plaintive tongue
Instruct the nightly strains of Y—— ;
But thine was Homer's ancient might,
And thine victorious Pindar's flight :
Thy myrtles crown'd the * Lesbian meads :
Thy voice awak'd † Sicilian reeds ;
Thy breath perfumes the ‡ Teian rose,
And Tiber's vine spontaneous flows ;
While Horace wantons in thy quire ;
The gods and heroes of the lyre.

See where the pale, the sick'ning sage,
(A prey perhaps to fortune's rage,
Perhaps by tender griefs oppress'd,
Or glooms congenial to his breast)
Retires in desert-scenes to dwell,
And bids the joyless world farewell.
Alone he treads th' autumnal shade,
Alone beneath the mountain laid,
He sees the nightly damps arise,
And gathering storms involve the skies ;
He hears the neighb'ring surges roll,
And raging thunders shake the pole ;
Then, struck by every object round,
And stunn'd by ev'ry horrid sound,
He pants to traverse nature's ways :
His evils haunt him through the maze :
He views ten thousand demons rise,
To wield the empire of the skies,

‡ Anacreon.

And Chance and Fate assume the rod,
 And Malice blots the throne of God.
 —O Thou, whose pleasing power I sing!
 Thy lenient influence hither bring;
 Compose the storm, dispel the gloom
 Till Nature wears her wonted bloom,
 Till fields and shades their sweets exhale,
 And music swell each opening gale:
 Then o'er his breast thy softness pour,
 And let him learn the timely hour
 To trace the world's benignant laws,
 And judge of that presiding cause
 Who founds in discord beauty's reign,
 Converts to pleasure every pain,
 Subdues the hostile forms to rest,
 And bids the universe be blest.

O Thou, whose pleasing power I sing!
 If right I touch the votive string,
 If equal praise I yield thy name,
 Still govern thou thy poet's flame;
 Still with the Muse my bosom share,
 And soothe to peace corroding care.
 But most exert thy genial power
 On friendship's consecrated hour:
 And while my Agis leads the road
 To fearless wisdom's high abode;
 Or, warm in freedom's sacred cause,
 Pursues the light of Grecian laws;
 Attend, and grace our gen'rous toils
 With all thy garlands, all thy smiles.
 But if, by fortune's stubborn sway,
 From him and friendship torn away,
 I court the Muses' healing spell
 For griefs that still with absence dwell,
 Do thou conduct my fancy's dreams
 To such indulgent, tender themes
 As just the struggling breast may cheer,
 And just suspend the starting tear;
 Yet leave that charming sense of woe,
 Which none but friends and lovers know.

§ 294. The Pain arising from virtuous Emotions attended with Pleasure. Akenside.

—BEHOLD the ways
 Of Heaven's eternal destiny to man,
 For ever just, benevolent, and wise:
 That Virtue's awful steps, howe'er pursued
 By vexing Fortune and intrusive Pain,
 Should never be divided from her chaste,
 Her fair attendant, Pleasure. Need I urge
 Thy tardy thought through all the various round
 Of this existence, that thy soft'ning soul
 At length may learn what energy the hand
 Of virtue mingles in the bitter tide
 Of passion swelling with distress and pain,
 To mitigate the sharp with gracious drops
 Of cordial Pleasure? Ask the faithful youth,
 Why the cold urn of her whom long he lov'd
 So often fills his arms; so often draws
 His lonely footsteps, at the silent hour,
 To pay the mournful tribute of his tears?
 O! he will tell thee, that the wealth of worlds
 Should ne'er seduce his bosom to forego

That sacred hour, when, stealing from the noise
 Of care and envy, sweet remembrance soothes
 With virtue's kindest looks his aching breast,
 And turns his tears to rapture.—Ask the crowd
 Which flies impatient from the village-walk
 To climb the neighb'ring cliffs, when far below
 The cruel winds have hurl'd upon the coast
 Some hapless bark; while sacred pity melts
 The gen'ral eye, or terror's icy hand
 Smites their distorted limbs and horrent hair;
 While every mother closer to her breast
 Catches her child, and, pointing where the waves

Foam through the shatter'd vessel, shrieks aloud,
 As one poor wretch, that spreads his piteous arms

For succour, swallow'd by the roaring surge,
 As now another, dash'd against the rock,
 Drops lifeless down. O deemest thou indeed
 No kind endearment here by nature given
 To mutual terror and compassion's tears?
 No sweetly-melting softness which attracts,
 O'er all that edge of pain, the social pow'rs,
 To this their proper action and their end?—
 Ask thy own heart; when at the midnight
 hour,

[eye
 Slow through that studious gloom thy pausing
 Led by the glimm'ring taper, moves around
 The sacred volumes of the dead, the songs
 Of Grecian bards, and records writ by Fame
 For Grecian heroes, where the present pow'r
 Of heaven and earth surveys th' immortal page,
 E'en as a father's blessing, while he reads
 The praises of his son; if then thy soul,
 Spurning the yoke of these inglorious days,
 Mix in their deeds and kindle with their flame:
 Say, when the prospect blackens on thy view;
 When rooted from the base, heroic states
 Mourn in the dust, and tremble at the frown
 Of curs'd Ambition;—when the pious band
 Of youths that fought for freedom and their sires,

Lie side by side in gore;—when ruffian pride
 Usurps the throne of justice, turns the pomp
 Of public pow'r, the majesty of rule,
 The sword, the laurel, and the purple robe,
 To slavish empty pageants, to adorn
 A tyrant's walk, and glitter in the eyes
 Of such as bow the knee;—when honor'd urns
 Of patriots and of chiefs, the awful bust
 And storied arch, to glut the coward race
 Of regal envy, strew the public way
 With hallow'd ruins! when the Muse's haunt,
 The marble porch where wisdom, wont to talk
 With Socrates or Tully, hears no more,
 Save the hoarse jargon of contentious monks,
 Or female superstition's midnight pray'r;—
 When ruthless rapine from the hand of Time
 Tears the destroying scythe, with surer blow,
 To sweep the works of glory from their base,
 Till desolation o'er the grass-grown street
 Expands his raven-wings, and up the wall,
 Where senates once the pride of monarchs
 doom'd,

Hisses the gliding snake through hoary weeds
That clasp the mould'ring column;—thus defac'd,

Thus widely mournful, when the prospect thrills
Thy beating bosom, when the patriot's tear
Starts from thine eye, and thy extended arm
In fancy hurls the thunderbolt of Jove
To fire the impious wreath on Philip's brow,
Or dash Octavius from the trophied car;—
Say, does thy secret soul repine to taste
The big distress? Or wouldst thou then exchange
Those heart-ennobling sorrows, for the lot
Of him who sits amid the gaudy herd
Of mute barbarians bending to his nod,
And bears aloft his gold-invested front,
And says within himself, "I am a king, [woe
"And wherefore should the clam'rous voice of
"Intrude upon mine ear?" The baleful dregs
Of these late ages, this inglorious draught
Of servitude and folly, have not yet,
Bless'd be th' Eternal Ruler of the world!
Defil'd to such a depth of sordid shame
The native honors of the human soul,
Nor so effac'd the image of its sire.

§ 295. A Paraphrase on Psalm lxxiv. 16, 17.
Miss Williams.

"The day is thine, the night also is thine; thou
"hast prepared the light and the sun.
"Thou hast set all the borders of the earth; thou
"hast made summer and winter."

MY God! all nature owns thy sway,
Thou giv'st the night, and thou the day!
When all thy lov'd creation wakes,
When morning, rich in lustre, breaks,
And bathes in dew the op'ning flower,
To Thee we owe her fragrant hour;
And when she pours her choral song,
Her melodies to Thee belong!
Or when, in paler tints array'd,
The evening slowly spreads her shade;
That soothing shade, that grateful gloom,
Can, more than day's enlivening bloom,
Still ev'ry fond and vain desire,
And calmer, purer thoughts inspire;
From earth the pensive spirit free,
And lead the soften'd heart to Thee.

In ev'ry scene thy hands have dress'd,
In ev'ry form by Thee impress'd;
Upon the mountain's awful head,
Or where the shelt'ring woods are spread;
In ev'ry note that swells the gale,
Or tuneful stream that cheers the vale;
The cavern's depth, or echoing grove,
A voice is heard of praise, and love.
As o'er thy works the seasons roll,
And soothe, with change of bliss, the soul,
Oh never may their smiling train
Pass o'er the human soul in vain!
But oft, as on the charm we gaze,
Attune the wond'ring soul to praise;
And be the joys that most we prize
The joys that from thy favor rise!

§ 296. A Paraphrase on Isaiah xlix. 15.

Miss Williams.

"Can a woman forget her sucking child, that
"she should not have compassion on the "son of her womb? Yea, they may forget,
"yet will I not forget thee."

HEAVEN speaks! Oh Nature, listen and rejoice!
Oh spread from pole to pole this gracious voice!
"Say every breast of human frame, that proves
The boundless force with which a parent loves;
Say, can a mother from her yearning heart
Bid the soft image of her child depart? [bear
She! whom strong instinct arms with strength to
All forms of ill, to shield that dearest care;
She! who with anguish stung, with madness
wild,

Will rush on death to save her threaten'd child;
All selfish feelings banish'd from her breast,
Her life one aim to make another's blest—
When her vex'd infant to her bosom clings,
When round her neck his eager arms he flings;
Breathes to her list'ning soul his melting sigh,
And lifts, suffus'd with tears, his asking eye!
Will she, for all ambition can attain,

The charms of pleasure, or the lures of gain,
Betray strong Nature's feelings? will she prove Cold to the claims of duty, and of love?

But should the mother from her yearning heart
Bid the soft image of her child depart;
When the vex'd infant to her bosom clings,
When round her neck his eager arms he flings;
Should she un pitying hear his melting sigh,
And view unmov'd the tear that fills his eye;
Should she, for all ambition can attain,

The charms of pleasure, or the lures of gain,
Betray strong Nature's feelings—should she Cold to the claims of duty and of love! [prove
Yet never will the God, whose word gave birth
To yon illumin'd orbs, and this fair earth;
Who through the boundless depths of trackless space

Bade new-wak'd beauty spread each perfect
Yet when he form'd the vast stupendous whole,
Shed his best bounties on the human soul;
Which reason's light illumines, which friendship
warms,

Which pity softens, and which virtue charms;
Which feels the pure affections' gen'rous glow,
Shares others' joy, and bleeds for others' woe—
Oh never will the gen'ral Father prove
Of man forgetful, man the child of love!"
When all those planets in their ample spheres
Have wing'd their course, and roll'd their destin'd years;

When the vast sun shall veil his golden light
Deep in the gloom of everlasting night; [skies;
When wild, destructive flames shall wrap the
When Chaos triumphs, and when Nature dies;
Man shall alone the wreck of worlds survive,
Midst falling spheres, immortal man shall live!
The voice which bade the last dread thunders roll,

Shall whisper to the good, and cheer their soul.

God shall himself his favor'd creature guide
Where living waters pour their blissful tide,
Where the enlarg'd, exulting, wond'ring mind
Shall soar, from weakness and from guilt refin'd;
Where perfect knowledge, bright with cloudless
Shall gild eternity's unmeasur'd days; [rays,
Where friendship, unembitter'd by distrust,
Shall in immortal bands unite the just;
Devotion, rais'd to rapture, breathe her strain,
And love in his eternal triumph reign!

§ 297. A Paraphrase on Matt. vii. 12.
Miss Williams.

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to
"you, do ye even so to them."

PRECEPT divine! to earth in mercy given;
O sacred rule of action, worthy Heaven!
Whose pitying love ordain'd the blest command,
To bind our nature in a firmer band;
Enforce each human sufferer's strong appeal,
And teach the selfish breast what others feel;
Wert thou the guide of life, mankind might
know

A soft exemption from the worst of woe:
No more the powerful would the weak oppress,
But tyrants learn the luxury to bless;
No more would slavery bind a hopeless train
Of human victims in her galling chain:
Mercy the hard, the cruel heart would move
To soften mis'ry by the deeds of love;
And av'rice from his hoarded treasures give,
Unask'd, the liberal boon, that want might live!
The impious tongue of falsehood then would cease

To blast, with dark suggestions, virtue's peace:
No more would spleen or passion banish rest,
And plant a pang in fond affection's breast;
By one harsh word, one alter'd look, destroy
Her peace, and wither ev'ry op'ning joy:
Scarce can her tongue the captious wrong explain,

The slight offence which gives so deep a pain!
Th' affected ease that slights her starting tear,
The words whose coolness kills from lips so
dear;—

The hand she loves, alone can point the dart,
Whose hidden sting could wound no other
heart—

These, of all pains the sharpest we endure,
The breast which now inflicts, would spring to cure.—

No more deserted genius then would fly
To breathe in solitude his hopeless sigh;
No more would fortune's partial smile debase
The spirit, rich in intellectual grace,
Who views unmov'd from scenes where pleasures bloom,

The flame of genius sunk in mis'ry's gloom;
The soul heaven form'd to soar, by want deprest,
Nor heeds the wrongs that pierce a kindred breast. [light

Thou righteous Law, whose clear and useful
Sheds on the mind a ray divinely bright;

Condensing in one rule what'er the sage
Has proudly taught, in many a labor'd page;
Bid every heart thy hallow'd voice revere,
To justice sacred, and to nature dear!

§ 298. Reflection on a Future State, from a Review of Winter. Thomson.

'Tis done! dread Winter spreads his latest
glooms,

And reigns tremendous o'er the conquer'd year.
How dead the vegetable kingdom lies!

How dumb the tuneful! Horror wide extends
His desolate domain. Behold, fond man!

See here thy pictur'd life: pass some few years,
Thy flow'ring Spring, thy Summer's ardent strength,

The sober Autumn fading into age,
And pale concluding Winter comes at last,
And shuts the scene. Ah! whither now are fled
Those dreams of greatness? those unsolid hopes
Of happiness? those longings after fame?
Those restless cares? those busy bustling days?
Those gay-spent, festive nights? those veering
thoughts

Lost between good and ill, that shar'd thy life?
All now are vanish'd! Virtue sole survives
Immortal never-failing friend of man,
His guide to happiness on high. And see!

'Tis come, the glorious morn! the second birth
Of heav'n and earth! awak'ning nature hears
The new-creating word, and starts to life,
In ev'ry heighten'd form, from pain and death
For ever free. The great eternal scheme,
Involving all, and in a perfect whole
Uniting as the prospect wider spreads,
To reason's eye refin'd, clears up apace.

Ye vainly wise! ye blind presumptuous! now,
Confounded in the dust, adore that Pow'r
And Wisdom oft arraign'd; see now the cause
Why unassuming worth in secret liv'd,
And died neglected: why the good man's share
In life was gall and bitterness of soul:

Why the lone widow and her orphans pin'd
In starving solitude; while luxury,
In palaces, lay straining her low thought,
To form unreal wants; why heaven-born truth,
And moderation fair, wore the red marks
Of superstition's scourge: why licens'd pain,
That cruel spoiler, that embosom'd foe,
Imbitter'd all our bliss. Ye good distress'd!

Ye noble few! who here unbending stand
Beneath life's pressure, yet bear up a while,
And what your bounded view, which only saw
A little part, deem'd evil, is no more;
The storms of Wintry Time will quickly pass,
And one unbounded Spring encircle all.

§ 299. A Prayer in the Prospect of Death.
Burns.

O THOU unknown Almighty Cause
Of all my hope and fear!
In whose dread presence, ere an hour,
Perhaps I must appear!

If I have wander'd in those paths
Of life I ought to shun,
As something loudly in my breast
Remonstrates I have done ;
Thou know'st That thou hast formed me
With passions wild and strong ;
And list'ning to their 'witching voice
Has often led me wrong.

Where human weakness has come short,
Or frailty stepp'd aside,
Do Thou, All-Good ! for such Thou art,
In shades of darkness hide.

Where with intention I have err'd,
No other plea I have,
But, Thou art good ; and goodness still Delighteth to forgive.

§ 300. Death. Emily.

THE festive roar of laughter, the warm glow
Of brisk-eyed joy, and friendship's genial bowl,

Wit's season'd converse, and the liberal flow
Of unsuspicious youth, profuse of soul,
Delight not ever ; from the boisterous scene
Of riot far, and Comus' wild uproar,
From folly's crowd, whose vacant brow serene
Was never knit to wisdom's frowning lore,
Permit me, ye time-hallow'd domes, ye piles
Of rude magnificence, your solemn rest,
Amid your fretted vaults and length'ning aisles,
Lonely to wander ; no unholy guest
That means to break, with sacrilegious tread,
The marble slumbers of your monumented
dead.

Permit me, with sad musings, that inspire
Unlabor'd numbers apt, your silence drear
Blameless to wake, and with the Orphean lyre,
Fitly attemper'd, soothe the merciless ear
Of Hades, and stern death, whose iron sway
Great nature owns through all her wide domain :

All with that oary fin cleave their smooth way
Through the green bosom of the spawny
main ;

And those that to the streaming æther spread,
In many a wheeling glide, their feathery sail ;
And those that creep, and those that statelier
tread,

That roam o'er forest, hill, or browsy dale ;
The victims each of ruthless fate must fall ;
E'en God's own image, man, high paramount of all.

And ye, the young, the giddy, and the gay,
That startle from the sleepful lid of light
The curtain'd rest, and with the dissonant bray
Of Bacchus, and loud jollity, affright
Yon radiant goddess, that now shoots among These many-window'd aisles her glimmering beam ;

Know, that or ere its starr'd career along [team,
Thrice shall have roll'd her silver-wheeled

Some parent breast may heave the answering sigh
To the slow pauses of the funeral knell ;
E'en now black Atropos, with scowling eye,
Roars in the laugh, and revels o'er the bowl ;
E'en now in rosy-crowned pleasure's wreath
Entwines in adder folds all unsuspected Death.

Know, on the stealing wing of time shall flee
Some few, some short-liv'd years, and all is past ;

A future bard these awful domes may see,
Muse o'er the present age, as I the last ;
Who mouldering in the grave, yet 'once like you
The various maze of life were seen to tread,
Each bent their own peculiar to pursue,
As custom urg'd, or wilful nature led :
Mix'd with the various crowd's inglorious clay,
The nobler virtues undistinguish'd lie ;
No more to melt with beauty's heaven-born ray,
No more to wet compassion's tearful eye,
Catch from the poet raptures not their own,
And feel the thrilling melody of sweet renown.

Where is the master-hand, whose semblant art
Chisel'd the marble into life, or taught
From the well-pencil'd portraiture to start
The nerve that beat with soul, the brow that
thought ?

Cold are the fingers that in stone-fixt trance
The mute attention rivetting, to the lyre
Struck language ; dimm'd the poet's quick-eyed glance,

All in wild raptures flashing heaven's own fire ;
Shrunk is the sinew'd energy, that strung
The warrior arm. Where sleeps the patriot breast

Whilom that heav'd impassion'd ? where the tongue

That lanc'd its lightning on the tow'ring crest
Of sceptred insolence, and overthrew
Giant Oppression, leagued with all her earth-born crew !

These now are past ; long, long, ye fleeting years,
Pursue, with glory wing'd, your fated way,
Ere from the womb of time unwelcome peers

The dawn of that inevitable day, [friend
When, wrapt in shrouded clay, their warmest
The widow'd virtues shall again deplore,
When o'er his urn in pious grief shall bend
His Britain, and bewail one patriot more ;

For soon must thou, too soon ! who spread'st
Thy beaming emanations unconfin'd, [abroad
Doom'd like some better angel sent of God

To scatter blessings over human kind,
Thou too must fall, O Pitt ! to shine no more,
And tread these dreadful paths a Faulkland trod
before.

Fast to the driving winds the marshall'd clouds
Sweep discontinuous o'er th' ethereal plain !
Another still upon another crowds,

All hastening downward to their native main

Thus passes o'er, through varied life's career,
 Man's fleeting age; the seasons, as they fly,
 Snatch from us in their course, year after year,
 Some sweet connexion, some endearing tie.
 The parent, ever-honor'd, ever-dear,
 Claims from the filial breast the pious sigh;
 A brother's urn demands the kindred tear,
 And gentle sorrows gush from friendship's eye.
 To-day we frolic in the rosy bloom [tomb.
 Of jocund youth—the morrow knells us to the

Who knows how soon in this sepulchral spot
 Shall heav'n to me the drear abode assign?
 How soon the past irrevocable lot
 Of these that rest beneath me shall be mine?
 Haply when Zephyr to thy native bourn [wave,
 Shall waft thee o'er the storm'd Hibernian
 Thy gentle breast, my Tavistock, shall mourn
 To find me sleeping in the senseless grave.
 No more the social leisure to divide,
 In the sweet intercourse of soul and soul,
 Blithe, or of graver brow: no more to chide
 The ling'ring years impatient as they roll,
 Till all thy cultur'd virtues shall display, [day.
 Full-blossom'd, their bright honors to the gazing

Ah, dearest youth! these vows, perhaps unheard,
 The rude wind scatters o'er the billowy main:
 These prayers at friendship's holy shrine preferr'd,
 May rise to grasp their father's knees in vain.
 Soon, soon may nod the sad funereal plume
 With solemn horror o'er thy timeless hearse,
 And I survive to grave upon thy tomb
 The mournful tribute of memorial verse.
 That leave to heaven's decision—be it thine,
 Higher than yet a parent's wishes flew,
 To soar in bright pre-eminence, and shine
 With self-earn'd honors, eager to pursue
 Where glory, with her clear unsullied rays,
 The well-born spirit lights to deeds of mightiest
 praise.

'Twas she thy godlike Russel's bosom steel'd
 With confidence untam'd, in his last breath
 Stern-smiling. She, with calm composure, held
 The patriot axe of Sidney, edg'd with death.
 Smit with the warmth of her impulsive flame,
 Wolfe's gallant virtue flies to worlds afar,
 Emulous to pluck fresh wreaths of well-earn'd
 fame
 From the grim-frowning brow of laurell'd war.
 'Twas she that, on the morn of direful birth,
 Bar'd thy young bosom to the fatal blow,
 Lamented Armytage!—the bleeding youth!
 O bathe him in the pearly caves below,
 Ye Nereids! and ye Nymphs of Camus hoar, Weep—for ye oft have seen him on your haunted shore.

Better to die with glory, than recline
 On the soft lap of ignominious peace;
 Than yawn out the dull droning life supine
 In monkish apathy and gowned ease.

Better employ'd in honor's bright career
 The least division on the dial's round,
 Than thrice to compass Saturn's live-long year,
 Grown old in sloth, the burthen of the ground;
 Than tug with sweating toil the slavish oar
 Of unredeem'd affliction, and sustain
 The feverous rage of fierce diseases sore
 Unnumber'd, that in sympathetic chain
 Hang ever through the thick circumfluous air,
 All from the drizzly verge of yonder star-girt sphere.

Thick in the many-beaten road of life
 A thousand maladies are posted round,
 With wretched man to wage eternal strife
 Unseen, like ambush'd Indians, till they wound:
 There the swoln hydrop stands, the wat'ry rheum,
 The northern scurvy, blotch with leprous scale;
 And moping ever in the cloister'd gloom
 Of learned sloth, and bookish asthma pale;
 And the shunn'd hag unsightly, that (ordain'd
 On Europe's sons to wreak the faithless sword
 Of Cortez, with the blood of millions stain'd)
 O'er dog-eyed lust the tort'ring scourge abhorr'd
 Shakes threat'ning, since the while she wing'd her flight
 From Amazon's broad wave, and Andes' snow-clad height.

Where the wan daughter of the yellow year,
 The chatt'ring ague chill; the writhing stone;
 And he of ghastly feature, on whose ear
 Unheeded croaks the death-bird's warning
 moan,
 Marasmus; knotty gout; and the dead life
 Of nerveless palsy; there, on purpose fell
 Dark brooding, whets his interdicted knife
 Grim Suicide, the damned fiend of hell.
 There too is the stunn'd apoplexy pight*, [foul;
 The bloated child of gorg'd intemperance
 Self-wasting melancholy, black as night [howl,
 Low'ring; and foaming fierce with hideous
 The dog hydrophoby; and near allied,
 Scar'd madness, with her moon-struck eye-balls staring wide.

There, stretch'd one huge, beneath the rocky mine†;
 With boiling sulphur fraught, and mouldering
 He, the dread delegate of wrath divine, [fires:
 Ere while that stood o'er Taio's hundred spires Vindictive; thrice he wav'd th' earth-shaking wand,
 Powerful as that the son of Amram bore,
 And thrice he rais'd, and thrice he check'd his hand.
 He struck—the rocky ground, with thunderous roar, [there
 Yawn'd! Here from street to street hurries, and Now runs, now stops, then shrieks, and scours
 amain,

* Placed.

† Alluding to the Earthquake at Lisbon, November 1, 1755.

Staring distraction : many a palace fair
 With millions sinks ingulph'd, and pillar'd fane.
 Old ocean's farthest waves confess the shock ;
 E'en Albion trembled conscious on his stedfast rock.

The meagre famine there, and, drunk with blood, [yore
 Stern war; and the loath'd monster, whom of
 The slimy Naiad of the Memphian flood
 Engend'ring, to the bright-hair'd Phœbus bore,
 Foul pestilence; that on the wide-stretch'd wings
 Of commerce speeds from Cairo's swarthy bay
 His westering flight; and through the sick air flings

Spotted contagion; at his heels dismay
 And desolation urge their fire-wheel'd yoke
 Terrible; as long of old, when from the height
 Of Paran came unwreath'd the mightiest, shook Earth's firm-fixt base tott'ring; through the black night [abroad
 Glanc'd the flash'd lightnings: heaven's rent roof
 Thunder'd; and universal nature felt its God.

Who on that scene of terror, on that hour
 Of roused indignation, shall withstand
 Th' Almighty, when he meditates to show'r
 The bursting vengeance o'er a guilty land?
 Canst thou, secure in reason's vaunted pride,
 Tongue-doubtly miscreant, who but now didst
 gore

With more than Hebrew rage th' innocent side
 Of agonizing mercy, bleeding sore—
 Canst thou confront, with stedfast eye unaw'd,
 The sworded judgement stalking far and near?

Well mayst thou tremble, when an injur'd God
 Disclaims thee—guilt is ever quick of fear—
 Loud whirlwindshowl in Zephyr's softest breath,
 And every glancing meteor glares imagin'd
 death.

The good alone are fearless; they alone,
 Firm and collected in their virtue, brave
 The wreck of worlds, and look unshrinking
 down

On the dread yawnings of the rav'nous
 grave:

Thrice happy who, the blameless road along
 Of honest praise, hath reach'd the vale of
 death!

Around him, like ministrant cherubs, throng
 His better actions, to the parting breath
 Singing their best requiems; he the while

Gently reposing on some friendly breast,
 Breathes out his benisons; then with a smile
 Of soft complacence lays him down to rest,
 Calm as the slumb'ring infant; from the goal
 Free and unbounded flies the disembodied soul.

Whether some delegated charge below, [claim;
 Some much-lov'd friend its hovering care may

Whether it heavenward soars again to know
 That long-forgotten country, whence it came;
 Conjecture ever, the mis-featur'd child
 Of letter'd arrogance, delights to run
 Through speculation's puzzling mazes wild,
 And all to end at last where it begun.
 Fain would we trace with reason's erring clue,
 The darksome paths of destiny aright:
 In vain; the task were easier to pursue
 The trackless wheelings of the swallow's flight.
 From mortal ken himself the Almighty shrouds,
 Pavilion'd in thick night and circumambient clouds.

§ 301. Pulpit Eloquence, from the English Orator. Polwhele.

THEN deem not (as my previous strains have taught)

Religion, a cold metaphysic form,
 Musing o'er moral problems, and confin'd
 To wisdom's eyes alone—behold, she sits,
 While faith unveils her to the vulgar gaze,
 Streaming cherubic effluence o'er her heaven
 Of spotless azure! To the dazzling light
 Her everlasting robe, the asbestos floats
 In vivid folds. Around her emerald throne
 The passions tremble at her awful beck—
 “Her ministers as flaming fire,” to waft
 Into the mortal bosom the pure spark
 Æthereal, that refines our thought! Hence fly
 The words that burn; while her impulsive power
 Imparts an oratory only less
 Than what inspir'd the apostles, when of old
 They spake all tongues, and saw confusion's reign,
 The curse of jarring Shinar, disappear.

And lo! she hails her Albion as the spot
 Auspicious to her orators, though, long,
 Unfriended; whilst, in other climes, the pomp
 Of tyranny and superstition frowns,
 Ungenial inmates; and in sloth supine
 Snores the dark priory, or proud conclaves vaunt
 Their hierarchal honors! Here the mind
 Shall rise unshackled, if too nice a sense
 Fastidious intervene not, to retard
 Its flights! Here pathos may exert its powers.

First therefore, to produce the pathos, fix
 Upon the great emotions of the soul
 The mental eye; and deem thy hearers mov'd
 By similar sensations. Thus the case
 Of others may be accurately drawn
 From thine assenting heart that feels it true.

Thus intimately versant in the soul's
 Quick movements, thou wilt never harshly treat
 What should be gently turn'd to virtue's road;
 Removing each obstruction that may bar
 Persuasion, and preparing every mind
 By lenient measures, ere thy art unfold
 Doctrines, whose aspect suits not worldly pride,
 Or idle vanity, or sensual care.

Free to receive thy lessons, shall the heart
Attend them, unrevolving. Then affect,
And in repeated agitation keep,
By thy displays of sacred truth, the race
Of passion ; which, attemper'd into shapes
Resembling scarce their former guise, and held
In close engagement, rarely shall relapse,
Again imbruted, amid earthly things.

Meantime thy style familiar, that alludes
With pleasing retrospect to recent scenes,
Shall interest every bosom. With the voice
Of condescending gentleness, address
Thy kindred people. Shun the distant air,
The formal ; shun the flippancy too smooth,
The lightness too theatrical ; the starts
That waken for a while the listening ear,
But waken to antipathy. Be warm,
Yet grave : unite an animated soul
With dignified demeanor ; and, untouch'd
By the vain glory that on Herod beam'd
A momentary rapture, big with death,
Preach not thyself ; but nurse an ardent zeal
As for thy offspring rang'd below ! The fire
Of exhortation haply may diffuse
Thy piety, thy virtues ; as they see
The emotions of a parent. But beware
Of overacted violence, that turns
To ridicule the best-imagin'd strain.

The pulpit-speakers that arose to fame,
Ere Britain from asperities had clear'd
Her language, opening to thee ample stores
For eloquence, may cool the intemperate warmth
Of passion ; but the pulpit might in vain
Adopt their manner. Idly might a South
His witty turns, his quaintnesses display,
Except to waken laughter. Barrow's style,
Redundant and involv'd, would soon oppress
Thy auditors : even Tillotson's were cold,
Though thick with oratorical beauties sown ;
And Clarke's exactness, rigorous and precise,
Might vainly torture the protracted thought.
No—to thy observation—to thy heart
Recur ; nor ever slight them ; and, now vers'd
In nature and religion, fix thy choice
Upon the topics that may best enforce
The moral sense, instil into the soul
The Christian spirit meek, and mend the heart.

If to the moral system we restrain
Our search, select such topics as are sure
To suit thy various audience. To one point
That turns on age, or station, or the modes
Of character, thy apt discussions guide
Unvarying. Many a preacher wanders wild
O'er human life ; exhibiting his draughts
Confus'd and transitory—to distract
The attentive eye, that with vain gaze pursues.

Is youth thy subject ?—Fix'd within the pale
Of youth, delineate its peculiar bent—
Its failings, its affections ; in full strength
Show its appropriate duties ; and address

The young around thee with the feeling tones
That speak the guardian father and the friend.

Or, on the duties of maturer years
Descanting, rove not with digressive wing.

But still to thy selected topic true,
Trace the hoar lineaments of tremulous age
Dropping into the grave. Trite is the tale
Of mortal frailness ; but the gloomy truth
Yet interests and affects ; and what affects
Will influence. For, though oft the passions, rous'd

By vivid strokes of the pathetic, glow
With but a momentary flush, and faint
Full fast away ; still something at the heart
Lingers in feeble pulses inextinct,
That quick recurs to conscience, at the hour
Of meditated evil : the weak sense
By oratorical energies renew'd,
Acquires an active vigor to repel
The power of vice. The pictur'd frown of death
Hath even awak'd from lethargies of sin
The sluggish soul ; and bade it trembling fly
The horrors that inwrap the yawning gulph.

Nor seldom, stealing with familiar strain
Into his business and his bosom, paint
The poor man's lot ; whilst in the house of God
The virtuous peasant shall beside the peer Stand forth, embolden'd. Tell him, if the glow

Of floating purple shade o'erweening pride,
His is the better livery that infolds [hours
The limbs of want : and tell him, though his
Of still devotional repose are few,
If pious meditation shall await
His steps into the field, the humble vow,
Breath'd from amidst his labors, may ascend
The purest incense that embalms the skies.

Thus it behoves thee to inspect with care
Life's shifting circumstance. The social ties,
The duties that reciprocally bind
The human race, shall in strong light appear
Link'd with peculiar stations. Though alike
“ The tender charities of father, son,
“ And brother,” interest all our mortal race ;
Lovelier shall they attract the poor, if drawn
Beneath the straw-roof'd dwelling ; or the rich,
If shadow'd in the splendor of the dome.

And human character with no vain force
May arm thy eloquence. Its simple forms
Shall strike the rude spectator, and excite
The conscious feelings. But the draught refin'd
Rarely the vulgar apprehension meets,
Though well thy pencil's mimic powers it prove.

Here may the historic instance give effect
To moral portraits. From the sacred fount
Bring forth the forcible example. Show
The grey Barzillai's honorable age
Placid, though to the minstrel's warbled voice—

To the sweet meltings of luxurious lutes
No more awake ! Show Hezekiah frail
In human weakness, and still asking life !
Show saintly Timothy, though young, detach'd

From sensual joys. Exhibit Lazarus poor—
Arimathea Joseph rich, yet proud
To bear the Christian banner ! And describe
The trembling Felix ! Such as these beseech
Thy pulpit oratory, opening tracts
Recent in various beauties ; where the heart
Throbs with the keen emotions of delight
Or fear ; and (as the obedient memory stores
The striking incident) beats every pulse
In corresponding tones to nature's sense ;
Till, sudden, by an unexpected stroke
At once discover'd to itself, it sees
Its every winding avenue ; shrinks back
From its detected vices (never view'd
Before, but with a transitory glance) ;
And shudders at the brood it fosters there.

If in the Christian system, we behold
The radiant Sun of righteousness arise
With healing in its wings—to stream forth light
Upon the sterner virtues, to relume
By pure effulgence mild the moral world ;
'Tis here pathetic eloquence shall greet
Prospects at which e'en paradise might fade,
Though all its bowers hung blooming to the breath
Of innocence !—'Twas Eden's happy pair
Announc'd creation's blessings. But here burst
Ineffably benign, redemption's rays,
Whilst in a mute amaze archangels hail
Th' infinitude of mediatorial love !

Here shall thy glowing oratory charm
With an unwonted lustre, as it meets
The meekness of the Christian—his calm eye
Wet with the tear of gratitude ! To prove Religion's firmly-rooted truths, by long
Elaborate deduction, were to freeze
That feeling tear ! The unfathomable strain
The vulgar may admire ; but not with breath
More idly eloquent, the sainted sage
Gather'd around him on the rocky shore
The scaly race that cleave the hoary deep.

Insist not, therefore, with a tedious length,
On proofs external. The strong leading facts,
Concisely representing, quickly bring
The internal evidence to light, that strikes
Conviction while it sinks into the heart.

Faith is, perhaps, thy topic. Ah beware
Of mazy ambiguities too dark
For letter'd minds. Attempt not to premise
The jarring tenets of innumerable sects ;
But in perspicuous enarration touch
The important theme. Clear argument may rise
In short succession : yet the historic draught
Shall occupy attention's steadfast soul.

The weak apostle's unbelief ; his doubts
Quick into faith resolving ; the despair
Of tortur'd Judas, who in bitter shame,
In the black writhing of remorse exclaim'd,
“ I have betray'd the blood of innocence ”—
These are the potent instances sublime
That best become thy subject and thyself ;
The bold examples that command belief ;
The judgement and the passions at a stroke
Convince and move ; repel with wondrous force
The sceptic's rebel reason ; and inform
The meanest intellect with instant light.

And should repentance be thy plainer theme,
Discourse not in too general terms that fix
But feebly on the memory. Show its powers
As instanc'd by the roving son, who fled
With sorrow, from the harlot's treacherous
smile,

To his glad father's bosom. If thy speech
The stronger passions shall address, behold
The everlasting Gospel brings to view,
Amid the horrors of the spreading gloom
Miraculous, a dying Saviour nail'd
Upon the cross, while in the midst is rent
The temple's veil ; and the pale vaults resign
Their dead ! Behold, the Gospel blazons forth
The dissolution of a world in flames ;
Pictures the bloody sun ; the rushing spheres,
The elements that melt with fervent heat ;
Portrays the throne of judgement, and the crowds
That meet their doom eternal—some ingulph'd
In fiery depths sulphureous ; others high
Among the saints, and crown'd with starry light.

These be thy topics—thy sententious phrase,
With each variety of figures fraught,
That heighten the pathetic ; while exclaim
The affections in apostrophes ; suspend
Attention by the well-tim'd pause ; contrast
The bold-drawn imagery ; or break away,
In all the abruptness of transition, wild.

Thus, whilst thy pulpit-oratory lives
In nature, Scripture echoes to its strain ;
Whether the cheerful or serene shall flow,
Or the devout in feeling beauty breath'd,
The sorrowful, the joyous, the sublime.

And lo ! the oration modell'd by the rules
Of beautiful arrangement, shall despise
The studied air—the mechanism that marks
A chain of subdivision. Every part
Shall coalesce with ease ; nor passion wait
Invariably, the peroration's call.

Such is the manner only, that becomes
The pulpit. And it strikes with double force,
While dignified demeanor, and a sense
Of duty in the unerring conduct shown,
And fatherly affection never damp'd
By low pursuits of lucre, o'er thee spread

The sunshine of sincerity. Can they,
Whose inconsistent lives not rarely seem
A very contrast to the truths they preach,
Reform the general morals?—When the light,
The volatile, the modish churchman mounts
The hallow'd rostrum with an airy step
That rivals ev'n a Vestris' ease, and casts
His careless glances on the pews below,
What are his bosom-feelings? Sure, one pause,
One little pause the vanities resign
To serious thought; as to his distant home
Retiring from Augusta, he yet deigns
To visit, for a while, his vagrant charge.
Alas! he scarcely knows (nor strives to know)

His blunt unfashion'd people; but to all
Bowling with graceful condescension, pays
An undistinguishing regard; then flies
(Delighted that his tedious task is o'er)
Back to the scenes, while, hailing his approach,
Soft pleasure strews the rosy couch, and clasps,
Familiar, the fond vot'ry to her arms!

* * * * *

Here, pupil, might we rest—the genuine vein
Of pulpit eloquence already trac'd—
But let us mark occasions that may ask
More argument or elegance than suits
The multitude; and, touching on the modes
That in discriminated features show
Thy art, propose the models which may claim
Thy just regard.—A learned audience loves,
As Granta's, or a Rhedycina's sons,
Ev'n the polemic question. Not but there
The champions of the theologic war
Misplace their oratory. For, behold,
Those hearers that await the preacher's nod
In academic bowers, are, chief, the young,
With fancy gay and vigorous. Doth the dry,
The strict methodic dissertation suit
Their airy spirits?—Rather note the sting
Of secret vice, exhort to study, point
The prize of honor, and distinctly draw
Virtue's fair outline.

* * * * *

O'er thy reasoning throw
The robe of rhetorick. Not that ornament
Should, here, invest thy topics with a glare
Of superficial richness. Rather verge
To Sherlock's plain compactness, that admits
No decorating figures, than o'erload
Thy lessons with the metaphor's crude mass.

These, on a gen'ral survey, are the modes
Of pulpit-oratory, which agree
With no unletter'd audience. But in these (Where judgement or the lively fancy reigns Predominant o'er passion) genius bids
The different mannerists attract the eye
Of fame. Hence, by an easy process, slides
The species into country-fanes—transcrib'd

By mimic ignorance. What though Horne may clothe
His thoughts in beauteous metaphor; he knows
To discipline his fancy—to command
The heart; and by familiar accents move
The Christian soul! Say, what though Porteus strike

By copious sentiment, condens'd and strong;
Or graceful Hurd may reason in a style
Of elegant deduction, as a voice
More musical than Atterbury's, holds
The still attention; pathos best accords
With common hearers; nor is misapplied
E'en to the more refin'd. The statelier pomp
Of high cathedral dignities may frown
Upon the impassion'd period; and the pride
Of science too pedantic may propose
The closer method of the deep discourse,
As the sole imitable mode: yet say,
Doth not the fane effuse its holy gloom
O'er various minds, the polish'd or unform'd
In each gradation—o'er the gentle breast
Whence unaffected sentiment aspires;
Whence pure devotion's flame? Is there a heart

Feels not the address from Blair; though strict, not dull;

Impassion'd, and yet temperate; though refin'd,
Yet rarely florid? Who but owns the charm
As Stonehouse gives to sentiment new soul,
From every fine inflexion of a voice Distinct and sweet? 'Tis thus thy art hath drawn

Persuasion's genuine excellence and force
From nature and the Scriptures! These are thine,

These are already open to thy view
In fair display! I see, auspicious youth,
Thy bosom kindle, as thy sacred guides
Pass in array before thee! I behold
Thine ardors mark a Saviour on the mount
That mocks the rigor of the Stoic porch,
And his pathetic look on Peter cast,
And his heart-breathing accents in the path
To Emmaus, at dim eve! I see thee hail
The martyr's angel-features, all illum'd
By inspiration's lustre, while he bids
Sublimest truths inform the unhallow'd ear!—

I see thee turn to Lystra's prostrate tribes
That fell astonish'd at the feet of Paul,
And, as the god of eloquence, ador'd
The saint! I see thee trace him, at the throne

Of the half-Christian king; or midst the shrines

Of Athens! And thine own exalted mind
I see with transport glowing, as the powers
Of Blair and Stonehouse meet—combin'd in thee!

Thus, then, (thy glorious mission duly view'd
As of eternal moment) be it thine,
Whilst other speakers, less rever'd, pursue
Their own appropriate task, as erst my verse

Instructed ; whether at the learned bar
 Strict reasoning gain conviction ; or the dome
 Of senates echo to the embellish'd phrase
 (Man's temporal welfare their inferior end) ;
 Be thine the nobler office to persuade

By exhortation, fix in every soul
 Its fervor for the immortal scene, and point
 The path—though here thou walk, yet lent to earth,
 Thy heart establish'd in the bliss of heaven !

§ 1. The Traveller; or, a Prospect of Society.
Inscribed to the Rev. Mr. H. Goldsmith.
By Dr. Goldsmith.

REMOTE, unfriended, melancholy, slow,
Or by the lazy Scheld, or wand'ring Po;
Or onward, where the rude Carinthian boor
Against the houseless stranger shuts the door:
Or where Campania's plain forsaken lies,
A weary waste expanding to the skies:
Where'er I roam, whatever realms to see,
My heart, untravell'd, fondly turns to thee;
Still to my brother turns, with ceaseless pain,
And drags, at each remove, a length'ning chain.

Eternal blessings crown my earliest friend,
And round his dwelling guardian saints attend:
Bless'd be that spot where cheerful guests retire,
To pause from toil, and trim their evening fire;
Bless'd that abode where want and pain repair,
And ev'ry stranger finds a ready chair:
Bless'd be those feasts, with simple plenty
crown'd,

Where all the ruddy family around
Laugh at the jest or pranks that never fail,
Or sigh with pity at some mournful tale;
Or press the bashful stranger to his food,
And learn the luxury of doing good!

But me, not destin'd such delights to share,
My prime of life in wand'ring spent, and care;
Impell'd, with steps unceasing to pursue
Some fleeting good that mocks me with the view;

That, like the circle bounding earth and skies,
Allures from far, yet as I follow flies;
My fortune leads to traverse realms alone,
And find no spot of all the world my own.

E'en now, where Alpine solitudes ascend,
I sit me down a pensive hour to spend;

And plac'd on high, above the storm's career,
Look downward where an hundred realms
appear;

Lakes, forests, cities, plains extending wide,
The pomp of kings, the shepherd's humbler
pride. [bine,

When thus Creation's charms around com-
Amidst the store should thankless pride repine?
Say, should the philosophic mind disdain
That good which makes each humbler bosom vain?

Let school-taught pride dissemble all it can,
These little things are great to little man;
And wiser he, whose sympathetic mind
Exults in all the good of all mankind.

Ye glitt'ring towns, with wealth and splendor
crown'd; [round;

Ye fields, where summer spreads profusion
Ye lakes, whose vessels catch the busy gale;
Ye bending swains, that dress the flow'ry vale;
For me your tributary stores combine:

Creation's heir, the world, the world is mine!

As some lone miser visiting his store,
Bends at his treasure, counts, recounts it o'er;
Hoards after hoards his rising raptures fill,
Yet still he sighs, for hoards are wanting still:
Thus to my breast alternate passions rise,
Pleas'd with each good that Heaven to man sup-
Yet oft a sigh prevails, and sorrows fall, [plies:
To see the hoard of human bliss so small;

And oft I wish, amidst the scene, to find
Some spot to real happiness consign'd,
Where my worn soul, each wand'ring hope at
May gather bliss to see my fellows blest. [rest,

But where to find that happiest spot below,
Who can direct, when all pretend to know?
The shudd'ring tenant of the frigid zone
Boldly proclaims that happiest spot his own;

Extols the treasures of his stormy seas,
And his long nights of revelry and ease :
The naked negro, panting at the line,
Boasts of his golden sands and palmy wine ;
Basks in the glare, or stems the tepid wave,
And thanks his gods for all the good they gave.
Such is the patriot's boast, where'er we roam :
His first, best country, ever is at home.
And yet, perhaps, if countries we compare,
And estimate the blessings which they share,
Though patriots flatter, still shall wisdom find
An equal portion dealt to all mankind ;
As different good, by art or nature given
To different nations, makes their blessings even.

Nature, a mother kind alike to all,
Still grants her bliss at labor's earnest call ;
With food as well the peasant is supplied
On Idra's cliffs as Arno's shelvy side ;
And though the rocky-crested summits frown,
These rocks by custom turn to beds of down.
From art more various are the blessings sent ;
Wealth, commerce, honor, liberty, content.
Yet these each other's pow'r so strong contest,
That either seems destructive of the rest. [fails ;
Where wealth and freedom reign, contentment
And honor sinks where commerce long prevails.
Hence ev'ry state, to one lov'd blessing prone,
Conforms and models life to that alone.
Each to the fav'rite happiness attends,
And spurns the plan that aims at other ends ;
Till, carried to excess in each domain,
This fav'rite good begets peculiar pain.

But let us try these truths with closer eyes,
And trace them through the prospect as it lies :
Here for a while, my proper cares resign'd,
Here let me sit, in sorrow for mankind ;
Like yon neglected shrub at random cast,
That shades the steep, and sighs at ev'ry blast.

Far to the right, where Apennine ascends,
Bright as the summer, Italy extends ;
Its uplands sloping deck the mountain side,
Woods over woods in gay theatric pride ;
While oft some temple's mould'ring tops between

With venerable grandeur mark the scene.

Could Nature's bounty satisfy the breast,
The sons of Italy were surely blest.
Whatever fruits in different climes are found,
That proudly rise, or humbly court the ground ;
Whatever blooms in torrid tracts appear,
Whose bright succession decks the varied year ;
Whatever sweets salute the northern sky
With vernal lives, that blossom but to die :—
These, here disporting, own the kindred soil,
Nor ask luxuriance from the planter's toil ;
While sea-born gales their gelid wings expand,
To winnow fragrance round the smiling land.

But small the bliss that sense alone bestows,
And sensual bliss is all the nation knows.
In florid beauty groves and fields appear,
Man seems the only growth that dwindles here.
Contrasted faults through all his manners reign :
Though poor, luxurious ; though submissive,
vain ;

Though grave, yet trifling ; zealous, yet untrue ;
And e'en in penance planning sins anew.
All evils here contaminate the mind,
That opulence departed leaves behind ;
For wealth was theirs ; not far remov'd the date,
When commerce proudly flourish'd through the state ;

At her command the palace learn'd to rise,
Again the long-fall'n column sought the skies :
The canvas glow'd beyond e'en Nature warm :
The pregnant quarry teem'd with human form ;
Till, more unsteady than the southern gale,
Commerce on other shores display'd her sail ;
While nought remain'd of all that riches gave,
But towns unmann'd, and lords without a slave :
And late the nation found, with fruitless skill,
Its former strength was but plethoric ill.

Yet still the loss of wealth is here supplied
By arts, the splendid wrecks of former pride ;
From these the feeble heart and long-fall'n mind
An easy compensation seem to find.

Here may be seen, in bloodless pomp array'd,
The pasteboard triumph, and the cavalcade ;
Processions form'd for piety and love,
A mistress or a saint in ev'ry grove.

By sports like these are all their cares beguil'd,
The sports of children satisfy the child :
Each nobler aim, repress'd by long control,
Now sinks at last, or feebly mans the soul ;
While low delights, succeeding fast behind,
In happier meanness occupy the mind :
As in those domes where Cæsars once bore sway,
Defac'd by time, and tott'ring in decay,
There in the ruin, heedless of the dead,
The shelter-seeking peasant builds his shed ;
And, wondering man could want the larger pile,
Exults, and owns his cottage with a smile.

My soul, turn from them—turn we to survey
Where rougher climes a nobler race display ;
Where the bleak Swiss their stormy mansion
tread,

And force a churlish soil for scanty bread :
No product here the barren hills afford
But man and steel, the soldier and his sword.
No vernal blooms their torpid rocks array,
But winter ling'ring chills the lap of May ;
No zephyr fondly sues the mountain's breast,
But meteors glare, and stormy glooms invest.

Yet still e'en here Content can spread a charm,
Redress the clime, and all its rage disarm.

Though poor the peasant's hut, his feast though
He sees his little lot the lot of all ; [small,
Sees no contiguous palace rear its head,
To shame the meanness of his humble shed ;
No costly lord the sumptuous banquet deal,
To make him loathe his vegetable meal ;
But calm, and bred in ignorance and toil,
Each wish contracting, fits him to the soil.
Cheerful at morn, he wakes from short repose,
Breathes the keen air, and carols as he goes ;
With patient angle trolls the finny deep,
Or drives his vent'rous ploughshare to the steep ;
Or seeks the den where snow-tracks mark the
And drags the struggling savage into day. [way,

At night returning, ev'ry labor sped,
He sits him down, the monarch of a shed;
Smiles by his cheerful fire, and round surveys
His children's looks, that brighten at the blaze;
While his lov'd partner, boastful of her hoard,
Displays her cleanly platter on the board:
And haply too some pilgrim, thither led,
With many a tale repays the nightly bed.

Thus ev'ry good his native wilds impart,
Imprints the patriot passion on his heart;
And e'en those hills that round his mansion rise,
Enhance the bliss his scanty fund supplies.
Dear is that shed to which his soul conforms,
And dear that hill which lifts him to the storms;
And as a child, when scaring sounds molest,
Clings close and closer to the mother's breast;
So the loud torrent, and the whirlwind's roar,
But bind him to his native mountains more.

Such are the charms to barren states assign'd:
Their wants but few, their wishes all confin'd.
Yet let them only share the praises due;
If few their wants, their pleasures are but few:
For ev'ry want that stimulates the breast,
Becomes a source of pleasure when redrest.

Whence from such lands each pleasing science
flies,
That first excites desire, and then supplies;
Unknown to them, when sensual pleasures cloy,
To fill the languid pause with finer joy;
Unknown those pow'rs that raise the soul to
flame,

Catch ev'ry nerve, and vibrate through the frame.
Their level life is but a mould'ring fire,
Unquench'd by want, unfann'd by strong desire;
Unfit for raptures; or, if raptures cheer
On some high festival of once a-year,
In wild excess the vulgar breast takes fire,
Till buried in debauch the bliss expire.

But not their joys alone thus coarsely flow;
Their morals, like their pleasures, are but low:
For, as refinement stops, from sire to son,
Unalter'd, unimprov'd, the manners run;
And love's and friendship's finely pointed dart
Falls blunted from each indurated heart.

Some sterner virtues o'er the mountain's breast
May sit like falcons cowering on the nest;
But all the gentler morals, such as play
Through life's more cultur'd walks, and charm
the way;

These, far dispers'd, on timorous pinions fly,
To sport and flutter in a kinder sky.

To kinder skies, where gentler manners reign,
I turn,—and France displays her bright domain.
Gay sprightly land of mirth and social ease,
Pleas'd with thyself whom all the world can
please,

How often have I led thy sportive choir,
With tuneless pipe, beside the murm'ring Loire!
Where shading elms along the margin grew,
And freshen'd from the wave, the zephyr flew;
And haply, though my harsh touch falt'ring
still,

But mock'd all tune, and marr'd the dancer's
skill,

Yet would the village praise my wondrous pow'r,
And dance, forgetful of the noontide hour!
Alike all ages: dames of ancient days [maze;
Have led their children through the mirthful
And the gay grandsire, skill'd in gestic lore,
Has frisk'd beneath the burden of threescore.

So blest a life these thoughtless realms display,
Thus idly busy rolls their world away:
Theirs are those arts that mind to mind endear,
For honor forms the social temper here.
Honor, that praise which real merit gains,
Or e'en imaginary worth obtains,
Here passes current; paid from hand to hand,
It shifts in splendid traffic round the land:
From courts to camps, to cottages, it strays,
And all are taught an avarice of praise:
They please, are pleas'd; they give to get esteem;
Till, seeming blest, they grow to what they seem.

But while this softer art their bliss supplies,
It gives their follies also room to rise;
For praise too dearly lov'd, or warmly sought,
Enfeebles all internal strength of thought;
And the weak soul, within itself unblest,
Leans for all pleasure on another's breast:
Hence ostentation here, with tawdry art,
Pants for the vulgar praise which fools impart:
Here vanity assumes her pert grimace,
And trims her robes of frize with copper-lace;
Here beggar pride defrauds her daily cheer,
To boast one splendid banquet once a-year;
The mind still turns where shifting fashion draws,

Nor weighs the solid worth of self-applause.

To men of other minds my fancy flies,
Embosom'd in the deep where Holland lies.
Methinks her patient sons before me stand,
Where the broad ocean leans against the land;
And, sedulous to stop the coming tide,
Lift the tall rampire's artificial pride.
Onward methinks, and diligently slow,
The firm connected bulwark seems to grow;
Spreads its long arms amidst the wat'ry roar,
Scoops out an empire, and usurps the shore;
While the pent ocean, rising o'er the pile,
Sees an amphibious world beneath him smile;
The slow canal, the yellow-blossom'd vale,
The willow-tufted bank, the gliding sail,
The crowded mart, the cultivated plain,
A new creation rescued from his reign.

Thus, while around the wave-subjected soil
Impels the native to repeated toil,
Industrious habits in each bosom reign,
And industry begets a love of gain.
Hence all the good from opulence that springs,
With all those ills superfluous treasure brings,
Are here display'd. Their much-lov'd wealth imparts

Convenience, plenty, elegance, and arts:
But view them closer, craft and fraud appear;
E'en liberty itself is barter'd here!
At gold's superior charms all freedom flies;
The needy sell it, and the rich man buys;
A land of tyrants, and a den of slaves,
Here wretches seek dishonorable graves.

And calmly bent, to servitude conform,
Dull as their lakes that slumber in the storm.

Heavens! how unlike their Belgic sires of old!
Rough, poor, content, ungovernably bold;
War in each breast, and freedom on each brow;
How much unlike the sons of Britain now!

Fir'd at the sound, my Genius spreads her wing,

And flies where Britain courts the western spring;
Where lawns extend that scorn Arcadian pride;
And brighter streams than fam'd Hydaspes glide:
There all around the gentlest breezes stray,
There gentle music melts on ev'ry spray;
Creation's mildest charms are there combin'd;
Extremes are only in the master's mind!

Stern o'er each bosom Reason holds her state,
With daring aims irregularly great:
Pride in their port, defiance in their eye,
I see the lords of human kind pass by;
Intent on high designs, a thoughtful band,
By forms unfashion'd, fresh from nature's hand;
Fierce in their native hardness of soul,
True to imagin'd right above control:

While e'en the peasant boasts these rights to scan,
And learns to venerate himself as man. [here,

Thine, Freedom, thine the blessings pictur'd
Thine are those charms, that dazzle and endear;
Too blest indeed were such without alloy,
But foster'd e'en by Freedom, ills annoy.
That independence Britons prize too high,
Keeps man from man, and breaks the social tie;
The self-dependent lordlings stand alone;
All claims that bind and sweeten life unknown;
Here, by the bonds of Nature feebly held,
Minds combat minds, repelling and repell'd.
Ferments arise, imprison'd factions roar,
Repress'd ambition struggles round her shore;
Till, over-wrought, the general system feels
Its motions stop, or phrensy fire the wheels.

Nor this the worst. As nature's ties decay,
As duty, love, and honor fail to sway,
Fictitious bonds, the bonds of wealth and law,
Still gather strength, and force unwilling awe.
Hence all obedience bows to these alone,
And talents sink, and merit weeps unknown;
Till time may come, when, stripp'd of all her
charms,

The land of scholars and the nurse of arms,
Where noble stems transmit the patriot flame,
Where kings have toil'd, and poets wrote for
One sink of level avarice shall lie, [fame,
And scholars, soldiers, kings, unhonor'd die.

Yet think not thus, when Freedom's ills I state,
I mean to flatter kings, or court the great:
Ye pow'rs of truth that bid my soul aspire,
Far from my bosom drive the low desire!
And thou, fair Freedom, taught alike to feel
The rabble's rage, and tyrant's angry steel;
Thou transitory flow'r, alike undone
By proud Contempt, or Favor's fost'ring sun,
Still may thy blooms the changeful clime endure,
I only would repress them to secure:

For just experience tells, in ev'ry soil, [toil;
That those who think must govern those who

And all that Freedom's highest aims can reach,
Is but to lay proportion'd loads on each.

Hence, should one order disproportion'd grow,
Its double weight must ruin all below.

O, then, how blind to all that truth requires,
Who think it freedom when a part aspires.

Calm is my soul, nor apt to rise in arms,
Except when fast-approaching danger warms:
But when contending chiefs blockade the throne,
Contracting regal pow'r to stretch their own;
When I behold a factious band agree
To call it freedom when themselves are free;
Each wanton judge new penal statutes draw,
Laws grind the poor, and rich men rule the law;
The wealth of climes, where savage nations
roam,

Pillag'd from slaves, to purchase slaves at home;
Fear, pity, justice, indignation start,
Tear off reserve, and bare my swelling heart;
Till, half a patriot, half a coward grown,
I fly from petty tyrants to the throne.

Yes, brother, curse with me that baleful hour;
When first ambition struck at regal pow'r,
And thus, polluting honor in its source,
Gave wealth to sway the mind with double force.
Have we not seen, round Britain's peopled shore,
Her useful sons exchang'd for useless ore;
Seen all her triumphs but destruction haste,
Like flaring tapers, bright'ning as they waste;
Seen Opulence, her grandeur to maintain,
Lead stern Depopulation in her train,
And over fields, where scatter'd hamlets rose,
In barren solitary pomp repose?

Have we not seen at Pleasure's lordly call,
The smiling long-frequented village fall?
Beheld the duteous son, the sire decay'd,
The modest matron, and the blushing maid,
Forc'd from their homes, a melancholy train,
To traverse climes beyond the western main:
Where wild Oswego spreads her swamps around,
And Niagara stuns with thund'ring sound?
E'en now, perhaps, as there some pilgrim strays
Through tangled forests, and through dangerous
ways;

Where beasts with man divided empire claim,
And the brown Indian marks with murd'rous
There, while above the giddy tempest flies, [aim;
And all around distressful yells arise,
The pensive exile, bending with his woe,
To stop too fearful, and too faint to go,
Casts a long look where England's glories shine,
And bids his bosom sympathize with mine.

Vain, very vain, my weary search to find
That bliss which only centres in the mind?
Why have I stray'd from pleasure and repose,
To seek a good each government bestows?
In ev'ry government, though terrors reign,
Though tyrant kings or tyrant laws restrain,
How small, of all that human hearts endure,
That part which laws or kings can cause or cure!
Still to ourselves in ev'ry place consign'd,
Our own felicity we make or find:
With secret course, which no loud storms annoy,
Glides the smooth current of domestic joy.

The lifted ax, the agonizing wheel,
 Luke's iron crown, and Damiens' bed of steel,
 To men remote from pow'r but rarely known,
 Leave reason, faith, and conscience, all our own.

§ 2. The Deserted Village. Goldsmith.

SWEET Auburn! loveliest village of the plain,
 Where health and plenty cheer'd the laboring swain;

Where smiling spring its earliest visit paid,
 And parting summer's ling'ring blooms delay'd!
 Dear lovely bow'rs of innocence and ease,
 Seats of my youth when ev'ry sport could please,
 How often have I loiter'd o'er thy green,
 Where humble happiness endear'd each scene!
 How often have I paus'd on ev'ry charm,
 The shelter'd cot, the cultivated farm,
 The never-failing brook, the busy mill, [hill,
 The decent church that topp'd the neighb'ring
 The hawthorn bush, with seats beneath the
 shade,

For talking age and whisp'ring lovers made!
 How often have I blest the coming day,
 When toil remitting lent its turn to play;
 And all the village train, from labor free,
 Led up their sports beneath the spreading tree;
 While many a pastime circled in the shade,
 The young contending as the old survey'd:
 And many a gambol frolick'd o'er the ground,
 And sleights of art and feats of strength went round.
 And still, as each repeated pleasure tir'd,
 Succeeding sports the mirthful band inspir'd;
 The dancing pair that simply sought renown,
 By holding out to tire each other down;
 The swain, mistrustless of his smutt'd face,
 While secret laughter titter'd round the place;
 The bashful virgin's side-long looks of love,
 The matron's glance that would those looks reprove— [these,

These were thy charms, sweet village! sports like
 With sweet succession taught e'en toil to please;
 These round thy bow'rs their cheerful influence shed, [are fled.

These were thy charms—but all these charms
 Sweet smiling village, loveliest of the lawn,
 Thy sports are fled, and all thy charms withdrawn;

Amidst thy bow'rs the tyrant's hand is seen,
 And desolation saddens all thy green:
 One only master grasps the whole domain,
 And half a tillage tints thy smiling plain;
 No more thy glassy brook reflects the day,
 But, chok'd with sedges, works its weedy way;
 Along thy glades, a solitary guest,
 The hollow-sounding bittern guards its nest;
 Amidst thy desert walks the lapwing flies,
 And tires their echoes with unvaried cries.
 Sunk are thy bow'rs in shapeless ruin all,
 And the long grass o'ertops the mould'ring wall;
 And trembling, shrinking from the spoiler's
 hand,

Far, far away thy children leave the land.

Ill fares the land, to hast'ning ills a prey,
 Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.

Princes and lords may flourish or may fade;
 A breath can make them, as a breath has made:
 But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
 When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

A time there was, ere England's griefs began,
 When every rood of ground maintain'd its man;
 For him light labor spread her wholesome store;
 Just gave what life requir'd, but gave no more:
 His best companions, innocence and health;
 And his best riches, ignorance of wealth.

But times are alter'd: trade's unfeeling train
 Usurp the land, and dispossess the swain;
 Along the lawn, where scatter'd hamlets rose,
 Unwieldy wealth and cumbrous pomp repose;
 And ev'ry want to luxury allied,
 And ev'ry pang that folly pays to pride.
 Those gentle hours that plenty bade to bloom,
 Those calm desires that ask'd but little room,
 Those healthful sports that grac'd the peaceful
 scene,

Liv'd in each look, and brighten'd all the green:
 These, far departing, seek a kinder shore,
 And rural mirth and manners are no more.

Sweet Auburn! parent of the blissful hour,
 Thy glades forlorn confess'd the tyrant's pow'r.
 Here, as I take my solitary rounds,
 Amidst thy tangling walks, and ruin'd grounds;
 And, many a year elaps'd, return to view [grew;
 Where once the cottage stood, the hawthorn
 Remembrance wakes with all her busy train,
 Swells at my breast, and turns the past to pain.

In all my wand'rings round this world of care,
 In all my grief, (and God has given my share,)
 I still had hopes, my latest hours to crown,
 Amidst these humble bow'rs to lay me down;
 To husband out life's taper at the close,
 And keep the flame from wasting by repose:
 I still had hopes, for pride attends us still,
 Amidst the swains to show my book-learn'd skill;
 Around my fire, an evening group to draw,
 And tell of all I felt, and all I saw:
 And, as a hare, whom hounds and horns pursue,
 Pants to the place from whence at first he flew,
 I still had hopes, my long vexations past,
 Here to return, and die at home at last.

O blest retirement, friend to life's decline,
 Retreat from care, that never must be mine!
 How blest is he, who crowns, in shades like these,
 A youth of labor with an age of ease;
 Who quits a world where strong temptations try,
 And since 'tis hard to combat, learns to fly!
 For him no wretches, born to work and weep,
 Explore the mine, or tempt the dang'rous deep;
 No surly porter stands in guilty state,
 To spurn imploring famine from the gate;
 But on he moves to meet his latter end,
 Angels around befriending virtue's friend;
 Sinks to the grave with unperceiv'd decay,
 While resignation gently slopes the way;
 And, all his prospects bright'ning to the last,
 His heaven commences ere the world be past!

Sweet was the sound, when oft at evening's close,
 Up yonder hill the village murmur rose;

There as I pass'd, with careless steps and slow,
The mingling notes came soften'd from below;
The swain responsive as the milk-maid sung,
The sober herd that low'd to meet their young,
The noisy geese that gabbled o'er the pool,
The playful children just let loose from school,
The watch-dog's voice that bay'd the whisp'ring
wind,

And the loud laugh that spoke the vacant mind;
These all in sweet confusion sought the shade,
And fill'd each pause the nightingale had made.
But now the sounds of population fail,
No cheerful murmurs fluctuate in the gale,
No busy steps the grass-grown footway tread,
But all the bloomy flush of life is fled:

All but yon widow'd, solitary thing,
That feebly bends beside the plashy spring;
She, wretched matron! forc'd in age, for bread,
To strip the brook with mantling cresses
spread,

To pick her wint'ry faggot from the thorn,
To seek her nightly shed, and weep till morn;
She only left, of all the harmless train,
The sad historian of the pensive plain.

Near yonder copse, where once the garden
smil'd, [wild,
And still where many a garden flow'r grows
There, where a few torn shrubs the place disclose,

The village preacher's modest mansion rose.
A man he was to all the country dear,
And passing rich with forty pounds a-year;
Remote from towns he ran his godly race,
Nor e'er had chang'd, nor wish'd to change, his
place;

Unskilful he to fawn, or seek for pow'r,
By doctrines fashion'd to the varying hour;
Far other aims his heart had learn'd to prize,
More bent to raise the wretched than to rise.
His house was known to all the vagrant train;
He chid their wand'rings, but reliev'd their pain.

The long-remember'd beggar was his guest,
Whose beard descending swept his aged breast;
The ruin'd spendthrift, now no longer proud,
Claim'd kindred there, and had his claims
allow'd:

The broken soldier, kindly bade to stay,
Sat by his fire, and talk'd the night away;
Wept o'er his wounds, or, tales of sorrow done,
Shoulder'd his crutch, and show'd how fields
were won. [glow,

Pleas'd with his guests, the good man learn'd to
And quite forgot their vices in their woe;
Careless their merits or their faults to scan,
His pity gave ere charity began.

Thus to relieve the wretched was his pride,
And e'en his failings lean'd to Virtue's side;
But in his duty prompt at ev'ry call,
He watch'd and wept, he pray'd and felt for all.
And, as a bird each fond endearment tries,
To tempt her new-fledg'd offspring to the skies,
He tried each art, reprov'd each dull delay,
Allur'd to brighter worlds, and led the way.

Beside the bed, where parting life was laid,
And sorrow, guilt, and pain, by turns dismay'd,
The rev'rend champion stood: At his control
Despair and anguish fled the struggling soul;
Comfort came down the trembling wretch to raise,

And his last falt'ring accents whisper'd praise.
At church, with meek and unaffected grace,
His looks adorn'd the venerable place;
Truth from his lips prevail'd with double sway,
And fools, who came to scoff, remain'd to pray.
The service past, around the pious man,
With ready zeal each honest rustic ran;
E'en children follow'd with endearing wile,
And pluck'd his gown to share the good man's smile;

His ready smile a parent's warmth express'd,
Their welfare pleas'd him, and their care
distress'd; [given,
To them his heart, his love, his griefs were
But all his serious thoughts had rest in heaven.
As some tall cliff that lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,

Though round its breast the rolling clouds are Eternal sunshine settles on its head. [spread,

Beside yon straggling fence that skirts the
With blossom'd furze unprofitably gay, [way,
There in his noisy mansion skill'd to rule,
The village master taught his little school.

A man severe he was, and stern to view;
I knew him well, and every truant knew.
Well had the boding tremblers learn'd to trace
The day's disasters in his morning face:
Full well they laugh'd with counterfeited glee
At all his jokes, for many a joke had he;
Full well the busy whisper circling round
Convey'd the dismal tidings when he frown'd.
Yet he was kind; or, if severe in aught,
The love he bore to learning was in fault;
The village all declar'd how much he knew;
'Twas certain he could write and cipher too;
Lands he could measure, terms and tides
presage,

And ev'n the story ran that he could gauge.
In arguing too the parson own'd his skill,
For, e'en though vanquish'd, he could argue
still;

While words of learned length, and thund'ring
sound,

Amaz'd the gazing rustics rang'd around;
And still they gaz'd, and still the wonder grew,
That one small head could carry all he knew.
But past is all his fame, the very spot
Where many a time he triumph'd is forgot.

Near yonder thorn that lifts its head on high,
Where once the sign-post caught the passing
eye,

Low lies that house where nut-brown draughts
inspir'd,

Where grey-beard mirth and smiling toil retir'd,
Where village statesmen talk'd with looks profound, [round.

And news much older than their ale went

Imagination fondly stoops to trace
The parlour splendors of that festive place;
The white-wash'd wall, the nicely sanded floor,
The varnish'd clock that click'd behind the door;

The chest contriv'd a double debt to pay,
A bed by night, a chest of draw'rs by day;
The pictures plac'd for ornament and use,
The twelve good rules, the royal game of goose;
The hearth, except when winter chill'd the day,
With aspen boughs, and flow'rs, and fennel gay.
While broken tea-cups, wisely kept for show,
Rang'd o'er the chimney, glisten'd in a row.

Vain transitory splendor! could not all
Reprieve the tott'ring mansion from its fall?
Obscure it sinks, nor shall it more impart
An hour's importance to the poor man's heart;
Thither no more the peasant shall repair
To sweet oblivion of his daily care;
No more the farmer's news, the barber's tale,
No more the woodman's ballad shall prevail;
No more the smith his dusky brow shall clear,
Relax his pond'rous strength, and lean to hear;
The host himself no longer shall be found,
Careful to see the mantling bliss go round;
Nor the coy maid, half willing to be prest,
Shall kiss the cup to pass it to the rest.

Yes! let the rich deride, the proud disdain,
These simple blessings of the lowly train:—
To me more dear, congenial to my heart,
One native charm, than all the gloss of art:
Spontaneous joys, where nature has its play,
The soul adopts, and owns their first-born sway;
Lightly they frolic o'er the vacant mind,
Unenvied, unmolested, unconfin'd:
But the long pomp, the midnight masquerade,
With all the freaks of wanton wealth array'd,
In these, ere triflers half their wish obtain,
The toiling pleasure sickens into pain:
And, e'en while fashion's brightest arts decoy,
The heart distrusting asks, if this be joy?

Ye friends to truth, ye statesmen who survey,
The rich man's joys increase, the poor's decay,
'Tis yours to judge how wide the limits stand
Between a splendid and a happy land.
Proud swells the tide with loads of freighted ore,
And shouting folly hails them from her shore;
Hoards, e'en beyond the miser's wish, abound;
And rich men flock from all the world around:
Yet count our gains: this wealth is but a name
That leaves our useful product still the same.
Not so the loss: the man of wealth and pride
Takes up a space that many poor supplied;
Space for his lake, his park's extended bounds,
Space for his horses, equipage, and hounds;
The robe that wraps his limbs in silken sloth,
Has robb'd the neighb'ring fields of half their growth;

His scat, where solitary sports are seen,
Indignant spurns the cottage from the green;
Around the world each needful product flies,
For all the luxuries the world supplies:
While thus the land adorn'd for pleasure all,
In barren splendor feebly waits the fall.

As some fair female, unadorn'd and plain,
Secure to please while youth confirms her reign,
Slights ev'ry borrow'd charm that dress supplies,
Nor shares with art the triumph of her eyes:
But when those charms are past (for charms are frail)

When time advances, and when lovers fail,
She then shines forth, solicitous to bless,
In all the glaring impotence of dress.
Thus fares the land, by luxury betray'd,
In nature's simplest charms at first array'd;
But, verging to decline, its splendors rise,
Its vistas strike, its palaces surprise, [land,
While, scourg'd by famine from the smiling
The mournful peasant leads his humble band;
And while he sinks, without one arm to save,
The country blooms—a garden and a grave!

Where then, ah where, shall poverty reside,
To 'scape the pressure of contiguous pride?
If to some common's fenceless limits stray'd,
He drives his flock to pick the scanty blade,
Those fenceless fields the sons of wealth divide,
And e'en the bare-worn common is denied.

If to the city sped—what waits him there?
To see profusion that he must not share;
To see ten thousand baneful arts combin'd
To pamper luxury, and thin mankind;
To see each joy the sons of pleasure know
Extorted from his fellow-creature's woe.
Here, while the courtier glitters in brocade,
There the pale artist plies the sickly trade;
Here, while the proud their long-drawn pomp display,

There the black gibbet glooms beside the way.
The dome where pleasure holds her midnight reign,

Here, richly deck'd, admits the gorgeous train;
Tumultuous grandeur crowds the blazing square,
The rattling chariots clash, the torches glare.
Sure scenes like these no troubles e'er annoy!
Sure these denote one universal joy! [eyes
Are these thy serious thoughts? Ah, turn thine
Where the poor houseless shiv'ring female lies.
She, once, perhaps, in village plenty blest,
Has wept at tales of innocence distress;
Her modest looks the cottage might adorn,
Sweet as the primrose peeps beneath the thorn;
Now lost to all; her friends, her virtue fled,
Near her betrayer's door she lays her head;
And pinch'd with cold, and shrinking from the show'r,

With heavy heart deplores that luckless hour,
When idly first, ambitious of the town,
She left her wheel, and robes of country brown.

Do thine, sweet Auburn, thine, the loveliest
Do thy fair tribes participate her pain? [train,
E'en now, perhaps, by cold and hunger led,
At proud men's doors they ask a little bread!

Ah, no! to distant climes, a dreary scene,
Where half the convex world intrudes between,
Through torrid tracts with fainting steps they
Where wild Altama murmurs to their woe. [go,
Far diff'rent there from all that charm'd before,
The various terrors of that horrid shore;

Those blazing suns that dart a downward ray,
And fiercely shed intolerable day;
Those matted woods where birds forget to sing,
But silent bats in drowsy clusters cling:
Those pois'nous fields with rank luxuriance
crown'd,

Where the dark scorpion gathers death around;
Where at each step the stranger fears to wake
The rattling terrors of the vengeful snake;
Where crouching tigers wait their hapless prey,
And savage men, more murd'rous still than
they;

While oft in whirls the mad tornado flies,
Mingling the ravag'd landscape with the skies.
Far diff'rent these from ev'ry former scene,
The cooling brook, the grassy-vested green,
The breezy covert of the warbling grove,
That only shelter'd thefts of harmless love.

Good Heaven! what sorrows gloom'd that parting day,

That call'd them from their native walks away;
When the poor exiles, ev'ry pleasure past,
Hung round the bow'rs, and fondly look'd their last,

And took a long farewell, and wish'd in vain
For seats like these beyond the western main;
And shudd'ring still to face the distant deep,
Return'd and wept, and still return'd to weep!

The good old sire the first prepar'd to go
To new-found worlds, and wept for others' woe;
But for himself, in conscious virtue brave,
He only wish'd for worlds beyond the grave.
His lovely daughter, lovelier in her tears,
The fond companion of his hapless years,
Silent went next, neglectful of her charms,
And left a lover's for her father's arms.

With louder plaints the mother spoke her woes,
And bless'd the cot where every pleasure rose;
And kiss'd her thoughtless babes with many a
tear,

And clasp'd them close, in sorrow doubly dear;
Whilst her fond husband strove to lend relief
In all the silent manliness of grief.

O, luxury! thou curst by Heaven's decree,
How ill exchang'd are things like these for thee!
How do thy potions, with insidious joy,
Diffuse their pleasures only to destroy!
Kingdoms, by thee to sickly greatness grown,
Boast of a florid vigor not their own.

At ev'ry draught more large and large they grow,
A bloated mass of rank unwieldy woe;
Till sapp'd their strength, and ev'ry part un-
sound,

Down, down they sink, and spread a ruin
Even now the devastation is begun, [round.
And half the bus'ness of destruction done;
Ee'n now, methinks, as pond'ring here I stand,
I see the rural virtues leave the land.

Down where yon anch'ring vessel spreads the
That idly waiting flaps with every gale, [sail.
Downward they move, a melancholy band,
Pass from the shore, and darken all the strand.
Contented toil, and hospitable care,
And kind connubial tenderness, are there;

And piety with wishes plac'd above,
And steady loyalty, and faithful love.
And thou, sweet Poetry, thou loveliest maid,
Still first to fly where sensual joys invade;
Unfit in these degen'rate times of shame
To catch the heart, or strike for honest fame;
Dear charming nymph, neglected and decied,
My shame in crowds, my solitary pride!
Thou source of all my bliss and all my woe,
That found'st me poor at first, and keep'st me so;
Thou guide, by which the nobler arts excel;
Thou source of ev'ry virtue, fare thee well!
Farewell! and, oh! where'er thy voice be tried,
On Torno's cliffs, or Pambamarca's side;
Whether where equinoctial fervors glow,
Or winter wraps the polar world in snow;
Still let thy voice, prevailing over time,
Redress the rigors of th' inclement clime;
Aid slighted truth with thy persuasive strain,
Teach erring man to spurn the rage of gain;
Teach him that states, of native strength
possest,
Though very poor, may still be very blest;
That trade's proud empire hastes to swift decay,
As ocean sweeps the labor'd mole away;
While self-dependent pow'r can time defy,
As rocks resist the billows and the sky.

§ 3. Edwin and Angelina. A Ballad.
Goldsmith.

"TURN, gentle Hermit of the dale,
" And guide my lonely way
" To where yon taper cheers the vale
" With hospitable ray,
" For here forlorn and lost I tread,
" With fainting steps and slow;
" Where wilds, immeasurably spread,
" Seem length'ning as I go."
" Forbear, my son," the Hermit cries,
" To tempt the dang'rous gloom;
" For yonder phantom only flies
" To lure thee to thy doom.
" Here to the houseless child of want
" My door is open still;
" And, though my portion is but scant,
" I give it with good-will.
" Then turn to-night, and freely share
" Whate'er my cell bestows;
" My rushy couch and frugal fare,
" My blessing and repose.
" No flocks that range the valley free
" To slaughter I condemn;
" Taught by that power that pities me,
" I learn to pity them:
" But from the mountain's grassy side
" A guiltless feast I bring;
" A srip with herbs and fruit supplied,
" And water from the spring.
" Then, pilgrim, turn, thy cares forego;
" All earth-born cares are wrong;

"Man wants but little here below,
"Nor wants that little long."

Soft as the dew from heaven descends,
His gentle accents fell:
The modest stranger lowly bends,
And follows to the cell.

Far in a wilderness obscure
The lonely mansion lay;
A refuge to the neighb'ring poor,
And strangers led astray.

No stoves beneath its humble thatch
Requir'd a master's care;
The wicket, op'ning with a latch,
Receiv'd the harmless pair.

And now, when busy crowds retire
To take their ev'ning rest,
The Hermit trimm'd his little fire,
And cheer'd his pensive guest;

And spread his vegetable store,
And gaily press'd and smil'd;
And skill'd in legendary lore,
The ling'ring hours beguil'd.

Around in sympathetic mirth
Its tricks the kitten tries;
The cricket chirrups in the hearth,
The crackling faggot flies.

But nothing could a charm impart
To soothe the stranger's woe;
For grief was heavy at his heart,
And tears began to flow.

His rising cares the Hermit spied,
With ans'ring care oppress'd:
"And whence, unhappy youth," he cried,
"The sorrows of thy breast?"

"From better habitations spurn'd,
"Reluctant dost thou rove?
"Or grieve for friendship unreturn'd,
"Or unregarded love?"

"Alas! the joys that fortune brings
"Are trifling, and decay;
"And those who prize the paltry things
"More trifling still than they.

"And what is friendship but a name,
"A charm that lulls to sleep;
"A shade that follows wealth or fame,
"And leaves the wretch to weep?"

"And love is still an emptier sound,
"The modern fair-one's jest;
"On earth unseen, or only found
"To warm the turtle's nest.

"For shame! fond youth, thy sorrows hush,
"And spurn the sex!" he said:
But, while he spoke, a rising blush
His love-lorn guest betray'd.

Surpris'd he sees new beauties rise,
Swift mantling to the view,
Like colors o'er the morning skies,
As bright, as transient too.

The bashful look, the rising breast,
Alternate spread alarms;
The lovely stranger stands confest
A maid in all her charms.

And, "Ah! forgive a stranger rude,
"A wretch forlorn," she cried,
"Whose feet unhallow'd thus intrude
"Where Heaven and you reside!"

"But let a maid thy pity share,
"Whom love has taught to stray;
"Who seeks for rest, but finds despair
"Companion of her way.

"My father liv'd beside the Tyne,
"A wealthy lord was he;
"And all his wealth was mark'd as mine,
"He had but only me.

"To win me from his tender arms
"Unnumber'd suitors came;
"Who prais'd me for imputed charms,
"And felt, or feign'd a flame.

"Each hour a mercenary crowd
"With richest proffers strove;
"Among the rest young Edwin bow'd,
"But never talk'd of love.

"In humble, simplest habit clad,
"No wealth or power had he;
"Wisdom and worth were all he had,
"But these were all to me.

"The blossom op'ning to the day,
"The dews of heaven refin'd,
"Could nought of purity display
"To emulate his mind.

"The dew, the blossoms of the tree,
"With charms inconstant shine;
"Their charms were his, but, woe to me!
"Their constancy was mine.

"For still I tried each fickle art,
"Importunate and vain:
"And while his passion touch'd my heart,
"I triumph'd in his pain:

"Till, quite dejected with my scorn,
"He left me to my pride;
"And sought a solitude forlorn
"In secret, where he died.

"But mine the sorrow, mine the fault!
"And well my life shall pay;
"I'll seek the solitude he sought,
"And stretch me where he lay!

"And there forlorn, despairing, hid,
"I'll lay me down and die;
"Twas so for me that Edwin did,
"And so for him will I!"

"Forbid it, Heaven!" the Hermit cried,
And clasp'd her to his breast:
The wond'ring fair-one turn'd to chide—
"Twas Edwin's self that press'd.

"Turn, Angelina, ever dear,
"My charmer, turn to see

“Thy own, thy long-lost Edwin here,
 “Restor’d to love and thee!
 “Thus let me hold thee to my heart,
 “And ev’ry care resign:
 “And shall we never, never part,
 “My life—my all that’s mine?
 “No, never from this hour to part;
 “We’ll live and love so true,
 “The sigh that rends thy constant heart
 “Shall break thy Edwin’s too!”

§ 4. A Pastoral. In Four Parts. Pope.

To Sir William Trumbal.

PASTORAL I. SPRING.

FIRST in these fields I try the sylvan strains,
 Nor blush to sport on Windsor’s blissful plains:
 Fair Thames, flow gently from thy sacred
 spring,

While on thy banks Sicilian Muses sing;
 Let vernal airs through trembling osiers play,
 And Albion’s cliffs resound the rural lay.

You that, too wise for pride, too good for
 Enjoy the glory to be great no more, [pow’r,
 And, carrying with you all the world can boast,
 To all the world illustriously are lost!

O let my Muse her slender reed inspire,
 Till in your native shades you tune the lyre:
 So when the nightingale to rest removes,
 The thrush may chant to the forsaken groves;
 But, charm’d to silence, listens while she sings,
 And all th’ ærial audience clap their wings.

Soon as the flocks shook off the nightly dews,
 Two Swains, whom love kept wakeful, and the Muse,

Pour’d o’er the whitening vale their fleecy care,
 Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair:
 The dawn now blushing on the mountain’s side,
 Thus Daphnis spoke, and Strephon thus replied:

DAPHNIS.

Hear how the birds, on every bloomy spray,
 With joyous music wake the dawning day!
 Why sit we mute, when early linnets sing,
 When warbling Philomel salutes the spring?
 Why sit we sad when Phosphor shines so clear,
 And lavish Nature paints the purple year?

STREPHON.

Sing then, and Damon shall attend the-strain,
 While yon slow oxen turn the furrow’d plain.
 Here the bright crocus and blue violet glow;
 Here western winds on breathing roses blow.
 I’ll stake yon lamb that near the fountain plays,
 And from the brink his dancing shade surveys.

DAPHNIS.

And I this bowl, where wanton ivy twines,
 And swelling clusters bend the curling vines:
 Four figures rising from the work appear,
 The various seasons of the rolling year;
 And what is that, which binds the radiant sky,
 Where twelve fair signs in beauteous order lie?

DAMON.

Then sing by turns, by turns the Muses sing,
 Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies spring,
 Now leaves the trees, and flow’rs adorn the
 ground;

Begin, the vales shall ev’ry note rebound.

STREPHON.

Inspire me, Phœbus, in my Delia’s praise,
 With Waller’s strains, or Granville’s moving lays!

A milk-white bull shall at your altars stand,
 That threatens a fight, and spurns the rising sand.

DAPHNIS.

O Love! for Sylvia let me gain the prize,
 And make my tongue victorious as her eyes:
 No lambs or sheep for victims I’ll impart;
 Thy victim, Love, shall be the shepherd’s heart.

STREPHON.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain;
 Then hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
 But feigns a laugh, to see me search around,
 And by that laugh the willing fair is found.

DAPHNIS.

The sprightly Sylvia trips along the green;
 She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen;
 While a kind glance at her pursuer flies—
 How much at variance are her feet and eyes!

STREPHON.

O’er golden sands let rich Pactolus flow,
 And trees weep amber on the banks of Po;
 Blest Thames’s shores the brightest beauties
 yield;
 Feed here, my lambs, I’ll seek no distant field.

DAPHNIS.

Celestial Venus haunts Idalia’s groves;
 Diana Cynthus, Ceres Hybla loves;
 If Windsor shades delight the matchless maid,
 Cynthus and Hybla yield to Windsor shade.

STREPHON.

All nature mourns, the skies relent in show’rs,
 Hush’d are the birds, and clos’d the drooping
 flow’rs;
 If Delia smile, the flow’rs begin to spring,
 The skies to brighten, and the birds to sing.

DAPHNIS.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair,
 The sun’s mild lustre warms the vital air;
 If Sylvia smile, new glories gild the shore,
 And vanquish’d nature seems to charm no more

STREPHON.

In spring the fields, in autumn hills I love,
 At morn the plains, at noon the shady grove,
 But Delia always; absent from her sight,
 Nor plains at morn, nor groves at noon delight.

DAPHNIS.

Sylvia’s like autumn ripe, yet mild as May,
 More bright than noon, yet fresh as early day;
 E’en spring displeases, when she shines not here;
 But, blest with her, ’tis spring throughout the year.

STREPHON.

Say, Daphnis, say, in what glad soil appears
A wondrous Tree that sacred Monarchs bears:
Tell me but this, and I'll disclaim the prize,
And give the conquest to thy Sylvia's eyes.

DAPHNIS.

Nay, tell me first, in what more happy fields
The Thistle springs, to which the Lily yields:
And then a nobler prize I will resign;
For Sylvia, charming Sylvia, shall be thine.

DAMON

Cease to contend; for, Daphnis, I decree
The bowl to Strephon, and the lamb to thee:
Blest Swains, whose Nymphs in every grace excel; [so well!
Blest Nymphs, whose Swains those graces sing
Now rise, and haste to yonder woodbine bow'rs,
A soft retreat from sudden vernal show'rs;
The turf with rural dainties shall be crown'd,
While op'ning blooms diffuse their sweets
around.
For see! the gath'ring flocks to shelter tend,
And from the Pleiads fruitful show'rs descend.

PASTORAL II. SUMMER.

Addressed to Dr. Garth.

A SHEPHERD'S boy (he seeks no better name)
Led forth his flocks along the silver Thame,
Where dancing sun-beams on the waters play'd,
And verdant alders form'd a quiv'ring shade.
Soft as he mourn'd, the streams forgot to flow,
The flocks around a dumb compassion show,
The Naiads wept in ev'ry wat'ry bow'r,
And Jove consented in a silent show'r.

Accept, O Garth, the Muse's early lays,
That adds this wreath of ivy to thy bays;
Hear what from Love unpractis'd hearts endure,
From Love, the sole disease thou canst not cure.

Ye shady beeches, and ye cooling streams,
Defence from Phœbus', not from Cupid's beams,
To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing;
The woods shall answer, and their echo ring.
The hills and rocks attend my doleful lay—
Why art thou prouder and more hard than they?
The bleating sheep with my complaints agree,
They parch'd with heat, and I inflam'd by thee.
The sultry Sirius burns the thirsty plains,
While in thy heart eternal winter reigns.

Where stray ye, Muses, in what lawn or grove,
While your Alexis pines in hopeless love?
In those fair fields where sacred Isis glides,
Or else where Cam his winding vales divides?
As in the crystal spring I view my face,
Fresh rising blushes paint the wat'ry glass;
But since those graces please thy eyes no more,
I shun the fountains which I sought before.
Once I was skill'd in ev'ry herb that grew,
And ev'ry plant that drinks the morning dew;
Ah, wretched shepherd, what avails thy art,
To cure thy lambs, but not to heal thy heart!

Let other swains attend the rural care,
Feed fairer flocks, or richer fleeces shear:

But nigh yon mountain let me tune my lays,
Embrace my Love, and bind my brows with bays.

That flute is mine which Colin's tuneful breath
Inspir'd when living, and bequeath'd in death:
He said—Alexis, take this pipe, the same
That taught the groves my Rosalinda's name:
But now the reed shall hang on yonder tree,
For ever silent, since despis'd by thee.
Oh! were I made by some transforming pow'r
The captive bird that sings within thy bow'r!
Then might my voice thy list'ning ears employ,
And I those kisses he receives enjoy.

And yet my numbers please the rural throng,
Rough Satyrs dance, and Pan applauds the song.
The Nymphs, forsaking ev'ry cave and spring,
Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring:
Each am'rous nymph prefers her gifts in vain,
On you their gifts are all bestow'd again.
For you the swains the fairest flow'rs design,
And in one garland all their beauties join:
Accept the wreath which you deserve alone,
In whom all beauties are compris'd in one.

See what delights in sylvan scenes appear!
Descending gods have found Elysium here.
In woods bright Venus with Adonis stray'd,
And chaste Diana haunts the forest shade.
Come, lovely Nymph, and bless the silent hours,
When swains from shearing seek their nightly
bow'rs;

When weary reapers quit the sultry field,
And crown'd with corn, their thanks to Ceres
yield.

This harmless grove no lurking viper hides,
But in my breast the serpent love abides,
Here bees from blossoms sip the rosy dew,
But your Alexis knows no sweets but you.
Oh deign to visit our forsaken seats,
The mossy fountains, and the green retreats!
Where'er you walk, cool gales shall fan the glade,
Trees, where you sit, shall crowd into a shade:
Where'er you tread, the blushing flow'rs shall rise,

And all things flourish where you turn your eyes.
Oh! how I long with you to pass my days,
Invoke the Muses, and resound your praise!
Your praise the birds shall chant in ev'ry grove,
And winds shall waft it to the pow'rs above.
But would you sing, and rival Orpheus' strain,
The wond'ring forests soon should dance again,
The moving mountains hear the pow'rful call,
And headlong streams hang list'ning in their fall!

But see, the shepherds shun the noon-day heat,
The lowing herds to murmur'ing brooks retreat;
To closer shades the panting flocks remove;
Ye gods! and is their no relief for love?
But soon the sun with milder rays descends
To the cool ocean, where his journey ends:
On me Love's fiercer flames for ever prey;
By night he scorches, as he burns by day.

PASTORAL III. AUTUMN.

Addressed to Mr. Wycherley.

BENEATH the shade a spreading beech displays
 Hylas and Ægon sung their rural lays :
 This mourn'd a faithless, that an absent love ;
 And Delia's name and Doris' fill'd the grove.
 Ye Mantuan nymphs, your sacred succours bring,
 Hylas and Ægon's rural lays I sing.

Thou, whom the Nine with Plautus' wit inspire,
 The art of Terence, and Menander's fire ;
 Whose sense instructs us, and whose humour charms, [warms !
 Whose judgement sways us, and whose spirit
 Oh, skill'd in nature ! see the hearts of swains,
 Their artless passions, and their tender pains.
 Now setting Phœbus shone serenely bright,
 And fleecy clouds were streak'd with purple
 light ;
 When tuneful Hylas, with melodious moan,
 Taught rocks to weep, and made the mountains
 groan.

Go, gentle gales, and bear my sighs away !
 To Delia's ear the tender notes convey.
 As some sad turtle his lost love deploras,
 And with deep murmurs fills the sounding
 shores ;

Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn,
 Alike unheard, unpitied, and forlorn.

Go, gentle gales, and bear my sighs along !
 For her, the feather'd choirs neglect their song ;
 For her, the limes their pleasing shades deny ;
 For her, the lilies hang their heads and die.
 Ye flow'rs that droop, forsaken by the spring ;
 Ye birds that, left by summer, cease to sing ;
 Ye trees that fade when autumn heats remove,
 Say, is not absence death to those who love ?

Go, gentle gales, and bear my sighs away !
 Curs'd be the fields that caus'd my Delia's stay ;
 Fade ev'ry blossom, wither ev'ry tree,
 Die ev'ry flow'r, and perish all, but she !
 What have I said ? where'er my Delia flies,
 Let spring attend, and sudden flow'rs arise ;
 Let op'ning roses knotted oaks adorn,
 And liquid amber drop from ev'ry thorn.

Go, gentle gales, and bear my sighs along !
 The birds shall cease to tune their ev'ning song,
 The winds to breathe, the waving woods to move,

And streams to murmur ere I cease to love.
 Not bubbling fountains to the thirsty swain,
 Not balmy sleep to lab'ers faint with pain,
 Not show'rs to larks, or sunshine to the bee,
 Are half so charming as thy sight to me.

Go, gentle gales, and bear my sighs away !
 Come, Delia, come ; ah, why this long delay ?
 Through rocks and caves the name of Delia
 sounds :

Delia, each cave and echoing rock rebounds.
 Ye pow'rs, what pleasing phrensy soothes my
 mind !

Do lovers dream, or is my Delia kind ?

She comes, my Delia comes ! Now cease, my lay ;

And cease, ye gales, to bear my sighs away !
 Next Ægon sung, while Windsor groves ad-
 mir'd ;

Rehearse, ye Muses, what yourselves inspir'd.
 Resound, ye hills, resound my mournful
 strain !

Of perjur'd Doris, dying I complain :
 Here, where the mountains, less'ning as they rise,
 Lose the low vales, and steal into the skies ;
 While lab'ring oxen, spent with toil and heat,
 In their loose traces from the field retreat ;
 While curling smokes from village tops are seen,
 And the fleet shades glide o'er the dusky green.

Resound, ye hills, resound my mournful lay !
 Beneath yon poplar oft we pass'd the day :
 Oft on the rind I carv'd her am'rous vows,
 While she with garlands hung the bending boughs.

The garlands fade, the vows are worn away ;
 So dies her love, and so my hopes decay.

Resound, ye hills, resound my mournful
 strain !

Now bright Arcturus glads the teeming grain ;
 Now golden fruits on loaded branches shine,
 And grateful clusters swell with floods of wine ;
 Now blushing berries paint the yellow grove ;
 Just gods ! shall all things yield returns but love ?

Resound, ye hills, resound my mournful lay !
 The shepherds cry, "Thy flocks are left a prey."
 Ah ! what avails it me the flocks to keep,
 Who lost my heart while I preserv'd my sheep ?
 Pan came, and ask'd what magic caus'd my
 smart,

Or what ill eyes malignant glances dart ?
 What eyes but hers, alas ! have pow'r to move ?
 And is there magic but what dwells in love ?

Resound, ye hills, resound my mournful
 strains !

I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains.

From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,

Forsake mankind, and all the world—but Love !
 I know thee, Love ! on foreign mountains bred,
 Wolves gave thee suck, and savage tigers fed ;
 Thou wert from Ætna's burning entrails torn,
 Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder born !

Resound, ye hills, resound my mournful lay !
 Farewell, ye woods ! adieu, the light of day !
 One leap from yonder cliff shall end my pains :
 No more, ye hills, no more resound my strains !

Thus sang the shepherds till th' approach of
 night,

The skies yet blushing with departing light ;
 When falling dew with spangles deck'd the
 glade,

And the low sun had lengthen'd ev'ry shade.

PASTORAL IV. WINTER.

To the Memory of Mrs. Tempest.

LYCIDAS.

THYRSIS, the music of that murmur'ing spring
Is not so mournful as the strains you sing;
Nor rivers winding through the vales below,
So sweetly warble, or so smoothly flow.
Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie,
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky,
While silent birds forget their tuneful lays;
Oh sing of Daphne's fate, and Daphne's praise!

THYRSIS.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost.
Here shall I try the sweet Alexis' strain,
That call'd the list'ning Dryads to the plain?
Thames heard the numbers, as he flow'd along,
And bade his willows learn the moving song.

LYCIDAS.

So may kind rains their vital moisture yield,
And swell the future harvest of the field.
Begin; this charge the dying Daphne gave,
And said, 'Ye shepherds, sing around my grave!
Sing, while beside the shaded tomb I mourn,
And with fresh bays her rural shrine adorn.

THYRSIS.

Ye gentle Muses, leave your crystal spring,
Let Nymphs and Sylvans cypress garlands bring;
Ye weeping Loves, the stream with myrtles hide,
And break your bows as when Adonis died;
And with your golden darts, now useless grown,
Inscribe a verse on this relenting stone:
"Let nature change, let heaven and earth deplore!
"Fair Daphne's dead, and love is now no more!
'Tis done, and nature's various charms decay:
See gloomy clouds obscure the cheerful day!
Now hung with pearls the drooping trees appear,
Their faded honors scatter'd on her bier.
See where on earth the flow'ry glories lie;
With her they flourish'd, and with her they die.
Ah, what avail the beauties nature wore?
Fair Daphne's dead, and beauty is no more!

For her the flocks refuse their verdant food,
The thirsty heifers shun the gliding flood;
The silver swans her hapless fate bemoan,
In notes more sad than when they sing their
In hollow caves sweet Echo silent lies, [own;
Silent, or only to her name replies: [shore;
Her name with pleasure once she taught the
Now Daphne's dead, and pleasure is no more!

No grateful dews descend from ev'ning skies,
Nor morning odors from the flow'rs arise;
No rich perfumes refresh the fruitful field,
Nor fragrant herbs their native incense yield.
The balmy Zephyrs, silent since her death,
Lament the ceasing of a sweeter breath;
Th' industrious bees neglect their golden store;
Fair Daphne's dead, and sweetness is no more!

No more the mounting larks, while Daphne
sings,
Shall, list'ning in mid air, suspend their wings;
No more the birds shall imitate her lays,
Or, hush'd with wonder, hearken from the sprays; [bear,

No more the streams their murmurs shall for-
A sweeter music than their own to hear;
But tell the reeds, and tell the vocal shore,
Fair Daphne's dead, and music is no more.

Her fate is whisper'd by the gentle breeze,
And told in sighs to all the trembling trees;
The trembling trees, in ev'ry plain and wood,
Her fate re-murmur to the silver flood;
The silver flood, so lately calm, appears Swell'd with new passion, and o'erflows with tears. [plore,

The winds, and trees, and floods, her death de-
Daphne, our grief, our glory now no more!

But see! where Daphne wond'ring mounts
on high,

Above the clouds, above the starry sky!
Eternal beauties grace the shining scene,
Fields ever fresh, and groves for ever green!
There, while you rest in amaranthine bow'rs,
Or from those meads select unfading flowers,
Behold us kindly, who your name implore,
Daphne, our goddess, and our grief no more!

LYCIDAS.

How all things listen while thy Muse complains!

Such silence waits on Philomela's strains,
In some still ev'ning, when the whisp'ring
breeze

Pants on the leaves, and dies upon the trees.
To thee, bright goddess, oft a lamb shall bleed,
If teeming ewes increase my fleecy breed:
While plants their shade, or flow'rs their odors
give,

Thy name, thy honor, and thy praise shall live!

THYRSIS.

But see, Orion sheds unwholesome dews;
Arise, the pines a noxious shade diffuse;
Sharp Boreas blows, and nature feels decay;
Time conquers all, and we must Time obey.
Adieu, ye vales, ye mountains, streams, and groves;

Adieu, ye shepherds' rural lays and loves;
Adieu, my flocks; farewell, ye sylvan crew;
Daphne, farewell; and all the world, adieu!

§ 5. Windsor Forest. Pope.

To the Rt. Hon. George Lord Lansdown.

THY forest, Windsor! and thy green retreats,
At once the Monarch's and the Muses' seats,
Invite my lays. Be present, sylvan maids!
Unlock your springs, and open all your shades.
Granville commands; your aid, O Muses, bring!
What Muse for Granville can refuse to sing?

The groves of Eden, vanish'd now so long,
Live in description, and look green in song:
These, were my breast inspir'd with equal flame,
Like them in beauty, should be like in fame.

Here hills and vales, the woodland and the plain,
 Here earth and water seem to strive again!
 Not, chaos-like, together crush'd and bruis'd,
 But, as the world, harmoniously confus'd;
 Where order in variety we see,
 And where, though all things differ, all agree.
 Here waving groves a chequer'd scene display,
 And part admit, and part exclude the day;
 As some coy nymph her lover's warm address
 Nor quite indulges, nor can quite repress.
 There interspers'd in lawns and op'ning glades,
 Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades:
 Here, in full light the russet plains extend;
 There, wrapt in clouds, the bluish hills ascend.
 E'en the wild heath displays her purple dyes,
 And 'midst the desert, fruitful fields arise,
 That, crown'd with tufted trees and springing corn.
 Like verdant isles, the sable waste adorn.
 Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
 The weeping amber, or the balmy tree,
 While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
 And realms commanded which those trees
 adorn.
 Not proud Olympus yields a nobler sight,
 Though gods assembled grace his tow'ring
 height,
 Than what more humble mountains offer here,
 Where, in their blessings, all those gods appear.
 See Pan with flocks, with fruits Pomona
 crown'd;
 Here blushing Flora paints th' enamell'd
 ground,
 Here Ceres' gifts in waving prospect stand,
 And nodding tempt the joyful reaper's hand;
 Rich industry sits smiling on the plains,
 And peace and plenty tell, a Stuart reigns.
 Not thus the land appear'd in ages past,
 A dreary desert, and a gloomy waste;
 To savage beasts and savage laws a prey,
 And kings more furious and severe than they;
 Who claim'd the skies, dispeopled air and floods,
 The lonely lords of empty wilds and woods:
 Cities laid waste, they storm'd the dens and caves
 (For wiser brutes were backward to be slaves),
 What could be free, when lawless beasts obey'd,
 And e'en the elements a tyrant sway'd?
 In vain kind seasons swell'd the teeming grain,
 Soft show'rs distill'd, and suns grew warm in vain;
 The swain with tears his frustrate labor yields,
 And famish'd dies amidst his ripen'd fields.
 What wonder then, a beast or subject slain
 Were equal crimes in a despotic reign?
 Both doom'd alike, for sportive tyrants bled;
 But while the subject starv'd, the beast was fed.
 Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began;
 A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
 Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous
 name,
 And makes his trembling slaves the royal game.
 The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious
 swains,
 From men their cities, and from gods their fanes.

The levell'd towns with weeds lie cover'd o'er;
 The hollow winds through naked temples roar;
 Round broken columns clasping ivy twin'd;
 O'er heaps of ruin stalk'd the stately hind;
 The fox obscene to gaping tombs retires;
 And savage howlings fill the sacred quires.
 Aw'd by his nobles, by his commons curst,
 Th' oppressor rul'd tyrannic where he durst;
 Stretch'd o'er the poor and church his iron rod,
 And serv'd alike his vassals and his God.
 Whom e'en the Saxon spar'd, and bloody Dane,
 The wanton victims of his sport remain.
 But see the man, who spacious regions gave
 A waste for beasts, himself denied a grave!
 Stretch'd on the lawn his second hope survey,
 At once the chaser, and at once the prey:
 Lo! Rufus, tugging at the deadly dart,
 Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart.
 Succeeding monarchs heard the subject's cries,
 Nor saw displeas'd the peaceful cottage rise.
 Then gath'ring flocks on unknown mountains
 fed,
 O'er sandy wilds were yellow harvests spread;
 The forests wonder'd at the unusual grain,
 And secret transports touch'd the conscious swain.
 Fair Liberty, Britannia's Goddess, rears
 Her cheerful head, and leads the golden years.
 Ye vig'rous swains! while youth ferments
 your blood,
 And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood,
 Now range the hills, the gameful woods beset,
 Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net.
 When milder autumn summer's heat succeeds,
 And in the new-shorn field the partridge feeds,
 Before his lord the ready spaniel bounds,
 Panting with hope, he tries the furrow'd grounds;
 But when the tainted gales the game betray,
 Couch'd close he lies, and meditates the prey:
 Secure they trust th' unfaithful field beset,
 Till hov'ring o'er them sweeps the swelling net.
 Thus (if small things we may with great compare)
 When Albion sends her eager sons to war,
 Some thoughtless town, with ease and plenty
 blest,
 Near, and more near, the closing lines invest;
 Sudden they seize th' amaz'd, defenceless prize,
 And high in air Britannia's standard flies.
 See! from the brake the whirring pheasant
 springs,
 And mounts exulting on triumphant wings:
 Short in his joy; he feels the fiery wound,
 Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground.
 Ah! what avail his glossy, varying dyes,
 His purple crest, and scarlet-circled eyes,
 The vivid green his shining plumes unfold,
 His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold!
 Nor yet, when moist Arcturus clouds the sky,
 The woods and fields their pleasing toils deny.
 To plains with well-breath'd beagles we repair,
 And trace the mazes of the circling hare:
 (Beasts, urg'd by us, their fellow beasts pursue,
 And learn of man each other to undo):

With slaught'ring guns th' unwearied fowler
roves,
When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves ;
Where doves in flocks the leafless trees o'er-
shade,

And lonely woodcocks haunt the wat'ry glade.
He lifts the tube, and levels with his eye ;
Straight a short thunder breaks the frozen sky :
Oft, as in airy rings they skim the heath,
The clam'rous lapwings feel the leaden death ;
Oft, as the mounting larks their notes prepare,
They fall, and leave their little lives in air.

In genial spring, beneath the quiv'ring shade,
Where cooling vapors breathe along the mead,
The patient fisher takes his silent stand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand :
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the scaly breed,
And eyes the dancing cork and bending reed.
Our plenteous streams a various race supply :
The bright-eyed perch, with fins of Tyrian dye ;
The silver eel, in shining volumes roll'd ;
The yellow carp, in scales bedropt with gold ;
Swift trouts, diversified with crimson stains ;
And pikes, the tyrants of the wat'ry plains.

Now Cancer glows with Phœbus' fiery car ;
The youth rush eager to the sylvan war,
Swarm o'er the lawns, the forest walks surround,
Rouse the fleet hart, and cheer the opening hound.

Th' impatient courser pants in every vein,
And pawing, seems to beat the distant plain :
Hills, vales, and floods, appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost.
See the bold youth strain up the threat'ning steep,
Rush through the thickets, down the valley
sweep,

Hang o'er their coursers' heads with eager speed,
And earth rolls back beneath the flying steed.
Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train ;
Nor envy, Windsor ! since thy shades have seen
As bright a Goddess, and as chaste a Queen ;
Whose care, like hers, protects the sylvan reign,
The earth's fair light, and empress of the main.

Here too, 'tis sung, of old, Diana stray'd,
And Cynthus' top forsook for Windsor shade ;
Here was she seen o'er airy wastes to rove,
Seek the clear spring, or haunt the pathless
grove ;

Here, arm'd with silver bows, in early dawn,
Her buskin'd virgins trac'd the dewy lawn.

Above the rest a rural nymph was fam'd,
Thy offspring, Thames ! the fair Lodona nam'd (Lodona's fate, in long oblivion cast, [last):
The Muse shall sing, and what she sings shall Scarce could the goddess from her nymph be known,

But by the crescent, and the golden zone.
She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care ;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair ;
A painted quiver on her shoulder sounds,
And with her dart the flying deer she wounds.
It chanc'd, as, eager of the chace, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd,

Pan saw and lov'd ; and, burning with desire,
Pursu'd her flight ; her flight increas'd his fire.
Not half so swift the trembling doves can fly,
When the fierce eagle cleaves the liquid sky ;
Not half so swiftly the fierce eagle moves,
When through the clouds he drives the trembling
doves ;

As from the god she flew with furious pace,
Or as the god, more furious, urg'd the chace.
Now fainting, sinking, pale, the nymph appears ;
Now close behind, his sounding steps she hears ;
And now his shadow reach'd her as she run,
His shadow lengthen'd by the setting sun ;
And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair.
In vain on father Thames she calls for aid,
Nor could Diana help her injur'd maid.

Faint, breathless, thus she pray'd, nor pray'd in vain— [train,

“ Ah, Cynthia ! ah—though banish'd from thy “ Let me, O let me, to the shades repair,
“ My native shades—there weep, and murmur
She said, and melting as in tears she lay, [there.”
In a soft silver stream dissolv'd away.

The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,
For ever murmurs, and for ever weeps ;
Still bears the name the hapless virgin bore,
And bathes the forest where she rang'd before.
In her chaste current oft the goddess laves,
And with celestial tears augments the waves.
Oft in her glass the musing shepherd spies
The headlong mountains and the downward
skies,

The wat'ry landscape of the pendent woods,
And absent trees that tremble in the floods ;
In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green ;
Through the fair scene roll slow the ling'ring streams, [Thames.

Then foaming pour along, and rush into the
Thou, too, great father of the British floods !
With joyful pride survey'st the lofty woods ;
Where tow'ring oaks their growing honors rear,
And future navies on thy shores appear.

Not Neptune's self from all her streams receives
A wealthier tribute than to thine he gives.
No seas so rich, so gay no banks appear,
No lake so gentle, and no spring so clear ;
Nor Po so swells the fabling poet's lays,
While led along the skies his current strays,
As thine, which visits Windsor's fam'd abodes ;
To grace the mansion of our earthly gods :
Nor all his stars above a lustre show,
Like the bright beauties on the banks below ;
Where Jove, subdued by mortal passion still,
Might change Olympus for a nobler hill.

Happy the man whom this bright court approves,

His sov'reign favors, and his country loves :
Happy next him, who to these shades retires,
Whom Nature charms, and whom the Muse inspires ;

Whom humbler joys of home-felt quiet please,
Successive study, exercise, and ease.

He gathers health from herbs the forest yields,
 And of their fragrant physic spoils the fields;
 With chemic art exalts the min'ral pow'rs,
 And draws the aromatic souls of flow'rs:
 Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high;
 O'er figur'd worlds now travels with his eye;
 Of ancient writ unlocks the learned store,
 Consults the dead, and lives past ages o'er:
 Or, wand'ring thoughtful in the silent wood,
 Attends the duties of the wise and good,
 To observe a mean, be to himself a friend,
 To follow nature, and regard his end;
 Or looks on heaven with more than mortal eyes,
 Bids his free soul expatiate in the skies,
 Amid her kindred stars familiar roam,
 Survey the region, and confess her home!
 Such was the life great Scipio once admir'd;
 Thus Atticus, and Trumbal thus, retir'd.

Ye sacred Nine! that all my soul possess,
 Whose raptures fire me, and whose visions bless,
 Bear me, oh bear me to sequester'd scenes,
 The bow'ry mazes, and surrounding greens;
 To Thames's banks which fragrant breezes fill,
 Or where ye, Muses, sport on Cooper's Hill
 (On Cooper's Hill eternal wreaths shall grow, While lasts the mountain, or while Thames shall
 flow):

I seem through consecrated walks to rove,
 I hear soft music die along the grove:
 Led by the sound, I roam from shade to shade,
 By godlike poets venerable made:
 Here his first lays majestic Denham sung;
 There the last numbers flow'd from Cowley's
 O early lost! what tears the river shed, [tongue.
 When the sad pomp along his banks was led!
 His drooping swans on ev'ry note expire,
 And on his willows hung each Muse's lyre.

Since fate relentless stopp'd their heavenly
 voice,
 No more the forests ring, or groves rejoice;
 Who now shall charm the shades, where Cowley
 strung

His living harp, and lofty Denham sung?
 But hark! the groves rejoice, the forest rings!
 Are these reviv'd? or is it Granville sings?
 'Tis yours, my lord, to bless our soft retreats,
 And call the Muses to their ancient seats;
 To paint anew the flow'ry sylvan scenes,
 To crown the forests with immortal greens;
 Make Windsor hills in lofty numbers rise,
 And lift her turrets nearer to the skies;
 To sing those honors you deserve to wear,
 And add new lustre to her silver star.

Here noble Surrey felt the sacred rage,
 Surrey, the Granville of a former age:
 Matchless his pen, victorious was his lance,
 Bold in the lists, and graceful in the dance.
 In the same shades the Cupids tun'd his lyre,
 To the same notes of love, and soft desire:
 Fair Geraldine, bright object of his vow,
 Then fill'd the groves, as heavenly Mira now.

Oh wouldst thou sing what heroes Windsor bore, [shore;
 What kings first breath'd upon her winding

Or raise old warriors, whose ador'd remains
 In weeping vaults her hallow'd earth contains;
 With Edward's acts adorn the shining page,
 Stretch his long triumphs down through ev'ry
 age;

Draw monarchs chain'd, and Cressi's glorious
 The lilies blazing on the regal shield: [field,
 Then, from her roofs when Verrio's colors fall,
 And leave inanimate the naked wall, [pear,
 Still in thy song should vanquish'd France ap-
 And bleed for ever under Britain's spear.

Let softer strains ill-fated Henry mourn,
 And palms eternal flourish round his urn.
 Here o'er the Martyr King the marble weeps,
 And, fast beside him, once-fear'd Edward sleeps:
 Whom not th' extended Albion could contain,
 From old Belerium to the northern main,
 The grave unites; where e'en the great find rest,
 And blended lie th' oppressor and th' opprest.

Make sacred Charles's tomb for ever known
 (Obscure the place, and uninscrib'd the stone):
 Oh fact accurs'd! what tears has Albion shed!
 Heavens, what new wounds! and how her old have bled!

She saw her sons with purple deaths expire,
 Her sacred domes involv'd in rolling fire,
 A dreadful series of intestine wars,
 Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest scars.

At length, great Anna said—"Let discord cease!"
 She said, the world obey'd, and all was peace!

In that blest moment, from his oozy bed
 Old father Thames advanc'd his rev'rend head;
 His tresses dropp'd with dew, and o'er the stream
 His shining horns diffus'd a golden gleam:
 Grav'd on his urn appear'd the moon, that guides
 His swelling waters and alternate tides;
 The figur'd streams in waves of silver roll'd,
 And on their banks Augusta rose in gold;
 Around his throne the sea-born brothers stood,
 Who swell with tributary urns his flood:
 First, the fam'd authors of his ancient name,
 The winding Isis, and the fruitful Thame;
 The Kennet swift, for silver eels renown'd;
 The Loddon slow, with verdant alders crown'd;
 Cole, whose clear streams his flow'ry islands lave;
 And chalky Wey, that rolls a milky wave:
 The blue, transparent Vandalis appears;
 The gulphy Lee his sedgy tresses rears;
 And sullen Mole, that hides his diving flood;
 And silent Darent, stain'd with Danish blood.

High in the midst, upon his urn reclin'd,
 (His sea-green mantle waving with the wind,)
 The god appear'd: he turn'd his azure eyes
 Where Windsor domes and pompous turrets
 rise!

Then bow'd, and spoke; the winds forgot to roar,
 And the hush'd waves glide softly to the shore.

Hail, sacred Peace! hail, long expected days,
 That Thames's glory to the stars shall raise!
 Tho' Tyber's streams immortal Rome behold, Though foaming Hermus swells with tides of gold, [flows,
 From heav'n itself though seven-fold Nilus
 And harvests on a hundred realms bestows;

These now no more shall be the Muses' themes,
 Lost in my fame, as in the sea their streams.
 Let Volga's banks with iron squadrons shine,
 And groves of lances glitter on the Rhine;
 Let barb'rous Ganges arm a servile train;
 Be mine the blessings of a peaceful reign!
 No more my sons shall dye with British blood
 Red Iber's sands, or Ister's foaming flood:
 Safe on my shore each unmolested swain
 Shall tend the flocks, or reap the bearded grain;
 The shady empire shall retain no trace
 Of war or blood, but in the sylvan chace; [blown,
 The trumpet sleep, while cheerful horns are
 And arms employ'd on birds and beasts alone.
 Behold! th' ascending villas on my side
 Project long shadows o'er the crystal tide.
 Behold! Augusta's glitt'ring spires increase,
 And temples rise, the beauteous works of peace.
 I see, I see, where two fair cities bend
 Their ample bow, a new Whitehall ascend!
 There mighty nations shall inquire their doom,
 The world's great oracle in times to come;
 There kings shall sue, and suppliant states be seen
 Once more to bend before a British queen.

Thy trees, fair Windsor! now shall leave their woods,

And half thy forests rush into the floods.
 Bear Britain's thunder, and her cross display,
 To the bright regions of the rising day:
 Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll,
 Where clearer flames glow round the frozen
 Or under southern skies exalt their sails, [pole;
 Led by new stars, and borne by spicy gales:
 For me the balm shall bleed, and amber flow,
 The coral redden, and the ruby glow;
 The pearly shell its lucid globe unfold,
 And Phœbus warm the rip'ning ore to gold,
 The time shall come, when, free as seas or wind,
 Unbounded Thames shall flow for all mankind;
 Whole nations enter with each swelling tide,
 And seas but join the regions they divide;
 Earth's distant ends our glory shall behold,
 And the new world launch forth to seek the old.
 Then ships of uncouth form shall stem the tide,
 And feather'd people crowd my wealthy side;
 And naked youths and painted chiefs admire
 Our speech, our color, and our strange attire!
 Oh stretch thy reign, fair Peace! from shore to shore,

Till Conquest cease, and Slavery be no more;
 Till the freed Indians in their native groves
 Reap their own fruits, and woo their sable loves;
 Peru once more a race of kings behold,
 And other Mexicos be roof'd with gold.
 Exil'd by thee from earth to deepest hell,
 In brazen bonds shall barb'rous Discord dwell;
 Gigantic Pride, pale Terror, gloomy Care,
 And mad Ambition, shall attend her there;
 There purple Vengeance bath'd in gore, retires,
 Her weapons blunted, and extinct her fires;

There hateful Envy her own snakes shall feel,
 And Persecution mourn her broken wheel;
 There Faction roar, Rebellion bite her chain,
 And grasping Furies thirst for blood in vain.
 Here cease thy flight, nor with unhallow'd
 lays

Touch the fair fame of Albion's golden days:
 The thoughts of gods let Granville's verse recite,
 And bring the scenes of op'ning fate to light:
 My humble Muse, in unambitious strains,
 Paints the green forests and the flow'ry plains,
 Where Peace descending bids her olives spring,
 And scatters blessings from her dove-like wing.
 Ec'n I more sweetly pass my careless days,
 Pleas'd in the silent shade with empty praise;
 Enough for me, that to the list'ning swains,
 First in these fields I sang the sylvan strains.

§ 6. *Two Choruses to the Tragedy of Brutus**.
 Pope.

CHORUS OF ATHENIANS.

STROPHE I.

YE shades, where sacred truth is sought;
 Groves, where immortal Sages taught;
 Where heavenly visions Plato fir'd,
 And Epicurus lay inspir'd!
 In vain your guiltless laurels stood
 Unspotted long with human blood.
 War, horrid war, your thoughtless walks invades,
 And steel now glitters in the Muses' shades.

ANTISTROPHE I.

O heav'n-born sisters! source of art!
 Who charm the sense, or mend the heart;
 Who lead fair Virtue's train along,
 Moral Truth, and Mystic Song!
 To what new clime, what distant sky,
 Forsaken, friendless, shall ye fly?
 Say, will ye bless the bleak Atlantic shore?
 Or bid the furious Gaul be rude no more?

STROPHE II.

When Athens sinks by fates unjust,
 When wild Barbarians spurn her dust;
 Perhaps e'en Britain's utmost shore
 Shall cease to blush with strangers' gore;
 See Arts her savage sons control,
 And Athens rising near the pole!
 Till some new tyrant lifts his purple hand,
 And civil madness tears them from the land.

ANTISTROPHE II.

Ye gods! what justice rules the ball?
 Freedom and Arts together fall;
 Fools grant whate'er ambition craves;
 And men, once ignorant, are slaves.
 O curs'd effects of civil hate,
 In ev'ry age, in ev'ry state!
 Still when the lust of tyrant pow'r succeeds,
 Some Athens perishes, some Tully bleeds.

* Altered from Shakspeare by the Duke of Buckingham, at whose desire these two Choruses were composed, to supply as many wanting in his Play. They were set many years afterwards by the famous Bononcini, and performed at Buckingham-House.

CHORUS OF YOUTHS AND VIRGINS.

SEMICHORUS.

OH, tyrant Love! hast thou possess'd
 The prudent, learn'd, and virtuous breast?
 Wisdom and wit in vain reclaim,
 And arts but soften us to feel thy flame.
 Love, soft intruder, enters here,
 But entering learns to be sincere.
 Marcus, with blushes, owns he loves,
 And Brutus tenderly reproveth.
 Why, Virtue, dost thou blame desire,
 Which Nature hath impress'd?
 Why, Nature, dost thou soonest fire
 The mild and gen'rous breast?

CHORUS.

Love's purer flames the gods approve;
 The gods and Brutus bend to love;
 Brutus for absent Portia sighs,
 And sterner Cassius melts at Junia's eyes.
 What is loose love? a transient gust,
 Spent in a sudden storm of lust;
 A vapor fed with wild desire,
 A wand'ring self-consuming fire,
 But Hymen's kinder flames unite,
 And burn for ever one;
 Chaste as cold Cynthia's virgin light,
 Productive as the Sun.

SEMICHORUS.

Oh, source of ev'ry social tie,
 United wish, and mutual joy!
 What various joys on one attend,
 As son, as father, brother, husband, friend!
 Whether his hoary sire he spies,
 While thousand grateful thoughts arise;
 Or meets his spouse's fonder eye;
 Or views his smiling progeny;
 What tender passions take their turns,
 What homefelt raptures move!
 His heart now melts, now leaps, now burns,
 With reverence, hope, and love.

CHORUS.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, surmises;
 Hence false tears, deceits, disguises,
 Dangers, doubts, delays, surprises,
 Fires that scorch, yet dare not shine!
 Purest love's unwasting treasure,
 Constant faith, fair hope, long leisure,
 Days of ease, and nights of pleasure;
 Sacred Hymen! these are thine.

§ 7. Ode on Solitude*. Pope.

HAPPY the man, whose wish and care
 A few paternal acres bound;
 Content to breathe his native air,
 In his own ground.
 Whose herds with milk, whose fields with bread,
 Whose flocks supply him with attire;
 Whose trees in summer yield him shade,
 In winter fire.

Blest, who can unconcern'dly find
 Hours, days, and years, slide soft away,
 In health of body, peace of mind,
 Quiet by day:

Sound sleep by night; study and ease,
 Together mix'd; sweet recreation,
 And innocence which most does please
 With meditation.

Thus let me live, unseen, unknown,
 Thus unlamented let me die;
 Steal from the world, and not a stone
 Tell where I lie.

§ 8. The Dying Christian to his Soul. Pope.

ODE.

VITAL spark of heavenly flame!
 Quit, oh quit, this mortal frame!
 Trembling, hoping, ling'ring, flying,
 Oh the pain, the bliss of dying!
 Cease, fond Nature, cease thy strife,
 And let me languish into life!
 Hark! they whisper; angels say,
 Sister spirit, come away!
 What is this absorbs me quite,
 Steals my senses, shuts my sight,
 Drowns my spirits, draws my breath?
 Tell me, my soul, can this be Death?

The world recedes, it disappears!
 Heav'n opens on my eyes! my ears
 With sounds seraphic ring!
 Lend, lend your wings! I mount! I fly!
 O Grave! where is thy victory?
 O Death! where is thy sting?

§ 9. An Essay on Criticism. Pope.

'Tis hard to say if greater want of skill
 Appear in writing, or in judging ill;
 But, of the two, less dang'rous is th' offence
 To tire our patience, than mislead our sense.
 Some few in that, but numbers err in this;
 Ten censure wrong for one who writes amiss.
 A fool might once himself alone expose;
 Now one in verse makes many more in prose.
 'Tis with our judgements, as our watches; none
 Go just alike, yet each believes his own.
 In Poets as true genius is but rare,
 True taste as seldom is the Critic's share;
 Both must alike from Heav'n derive their light,
 These born to judge, as well as those to write.
 Let such teach others who themselves excel,
 And censure freely who have written well:
 Authors are partial to their wit, 'tis true;
 But are not Critics to their judgement too?
 Yet, if we look more closely, we shall find
 Most have the seeds of judgement in their mind:
 Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light; [right.
 The lines, though touch'd but faintly, are drawn
 But as the slightest sketch, if justly trac'd,
 Is by ill-coloring but the more disgrac'd,
 So by false learning is good sense defac'd.

* This was a very early production of our Author, written at about twelve years old.

Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools,
And some made coxcombs Nature meant but fools.

In search of wit these lose their common sense,
And then turn Critics in their own defence:
Each burns alike, who can or cannot write,
Or with a Rival's or an Eunuch's spite.
All fools have still an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side.
If Mævius scribble in Apollo's spite,
There are who judge still worse than he can write.

Some have at first for Wits, then Poets pass'd;
Turn'd Critics next, and prov'd plain fools at last.
Some neither can for Wits nor Critics pass;
As heavy mules are neither horse nor ass. [isle,
Those half-learn'd witlings, num'rous in our
As half-form'd insects on the banks of Nile;
Unfinish'd things, one knows not what to call,
Their generation's so equivocal:
To tell 'em would a hundred tongues require;
Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire.

But you, who seek to give and merit fame,
And justly bear a Critic's noble name,
Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taste, and learning go;
Launch not beyond your depth, but be discreet,
And mark that point where sense and dullness
meet.

Nature to all things fix'd the limits fit,
And wisely curb'd proud man's pretending wit:
As on the land while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains;
Thus in the soul while memory prevails,
The solid pow'r of understanding fails;
Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away.
One science only will one genius fit;
So vast is art, so narrow human wit:
Not only bounded to peculiar arts,
But oft in those confin'd to single parts.
Like kings, we lose the conquests gain'd before,
By vain ambition still to make them more:
Each might his several province well command,
Would all but stoop to what they understand.

First follow Nature, and your judgement
frame
By her just standard, which is still the same:
Unerring Nature, still divinely bright,
One clear, unchang'd, and universal light;
Life, force, and beauty, must to all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test of Art.
Art from that fund each just supply provides;
Works without show, and without pomp presides:

In some fair body thus th' informing soul
With spirits feeds, with vigor fills the whole,
Each motion guides, and ev'ry nerve sustains;
Itself unseen, but in th' effects remains.
Some, to whom Heaven in wit has been profuse,
Want as much more to turn it to its use;
For wit and judgement often are at strife,
Though meant each other's aid, like man and wife.

'Tis more to guide, than spur the Muse's steed;
Restrain his fury, than provoke his speed:
The winged courser, like a gen'rous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are Nature still, but Nature methodis'd.
Nature, like liberty, is but restrain'd
By the same laws which first herself ordain'd.

Hear how learn'd Greece her useful rules
indites,
When to repress, and when indulge our flights:
High on Parnassus' top her sons she show'd,
And pointed out those arduous paths they trod:
Held from afar, aloft, th' immortal prize,
And urg'd the rest by equal steps to rise.
Just precepts thus from great examples given,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from heaven.

The gen'rous Critic fann'd the Poet's fire,
And taught the world with reason to admire.
Then Criticism the Muse's handmaid prov'd,
To dress her charms, and make her more be-
lov'd:

But following wits from that intention stray'd;
Who could not win the mistress, woo'd the maid;

Against the Poets their own arms they turn'd,
Sure to hate most the men from whom they
So modern 'Pothecaries taught the art [learn'd:
By Doctors' bills to play the Doctor's part,
Bold in the practice of mistaken rules,
Prescribe, apply, and call their masters fools.
Some on the leaves of ancient authors prey,
Nor time nor moths e'er spoil'd so much as
they:

Some drily plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made.
These leave the sense, their learning to display;
And those explain the meaning quite away.

You, then, whose judgement the right course would steer,

Know well each Ancient's proper character:
His fable, subject, scope in ev'ry page;
Religion, country, genius of his age:
Without all these at once before your eyes,
Cavil you may, but never criticise.

Be Homer's works your study and delight;
Read them by day, and meditate by night:
Thence form your judgement, thence your maxims bring,

And trace the Muses upward to their spring.
Still with itself compar'd, his text peruse;
And let your comment be the Mantuan Muse.

When first young Maro, in his boundless mind,
A work t' outlast immortal Rome design'd,
Perhaps he seem'd above the Critic's law,
And but from Nature's fountains scorn'd to
draw:

But when t' examine ev'ry part he came,
Nature and Homer were, he found, the same.
Convinc'd, amaz'd, he checks the bold design;
And rules as strict his labor'd work confine,
As if the Stagyrite o'erlook'd each line.

Learn hence for ancient rules a just esteem ;
To copy nature is to copy them.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare ;
For there's a happiness as well as care :
Music resembles Poetry ; in each
Are nameless graces which no methods teach,
And which a master-hand alone can reach.
If, where the rules not far enough extend, (Since rules were made but to promote their end,)

Some lucky licence answer to the full
Th' intent propos'd, that licence is a rule.
Thus Pegasus, a nearer way to take,
May boldly deviate from the common track ;
From vulgar bounds with brave disorder part,
And snatch a grace beyond the reach of art,
Which, without passing through the judgement, gains

The heart, and all its end at once attains.
In prospects thus, some objects please our eyes
Which out of nature's common order rise,
The shapeless rock or hanging precipice.
Great Wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true Critics dare not mend.
But though the Ancients thus their rules invade,
As kings dispense with laws themselves have made,

Moderns, beware ! or, if you must offend
Against the precept, ne'er transgress its end ;
Let it be seldom, and compell'd by need ;
And have at least, their precedent to plead.
The Critic else proceeds without remorse,
Seizes your fame. and puts his laws in force.

I know there are, to whose presumptuous
thoughts
Those freer beauties, e'en in them, seem faults :
Some figures monstrous and mis-shap'd appear,
Consider'd singly, or beheld too near ;
Which, but proportion'd to their light, or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace.
A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array ;
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, may seem sometimes to fly.
Those oft are stratagems which errors seem ;
Nor is it Homer nods, but we that dream.

Still green with bays each ancient altar stands,
Above the reach of sacrilegious hands ;
Secure from flames, from Envy's fiercer rage,
Destructive War, and all-involving Age.
See from each clime the learn'd their incense
bring !

Hear, in all tongues consenting Pæans ring !
In praise so just let ev'ry voice be join'd,
And fill the gen'ral chorus of mankind.
Hail, Bards triumphant ! born in happier days ;
Immortal heirs of universal praise !
Whose honors with increase of ages grow,
As streams roll down, enlarging as they flow ;
Nations unborn your mighty names shall sound,
And worlds applaud that must not yet be
found !

O may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest, of your sons inspire,

(That on weak wings, from far, pursues your flights ;

Glow while he reads, but trembles as he writes),
To teach vain Wits a science little known ;
T' admire superior sense, and doubt their own !
Of all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgement, and misguide the
mind,

What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is Pride, the never-failing vice of fools.
Whatever Nature has in worth denied,
She gives in large recruits of needful Pride ;
For as in bodies, thus in souls, we find
What wants in blood and spirits, swell'd with wind :

Pride, where Wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense.
If once right reason drives that cloud away,
Truth breaks upon us with resistless day.
Trust not yourself ; but, your defects to know,
Make use of ev'ry friend—and ev'ry foe.

A little learning is a dang'rous thing ;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring :
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again.
Fir'd at first sight with what the Muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of Arts,
While from the bounded level of our mind
Short views we take, nor see the lengths behind ;
But, more advanc'd, behold with strange surprise,
New distant scenes of endless science rise !
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky ;
Th' eternal snows appear already past,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the last :
But, those attain'd, we tremble to survey
The growing labors of the lengthen'd way ;
Th' increasing prospect tires our wand'ring eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise !

A perfect judge will read each work of Wit
With the same spirit that its author writ ;
Survey the whole, nor seek slight faults to find,
Where nature moves, and rapture warms the
mind ;

Nor lose, for that malignant dull delight,
The gen'rous pleasure to be charm'd with wit.
But, in such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low ;
That, shunning faults, one quiet tenor keep ;
We cannot blame indeed—but we may sleep.
In Wit, as Nature, what affects our hearts
Is not th' exactness of peculiar parts ;
'Tis not a lip, or eye, we beauty call,
But the joint force and full result of all.

Thus when we view some well-proportion'd dome, [Rome !
The world's just wonder, and e'en thine, O
No single parts unequally surprise ;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes :
No monstrous height, or breadth, or length
appear ;

The whole at once is bold and regular.

Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see,
Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be.

In ev'ry work regard the writer's end,
 Since none can compass more than they intend;
 And if the means be just, the conduct true,
 Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due.
 As men of breeding, sometimes men of wit,
 T'avoid great errors, must the less commit;
 Neglect the rules each verbal Critic lays,
 For not to know some trifles is a praise.
 Most Critics, fond of some subservient art,
 Still make the whole depend upon a part:
 They talk of principles, but notions prize;
 And all to one lov'd folly sacrifice. [say,

Once on a time, La Mancha's Knight, they
 A certain Bard encount'ring on the way,
 Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
 As e'er could Dennis, of the Grecian stage;
 Concluding all were desp'rate sots and fools,
 Who durst depart from Aristotle's rules.
 Our Author, happy in a judge so nice, [vice;
 Produc'd his play, and begg'd the Knight's ad-
 Made him observe the subject and the plot,
 The manners, passions, unities—what not?
 All which, exact to rule, were brought about,
 Were but a Combat in the lists left out.

"What! leave the Combat out?" exclaims the Knight;

"Yes, or we must renounce the Stagyrte."

"Not so, by heaven!" he answers in a rage;

"Knights, squires, and steeds, must enter on
 "the stage."

"So vast a throng the stage can ne'er contain."

"Then build a new, or act it on a plain."

Thus Critics, of less judgement than caprice,
 Curious, not knowing; not exact, but nice;
 Form short ideas; and offend in arts
 (As most in manners) by a love to parts.

Some to Conceit alone their taste confine,
 And glitt'ring thoughts struck out at ev'ry line;
 Pleas'd with a work where nothing's just or fit;
 One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit.
 Poets, like painters, thus, unskill'd to trace
 The naked nature and the living grace,
 With gold and jewels cover ev'ry part,
 And hide with ornaments their want of art.
 True wit is Nature to advantage dress'd;
 What oft was thought, but ne'er so well ex-
 press'd; [find,

Something, whose truth convinc'd at sight we
 That gives us back the image of our mind.
 As shades more sweetly recommend the light,
 So modest plainness sets off sprightly wit:
 For works may have more wit than does 'em good,
 As bodies perish through excess of blood.

Others for language all their care express,
 And value books, as women men, for dress:
 Their praise is still—The Style is excellent!
 The Sense, they humbly take upon content.
 Words are like leaves; and, where they most abound,

Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.
 False eloquence, like the prismatic glass,
 Its gaudy colors spreads on ev'ry place;
 The face of Nature we no more survey;
 All glares alike, without distinction gay:

But true expression, like th' unchanging Sun,
 Clears and improves whate'er it shines upon;
 It gilds all objects, but it alters none.

Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent as more suitable:

A vile conceit, in pompous words exprest,
 Is like a clown in regal purple drest:
 For diff'rent styles with diff'rent subjects sort,
 As sev'ral garbs, with country, town, and court.
 Some, by old words, to fame have made pre-
 tence;

Ancients in phrase, mere moderns in their sense:
 Such labor'd nothings, in so strange a style,
 Amaze the unlearn'd, and make the learned
 Unlucky as Fungoso in the play, [smile.

These sparks, with awkward vanity, display
 What the fine gentleman wore yesterday!
 And but so mimic ancient wits at best,
 As apes our grandsires, in their doublets drest.
 In words, as fashions, the same rule will hold;
 Alike fantastic, if too new or old.
 Be not the first by whom the new are tried,
 Nor yet the last to lay the old aside.

But most by numbers judge a poet's song;
 And smooth or rough, with them, is right or wrong: [conspire,

In the bright Muse though thousand charms
 Her voice is all these tuneful fools admire;
 Who haunt Parnassus but to please their ear,
 Not mend their minds; as some to church repair,
 Not for the doctrine, but the music there.

These equal syllables alone require,
 Though oft the ear the open vowels tire;
 While expletives their feeble aid do join,
 And ten low words oft creep in one dull line:
 While they ring round the same unvaried
 chimes,

With sure returns of still expected rhymes:
 Where'er you find "the cooling western
 "breeze," [trees:"

In the next line, "it whispers through the
 If crystal streams "with pleasing murmurs creep," ["sleep."

The reader's threaten'd (not in vain) with
 Then, at the last and only couplet, fraught
 With some unmeaning thing they call a thought,
 A needless Alexandrine ends the song, [along.
 That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length
 Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and
 know

What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow;
 And praise the easy vigor of a line
 Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance,
 As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.
 'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence,
 The sound must seem an echo to the sense:
 Soft is the strain when zephyr gently blows,
 And the smooth stream in smoother numbers
 flows;

But when loud surges lash the sounding shore,
 The hoarse, rough verse should like the torrent
 roar.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,

The line too labors, and the words move slow :
Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main.

Hear how Timotheus' varied lays surprise,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise !
While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love ;
Now his fierce eyes with sparkling fury glow,
Now sighs steal out, and tears begin to flow :
Persians and Greeks like turns of nature found,
And the world's victor stood subdu'd by sound !
The pow'r of music all our hearts allow ;
And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now.

Avoid extremes, and shun the fault of such
Who still are pleas'd too little or too much.
At every trifle scorn to take offence ;
That always shows great pride, or little sense :
Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the best,
Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest.
Yet let not each gay turn thy rapture move ;
For fools admire, but men of sense approve :
As things seem large which we through mists
Dulness is ever apt to magnify. [descry,

Some foreign writers, some our own despise ;
The ancients only, or the moderns prize.
Thus wit, like faith, by each man is applied
To one small sect, and all are damn'd beside.
Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine,
Which not alone the southern wit sublimed,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes ;
Which from the first has shone on ages past,
Enlights the present, and shall warm the last ;
Though each may feel increases and decays,
And see now clearer and now darker days.

Regard not then if wit be old or new,
But blame the false, and value still the true.

Some ne'er advance a judgement of their own,

But catch the spreading notion of the town ;
They reason and conclude by precedent,
And own stale nonsense which they ne'er invent. [then

Some judge of authors' names, not works ; and
Nor praise nor blame the writings, but the men.
Of all this servile herd, the worst is he
That in proud dulness joins with quality :
A constant critic at the great man's board,
To fetch and carry nonsense for my lord :
What woeful stuff this madrigal would be,
In some starv'd hackney'd sonneteer, or me !
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens ! how the style refines !
Before his sacred name flies ev'ry fault,
And each exalted stanza teems with thought !

The vulgar thus through imitation err ;
As oft the learn'd by being singular !
So much they scorn the crowd, that if the throng
By chance go right, they purposely go wrong :
So schismatics the plain believers quit,
And are but damn'd for having too much wit.

Some praise at morning what they blame at
night,

But always think the last opinion right.
A Muse by these is like a mistress us'd ;
This hour she's idoliz'd, the next abus'd ;
While their weak heads, like towns unfortified,
'Twixt sense and nonsense daily change their side.

Ask them the cause ; they're wiser still, they say ;
And still to-morrow's wiser than to-day.
We think our fathers fools, so wise we grow ;
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so.
Once school-divines this zealous isle o'erspread ;
Who knew most sentences was deepest read :
Faith, Gospel, all seem'd made to be disputed,
And none had sense enough to be confuted :
Scotists and Thomists now in peace remain
Amidst their kindred cobwebs in Duck-lane.
If Faith itself has different dresses worn,
What wonder modes in wit should take their turn !

Oft, leaving what is natural and fit,
The current folly proves the ready wit ;
And authors think their reputation safe,
Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh.

Some, valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind ;
Fondly we think we honor merit then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men.
Parties in wit attend on those of state,
And public faction doubles private hate.
Pride, malice, folly, against Dryden rose,
In various shapes of parsons, critics, beaux :
But sense surviv'd, when merry jests were past ;
For rising merit will buoy up at last.
Might he return, and bless once more our eyes,
New Blackmores and new Milbourns must arise :

Nay, should great Homer lift his awful head,
Zoilus again would start up from the dead.
Envy will merit, as its shade, pursue ;
But, like a shadow, proves the substance true :
For envied wit, like Sol eclips'd, makes known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own.
When first that sun too pow'rful beams displays,
It draws up vapors which obscure its rays ;
But e'en those clouds at last adorn its way,
Reflect new glories, and augment the day.

Be thou the first true merit to befriend ;
His praise is lost who stays till all commend.
Short is the date, alas ! of modern rhymes,
And 'tis but just to let them live betimes.
No longer now that golden age appears,
When patriarch wits surviv'd a thousand years ;
Now length of fame (our second life) is lost,
And bare threescore is all e'en that can boast ;
Our sons their fathers' failing language see,
And such as Chaucer is shall Dryden be.
So when the faithful pencil has design'd
Some bright idea of the master's mind,
Where a new world leaps out at his command,
And ready Nature waits upon his hand ;
When the ripe colors soften and unite,
And sweetly melt into just shade and light ;

When mellowing years their full perfection give,
And each bold figure just begins to live;
The treach'rous colors the fair art betray,
And all the bright creation fades away.

Unhappy wit, like most mistaken things,
Atones not for that envy which it brings.
In youth alone its empty praise we boast,
But soon the short-liv'd vanity is lost;
Like some fair flow'r the early spring supplies,
That gaily blooms, but e'en in blooming dies.
What is this wit, which must our cares employ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy:
Then most our trouble still when most admir'd,
And still the more we give, the more requir'd:
Whose fame with pains we guard, but lose with Sure some to vex, but never all to please: [ease,
'Tis what the vicious fear, the virtuous shun;
By fools 'tis hated, and by knaves undone!

If wit so much from ign'rance undergo,
Ah let not learning too commence its foe!
Of old, those met rewards who could excel,
And such were prais'd who but endeavor'd well:
Though triumphs were to generals only due,
Crowns were reserv'd to grace the soldiers too.
Now, they who reach Parnassus' lofty crown,
Employ their pains to spurn some others down;
And while self-love each jealous writer rules,
Contending wits become the sport of fools:
But still the worst with most regret commend,
For each ill author is as bad a friend.

To what base ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urg'd through sacred lust of praise!
Ah! ne'er so dire a thirst of glory boast,
Nor in the critic let the man be lost.
Good nature and good sense must ever join:
To err, is human; to forgive, divine.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times.
No pardon vile obscenity should find,
Though wit and art conspire to move your mind;
But dullness with obscenity, must prove,
As shameful sure as impotence in love.
In the fat age of pleasure, wealth, and ease,
Sprang the rank weed, and thriv'd with large increase:

When love was all an easy monarch's care;
Seldom at council, never in a war:
Jilts rul'd the state, and statesmen farces writ;
Nay, wits had pensions, and young lords had wit:
The fair sat panting at a courtier's play,
And not a mask went unimprov'd away;
The modest fan was lifted up no more;
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before.
The following licence of a foreign reign
Did all the dregs of bold Socinus drain;
Then unbelieving priests reform'd the nation,
And taught more pleasant methods of salvation;
Where Heaven's free subjects might their rights dispute,

Lest God himself should seem too absolute:
Pulpits their sacred satire learn'd to spare,
And vice admir'd to find a flatt'rer there!

Encourag'd thus, wit's Titans brav'd the skies,
And the press groan'd with licens'd blasphemies.
These monsters, critics! with your darts engage,
Here point your thunder, and exhaust your rage!
Yet shun their fault, who, scandalously nice,
Will needs mistake an author into vice;
All seems infected that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye.

Learn then what morals critics ought to show,
For 'tis but half a judge's task to know.
'Tis not enough, taste, judgement, learning, join;
In all you speak, let truth and candor shine;
That not alone what to your sense is due
All may allow, but seek your friendship too.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense;
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence:
Some positive, persisting fops we know,
Who, if once wrong, will needs be always so;
But you, with pleasure, own your errors past,
And make each day a critique on the last.

'Tis not enough your counsel still be true;
Blunt truths more mischief than nice falsehoods do;

Men must be taught as if you taught them not,
And things unknown propos'd as things forgot.
Without good-breeding, truth is disapprov'd;
That only makes superior sense belov'd.

Be niggards of advice on no pretence;
For the worst avarice is that of sense.
With mean complacence ne'er betray your trust,
Nor be so civil as to prove unjust.

Fear not the anger of the wise to raise;
Those best can bear reproof who merit praise.

'Twere well might critics still this freedom take;

But Appius reddens at each word you speak,
And stares tremendous, with a threat'ning eye,
Like some fierce tyrant in old tapestry.
Fear most to tax an honorable fool,
Whose right it is, uncensur'd to be dull;
Such, without wit, are poets when they please,
As without learning they can take degrees.
Leave dang'rous truths to unsuccessful satires,
And flattery to fulsome dedicators, [more
Whom, when they praise, the world believes no
Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er.

'Tis best sometimes your censure to restrain,
And charitably let the dull be vain:
Your silence there is better than your spite;
For who can rail so long as they can write?
Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,
And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep.
False steps but help them to renew the race,
As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace.
What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
E'en to the dregs and squeezings of the brain;
Strain out the last dull droppings of their sense,
And rhyme with all the rage of impotence!

Such shameless bards we have; and yet 'tis true,
There are as mad, abandon'd critics too.
The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,

With his own tongue still edifies his ears,
And always list'ning to himself appears.
All books he reads, and all he reads assails,
From Dryden's Fables down to Dufey's Tales :
With him, most authors steal their works, or buy ;
Garth did not write his own Dispensary.
Name a new play, and he's the poet's friend,
Nay, show'd his faults ; but when would poets
mend ?

No place so sacred from such fops is barr'd,
Nor is Paul's church more safe than Paul's church-yard :

Nay, fly to altars ; there they'll talk you dead ;
For fools rush in where angels fear to tread.
Distrustful sense with modest caution speaks,
It still looks home, and short excursions makes ;
But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks,
And never shock'd, and never turn'd aside,
Bursts out, resistless, with a thund'ring tide.

But where's the man who counsel can bestow,

Still pleas'd to teach, and yet not proud to know ?
Unbiass'd, or by favor or by spite ;
Not dully prepossess'd, nor blindly right ;
Though learn'd, well-bred ; and though well-
bred, sincere ;

Modestly bold, and humanly severe ;
Who to a friend his faults can freely show,
And gladly praise the merit of a foe ?
Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd ;
A knowledge both of books and human kind ;
Gen'rous converse ; a soul exempt from pride ;
And love to praise, with reason on his side ?

Such once were critics ; such the happy few
Athens and Rome in better ages knew.
The mighty Stagyrte first left the shore,
Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore :
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mæonian Star.

Poets, a race long unconfin'd and free,
Still fond and proud of savage liberty,
Receiv'd his laws, and stood convinc'd 'twas fit,
Who conquer'd Nature, should preside o'er Wit.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence,
And without method talks us into sense ;
Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
The truest notions in the easiest way.
He who, supreme in judgement as in wit,
Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ ;
Yet judg'd with coolness, though he sung with
fire ;

His precepts teach but what his works inspire.
Our critics take a contrary extreme ; [phelgm ;
They judge with fury, but they write with
Nor suffers Horace more in wrong translations
By wits, than critics in as wrong quotations.

See Dionysius Homer's thoughts refine,
And call new beauties forth from ev'ry line !
Fancy and art in gay Petronius please ;
The scholar's learning, with the courtier's ease.

In grave Quintilian's copious work, we find
The justest rules and clearest method join'd ;
Thus useful arms in magazines we place,
All rang'd in order, and dispos'd with grace ;

But less to please the eye, than arm the hand ;
Still fit for use, and ready at command.

Thee, bold Longinus, all the Nine inspire,
And bless their critic with a poet's fire :
An ardent judge, who, zealous in his trust,
With warmth gives sentence, yet is always just ;

Whose own example strengthens all his laws ;
And is himself that great sublime he draws.

Thus long succeeding critics justly reign'd,
Licence repress'd, and useful laws ordain'd :
Learning and Rome alike in empire grew,
And arts still follow'd where her eagles flew ;
From the same foes, at last, both felt their doom ;

And the same age saw learning fall, and Rome.
With tyranny then superstition join'd ;
As that the body, this enslav'd the mind :
Much was believ'd, but little understood ;
And to be dull was construed to be good ;
A second deluge learning thus o'er-ran ;
And the monks finish'd what the Goths began.

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
(The glory of the priesthood, and the shame !)
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.

But see ! each muse, in Leo's golden days,
Starts from her trance, and trims her wither'd
bays ;

Rome's ancient genius, o'er its ruins spread,
Shakes off the dust, and rears its rev'rend head.
Then sculpture and her sister-arts revive ;
Stones leap'd to form, and rocks began to live :
With sweeter notes each rising temple rung ;
A Raphael painted, and a Vida sung.

Immortal Vida ! on whose honour'd brow
The poet's bays and critic's ivy grow :

Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame !

But soon, by impious arms from Latium chas'd,
Their ancient bounds the banish'd muses pass'd ;
Thence arts all o'er the northern world advance,
But critic-learning flourish'd most in France ;
The rules a nation born to serve obeys,
And Boileau still in right of Horace sways.
But we, brave Britons, foreign laws despis'd,
And kept unconquer'd and uncivilis'd ;
Fierce for the liberties of wit, and bold,
We still defied the Romans, as of old.

Yet some there were, among the sounder few
Of those who less presum'd, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws.
Such was the muse whose rules and practice tell,
" Nature's chief master-piece is writing well."
Such was Roscommon, not more learn'd than good,

With manners gen'rous as his noble blood ;
To him the wit of Greece and Rome was known,
And ev'ry author's merit but his own.
Such late was Walsh, the muse's judge and friend,
Who justly knew to blame or to commend ;
To failings mild, but zealous for desert ;
The clearest head, and the sincerest heart,

This humble praise, lamented shade! receive;
 This praise at least a grateful muse may give:
 The muse, whose early voice you taught to sing,
 Prescrib'd her heights, and prun'd her tender
     wing,

(Her guide now lost) no more attempts to rise,
 But in low numbers short excursions tries;
 Content, if hence th' unlearn'd their wants may
     view;

The learn'd reflect on what before they knew:
 Careless of censure, nor too fond of fame;
 Still pleas'd to praise, yet not afraid to blame:
 Averse alike to flatter, or offend;
 Not free from faults, nor yet too vain to mend.

§ 10. The Rape of the Lock. POPE.

Nolueram, Belinda, tuos violare capillos;
 Sed juvat, hoc precibus me tribuisse tuis.

MART.

CANTO I.

WHAT dire offence from am'rous causes
     springs,

What mighty contests rise from trivial things,
 I sing—This verse to CARYL, Muse! is due;
 This e'en Belinda may vouchsafe to view:
 Slight is the subject, but not so the praise,
 If she inspire, and he approve my lays. [pel

Say what strange motive, goddess! could com-
 A well-bred lord t' assault a gentle belle?
 O say, what stranger cause, yet unexplor'd,
 Could make a gentle belle reject a lord?
 In tasks so bold can little men engage?
 And in soft bosoms dwells such mighty rage?

Sol through white curtains shot a tim'rous ray,
 And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day:
 Now lap-dogs give themselves the rousing shake,
 And sleepless lovers, just at twelve, awake:
 Thrice rung the bell, the slipper knock'd the
     ground,

And the press'd watch return'd a silver sound.
 Belinda still her downy pillow press'd,
 Her guardian Sylph prolong'd the balmy rest—
 'Twas he had summon'd to her silent bed
 The morning-dream that hover'd o'er her head—
 A youth more glitt'ring than a birth-night beau,
 That e'en in slumber caus'd her cheek to glow,
 Seem'd to her ear his winning lips to lay,
 And thus in whispers said, or seem'd to say:

Fairest of mortals, thou distinguish'd care
 Of thousand bright inhabitants of air!
 If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,
 Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;
 Of airy elves by moonlight shadows seen,
 The silver token, and the circled green;
 Or virgins visited by angel-powers,
 With golden crowns, and wreaths of heavenly
     flow'rs;

Hear and believe! thy own importance know,
 Nor bound thy narrow view to things below.
 Some secret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,
 To maids alone and children are reveal'd:
 What though no credit doubting wits may give,
 The fair and innocent shall still believe.

Know then, unnumber'd spirits round thee fly,
 The light militia of the lower sky:

These, though unseen, are ever on the wing;
 Hang o'er the box, or hover round the ring.
 Think what an equipage thou hast in air,
 And view with scorn two pages and a chair.
 As now your own, our beings were of old,
 And once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould;
 Thence, by a soft transition, we repair
 From earthly vehicles to these of air.

Think not, when woman's transient breath is
 That all her vanities at once are dead; [fled,
 Succeeding vanities she still regards,

And, though she plays no more, o'erlooks the
 Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive, [cards:
 And love of ombre, after death survive;
 For when the fair in all their pride expire,
 To their first elements their souls retire:

The sprites of fiery termagants in flame
 Mount up, and take a salamander's name:

Soft yielding maids to water glide away,
 And sip, with nymphs, their elemental tea:

The graver prude sinks downward to a gnome,
 In search of mischief still on earth to roam:

The light coquettes in sylphs aloft repair,
 And sport and flutter in the fields of air.

Know further yet—whoever fair and chaste
 Rejects mankind, is by some sylph embrac'd:
 For spirits, freed from mortal laws, with ease
 Assume what sexes and what shapes they please.
 What guards the purity of melting maids
 In courtly balls and midnight masquerades,
 Safe from the treach'rous friend, the daring spark,

The glance by day, the whisper in the dark,
 When kind occasion prompts their warm desires,
 When music softens, and when dancing fires?
 'Tis but their sylph, the wise celestials know,
 Though honor is the word with men below.

Some nymphs there are, too conscious of their face,

For life predestin'd to the gnomes embrace.
 These swell their prospects and exalt their
     pride,

When offers are disdain'd, and love denied:
 Then gay ideas crowd the vacant brain, [train,
 While peers, and dukes, and all their sweeping
 And garters, stars, and coronets, appear,
 And in soft sounds, "your grace" salutes their ear.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul,
 Instruct the eye of young coquettes to roll,
 Teach infant cheeks a bidden blush to know,
 And little hearts to flutter at a beau.

Oft, when the world imagine women stray,
 The sylphs through mystic mazes guide their
 Through all the giddy circle they pursue, [way:
 And old impertinence expel by new.

What tender maid but must a victim fall
 To one man's treat, but for another's ball?
 When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,

If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand?
 With varying vanities, from ev'ry part,
 They shift the moving toy-shop of their heart;

Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots sword-knots strive,

Beaux banish beaux, and coaches coaches drive.

This erring mortals levity may call;

Oh blind to truth! the sylphs contrive it all.

Of these am I, who thy protection claim;

A watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name.

Late as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air,

In the clear mirror of thy ruling star,

I saw, alas! some dread event impend,

Ere to the main this morning sun descend;

But Heaven reveals not what, or how, or where;

Warn'd by thy Sylph, oh pious maid, beware!

This to disclose is all thy guardian can:

Beware of all, but most beware of man!

He said: when Shock, who thought she slept too long,

Leap'd up, and wak'd his mistress with his tongue.

'Twas then, Belinda, if report say true,

Thy eyes first open'd on a billet-doux; [read,

Wounds, charms, and ardors were no sooner

But all the vision vanish'd from thy head.

And now, unveil'd, the toilet stands display'd;

Each silver vase in mystic order laid.

First, rob'd in white, the nymph intent adores,

With head uncover'd, the cosmetic pow'rs:

A heavenly image in the glass appears;

To that she bends, to that her eyes she rears;

Th' inferior priestess, at her altar's side,

Trembling, begins the sacred rites of pride.

Unnumber'd treasures ope at once, and here

The various off'rings of the world appear;

From each she nicely culls with curious toil,

And decks the goddess with the glitt'ring spoil.

This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,

And all Arabia breathes from yonder box:

The tortoise here and elephant unite, [white:

Transform'd to combs, the speckled and the

Here files of pins extend their shining rows,

Puffs, powders, patches, bibles, billet-doux.

Now awful beauty puts on all its arms;

The fair each moment rises in her charms,

Repairs her smiles, awakens ev'ry grace,

And calls forth all the wonders of her face.

Sees by degrees a purer blush arise,

And keener lightnings quicken in her eyes.

The busy Sylphs surround their darling care;

These set the head, and those divide the hair;

Some fold the sleeve, whilst others plait the gown;

And Betty's prais'd for labors not her own.

CANTO II.

NOT with more glories, in th' ethereal plain,

The sun first rises o'er the purpled main,

Than, issuing forth, the rival of his beams

Launch'd on the bosom of the silver Thames.

Fair nymphs, and well-drest youths, around her

But ev'ry eye was fix'd on her alone. [shone;

On her white breast a sparkling cross she wore,

Which Jews might kiss, and Infidels adore.

Her lively looks a sprightly mind disclose,

Quick as her eyes, and as unfixt as those:

Favors to none, to all she smiles extends;

Oft she rejects, but never once offends.

Bright as the sun her eyes the gazers strike,

And, like the sun, they shine on all alike.

Yet graceful ease, and sweetness void of pride,

Might hide their faults, if belles had faults to

If to her share some female errors fall, [hide:

Look on her face, and you'll forget them all.

This nymph, to the destruction of mankind,

Nourish'd two Locks, which graceful hung behind

In equal curls, and well conspir'd to deck

With shining ringlets the smooth iv'ry neck.

Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,

And mighty hearts are held in slender chains.

With hairy springes we the birds betray;

Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey;

Fair tresses man's imperial race ensnare,

And beauty draws us with a single hair.

Th' advent'rous Baron the bright locks ad-

mir'd;

He saw, he wish'd, and to the prize aspir'd.

Resolv'd to win, he meditates the way,

By force to ravish, or by fraud betray;

For when success a lover's toil attends,

Few ask, if fraud or force attain'd his ends.

For this, ere Phœbus rose, he had implor'd

Propitious Heaven, and ev'ry pow'r ador'd;

But chiefly Love—to Love an altar built

Of twelve vast French romances, neatly gilt.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves;

And all the trophies of his former loves;

With tender billet-doux he lights the pyre,

And breathes three am'rous sighs to raise the fire;

Then prostrate falls, and begs, with ardent eyes,

Soon to obtain, and long possess the prize.

The pow'rs gave ear, and granted half his pray'r;

The rest, the winds dispers'd in empty air.

But now secure the painted vessel glides,

The sun-beams trembling on the floating tides;

While melting music steals upon the sky,

And soften'd sounds along the water die;

Smooth flow the waves, the Zephyrs gently play;

Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay.

All but the Sylph—with careful thoughts oppress'd,

Th' impending woe sat heavy on his breast.

He summon'd straight his denizens of air,

The lucid squadrons round the sails repair:

Soft o'er the shrouds aerial whispers breathe,

That seem'd but Zephyrs to the train beneath.

Some to the sun their insect wings unfold,

Waft on the breeze, or sink in clouds of gold;

Transparent forms, too fine for mortal sight,

Their fluid bodies half-dissolv'd in light.

Loose to the wind their airy garments flew,

Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew,

Dipp'd in the richest tincture of the skies,

Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes;

Where ev'ry beam new transient colors flings,

Colors that change whene'er they wave their

Amid the circle on the gilded mast, [wings.

Superior by the head, was Ariel plac'd;

His purple pinions op'ning to the sun,

He rais'd his azure wand, and thus begun:

Ye sylphs and sylphids, to your chief give ear;

Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and dæmons, hear!

Ye know the spheres and various tasks assign'd,
By laws eternal, to th' aërial kind.
Some in the fields of purest æther play,
And bask and whiten in the blaze of day;
Some guide the course of wand'ring orbs on high,

Or roll the planets through the boundless sky;
Some, less refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light,
Pursue the stars that shoot athwart the night,
Or suck the mists in grosser air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow,
Or brew fierce tempests on the wint'ry main,
Or o'er the glebe distill the kindly rain:
Others on earth o'er human race preside,
Watch all their ways, and all their actions guide:
Of these the chief the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the British throne.

Our humble province is to tend the fair,
Not a less pleasing, though less glorious care;
To save the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale;
To draw fresh colors from the vernal flow'rs;
To steal from rainbows, ere they drop in show'rs,
A brighter wash; to curl their waving hairs,
Assist their blushes, and inspire their airs;
Nay oft, in dreams, invention we bestow,
To change a flounce, or add a furbelow.

This day black omens threat the brightest fair
That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care;
Some dire disaster, or by force, or slight;
But what, or where, the fates have wrapt in
night.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail China jar receive a flaw;
Or stain her honor, or her new brocade;
Forget her pray'rs, or miss a masquerade;
Or lose her heart, or necklace, at a ball;
Or whether Heav'n has doom'd that Shock must fall.

Haste then, ye spirits! to your charge repair:
The flutt'ring fan be Zephyretta's care;
The drops to thee, Brillante, we consign;
And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine;
Do thou, Crispissa, tend her fav'rite lock;
Ariel himself shall be the guard of Shock.

To fifty chosen sylphs, of special note,
We trust the important charge, the Petticoat:
Oft have we known that seven-fold fence to fail,
Though stiff with hoops, and arm'd with ribs of whale:

Form a strong line about the silver bound,
And guard the wide circumference around.

Whatever spirit, careless of his charge,
His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
Shall feel sharp vengeance soon o'ertake him
Be stopp'd in vials, or transfix'd with pins; [sins,
Or plung'd in lakes of bitter washes lie,
Or wedg'd whole ages in a bodkin's eye:
Gums and pomatums shall his flight restrain,
While clogg'd he beats his silken wings in vain:
Or alum styptics, with contracting pow'r,
Shrink his thin essence like a shrivell'd flow'r:
Or, as Ixion fix'd, the wretch shall feel
The giddy motion of the whirling wheel;

In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow,
And tremble at the sea that froths below.

He spoke; the spirits from the sails descend;
Some, orb in orb, around the nymph extend;
Some thrid the mazy ringlets of her hair;
Some hang upon the pendants of her ear;
With beating hearts the dire event they wait,
Anxious, and trembling for the birth of fate.

CANTO III.

CLOSE by those meads, for ever crown'd
with flow'rs, [tow'rs,
Where Thames with pride surveys his rising
There stands a structure of majestic frame,
Which from the neighb'ring Hampton takes its name.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home;
Here thou, great Anna! whom three realms obey, [tea.

Dost sometimes counsel take, and sometimes

Hither the heroes and the nymphs resort,
To taste a while the pleasures of a court;
In various talk the instructive hours they pass'd,
Who gave the ball, or paid the visit last;
One speaks the glory of a British queen,
And one describes a charming Indian screen;
A third interprets motions, looks, and eyes;
At ev'ry word a reputation dies.

Snuff, or the fan, supply each pause of chat;
With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that.

Meanwhile, declining from the noon of day,
The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray;
The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang, that jurymen may dine;
The merchant from th' Exchange returns in
And the long labors of the toilet cease. [peace,
Belinda now, whom thirst of fame invites,
Burns to encounter two advent'rous knights,
At ombre singly to decide their doom;
And swells her breast with conquests yet to come.

Straight the three bands prepare in arms to join,
Each band the number of the sacred nine.

Soon as she spreads her hand, the aërial guard
Descend, and sit on each important card:
First Ariel perch'd upon a matadore,
Then each according to the rank they bore;
For sylphs, yet mindful of their ancient race,
Are, as when women, wondrous fond of place.

Behold, four kings in majesty rever'd,
With hoary whiskers and a forked beard; [flow'r,
And four fair queens whose hands sustain a
Th' expressive emblem of their softer pow'r;
Four knaves in garbs succinct, a trusty band,
Caps on their heads, and halberds in their hands;

And party-colored troops, a shining train,
Drawn forth to combat on the velvet plain.

The skilful nymph reviews her force with
care,

Let Spades be trumps! she said, and trumps
they were.

Now move to war her sable matadores,
In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors.
Spadillo first, unconquerable lord!
Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board.

As many more Manillo forc'd to yield,
And march'd a victor from the verdant field.
Him Basto follow'd; but his fate, more hard,
Gain'd but one trump, and one plebeian card.
With his broad sabre next, a chief in years,
The hoary majesty of Spades appears,
Puts forth one manly leg, to sight reveal'd,
The rest his many-color'd robe conceal'd.
The rebel knave, who dares his prince engage,
Proves the just victim of his royal rage.
E'en mighty Pam, that kings and queens o'er-threw,

And mow'd down armies in the fights of Loo,
Sad chance of war! now destitute of aid,
Falls undistinguish'd by the victor Spade!

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the Baron fate inclines the field.
His warlike Amazon her host invades,
Th' imperial consort of the crown of Spades.
The Club's black tyrant first her victim died,
Spite of his haughty mien, and barb'rous pride.
What boots the regal circle on his head;
His giant limbs, in state unwieldy spread;
That long behind he trails his pompous robe,
And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe?

The Baron now his Diamonds pours apace;
Th' embroider'd king who shows but half his face, [bin'd,
And his refulgent queen, with pow'rs com-
Of broken troops an easy conquest find.
Clubs, Diamonds, Hearts, in wild disorder seen,
With throngs promiscuous strow the level
green.

Thus when dispers'd a routed army runs,
Of Asia's troops, and Afric's sable sons,
With like confusion diff'rent nations fly,
Of various habit, and of various dye;
The pierc'd battalions disunited fall [all.
In heaps on heaps; one fate o'erwhelms them

The knave of Diamonds tries his wily arts,
And wins (oh shameful chance!) the queen
Hearts.

At this, the blood the virgin's cheek forsook;
A livid paleness spreads o'er all her look;
She sees, and trembles at the approaching ill,
Just in the jaws of ruin, and Codille.

And now (as oft in some distemper'd state)
On one nice trick depends the gen'ral fate,
An ace of Hearts steps forth: the king, unseen, [queen:

Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive
He springs to vengeance with an eager pace,
And falls like thunder on the prostrate ace.
The Nymph exulting fills with shouts the sky;
The walls, the woods, and long canals reply.

O thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate,
Too soon dejected, and too soon elate,
Sudden these honors shall be snatch'd away,
And curs'd for ever this victorious day.

For, lo! the board with cups and spoons is
crown'd,

The berries crackle, and the mill turns round:
On shining altars of Japan they raise
The silver lamp; the fiery spirits blaze:
From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
While China's earth receives the smoking tide:
At once they gratify their scent and taste,
And frequent cups prolong the rich repast.
Straight hover round the Fair her airy band:
Some, as she sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd;
Some o'er her lap their careful plumes display'd,
Trembling, and conscious of the rich brocade.
Coffee (which makes the politician wise,
And see through all things with his half-shut
Sent up in vapours to the Baron's brain [eyes)
New stratagems, the radiant Lock to gain.
Ah, cease, rash youth! desist, ere 'tis too late,
Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air,
She dearly pays for Nisus' injur'd hair!

But when to mischief mortals bend their will,
How soon they find fit instruments of ill!
Just then Clarissa drew, with tempting grace,
A two-edg'd weapon from her shining case:
So ladies, in romance, assist their knight,
Present the spear, and arm him for the fight.
He takes the gift with rev'rence, and extends
The little engine on his fingers' ends;
This just behind Belinda's neck he spread,
As o'er the fragrant steams she bends her head.
Swift to the Lock a thousand sprites repair,
A thousand wings, by turns, blow back the hair; [ear;
And thrice they twitch'd the diamond in her Thrice she looks back, and thrice the foe drew near.

Just in that instant, anxious Ariel sought
The close recesses of the virgin's thought:
As on the nosegay in her breast reclin'd,
He watch'd the ideas rising in her mind.
Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,
An earthly lover lurking at her heart.
Amaz'd, confus'd, he found his pow'r expir'd;
Resign'd to fate, and with a sigh retir'd.

The Peer now spreads the glitt'ring forfex
wide,

T' inclose the Lock; now joins it to divide.
E'en then, before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched sylph too fondly interpos'd;
Fate urg'd the shears, and cut the sylph in
But airy substance soon unites again; [twain,
The meeting points the sacred hair dis sever
From the fair head, for ever, and for ever! [eyes,
Then flash'd the living lightning from her
And screams of horror rend th' affrighted skies.
Not louder shrieks to pitying heaven are cast,
When husbands or when lapdogs breathe their
last;

Or when rich China vessels, fall'n from high,
In glitt'ring dust and painted fragments lie!

Let wreaths of triumph now my temples
twine,

The victor cried: the glorious prize is mine!

While fish in streams, or birds delight in air,
Or in a coach and six the British fair;
As long as Atalantis shall be read,
Or the small pillow grace a lady's bed;
While visits shall be paid on solemn days,
When num'rous wax-lights in bright order blaze;

While nymphs take treats, or assignations give,
So long my honor, name, and praise shall live!
What time would spare, from steel receives its
date,

And monuments, like men, submit to fate!
Steel could the labor of the gods destroy,
And strike to dust th' imperial tow'rs of Troy;
Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
And hew triumphal arches to the ground.

What wonder, then, fair Nymph! thy hairs should feel

The conqu'ring force of unresisted steel?"

CANTO IV.

BUT anxious cares the pensive nymph oppress'd,
And secret passions labor'd in her breast. [press'd,
Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
Not scornful virgins who their charms survive,
Not ardent lovers robb'd of all their bliss,
Not ancient ladies when refus'd a kiss,
Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting die,
Not Cynthia when her mantua's pinn'd awry,
E'er felt such rage, resentment, and despair,
As thou, sad virgin! for thy ravish'd hair.

For, that sad moment, when the sylphs with-
And Ariel weeping from Belinda flew, [drew,
Umbriel, a dusky melancholy sprite,
As ever sullied the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repair'd to search the gloomy cave of Spleen.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the Gnome,
And in a vapor reach'd the dismal dome:
No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows;
The dreaded East is all the wind that blows.
Here, in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever on her pensive bed,
Pain at her side, and Megrim at her head,

Two handmaids wait the throne! alike in
place,

But diff'ring far in figure and in face.
Here stood Ill-nature, like an ancient maid,
Her wrinkled form in black and white array'd,
With store of pray'rs for mornings, nights, and noons,

Her hand is fill'd; her bosom with lampoons.
There Affectation, with a sickly mien,
Shows in her cheek the roses of eighteen;
Practis'd to lisp, and hang the head aside,
Faints into airs, and languishes with pride;
On the rich quilt sinks with becoming woe,
Wrapt in a gown, for sickness and for show.
The fair ones feel such maladies as these,
When each new night-dress gives a new disease.

A constant vapor o'er the palace flies,
Strange phantoms rising as the mists arise;

Dreadful as hermits' dreams in haunted shades,
Or bright as visions of expiring maids.

Now glaring fiends, and snakes on rolling
spires,

Pale spectres, gaping tombs, and purple fires;
Now lakes of liquid gold, Elysian scenes,
And crystal domes, and angels in machines.

Unnumber'd throngs on ev'ry side are seen
Of bodies chang'd to various forms by Spleen.
Here living tea-pots stand, one arm held out,
One bent; the handle this, and that the spout:
A pipkin there, like Homer's tripod, walks;
Here sighs a jar, and there a goose-pie talks;
Men prove with child, as pow'rful fancy
works,

And maids, turn'd bottles, call aloud for corks.

Safe pass'd the Gnome through this fantastic
band,

A branch of healing spleen-wort in his hand:
Then thus address'd the Pow'r:—Hail, wayward queen!

Who rule the sex to fifty from fifteen:

Parent of vapors, and of female wit,

Who give th' hysteric or poetic fit;

On various tempers act, by various ways,
Make some take physic, others scribble plays;
Who cause the proud their visits to delay,
And send the godly in a pet to pray.

A Nymph there is, that all thy pow'r disdains,
And thousands more in equal mirth maintains.
But, oh! if e'er thy Gnome could spoil a grace,
Or raise a pimple on a beauteous face,

Like citron-waters matrons' cheeks inflame,
Or change complexions at a losing game;
If e'er with hairy horns I planted heads,
Or rumpled petticoats, or tumbled beds,
Or caus'd suspicion when no soul was rude,
Or compos'd the head-dress of a prude,
Or e'er to costive lapdogs gave disease,

Which not the tears of brightest eyes could ease;
Hear me, and touch Belinda with chagrin:
That single act gives half the world the spleen.

The goddess, with a discontented air,
Seems to reject him, though she grants his
pray'r. [binds,

A wondrous bag with both her hands she
Like that where once Ulysses held the winds;
There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues;

A vial next she fills with fainting fears,
Soft sorrows, melting griefs, and flowing tears.
The Gnome rejoicing bears her gifts away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day.

Sunk in Thalestris' arms the Nymph he found,
Her eyes dejected, and her hair unbound:
Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
And all the Furies issued at the vent.
Belinda burns with more than mortal ire,
And fierce Thalestris fans the rising fire.

O wretched maid! she spread her hands, and cried, [plied)

(While Hampton's echoes, Wretched maid! re-

Was it for this you took such constant care
 The bodkin, comb, and essence to prepare?
 For this your Locks in paper durance bound,
 For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around?
 For this with fillets strain'd your tender head,
 And bravely bore the double loads of lead!
 Gods! shall the ravisher display your hair,
 While the fops envy, and the ladies stare!
 Honor forbid! at whose unrivall'd shrine
 Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign.
 Methinks already I your tears survey,
 Already hear the horrid things they say;
 Already see you a degraded toast,
 And all your honor in a whisper lost!
 How shall I, then, your hapless fame defend?
 'Twill then be infamy to seem your friend!
 And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize,
 Expos'd through crystal to the gazing eyes,
 And heighten'd by the diamond's circling rays,
 On that rapacious hand for ever blaze?
 Sooner shall grass in Hyde-park Circus grow,
 And wits take lodgings in the sound of Bow;
 Sooner let earth, air, sea, to chaos fall;
 Men, monkeys, lapdogs, parrots, perish all!

She said; then raging to Sir Plume repairs,
 And bids her beau demand the precious hairs;
 (Sir Plume of amber snuff-box justly vain,
 And the nice conduct of a clouded cane.)
 With earnest eyes, and round unthinking face,
 He first the snuff-box open'd, then the case,
 And thus broke out—"My Lord, why, what
 "the devil!
 "Z—ds! damn the Lock! 'fore Gad, you
 "must be civil!
 "Plague on't! 'tis past a jest—nay, prithee,
 "pox! [his box.
 "Give her the hair?"—he spoke, and rapp'd
 It grieves me much (replied the Peer again)
 Who speaks so well should ever speak in vain;
 But by this Lock, this sacred Lock, I swear,
 (Which never more shall join its parted hair;
 Which never more its honors shall renew,
 Clipp'd from the lovely head where late it grew),
 That while my nostrils draw the vital air,
 This hand, which won it, shall for ever wear.
 He spoke, and speaking in proud triumph
 spread
 The long-contended honors of her head. [so;
 But Umbriel, hateful Gnome! forbears not
 He breaks the vial whence the sorrows flow.
 Then, see! the nymph in 'beauteous grief appears, [tears:
 Her eyes half-languishing, half-drown'd in
 On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,
 Which with a sigh she rais'd, and thus she
 For ever curs'd be this detested day, [said:
 Which snatch'd my best, my fav'rite curl away!
 Happy, ah ten times happy, had I been,
 If Hampton-Court these eyes had never seen!
 Yet am not I the first mistaken maid
 By love of courts to num'rous ills betray'd.
 Oh, had I rather unadmir'd remain'd
 In some lone isle, or distant northern land;

Where the gilt chariot never marks the way,
 Where none learn Ombre, none e'er taste
 bohea;

There kept my charms conceal'd from mortal
 Like roses that in deserts bloom and die. [eye,
 What mov'd my mind with youthful lords to roam?

O had I stay'd, and said my pray'rs at home!
 'Twas this the morning omens seem'd to tell:
 Thrice from my trembling hand the patch-box fell;

The tott'ring China shook without a wind;
 Nay, Poll sat mute, and Shock was most un-
 kind!

A Sylph too warn'd me of the threats of fate
 In mystic visions, now believ'd too late!
 See the poor remnants of these slighted hairs!
 My hand shall rend what e'en thy rapine
 spares:

These, in two sable ringlets taught to break,
 Once gave new beauties to the snowy neck;
 The sister lock now sits uncouth alone,
 And in its fellow's fate foresees its own;
 Uncurl'd it hangs, the fatal shears demands,
 And tempts once more thy sacrilegious hands.
 Oh hadst thou, cruel! been content to seize Hairs less in sight, or any hairs but these!

CANTO V.

SHE said: the pitying audience melt in tears:
 But Fate and Jove had stopp'd the Baron's ears.
 In vain Thalestris with reproach assails;
 For who can move when fair Belinda fails?
 Not half so fix'd the Trojan could remain,
 While Anna begg'd, and Dido rag'd in vain.
 Then grave Clarissa graceful wav'd her fan;
 Silence ensu'd, and thus the nymph began:

Say, why are beauties prais'd and honor'd
 most, [toast?
 The wise man's passion, and the vain man's
 Why deck'd with all that land and sea afford,
 Why angels call'd, and angel-like ador'd?
 Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd
 beaux,

Why bows the side box from its inmost rows?
 How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
 Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains:
 That men may say, when we the front-box
 grace,

Behold the first in virtue as in face!
 Oh! if to dance all night, and dress all day,
 Charm'd the small pox, or chas'd old age away,
 Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce,

Or who would learn one earthly thing of use?
 To patch, nay ogle, might become a saint;
 Nor could it, sure, be such a sin to paint.
 But since, alas! frail beauty must decay;
 Curl'd or uncurl'd, since locks will turn to grey;
 Since, painted or not painted, all shall fade;
 And she who scorns a man must die à maid;
 What then remains, but well our pow'r to use,
 And keep good humor still, whate'er we lose?

And trust me, dear! good humor can prevail,
When airs, and flights, and screams, and scolding fail.

Beauties in vain their pretty eyes may roll;
Charms strike the sight, but merit wins the soul.

So spoke the dame, but no applause ensued;
Belinda frown'd, Thalestris call'd her prude.

To arms, to arms! the fierce virago cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies.

All side in parties, and begin th' attack:
Fans clap, silks rustle, and tough whalebones crack;

Heroes' and heroines' shouts confus'dly rise,
And bass and treble voices strike the skies.

No common weapons in their hands are found;
Like gods they fight, nor dread a mortal
wound.

So when bold Homer makes the gods engage,
And heavenly breasts with human passions
rage,

'Gainst Pallas, Mars; Latona, Hermes, arms;
And all Olympus rings with loud alarms;

Jove's thunder roars, heav'n trembles all around,
Blue Neptune storms, the bellowing deeps
resound;

Earth shakes her nodding tow'rs, the ground
gives way,

And the pale ghosts start at the flash of day.

Triumphant Umbriel on a sponce's height
Clapp'd his glad wings, and sat to view the fight:

Propt on their bodkin spears, the sprites survey
The growing combat, or assist the fray.

While through the press enrag'd Thalestris
flies,

And scatters death around from both her eyes,
A beau and witling perish'd in the throng;

One died in metaphor, and one in song.

"Oh cruel nymph! a living death I bear,"

Cried Dapperwit, and sunk beside his chair.

A mournful glance Sir Fopling upwards cast;
"Those eyes are made so killing!" was his

Thus on Mæander's flow'ry margin lies [last.
Th' expiring swan, and as he sings he dies.

When bold Sir Plume had drawn Clarissa
down,

Chloe stepp'd in, and kill'd him with a frown;
She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain;

But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weighs the men's wits against the lady's hair;

The doubtful beam long nods from side to side;
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside.

See fierce Belinda on the Baron flies,
With more than usual lightning in her eyes:

Nor fear'd the chief th' unequal fight to try,

Who sought no more than on his foe to die.

But this bold lord, with manly strength endued,
She with one finger and a thumb subdued:

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,

A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;

The Gnomes direct, to ev'ry atom just,

The pungent grains of titillating dust;

Sudden with starting tears each eye o'erflows,
And the high dome re-echoes to his nose.

Now meet thy fate, incens'd Belinda cried,
And drew a deadly bodkin from her side

(The same, his ancient personage to deck,
Her great-great-grandsire wore about his neck,

In three seal rings; which, after melted down,
Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown:

Her infant grand-dame's whistle next it grew,
The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew;

Then in a bodkin grac'd her mother's hairs,
Which long she wore, and now Belinda wears).

Boast not my fall, he cried, insulting foe!
Thou by some other shalt be laid as low:

Nor think, to die dejects my lofty mind;
All that I dread is leaving you behind!

Rather than so, ah let me still survive,
And burn in Cupid's flames—but burn alive.

Restore the Lock! she cries; and all around
Restore the Lock! the vaulted roofs rebound.

Not fierce Othello in so loud a strain
Roar'd for the handkerchief that caus'd his pain.

But see how oft ambitious aims are cross'd,
And chiefs contend till all the prize is lost!

The Lock, obtain'd with guilt, and kept with pain,

In ev'ry place is sought, but sought in vain:
With such a prize no mortal must be blest,

So heaven decrees! with heaven who can contest?

Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere,
Since all things lost on earth are treasur'd there.

There heroes' wits are kept in pond'rous vases,
And beaux' in snuff-boxes and tweezer cases.

There broken vows and death-bed alms are
found,

And lovers' hearts with ends of ribband bound;
The courtier's promises, and sick man's pray'rs,

The smiles of harlots, and the tears of heirs,
Cages for gnats, and chains to yoke a flea,

Dried butterflies, and tomes of casuistry.

But trust the Muse—she saw it upward rise,
Though mark'd by none but quick poetic eyes:

So Rome's great founder to the heavens with-
To Proculus alone confest in view. [drew,

A sudden star, it shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair.

Not Berenice's Locks first rose so bright,
The heavens bespangling with dishevell'd light.

The Sylphs behold it kindling as it flies,
And pleas'd pursue its progress through the skies.

This the beau-monde shall from the Mall sur-
And hail with music its propitious ray; [vey,

This the blest lover shall for Venus take,
And send up vows from Rosamonda's lake.

This Partridge soon shall view in cloudless skies,
When next he looks through Galileo's eyes;

And hence th' egregious wizard shall foredoom
The fate of Louis and the fall of Rome.

Then cease, bright nymph! to mourn thy ravish'd hair,

Which adds new glory to the shiningsphere!
Not all the tresses that fair head can boast,

Shall draw such envy as the Lock you lost.

For, after all the murders of your eye,
When, after millions slain, yourself shall die;
When those fair suns shall set, as set they must,
And all those tresses shall be laid in dust;
This Lock the Muse shall consecrate to fame,
And 'midst the stars inscribe Belinda's name.

§ 11. Elegy to the Memory of an unfortunate Lady. Pope.

WHAT beck'ning ghost, along the moon-light
shade,

Invites my steps, and points to yonder glade?
'Tis she!—but why that bleeding bosom gor'd!
Why dimly gleams the visionary sword?
Oh ever beauteous, ever friendly! tell,
Is it in heaven a crime to love too well?
To bear too tender or too firm a heart,
To act a lover's or a Roman's part?
Is there no bright reversion in the sky
For those who greatly think, or bravely die?

Why bade ye else, ye pow'rs! her soul aspire
Above the vulgar flight of low desire!
Ambition first sprung from your blest abodes,
The glorious fault of angels and of gods!
Thence to their images on earth it flows,
And in the breasts of kings and heroes glows.
Most souls, 'tis true, but peep out once an age,
Dull, sullen pris'ners in the body's cage;
Dim lights of life, that burn a length of years,
Useless, unseen, as lamps in sepulchres;
Like eastern kings, a lazy state they keep,
And close confin'd to their own palace, sleep.

From these perhaps (ere nature bid her die)
Fate snatch'd her early to the pitying sky.
As into air the purer spirits flow,
And separate from their kindred dregs below;
So flew the soul to its congenial place,
Nor left one virtue to redeem her race.

But thou false guardian of a charge too good,
Thou mean deserter of thy brother's blood!
See on these ruby lips the trembling breath,
These cheeks, now fading at the blast of death;
Cold is that breast which warm'd the world
before,

And those love-darting eyes must roll no more.
Thus, if eternal justice rules the ball,
Thus shall your wives and thus your children
On all the line a sudden vengeance waits, [fall:
And frequent hearses shall besiege your gates:
There passengers shall stand, and pointing say,
(While the long fun'ral blacken all the way),
Lo! these were they, whose souls the Furies
steel'd,

And curs'd with hearts unknowing how to yield;
Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
The gaze of fools, and pageant of a day!
So perish all, whose breast ne'er learn'd to glow
For others' good, or melt at others' woe.

What can atone, oh ever-injur'd shade!
Thy fate unpitied, and thy rites unpaid?
No friend's complaint, no kind domestic tear
Pleas'd thy pale ghost, or grac'd thy mournful bier:

By foreign hands thy dying eyes were clos'd,
By foreign hands thy decent limbs compos'd,
By foreign hands thy humble grave adorn'd,
By strangers honour'd, and by strangers mourn'd!
What though no friends in sable weeds appear,
Grieve for an hour, perhaps, then mourn a year,
And bear about the mockery of woe

To midnight dances and the public show?
What though no weeping loves thy ashes grace,
Nor polish'd marble emulate thy face?

What though no sacred earth allow thee room,
Nor hallow'd dirge be mutter'd o'er thy tomb?
Yet shall thy grave with rising flow'rs be dress'd,
And the green turf lie lightly on thy breast:
There shall the morn her earliest tears bestow,
There the first roses of the year shall blow;
While angels with their silver wings o'ershade
The ground, now sacred by thy reliques made.

So peaceful rests, without a stone, a name,
What once had beauty, titles, wealth, and fame.
How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not,
To whom related, or by whom begot;
A heap of dust alone remains of thee,
'Tis all thou art, and all the proud shall be!

Poets themselves must fall, like those they sung,

Deaf the prais'd ear, and mute the tuneful tongue.
E'en he, whose soul now melts in mournful lays,
Shall shortly want the gen'rous tear he pays;
Then from his closing eyes thy form shall part,
And the last pang shall tear thee from his heart;
Life's idle business at one gasp be o'er,
The muse forgot, and thou belov'd no more!

§ 12. Prologue to Mr. Addison's Tragedy of Cato. Pope.

To wake the soul by tender strokes of art,
To raise the genius, and to mend the heart;
To make mankind in conscious virtue bold,
Live o'er each scene, and be what they behold;
For this the Tragic Muse first trod the stage,
Commanding tears to stream through ev'ry age:
Tyrants no more their savage nature kept,
And foes to virtue wonder'd how they wept.
Our Author shuns by vulgar springs to move
The hero's glory, or the virgin's love:

In pitying love, we but our weakness show,
And wild ambition well deserves its woe.
Here tears shall flow from a more gen'rous cause,
Such tears as patriots shed for dying laws:
He bids your breasts with ancient ardor rise,
And calls forth Roman drops from British eyes.
Virtue confest in human shape he draws,
What Plato thought, and godlike Cato was:
No common object to your sight displays,
But what with pleasure Heaven itself surveys—
A brave man struggling in the storms of fate,
And greatly falling with a falling state.
While Cato gives his little senate laws,
What bosom beats not in his country's cause?
Who sees him act, but envies ev'ry deed?
Who hears him groan, and does not wish to bleed?

E'en when proud Cæsar, 'midst triumphal cars,
The spoils of nations, and the pomp of wars,
Ignobly vain, and impotently great,
Show'd Rome her Cato's figure drawn in state;
As her dead father's rev'rend image pass'd,
The pomp was darken'd, and the day o'ercast;
The triumph ceas'd, tears gush'd from ev'ry eye;
The world's great victor pass'd unheeded by;
Her last good man dejected Rome ador'd,
And honor'd Cæsar's less than Cato's sword.

Britons, attend: be worth like this approv'd;
And show, you have the virtue to be mov'd.
With honest scorn the first fam'd Cato view'd
Rome learning arts from Greece whom she sub-
Your scene precariously subsists too long [du'd;
On French translation and Italian song.
Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage;
Be justly warm'd with your own native rage:
Such plays alone should win a British ear,
As Cato's self had not disdain'd to hear.

§ 13. Epilogue to Mr. Rowe's Jane Shore. Pope.

PRODIGIOUS this! the frail one of our play
From her own sex should mercy find to-day!
You might have held the pretty head aside,
Peep'd in your fans, been serious, thus, and cried,
"The play may pass—but that strange creature,
Shore,

I can't—indeed now—I so hate a whore—"
Just as a blockhead rubs his thoughtless skull,
And thanks his stars he was not born a fool;
So from a sister sinner you shall hear,
"How strangely you expose yourself, my dear!"
But let me die, all raillery apart,
Our sex are still forgiving at their heart;
And did not wicked custom so contrive,
We'd be the best, good-natur'd things alive.

There are, 'tis true, who tell another tale,
That virtuous ladies envy while they rail;
Such rage without betrays the fire within;
In some close corner of the soul, they sin;
Still hoarding up, most scandalously nice,
Amidst their virtues a reserve of vice.
The godly dame, who fleshly failings damns,
Scolds with her maid, or with her chaplain crams.

Would you enjoy soft nights, and solid dinners, Faith, gallants, board with saints, and bed with sinners.

Well, if our author in the wife offends,
He has a husband that will make amends:
He draws him gentle, tender, and forgiving;
And sure such kind good creatures may be living.
In days of old they pardon'd breach of vows;
Stern Cato's self was no relentless spouse:
Plu—Plutarch—what's his name, that writes his life?

Tells us that Cato dearly lov'd his wife;
Yet if a friend, a night or so, should need her,
He'd recommend her as a special breeder.
To lend a wife, few here would scruple make;
But, pray, which of you all would take her back?
Though with the Stoic chief our stage may ring,
The Stoic husband was the glorious thing.

The man had courage, was a sage, 'tis true,
And lov'd his country—but what's that to you?
Those strange examples ne'er were made to fit ye,
But the kind cuckold might instruct the city:
There many an honest man may copy Cato,
Who ne'er saw naked sword, or look'd in Plato.

If, after all, you think it a disgrace
That Edward's Miss thus perks it in your face;
To see a piece of failing flesh and blood,
In all the rest so impudently good;
Faith, let the modest matrons of the town
Come here in crowds, and stare the strumpet
down.

§ 14. The Temple of Fame. Pope.

IN that soft season, when descending show'rs
Call forth the greens, and wake the rising
flow'rs;

When op'ning buds salute the welcome day,
And earth relenting feels the genial ray;
As balmy sleep had charm'd my cares to rest,
And love itself was banish'd from my breast,
(What time the morn mysterious visions brings,
While purer slumbers spread their golden wings),
A train of phantoms in wild order rose,
And, join'd, this intellectual scene compose.

I stood, methought, betwixt earth, seas, and
The whole creation open to my eyes; [skies;
In air self-balanc'd hung the globe below,
Where mountains rise, and circling oceans flow:
Here naked rocks, and empty wastes were seen;
There tow'ry cities, and the forests green:
Here sailing ships delight the wand'ring eyes;
There trees and intermingled temples rise:
Now a clear sun the shining scene displays;
The transient landscape now in clouds decays.

O'er the wide prospect as I gaz'd around,
Sudden I heard a wild promiscuous sound,
Like broken thunders that at distance roar,
Or billows murmur'ing on the hollow shore:
Then, gazing up, a glorious pile beheld,
Whose tow'ring summit ambient clouds con-
High on a rock of ice the structure lay, [ceal'd.
Steep its ascent, and slipp'ry was the way;
The wondrous rock like Parian marble shone,
And seem'd to distant sight of solid stone.
Inscriptions here of various names I view'd,
The greater part by hostile time subdued;
Yet wide was spread their fame in ages past,
And poets once had promis'd they should last.
Some, fresh engrav'd, appear'd of wits renown'd;
I look'd again, nor could their trace be found.
Critics I saw, that other names deface,
And fix their own, with labor, in their place;
Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,
Or disappear'd, and left the first behind.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun;
For fame, impatient of extremes, decays
Not more by envy, than excess of praise.
Yet part no injuries of heaven could feel,
Like crystal faithful to the graving steel:
The rock's high summit, in the temple's shade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade.

There names inscrib'd unnumber'd ages past,
From time's first birth, with time itself shall last:
These ever new, nor subject to decays, [days.
Spread, and grow brighter, with the length of

So Zembla's rocks (the beauteous work of frost),
Rise white in air, and glitter o'er the coast;
Pale suns, unfelt, at distance roll away,
And on th' impassive ice the lightnings play;
Eternal snows the growing mass supply,
Till the bright mountains prop th' incumbentsky;
As Atlas fix'd, each hoary pile appears
The gather'd winter of a thousand years.

On this foundation Fame's high temple stands;
Stupendous pile! not rear'd by mortal hands.

Whate'er proud Rome or artful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd.

Four faces had the dome, and ev'ry face
Of various structure, but of equal grace:
Four brazen gates, on columns lifted high,
Salute the diff'rent quarters of the sky.

Here fabled chiefs, in darker ages born,
Or worthies old, whom arms or arts adorn,
Who cities rais'd, or tam'd a monstrous race,
The walls in venerable order grace:

Heroes in animated marble frown,
And legislators seem to think in stone.

Westward a sumptuous frontispiece appear'd,
On Doric pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mould,
And sculpture rising on the roughen'd gold.
In shaggy spoils here Theseus was beheld,
And Perseus dreadful with Minerva's shield:
There great Alcides, stooping with his toil,
Rests on his club, and holds th' Hesperian spoil:

Here Orpheus sings; trees moving to the sound,
Start from their roots, and form a shade around;
Amphion there the loud creating lyre
Strikes, and behold a sudden Thebes aspire!

Cythæron's echoes answer to his call,
And half the mountain rolls into a wall:
There might you see the length'ning spires ascend,
The domes swell up, the widening arches bend,
The growing tow'rs like exhalations rise,
And the huge columns heave into the skies.

The Eastern front was glorious to behold,
With diamond flaming, and Barbaric gold.
There Ninus shone, who spread th' Assyrian fame,
And the great founder of the Persian name!
There, in long robes, the royal Magi stand;
Grave Zoroaster waves the circling wand:
The sage Chaldæans rob'd in white appear'd,
And Brachmans, deep in desert woods rever'd.
These stopp'd the moon, and call'd th' unbodied
shades

To midnight banquets in the glimm'ring glades;
Made visionary fabrics round them rise,
And airy spectres skim before their eyes;
Of talismans and sigils knew the pow'r,
And careful watch'd the planetary hour.
Superior, and alone, Confucius stood,
Who taught that useful science,—to be good.

But, on the South, a long majestic race
Of Egypt's priests the gilded niches grace,

Who measur'd earth, describ'd the starry spheres'
And trac'd the long records of lunar years.
High on his car Sesostri struck my view,
Whom sceptred slaves in golden harness drew:
His hands a bow and pointed jav'lin hold,
His giant limbs are arm'd in scales of gold.
Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphics grac'd.

Of Gothic structure was the Northern side,
O'erwrought with ornaments of barb'rous pride;
There huge Colosses rose, with trophies crown'd;
And Runic characters were grav'd around.

There sat Zamolxis with erected eyes,
And Odin here in mimic trances dies.

There on rude iron columns, smear'd with blood,
The horrid forms of Scythian heroes stood:

Druids and bards (their once loud harps unstrung),
And youths that died to be by poets sung.

These, and a thousand more of doubtful fame,
To whom old fables give a lasting name,

In ranks adorn'd the Temple's outward face:

The wall, in lustre and effect like glass,
Which, o'er each object casting various dyes,

Enlarges some, and others multiplies:

Nor void of emblem was the mystic wall,
For thus romantic fame increases all.

The Temple shakes, the sounding gates unfold,
Wide vaults appear, and roofs of fretted gold,

Rais'd on a thousand pillars, wreath'd around
With laurel foliage, and with eagles crown'd;

Of bright transparent beryl were the walls,
The friezes gold, and gold the capitals.

As heaven with stars, the roof with jewels glows,
And ever-living lamps depend in rows.

Full in the passage of each spacious gate,
The sage historians in white garments wait;
Grav'd o'er their seats the form of Time was
found,

His scythe revers'd, and both his pinions bound.
Within stood heroes, who, through loud alarms,
In bloody fields pursu'd renown in arms.

High on a throne, with trophies charg'd, I view'd
The youth that all things but himself subdu'd;

His feet on sceptres and tiaras trod,
And his horn'd head belied the Libyan god.

There Cæsar, grac'd with both Minervas, shone;
Cæsar, the world's great master, and his own;

Unmov'd, superior still, in ev'ry state,
And scarce detested in his country's fate.

But chief were those, who not for empire fought,
But with their toils their people's safety bought.

High o'er the rest Epaminondas stood;

Timoleon, glorious in his brother's blood;

Bold Scipio, saviour of the Roman state;

Great in his triumphs, in retirement great;

And wise Aurelius, in whose well-taught mind
With boundless pow'r unbounded virtue join'd,
His own strict judge, and patron of mankind.

Much-suff'ring heroes next their honors claim,
Those of less noisy and less guilty fame,

Fair Virtue's silent train: supreme of these,

Here ever shines the godlike Socrates;

He whom ungrateful Athens could expel,

At all times just, but when he sign'd the shell;

Here his abode the martyr'd Phocion claims,
With Agis, not the last of Spartan names;
Unconquer'd Cato shows the wound he tore;
And Brutus his ill genius meets no more.

But in the centre of the hallow'd choir,
Six pompous columns o'er the rest aspire;
Around the shrine itself of Fame they stand,
Hold the chief honors, and the fane command.

High on the first the mighty Homer shone,
Eternal adamant compos'd his throne;
Father of verse! in holy fillets drest,
His silver beard wav'd gently o'er his breast;
Though blind, a boldness in his looks appears;
In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years.
The wars of Troy were round the pillars seen:
Here fierce Tydides wounds the Cyprian queen;
Here Hector glorious from Patroclus' fall,
Here dragg'd in triumph round the Trojan wall.
Motion and life did ev'ry part inspire,
Bold was the work, and prov'd the master's fire;
A strong expression most he seem'd to affect,
And here and there disclos'd a brave neglect.

A golden column next in rank appear'd,
On which a shrine of purest gold was rear'd;
Finish'd the whole, and labor'd ev'ry part,
With patient touches of unwearied art:
The Mantuan there in sober triumph sate,
Compos'd his posture, and his look sedate;
On Homer still he fix'd a rev'rent eye,
Great without pride, in modest majesty.
In living sculpture on the sides were spread,
The Latian wars, and haughty Turnus dead;
Eliza stretch'd upon the fun'ral pyre;
Æneas bending with his aged sire;
Troy flam'd in burning gold; and o'er the throne
Arms and the Man in golden ciphers shone.

Four swans sustain a car of silver bright,
With heads advanc'd, and pinions stretch'd for flight:

Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And seem'd to labor with th' inspiring god.
Across the harp a careless hand he flings,
And boldly sinks into the sounding strings.
The figur'd games of Greece the column grace;
Neptune and Jove survey the rapid race.
The youths hang o'er their chariots as they run,
The fiery steeds seem starting from the stone:
The champions in distorted postures threat;
And all appear'd irregularly great.

Here happy Horace tun'd th' Ausonian lyre
To sweeter sounds, and temper'd Pindar's fire:
Pleas'd with Alcæus' manly rage to infuse
The softer spirit of the Sapphic muse.
The polish'd pillar diff'rent sculptures grace;
A work outlasting monumental brass.
Here smiling Loves and Bacchanals appear;
The Julian star, and great Augustus here.
The doves, that round the infant poet spread
Myrtles and bays, hang hov'ring o'er his head.

Here, in a shrine that cast a dazzling light,
Sat fix'd in thought the mighty Stagyrte;
His sacred head a radiant zodiac crown'd,
And various animals his sides surround;

His piercing eyes, erect, appear to view
Superior worlds, and look all nature through.

With equal rays immortal Tully shone;
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne:
Gath'ring his flowing robe, he seem'd to stand
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand.
Behind, Rome's genius waits with civic crowns,
And the great father of his country owns.

These massy columns in a circle rise,
O'er which a pompous dome invades the skies:
Scarce to the top I stretch'd my aching sight,
So large it spread, and swell'd to such a height.
Full in the midst, proud Fame's imperial seat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great:
The vivid em'rals there revive the eye,
The flaming rubies show their sanguine dye,
Bright azure rays from lively sapphires stream,
And lucid amber casts a golden gleam.
With various-color'd light the pavement shone,
And all on fire appear'd the glowing throne;
The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze,
And forms a rainbow of alternate rays.

When on the goddess first I cast my sight,
Scarce seem'd her stature of a cubit's height;
But swell'd to larger size, the more I gaz'd,
Till to the roof her tow'ring head she rais'd.
With her, the temple ev'ry moment grew,
And ampler vistas open'd to my view:
Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long aisles extend.
Such was her form, as ancient bards have told,
Wings raise her arms, and wings her feet enfold;
A thousand busy tongues the goddess bears,
A thousand open eyes, and thousand list'ning
Beneath, in order rang'd, the tuneful Nine [ears.
(Her virgin handmaids) still attend the shrine;
With eyes on Fame for ever fix'd, they sing:
For Fame they raise their voice, and tune the string:
With time's first birth began the heavenly lays,
And last, eternal, through the length of days.

Around these wonders as I cast a look,
The trumpet sounded, and the temple shook;
And all the nations, summon'd at the call,
From diff'rent quarters fill the crowded hall:
Of various tongues the mingled sounds were heard;
In various garbs promiscuous throngs appear'd;
Thick as the bees, that with the spring renew
Their flow'ry toils, and sip the fragrant dew,
When the wing'd colonies first tempt the sky,
O'er dusky fields and shaded waters fly,
Or settling, seize the sweets the blossoms yield,
And a low murmur runs along the field.
Millions of suppliant crowds the shrine attend,
And all degrees before the goddess bend;
The poor, the rich, the valiant, and the sage,
And boasting youth, and narrative old age.
Their pleas were diff'rent, their request the same;
For good and bad alike are fond of Fame.
Some she disgrac'd, and some with honors
Unlike successes equal merits found. [crown'd;
Thus her blind sister, fickle Fortune, reigns;
And, undiscerning, scatters crowns and chains.

First at the shrine the learned world appear,
And to the goddess thus prefer their pray'r:

Long have we sought t' instruct and please mankind,
With studies pale, with midnight vigils blind;
But thank'd by few, rewarded yet by none,
We here appeal to thy superior throne:
On wit and learning the just prize bestow;
For Fame is all we must expect below.

The goddess heard, and bade the Muses raise
The golden trumpet of eternal praise:
From pole to pole the winds diffuse the sound,
That fills the circuit of the world around;
Not all at once, as thunder breaks the cloud:
The notes at first were rather sweet than loud;
By just degrees they ev'ry moment rise,
Fill the wide earth, and gain upon the skies.
At ev'ry breath were balmy odors shed,
Which still grew sweeter as they wider spread:
Less fragrant scents th' unfolding rose exhales,
Or spices breathing in Arabian gales.

Next these the good and just, an awful train,
Thus on their knees address the sacred fane:
Since living virtue is with envy curs'd,
And the best men are treated like the worst,
Do thou, just goddess, call our merits forth,
And give each deed th' exact intrinsic worth.
Not with bare justice shall your act be crown'd
(Said Fame), but high above desert renown'd:
Let fuller notes th' applauding world amaze,
And the loud clarion labor in your praise.

This band dismiss'd, behold another crowd
Preferr'd the same request, and lowly bow'd;
The constant tenor of whose well-spent days
No less deserv'd a just return of praise.
But straight the direful trump of slander sounds;
Through the big dome the doubling thunder
bounds;

Loud as the burst of cannon rends the skies,
The dire report through ev'ry region flies;
In ev'ry ear incessant rumors rung,
And gath'ring scandals grew on ev'ry tongue.
From the black trumpet's rusty concave broke
Sulphureous flames, and clouds of rolling smoke:
The pois'nous vapor blots the purple skies,
And withers all before it as it flies. [wore,

A troop came next, who crowns and armor
And proud defiance in their looks they bore:
For thee (they cried) amidst alarms and strife,
We sail'd in tempests down the stream of life;
For thee whole nations fill'd with flames and blood,

And swam to empire through the purple flood.
Those ills we dar'd thy inspiration own;
What virtue seem'd, was done for thee alone.
Ambitious fools! (the queen replied, and frown'd)
Be all your acts in dark oblivion drown'd:
There sleep forgot, with mighty tyrants gone,
Your statues moulder'd, and your names un-
known!

A sudden cloud straight snatch'd them from my
And each majestic phantom sunk in night. [sight,

Then came the smallest tribe I yet had seen;
Plain was their dress, and modest was their mien.
Great idol of mankind! we neither claim
The praise of merit, nor aspire to fame;

But, safe in deserts from th' applause of men,
Would die unheard of, as we liv'd unseen.
'Tis all we beg thee, to conceal from sight
Those acts of goodness which themselves requite.
O let us still the secret joy partake,
To follow virtue e'en for virtue's sake.

And live there men who slight immortal fame?
Who then with incense shall adore our name?
But, mortals! know, 'tis still our greatest pride
To blaze those virtues which the good would hide.
Rise! Muses, rise! add all your tuneful breath;
These must not sleep in darkness and in death.
She said; in air the trembling music floats,
And on the winds triumphant swell the notes;
So soft, though high, so loud, and yet so clear,
E'en list'ning angels lean from heaven to hear:
To farthest shores th' ambrosial spirit flies,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the skies.

Next these, a youthful train their vows ex-
press'd, [dress'd:
With feathers crown'd, with gay embroid'ry
Hither, they cried, direct your eyes, and see
The men of pleasure, dress, and gallantry;
Ours is the place at banquets, balls, and plays;
Sprightly our nights, polite are all our days;
Courts we frequent, where 'tis our pleasing care
To pay due visits, and address the fair:

In fact, 'tis true, no nymph we could persuade,
But still in fancy vanquish'd ev'ry maid;
Of unknown duchesses lewd tales we tell;
Yet, would the world believe us, all were well.
The joy let others have, and we the name;
And what we want in pleasure, grant in fame.
The queen assents, the trumpet rends the skies,
And at each blast a lady's honor dies. [press'd

Pleas'd with the strange success, vast numbers
Around the shrine, and made the same request.
What! you (she cried) unlearn'd in arts to please,
Slaves to yourselves, and e'en fatigu'd with ease,
Who lose a length of undeserving days—
Would you usurp the lover's dear-bought praise?
To just contempt, ye vain pretenders, fall;
The people's fable, and the scorn of all!
Straight the black clarion sends a horrid sound,
Loud laughs burst out, and bitter scoffs fly round;
Whispers are heard, with taunts reviling loud,
And scornful hisses run through all the crowd.

Last, those who boast of mighty mischiefs
done,

Enslave their country, or usurp a throne;
Or who their glory's dire foundation laid
On sov'reigns ruin'd, or on friends betray'd;
Calm thinking villains, whom no faith could fix,
Of crooked counsels and dark politics;
Of these a gloomy tribe surround the throne,
And beg to make th' immortal treasons known.
The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem'd to set the world on fire.
At the dread sound, pale mortals stood aghast,
And startled nature trembled with the blast.

This having heard and seen, some pow'r unknown
Straight chang'd the scene, and snatch'd me from the throne.

Before my view appear'd a structure fair,
 Its site uncertain, if in earth or air;
 With rapid motion turn'd the mansion round;
 With ceaseless noise the ringing walls resound;
 Not less in numbers were the spacious doors,
 Than leaves on trees, or sands upon the shores;
 Which still unfolded stand, by night, by day,
 Pervious to winds, and open ev'ry way.
 As flames by nature to the skies ascend,
 As weighty bodies to the centre tend,
 As to the sea returning rivers roll,
 And the touch'd needle trembles to the pole;
 Hither, as to their proper place, arise
 All various sounds from earth, and seas, and skies,
 Or spoke aloud, or whisper'd in the ear;
 Nor ever silence, rest, or peace is here.
 As on the smooth expanse of crystal lakes
 The sinking stone at first a circle makes;
 The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,
 Spreads in a second circle, then a third;
 Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,

Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance:
 Thus ev'ry voice and sound, when first they break,
 On neighb'ring air a soft impression make;
 Another ambient circle then they move;
 That, in its turn, impels the next above;
 Through undulating air the sounds are sent,
 And spread o'er all the fluid element.

There various news I heard of love and strife,
 Of peace and war, health, sickness, death, and
 life;
 Of loss and gain, of famine and of store;
 Of storms at sea, and travels on the shore;
 Of prodigies, and portents seen in air;
 Of fires and plagues, and stars with blazing hair;
 Of turns of fortune, changes in the state,
 The falls of favorites, projects of the great;
 Of old mismanagements, taxations new;
 All neither wholly false, nor wholly true.

Above, below, without, within, around,
 Confus'd, unnumber'd multitudes are found,
 Who pass, repass, advance, and glide away;
 Hosts rais'd by fear, and phantoms of a day:
 Astrologers, that future fates foreshew;
 Projectors, quacks, and lawyers not a few;
 And priests, and party-zealots, numerous bands,
 With home-born lies, or tales from foreign lands;
 Each talk'd aloud, or in some secret place,
 And wild impatience star'd in ev'ry face.
 The flying rumours gather'd as they roll'd,
 Scarce any tale was sooner heard than told;
 And all who told it added something new,
 And all who heard it made enlargements too;
 In ev'ry ear it spread, on ev'ry tongue it grew.
 Thus flying east and west, and north and south,
 News travell'd with increase from mouth to mouth:

So from a spark, that kindled first by chance,
 With gath'ring force the quick'ning flames advance;

Till to the clouds their curling heads aspire,
 And tow'rs and temples sink in floods of fire.

When thus ripe lies are to perfection sprung,
 Full grown, and fit to grace a mortal tongue,
 Through thousand vents, impatient, forth they
 flow,

And rush in millions on the world below;
 Fame sits aloft, and points them out their course,
 Their date determines, and prescribes their force;
 Some to remain, and some to perish soon;
 Or wane and wax alternate like the moon.

Around, a thousand winged wonders fly, [thesky.
 Borne by the trumpet's blast, and scatter'd through

There, at one passage, oft you may survey
 A lie and truth contending for the way;
 And long 'twas doubtful, both so closely pent,
 Which first should issue through the narrow
 At last agreed, together out they fly, [vent:
 Inseparable now the truth and lie;
 The strict companions are for ever join'd,
 And this or that unmix'd, no mortal e'er shall
 find.

While thus I stood, intent to see and hear,
 One came, methought, and whisper'd in my ear:
 What could thus high thy rash ambition raise?
 Art thou, fond youth, a candidate for praise?

'Tis true, said I, not void of hopes I came;
 For who so fond as youthful bards of Fame?
 But few, alas! the casual blessing boast,
 So hard to gain, so easy to be lost.

How vain that second life in others' breath,
 Th' estate which wits inherit after death!
 Ease, health, and life, for this they must resign;
 (Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!)

The great man's curse, without the gains, endure;
 Be envied, wretched—and be flatter'd, poor;
 All luckless wits their enemies profest,
 And all successful, jealous friends at best.
 Nor fame I slight, nor for her favors call;
 She comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all.

But if the purchase cost so dear a price
 As soothing folly, or exalting vice;
 Oh! if the muse must flatter lawless sway,
 And follow still where fortune leads the way;
 Or if no basis bear my rising name
 But the fall'n ruins of another's fame—
 Then teach me, Heaven! to scorn the guilty bays, Drive from my breast that wretched lust of
 praise,

Unblemish'd let me live, or die unknown;
 Oh grant an honest fame, or grant me none!

§ 15. The happy Life of a Country Parson. Pope.
 In Imitation of Dr. Swift.

PARSON, these things in thy possessing
 Are better than the bishop's blessing—
 A wife that makes conserves; a steed
 That carries double when there's need;
 October's store, and best Virginia;
 Tithe-pig, and mortuary guinea;
 Gazettes sent gratis down, and frank'd,
 For which thy patron's weekly thank'd;
 A large Concordance, bound long since;
 Sermons to Charles the First, when prince;
 A Chronicle of ancient standing;
 A Chrysostom to smooth thy band in;

The Polyglott—three parts—my text,
Howbeit—likewise—now to my next:
Lo! here the Septuagint—and Paul,
To sum the whole—the close of all.

He that has these, may pass his life,
Drink with the squire, and kiss his wife;
On Sundays preach, and eat his fill;
And fast on Fridays—if he will:
Toast church and queen, explain the news,
Talk with churchwardens about pews;
Pray heartily for some new gift,
And shake his head at Dr. S—t.

§ 16. An Essay on Man. In Four Epistles. Pope.

To H. St. John, Lord Bolingbroke.

EPISTLE I.

ARGUMENT.

Of the Nature and State of Man with respect to the Universe.

Of Man in the abstract.—That we can judge only with regard to our own system, being ignorant of the relations of systems and things.—That Man is not to be deemed imperfect, but a Being suited to his place and rank in the creation, agreeable to the general Order of things, and conformable to Ends and Relations to him unknown.—That it is partly upon his ignorance of future events, and partly upon the hope of a future state, that all his happiness in the present depends.—The pride of aiming at more knowledge, and pretending to more perfection, the cause of Man's error and misery. The impiety of putting himself in the place of God, and judging of the fitness or unfitness, perfection or imperfection, justice or injustice, of his dispensations.—The absurdity of conceiving himself the final cause of the creation, or expecting that perfection in the moral world which is not in the natural.—The unreasonableness of his complaints against Providence, while on the one hand he demands the perfections of the Angels, and on the other the bodily qualifications of the Brutes; though to possess any of the sensitive faculties in a higher degree would render him miserable.—That throughout the whole visible world an universal order and gradation in the sensual and mental faculties is observed, which causes a subordination of creature to creature, and of all creatures to Man. The gradations of sense, instinct, thought, reflection, reason; that Reason alone countervails all the other faculties.—How much farther this order and subordination of living creatures may extend above and below us; were any part of which broken, not that part only, but the whole connected creation must be destroyed.—The extravagance, madness, and pride of such a desire.—The consequence of all, the absolute submission due to Providence, both as to our present and future state.

AWAKE, my Saint John! leave all meaner things

To low ambition, and the pride of Kings.
Let us (since life can little more supply
Than just to look about us, and to die)
Expatriate free o'er all this scene of Man;
A mighty maze! but not without a plan:
A Wild, where weeds and flow'rs promiscuous shoot;

Or Garden, tempting with forbidden fruit.
Together let us beat this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert yield;
The latent tracts, the giddy heights explore,
Of all who blindly creep, or sightless soar;
Eye Nature's walks, shoot Folly as it flies,
And catch the manners living as they rise;
Laugh where we must, be candid where we can,

But vindicate the ways of God to Man.

Say first, of God above, or Man below,
What can we reason, but from what we know?
Of Man, what see we but his station here,
From which to reason, or to which refer?
Through worlds unnumber'd though the God
be known,

'Tis ours to trace him only in our own.
He who through vast immensity can pierce,
See worlds on worlds compose one universe,
Observe how system into system runs,
What other planets circle other suns,
What varied Being peoples ev'ry star,
May tell why Heaven has made us as we are.
But of this frame the bearings and the ties,
The strong connexions, nice dependencies,
Gradations just, has thy pervading soul
Look'd through? or can a part contain the whole?

Is the great chain that draws all to agree,
And drawn supports, upheld by God or thee?
Presumptuous Man! the reason wouldst thou
find,

Why form'd so weak, so little, and so blind?
First, if thou canst, the harder reason guess,
Why form'd no weaker, blinder, and no less?
Ask of thy mother earth, why oaks are made
Taller and stronger than the weeds they shade?
Or ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's Satellites are less than Jove?

Of systems possible, if 'tis confest,
That Wisdom infinite must form the best,
Where all must full or not coherent be,
And all that rises, rise in due degree;
Then, in the scale of reasoning life, 'tis plain,
There must be somewhere such a rank as
Man:

And all the question (wrangle e'er so long)
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong?

Respecting Man, whatever wrong we call,
May, must be right, as relative to all.
In human works, though labor'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose
gain;

In God's, one single can its end produce,
Yet serves to second too some other use;

So Man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown,
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole.

When the proud Steed shall know why man
restrains

His fiery course, or drives him o'er the plains;
When the dull Ox, why now he breaks the clod,

Is now a victim, and now Ægypt's God;
Then shall Man's pride and dulness comprehend
His actions', passions', being's, use and end;
Why, doing, suff'ring, check'd, impell'd, and why

This hour a slave, the next a deity.

Then say not Man's imperfect, Heav'n in fault;

Say rather, Man's as perfect as he ought:
His knowledge measur'd to his state and place;
His time a moment, and a point his space.

If to be perfect in a certain sphere,
What matter, soon or late, or here, or there?
The blest to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of Fate,

All but the page prescrib'd, their present state:
From brutes what men, from men what spirits
know;

Or who could suffer Being here below?
The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day,
Had he thy Reason, would he skip and play?
Pleas'd to the last, he crops the flow'ry food,
And licks the hand just rais'd to shed his blood.
Oh blindness to the future! kindly given,
That each may fill the circle mark'd by Heaven;
Who sees with equal eye, as God of all,
A hero perish, or a sparrow fall;
Atoms or systems into ruin hurl'd;
And now a bubble burst, and now a world.

Hope humbly then; with trembling pinions
soar;

Wait the great teacher, Death, and God adore.
What future bliss, he gives not thee to know,
But gives that Hope to be thy blessing now.
Hope springs eternal in the human breast:
Man never is, but always to be blest:
The soul, uneasy, and confin'd from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come.

Lo! the poor Indian, whose untutor'd mind
Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind;
His soul proud Science never taught to stray
Far as the solar walk, or milky way;
Yet simple Nature to his hope has given,
Behind the cloud-topt hill, an humbler heaven;
Some safer world in depth of woods embrac'd,
Some happier island in the wat'ry waste,
Where slaves once more their native land
behold,

No fiends torment, no Christians thirst for gold.
To Be, contents his natural desire,
He asks no Angel's wing, no Seraph's fire;
But thinks, admitted to that equal sky,
His faithful dog shall bear him company.

Go, wiser thou! and in thy scale of sense
Weigh thy Opinion against Providence;
Call imperfection what thou fanciest such;
Say, here he gives too little, there too much:
Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
Yet say, if Man's unhappy, God's unjust;
If Man alone engross not Heaven's high care,
Alone made perfect here, immortal there:
Snatch from his hand the balance and the Re-judge his justice, be the God of God. [rod,
In Pride, in reas'ning Pride, our error lies;
All quit their sphere, and rush into the skies.
Pride still is aiming at the blest abodes;
Men would be Angels, Angels would be Gods.
Aspiring to be Gods, if Angels fell,
Aspiring to be Angels, Men rebel:
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of Order, sins against th' Eternal Cause.

Ask for what end the heavenly bodies shine, Earth for whose use? Pride answers, "'Tis for mine:

"For me kind Nature wakes her genial pow'r,
"Suckles each herb, and spreads out ev'ry
"flow'r;

"Annual for me, the grape, the rose, renew
"The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew;
"For me, the mine a thousand treasures brings;
"For me, health gushes from a thousand
"springs;

"Seas roll to waft me, suns to light me rise;
"My footstool earth, my canopy the skies."

But errs not Nature from this gracious end,
From burning suns when livid deaths descend,
When earthquakes swallow, or when tempests
sweep

Towns to one grave, whole nations to the deep?
"No ('tis replied); the first Almighty Cause
"Acts not by partial, but by gen'ral laws;
"Th' exceptions few; some change since all
began:

"And what created perfect?"—Why, then,
If the great end be human happiness, [Man?
Then Nature deviates; and can Man do less?
As much that end a constant course requires
Of show'rs and sunshine, as of Man's desires;
As much eternal springs and cloudless skies,
As men for ever temp'rate, calm, and wise.

If plagues or earthquakes break not Heaven's
Why then a Borgia or a Catiline? [design,
Who knows, but he whose hand the lightning
forms, [storms,

Who heaves old Ocean, and who wings the Pours fierce ambition in a Cæsar's mind,
Or turns young Ammon loose to scourge mankind? [springs;

From pride, from pride, our very reas'ning
Account for moral as for nat'ral things;
Why charge we Heaven in those, in these acquit,

In both, to reason right, is to submit.

Better for us, perhaps, it might appear,
Were there all harmony, all virtue here;
That never air or ocean felt the wind;
That never passion discompos'd the mind.

But all subsists by elemental strife;
And passions are the elements of Life.
The gen'ral Order, since the Whole began,
Is kept in Nature, and is kept in Man:

What would this Man? Now upward will he soar,

And, little less than Angel, would be more:
Now, looking downwards, just as griev'd, appears
To want the strength of bulls, the fur of bears.
Made for his use all creatures if he call,
Say what their use, had he the pow'rs of all?
Nature to these, without profusion kind,
The proper organs, proper pow'rs assign'd;
Each seeming want compensated of course,
Here with degrees of swiftness, there of force;
All in exact proportion to the state;
Nothing to add, and nothing to abate.
Each beast, each insect, happy in its own:
Is Heaven unkind to Man, and Man alone?
Shall he alone, whom rational we call,
Be pleas'd with nothing, if not blest with all?

The bliss of Man (could Pride that blessing
Is not to act or think beyond mankind; [find]
No pow'rs of body or of soul to share,
But what his nature and his state can bear.
Why has not man a microscopic eye?
For this plain reason, Man is not a fly.
Say, what the use, were finer optics given,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heaven?
Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
To smart and agonise at every pore?
Or, quick effluvia darting through the brain,
Die of a rose in aromatic pain?
If Nature thunder'd in his opening ears,
And stunn'd him with the music of the spheres,
How would he wish that Heav'n had left him
still

The whispering Zephyr, and the purling rill!
Who finds not Providence all good and wise,
Alike in what it gives, and what denies?

Far as Creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual, mental pow'rs ascends:
Mark how it mounts to Man's imperial race,
From the green myriads in the peopled grass:
What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,

The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam!
Of smell, the headlong lioness between,
And hound sagacious on the tainted green!
Of hearing, from the life that fills the flood,
To that which warbles through the vernal
wood!

The spider's touch, how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line:
In the nice bee, what sense so subtly true,
From pois'nous herbs extracts the healing dew!
How instinct varies in the grov'ling swine,
Compar'd, half-reasoning elephant, with thine!
'Twixt that and Reason what a nice barrier!
For ever sep'rate, yet for ever near!
Remembrance and Reflection how allied,
What thin partitions Sense from Thought divide!
And middle natures, how they long to join,
Yet never pass th' insuperable line!

Without this just gradation, could they be Subjected, these to those, or all to thee?
The powers of all, subdued by thee alone,
Is not thy Reason all these pow'rs in one?

See through this air, this ocean, and this earth,

All matter quick, and bursting into birth.
Above, how high progressive life may go!
Around, how wide! how deep extend below!
Vast chain of being! which from God began;
Natures ethereal, human, angel, man,
Beast, bird, fish, insect, what no eye can see,
No glass can reach; from Infinite to thee,
From thee to Nothing.—On superior pow'rs
Were we to press, inferior might on ours;
Or in the full creation leave a void,
Where, one step broken, the great scale's destroy'd:

From Nature's chain whatever link you strike,
Tenth, or ten-thousandth, breaks the chain alike.

And, if each system in gradation roll
Alike essential to the amazing Whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall.
Let earth unbalanc'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and Suns run lawless through the sky;
Let ruling Angels from their spheres be hurl'd,
Being on Being wreck'd, and world on world;
Heaven's whole foundations to their centre nod,
And Nature trembles to the throne of God.
All this dread Order break—for whom? for
thee?

Vile worm!—oh madness, pride, impiety!

What if the foot, ordain'd the dust to tread,
Or hand, to toil, aspir'd to be the head?

What if the head, the eye, or ear, repin'd
To serve mere engines to the ruling mind?

Just as absurd, for any part to claim
To be another in this gen'ral frame:

Just as absurd, to mourn the tasks or pains
The great directing Mind of all ordains.

All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the Soul;
That, chang'd through all, and yet in all the same,

Great in the earth, as in th' ethereal frame;
Warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze,
Glow's in the stars, and blossoms in the trees;
Lives through all life, extends through all
Spreads undivided, operates unspent; [extent,
Breathes in our soul, informs our mortal part,
As full, as perfect, in a hair as heart;
As full, as perfect, in vile Man that mourns,
As the rapt Seraph that adores and burns:
To him no high, no low, no great, no small;
He fills, he bounds, connects, and equals all.

Cease then, nor Order Imperfection name:
Our proper bliss depends on what we blame.
Know thy own point: this kind, this due degree

Of blindness, weakness, Heaven bestows on
Submit—In this, or any other sphere, [thee.
Secure to be as blest as thou canst bear:

Safe in the hand of one disposing Pow'r,
 Or in the natal, or the mortal hour.
 All Nature is but art unknown to thee;
 All Chance, Direction which thou canst not see;
 All Discord, Harmony not understood;
 All partial Evil, universal Good:
 And spite of Pride, in erring Reason's spite,
 One truth is clear, Whatever is, is right.

EPISTLE II.

ARGUMENT.

*Of the Nature and State of Man with respect
 to Himself, as an Individual.*

*The Business of Man not to pry into God, but to study Himself. His Middle Nature; his Powers and Frailties.—The Limits of his Capacity.—The two Principles of Man, Self-love and Reason, both necessary.—Self-love
 the stronger, and why.—Their end the same.
 —The Passions, and their use.—The Predominant Passion, and its force.—Its necessity in directing Men to different Purposes.—Its providential Use, in fixing our Principle, and ascertaining our Virtue.—Virtue and Vice joined in our mixed Nature; the limits near, yet the things separate and evident: What is the Office of Reason.—How odious Vice in itself, and how we deceive ourselves into it.—
 That, however, the Ends of Providence and general Good are answered in our Passions and Imperfections.—How usefully these are distributed to all Orders of Men.—How useful they are to Society, and to Individuals, in every state and every age of life.*

Know then thyself, presume not God to scan;
 The proper study of mankind is Man.
 Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
 A being darkly wise, and rudely great;
 With too much knowledge for the Sceptic side,
 With too much weakness for the Stoic's pride,
 He hangs between; in doubt to act or rest,
 In doubt to deem himself a God, or Beast;
 In doubt his Mind or Body to prefer;
 Born but to die, and reasoning but to err;
 Alike in ignorance, his reason such,
 Whether he thinks too little or too much:
 Chaos of Thought and Passion, all confus'd,
 Still by himself abus'd or disabus'd;
 Created half to rise, and half to fall;
 Great lord of all things, yet a prey to all;
 Sole judge of Truth, in endless Error hurl'd:
 The glory, jest, and riddle of the world!

Go, wondrous creature! mount where
     Science guides, [tides;
 Go, measure earth, weigh air, and state the Instruct the planets in what orbs to run,
 Correct old Time, and regulate the Sun:
 Go, soar with Plato to th' empyreal sphere,
 To the first good, first perfect, and first fair;

Or tread the mazy round his followers trod,
 And quitting sense call imitating God;
 As Eastern priests in giddy circles run,
 And turn their heads to imitate the Sun.
 Go, teach Eternal Wisdom how to rule;
 Then drop into thyself, and be a fool!

Superior beings, when of late they saw
 A mortal Man unfold all Nature's law,
 Admir'd such wisdom in an earthly shape,
 And show'd a Newton as we show an Ape.

Could he, whose rules the rapid comet bind,
 Describe or fix one movement of his Mind?
 Who saw its fires here rise, and there descend,
 Explain his own beginning or his end?

Alas, what wonder! Man's superior part
 Uncheck'd may rise, and climb from art to art;
 But when his own great work is but begun,
 What Reason weaves, by Passion is undone.

Trace Science then, with Modesty thy guide;
 First strip off all her equipage of Pride;
 Deduct what is but Vanity or Dress,
 Or Learning's luxury or idleness;
 Or tricks to show the stretch of human brain,
 Mere curious pleasure, or ingenious pain;
 Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrescent parts
 Of all our Vices have created Arts;
 Then see how little the remaining sum,
 Which serv'd the past, and must the time to come!

Two Principles in human nature reign;
 Self-love to urge, and Reason to restrain:
 Nor this a good, nor that a bad we call;
 Each works its end, to move or govern all:
 And to their proper operation still
 Ascribe all Good; to their improper, Ill.

Self-love, the spring of motion, acts the soul,
 Reason's comparing balance rules the whole:
 Man, but for that, no action could attend;
 And, but for this, were active to no end;
 Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
 To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot;
 Or, meteor-like, flame lawless through the void,
 Destroying others, by himself destroy'd.
 Most strength the moving principle requires;
 Active its task, it prompts, impels, inspires.
 Sedate and quiet the comparing lies,
 Form'd but to check, deliberate, and advise.
 Self-love, still stronger, as its objects nigh;
 Reason's at distance and in prospect lie:
 That sees immediate good by present sense;
 Reason, the future and the consequence.
 Thicker than arguments temptations throng;
 At best more watchful this, but that more strong.

The action of the stronger to suspend
 Reason still use, to Reason still attend.
 Attention, habit and experience gains;
 Each strengthens Reason, and Self-love restrains.
 Let subtle schoolmen teach these friends to
 More studious to divide than to unite; [fight,
 And Grace and Virtue, Sense and Reason split,
 With all the rash dexterity of wit.
 Wits, just like Fools, at war about a name,
 Have full as oft no meaning, or the same.

Self-love and reason to one end aspire ;
Pain their aversion, Pleasure their desire :
But greedy that, its object would devour,
This taste the honey, and not wound the flow'r :
Pleasure, or wrong or rightly understood,
Our greatest evil, or our greatest good.

Modes of self-love the passions we may call ;
'Tis real good, or seeming, moves them all :
But since not ev'ry good we can divide,
And reason bids us for our own provide ;
Passions, though selfish, if their means be fair,
List under reason, and deserve her care ;
Those that imparted court a nobler aim,
Exalt their kind, and take some Virtue's name.

In lazy Apathy let Stoics boast
Their Virtue fix'd ; 'tis fix'd as in a frost ;
Contracted all, retiring to the breast :
But strength of mind is exercise, not rest.
The rising tempest puts in act the soul ;
Parts it may ravage, but preserves the whole.
On life's vast ocean diversely we sail,
Reason the card, but passion is the gale :
Nor God alone in the still calm we find,
He mounts the storm and walks upon the wind.

Passions, like elements, though born to fight,
Yet mix'd and soften'd in his work unite :
These 'tis enough to temper and employ ;
But what composes Man, can Man destroy ?
Suffice that Reason keep to Nature's road,
Subject, compound them, follow her and God.
Love, Hope, and Joy, fair Pleasure's smiling
train ;
Hate, Fear, and Grief, the family of Pain ;
These mix'd with art, and to due bounds con-
fin'd,
Make and maintain the balance of the mind ; —
The lights and shades, whose well-accorded strife

Gives all the strength and color of our life.
Pleasures are ever in our hands or eyes ;
And, when in act they cease, in prospect rise :
Present to grasp, and future still to find,
The whole employ of body and of mind.
All spread their charms, but charm not all alike ;
On diff'rent senses diff'rent objects strike :
Hence diff'rent Passions more or less inflame,
As strong or weak the organs of the frame ;
And hence one master Passion in the breast,
Like Aaron's serpent, swallows up the rest.

As man, perhaps, the moment of his breath,
Receives the lurking principle of death ;
The young disease, that must subdue at length,
Grows with his growth, and strengthens with his strength ;
So, cast and mingled with his very frame,
The mind's disease, its ruling passion came :
Each vital humor which should feed the whole,
Soon flows to this, in body and in soul :
Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens and its functions spread,
Imagination plies her dang'rous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part.

Nature its mother, habit is its nurse ;
Wit, spirit, faculties, but make it worse ;

Reason itself but gives it edge and pow'r ;
As heaven's blest beam turns vinegar more sour.

We, wretched subjects, though to lawful sway,
In this weak queen some fav'rite still obey :
Ah ! if she lend not arms as well as rules,
What can she more than tell us we are fools ?
Teach us to mourn our nature, not to mend ;
A sharp accuser, but a helpless friend !
Or from a judge turn pleader, to persuade
The choice we make, or justify it made ;
Proud of an easy conquest all along,
She but removes weak passions for the strong :
So, when small humors gather to a gout,
The doctor fancies he has driven them out.

Yes, nature's road must ever be prefer'd ;
Reason is here no guide, but still a guard :
'Tis her's to rectify, not overthrow,
And treat this passion more as friend than foe ;
A mightier Pow'r the strong direction sends,
And sev'ral men impels to sev'ral ends :
Like varying winds, by other passions tost,
This drives them constant to a certain coast.
Let pow'r or knowledge, gold or glory please,
Or (oft more strong than all) the love of ease,
Through life 'tis followed, even at life's expence ;
The merchant's toil, the sage's indolence,
The monk's humility, the hero's pride ;
All, all alike, find reason on their side.

Th' Eternal Art, educing good from ill,
Grafts on this Passion our best principle :
'Tis thus the mercury of Man is fix'd,
Strong grows the Virtue with his nature mix'd ;
The dross cements what else were too refin'd,
And in one int'rest body acts with mind.

As fruits, ungrateful to the planter's care,
On savage stocks inserted learn to bear ;
The surest Virtues thus from Passions shoot,
Wild Nature's vigor working at the root.
What crops of wit and honesty appear
From spleen, from obstinacy, hate, or fear !
See anger, zeal and fortitude supply ;
E'en av'rice, prudence ; sloth, philosophy ;
Lust, through some certain strainers well re-
fin'd,

Is gentle love, and charms all womankind ;
Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave ;
Nor Virtue, male or female, can we name,
But what will grow on Pride, or grow on Shame.

Thus Nature gives us (let it check our pride)
The virtue nearest to our vice allied :
Reason the bias turns to good from ill,
And Nero reigns a Titus if he will.
The fiery soul abhorr'd in Catiline,
In Decius charms, in Curtius is divine :
The same ambition can destroy or save,
And makes a patriot as it makes a knave.

This light and darkness in our chaos join'd,
What shall divide ? The God within the mind.
Extremes in Nature equal ends produce ;
In man they join to some mysterious use ;
Though each by turns the other's bounds invade,
As in some well-wrought picture, light and
shade,

And oft so mix, the diff'rence is too nice
Where ends the Virtue, or begins the Vice.

Fools! who from hence into the notion fall,
That Vice or Virtue there is none at all.

If white and black blend, soften, and unite
A thousand ways, is there no black or white?
Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain;
'Tis to mistake them costs the time and pain.

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As, to be hated, needs but to be seen;
Yet, seen too oft, familiar with her face;
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.
But where th' extreme of Vice, was ne'er agreed: [Tweed.

Ask where's the North? at York, 'tis on the
In Scotland, at the Orcades; and there,
At Greenland, Zembla, or the Lord knows where.

No creature owns it in the first degree,
But thinks his neighbour farther gone than he:
E'en those who dwell beneath its very zone,
Or never feel the rage, or never own;
What happier natures shrinks at with affright,
The hard inhabitant contends is right.

Virtuous and vicious ev'ry man must be;
Few in th' extreme, but all in the degree:
The rogue and fool, by fits, is fair and wise;
And e'en the best, by fits, what they despise.
'Tis but by parts we follow good or ill;
For, Vice or Virtue, Self directs it still;
Each individual seeks a several goal;
But Heaven's great view is One, and that the Whole:

That counterworks each folly and caprice;
That disappoints th' effect of ev'ry vice;
That, happy frailties to all ranks applied—
Shame to the virgin, to the matron pride,
Fear to the statesman, rashness to the chief,
To kings presumption, and to crowds belief:
That, Virtue's ends from vanity can raise,
Which seeks no int'rest, no reward but praise;
And builds on wants, and on defects of mind,
The joy, the peace, the glory of Mankind.

Heaven, forming each on other to depend,
A master, or a servant, or a friend,
Bids each on other for assistance call,
Till one Man's weakness grows the strength of Wants, frailties, passions, closer still ally [all.
The common int'rest, or endear the tie.
To these we owe true friendship, love sincere,
Each home-felt joy that life inherits here;
Yet from the same we learn, in its decline,
Those joys, those loves, those int'rests to resign;
Taught half by Reason, half by mere decay,
To welcome death, and calmly pass away.

Whate'er the Passion, knowledge, fame, or pelf,
Not one will change his neighbour with himself.
The learn'd is happy nature to explore,
The fool is happy that he knows no more;
The rich is happy in the plenty given,
The poor contents him with the care of Heaven.
See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatic a king;

The starving chemist in his golden views
Supremely blest; the poet in his Muse.
See some strange comfort ev'ry state attend,
And pride, bestow'd on all, a common friend:
See some fit passion ev'ry age supply;
Hope travels through, nor quits us when we die.

Behold the child, by nature's kindly law,
Pleas'd with a rattle, tickled with a straw;
Some livelier plaything gives his youth delight,
A little louder, but as empty quite;
Scarfs, garters, gold, amuse his riper stage,
And beads and pray'r-books are the toys of age:
Pleas'd with this bauble still, as that before;
Till tir'd he sleeps, and Life's poor play is o'er.

Meanwhile Opinion gilds with varying rays
Those painted clouds that beautify our days;
Each want of happiness by Hope supplied,
And each vacuity of sense by Pride:
These build as fast as knowledge can destroy;
In folly's cup still laughs the bubble, Joy:
One prospect lost, another still we gain;
And not a vanity is given in vain.
E'en mean Self-love becomes, by force divine,
The scale to measure others' wants by thine.
See! and confess, one comfort still must rise;
'Tis this—though Man's a fool, yet God is wise.

EPISTLE III.

ARGUMENT.

Of the Nature and State of Man with respect to Society.

The whole Universe one System of Society—Nothing made wholly for itself, nor yet wholly for another.—The happiness of Animals mutual.—Reason or Instinct operate alike to the good of each individual.—Reason or Instinct operates also to Society in all animals.—How far Society is carried by Instinct.—How much farther by Reason.—Of that which is called the State of Nature.—Reason instructed by Instinct in the invention of Arts, and in the Forms of Society.—Origin of Political Societies.—Origin of Monarchy.—Patriarchal Government.—Origin of true Religion and Government, from the same principle of Love.—Origin of Superstition and Tyranny, from the same principle of Fear.—The influence of Self-love operating to the social and public Good.—Restoration of true Religion and Government on their first Principle.—Mixed Government.—Various Forms of each, and the true End of all.

HERE then we rest: "The Universal Cause
"Acts to one end, but acts by various laws."
In all the madness of superfluous health,
The train of pride, the impudence of wealth,
Let this great truth be present night and day;
But most be present, if we preach or pray.
Look round our World; behold the chain of Combining all below and all above. [Love
See plastic Nature working to this end;
The single atoms each to other tend;

Attract, attracted to the next in place,
 Form'd and impell'd its neighbour to embrace.
 See Matter next, with various life endued,
 Press to one centre still, the gen'ral Good.
 See dying Vegetables life sustain,
 See life dissolving vegetate again :
 All forms that perish other forms supply
 (By turns we catch the vital breath, and die);
 Like bubbles on the sea of Matter borne,
 They rise, they break, and to that sea return.
 Nothing is foreign; Parts relate to Whole;
 One all-extending, all-preserving Soul
 Connects each being, greatest with the least;
 Made Beast in aid of Man, and Man of Beast;
 All serv'd, all serving: nothing stands alone;
 The chain holds on, and where it ends unknown.

Has God, thou fool! work'd solely for thy good,

Thy joy, thy pastime, thy attire, thy food?
 Who for thy table feeds the wanton fawn,
 For him as kindly spreads the flow'ry lawn.
 Is it for thee the lark ascends and sings?
 Joy tunes his voice, joy elevates his wings.
 Is it for thee the linnet pours his throat?
 Loves of his own and raptures swell the note.
 The bounding steed you pompously bestride
 Shares with his lord the pleasure and the pride.
 Is thine alone the seed that strews the plain?
 The birds of heaven shall vindicate their grain.
 Thine the full harvest of the golden year?
 Part pays, and justly, the deserving steer.
 The hog that ploughs not, nor obeys thy call,
 Lives on the labors of this lord of all.

Know, Nature's children all divide her care,
 The fur that warms a monarch warm'd a bear.
 While Man exclaims, "See all things for my use!"

"See man for mine!" replies a pamper'd goose:
 And just as short of reason he must fall,
 Who thinks all made for one, not one for all.

Grant that the pow'ful still the weak control,
 Be Man the Wit and Tyrant of the whole:
 Nature that Tyrant checks; he only knows,
 And helps another creature's wants and woes.
 Say, will the falcon, stooping from above,
 Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove?
 Admires the jay the insect's gilded wings?
 Or hears the hawk when Philomela sings?
 Man cares for all: to birds he gives his woods,
 To beasts his pastures, and to fish his floods:
 For some his int'rest prompts him to provide,
 For more his pleasure, yet for more his pride:
 All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
 Th' extensive blessing of his luxury.

That very life his learned hunger craves,
 He saves from famine, from the savage saves;
 Nay, feasts the animal he dooms his feast,
 And till he ends the being, makes it blest;
 Which sees no more the stroke, or feels the pain,
 Than favor'd Man by touch ethereal slain.
 The creature had his feast of life before;
 Thou too must perish when thy feast is o'er!
 To each unthinking being, Heav'n, a friend,
 Gives not the useless knowledge of its end:

To man imparts it; but with such a view
 As, while he dreads it, makes him hope it too:
 The hour conceal'd, and so remote the fear,
 Death still draws nearer, never seeming near.
 Great standing miracle! that Heaven assign'd
 Its only thinking thing this turn of mind.

Whether with Reason or with Instinct blest,
 Know, all enjoy that pow'r which suits them best;

To bliss alike by that direction tend,
 And find the means proportion'd to their end.
 Say, where full Instinct is th' unerring guide,
 What Pope or Council can they need beside?
 Reason, however able, cool at best,
 Cares not for service, or but serves when prest,
 Stays till we call, and then not often near;
 But honest Instinct comes a volunteer,
 Sure never to o'ershoot, but just to hit;
 While still too wide or short is human Wit;
 Sure by quick Nature happiness to gain,
 Which heavier Reason labors at in vain.
 This too serves always, Reason never long;
 One must go right, the other may go wrong.
 See then the acting and comparing pow'rs
 One in their nature, which are two in ours;
 And Reason raise o'er Instinct as you can,
 In this 'tis God directs, in that 'tis Man.

Who taught the nations of the field and wood
 To shun their poison, and to choose their food?
 Prescient, the tides or tempests to withstand,
 Build on the wave, or arch beneath the sand?
 Who made the spider parallels design,
 Sure as De Moivre, without rule or line?
 Who bid the stork, Columbus-like, explore Heav'n's not his own, and worlds unknown
 before?

Who calls the council, states the certain day?
 Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way?

God, in the nature of each being, founds
 Its proper bliss, and sets its proper bounds:
 But as he fram'd the Whole the Whole to bless,
 On mutual Wants built mutual Happiness;
 So, from the first, eternal order ran,
 And creature link'd to creature, man to man.
 Whate'er of life all-quick'ning æther keeps,
 Or breathes through air, or shoots beneath the deeps,

Or pours profuse on earth, one nature feeds
 The vital flame, and swells the genial seeds.
 Not man alone, but all that roam the wood,
 Or wing the sky, or roll along the flood,
 Each loves itself, but not itself alone;
 Each sex desires alike, till two are one.
 Nor ends the pleasure with the fierce embrace;
 They love themselves, a third time, in their race.
 Thus beast and bird their common charge attend,
 The mothers nurse it, and the sires defend:
 The young dismiss'd to wander earth or air,
 There stops the Instinct, and there ends the care;
 The link dissolves, each seeks a fresh embrace;
 Another love succeeds, another race.

A longer care Man's helpless kind demands;
 That longer care contracts more lasting bands:

Reflection, Reason, still the ties improve,
At once extend the int'rest and the love :
With choice we fix, with sympathy we burn ;
Each Virtue in each Passion takes its turn ;
And still new needs, new helps, new habits rise,
That graft benevolence on charities.
Still as one brood, and as another rose,
These nat'ral love maintain, habitual those :
The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began :
Mem'ry and forecast just returns engage ;
That pointed back to youth, this on to age :
While pleasure, gratitude, and hope combin'd,
Still spread the int'rest, and preserve the kind.

Nor think, in Nature's state they blindly trod ;
The state of Nature was the reign of God :
Self-love and Social at her birth began ;
Union the bond of all things, and of Man.
Pride then was not ; nor Arts, that Pride to aid ;
Man walk'd with beast, joint tenant of the
shade ;

The same his table, and the same his bed ;
No murder cloth'd him, and no murder fed.
In the same temple, the resounding wood,
All vocal beings hymn'd their equal God :
The shrine with gore unstain'd, with gold undrest ;

Unbrib'd, unbloody, stood the blameless priest :
Heaven's attribute was Universal Care ;
And Man's prerogative, to rule, but spare.
Ah ! how unlike the man of times to come !
Of half that live the butcher and the tomb ;
Who, foe to Nature, hears the gen'ral groan,
Murders their species, and betrays his own.
But just disease to luxury succeeds,
And ev'ry death its own avenger breeds ;
The fury passions from that blood began,
And turn'd on Man a fiercer savage, Man.

See him from Nature rising slow to Art !
To copy Instinct then was Reason's part ;
Thus then to Man the voice of Nature spake—
“ Go, from the Creatures thy instructions take :
“ Learn from the birds what food the thickets
yield :
“ Learn from the beasts the physic of the field ;
“ Thy arts of building from the bee receive ;
“ Learn of the mole to plough, the worm to “ Learn of the little Nautilus to sail, [weave ; “ Spread the thin oar, and catch the driving gale.

“ Here too all forms of social union find,
“ And hence let Reason, late, instruct man-
kind :

“ Here subterranean works and cities see ;
“ There towns aerial on the waving tree.
“ Learn each small People's genius, policies,
“ The Ant's republic, and the realm of Bees ;
“ How those in common all their wealth bestow,

“ And Anarchy without confusion know ;
“ And these for ever, though a Monarch reign,
“ Their sep'rate cells and properties maintain.
“ Mark what unvaried laws preserve each state,
“ Laws wise as Nature, and as fix'd as Fate.

“ In vain thy Reason finer webs shall draw,
“ Entangle Justice in her net of Law ;
“ And right, too rigid, harden into wrong,
“ Still for the strong too weak, the weak too
strong.

“ Yet go ! and thus o'er all the creatures sway,
“ Thus let the wiser make the rest obey :
“ And for those arts mere Instinct could afford,
“ Be crown'd as Monarchs, or as Gods ador'd.”
Great Nature spoke ; observant Man obey'd ;
Cities were built, Societies were made :
Here rose one little state ; another near Grew by like means, and join'd through love or fear.

Did here the trees with ruddier burdens bend,
And there the streams in purer rills descend !
What War could ravish, Commerce could be-
stow,

And he return'd a friend who came a foe.
Converse and Love mankind might strongly
draw,

When Love was Liberty, and Nature Law.
Thus states were form'd ; the name of king un-
known,

Till common int'rest plac'd the sway in one.

'Twas Virtue only (or in arts or arms, Diffusing blessings, or averting harms)
The same which in a Sire the Sons obey'd,
A Prince the Father of a people made.

Till then, by Nature crown'd, each Patriarch sate

King, Priest, and Parent of his growing state ;
On him, their second Providence, they hung ;
Their law his eye, their oracle his tongue.
He from the wand'ring furrow call'd the food,
Taught to command the fire, control the flood,
Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground.

Till drooping, sick'ning, dying, they began,
Whom they rever'd as God, to mourn as Man :
Then, looking up from sire to sire, explor'd
One great First Father, and that First ador'd.

Or plain tradition that this All begun,
Convey'd unbroken faith from sire to son ;
The worker from the work distinct was known,
And simple reason never sought but one :

Ere wit oblique had broke that steady light,
Man, like his Maker, saw that all was right ;
To virtue in the paths of pleasure trod,
And own'd a Father when he own'd a God.
Love all the faith and all the allegiance then ;
For Nature knew no right divine in Men,
No ill could fear in God ; and understood
A Sovereign Being but a sov'reign good.

True faith, true policy, united ran ;
That was but love of God, and this of Man.

Who first taught souls enslav'd, and realms undone,

Th' enormous faith of many made for one ;
That proud exception to all Nature's laws,
T' invert the world, and counterwork its Cause ?
Force first made Conquest, and that Conquest
Law,

Till Superstition taught the Tyrant awe,

Then shar'd the tyranny, then lent it aid,
And Gods of Conqu'rors, Slaves of Subjects
made :

She, 'midst the lightning's blaze, and thunder's sound, [the ground,

When rock'd the mountains, and when groan'd
She taught the weak to bend, the proud to pray,
To Pow'r unseen, and mightier far than they :
She from the rending earth, and bursting skies,
Saw gods descend, and fiends infernal rise :

Here fix'd the dreadful, there the blest abodes ;
Fear made her Devils, and weak Hope her Gods ;

Gods partial, changeful, passionate, unjust,
Whose attributes were Rage, Revenge, or Lust ;
Such as the souls of cowards might conceive,
And, form'd like tyrants, tyrants would believe.
Zeal then, not charity, became the guide ;

And hell was built on spite, and heaven on pride.
Then sacred seem'd th' ethereal vault no more ;
Altars grew marble then, and reek'd with gore :
Then first the Flamen tasted living food,
Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood ;
With heaven's own thunders shook the world
below,

And play'd the god an engine on his foe.

So drives Self-love, through just and through unjust,

To one man's pow'r, ambition, lucre, lust :
The same Self-love in all, becomes the cause
Of what restrains him, Government and Laws.
For, what one likes, if others like as well,
What serves one will, when many wills rebel ?
How shall he keep, what, sleeping or awake,
A weaker may surprise, a stronger take ?
His safety must his liberty restrain :

All join to guard what each desires to gain.
Forc'd into Virtue thus by Self-defence,
Ev'n Kings learn'd justice and benevolence :
Self-love forsook the path it first pursued,
And found the private in the public good.

'Twas then the studious head or gen'rous mind,
Follower of God, or friend of human kind,
Poet or Patriot, rose but to restore
The faith and moral Nature gave before ;
Relum'd her ancient light, not kindled new ;
If not God's image, yet his shadow drew :
Taught power's due use to People and to Kings,
Taught nor to slack nor strain its tender strings,
The less or greater set so justly true,
That touching one must strike the other too ;
Till jarring int'rests of themselves create
Th' according music of a well-mix'd state.
Such is the world's great harmony, that springs
From Order, Union, full Consent of things :
Where small and great, where weak and mighty,
made

To serve, not suffer ; strengthen, not invade ;
More pow'rful each as needful to the rest,
And, in proportion as it blesses, blest ;
Draw to one point, and to one centre bring Beast, Man, or Angel, Servant, Lord, or King.

For forms of Government let fools contest ;
Whate'er is best administer'd is best ;

For Modes of Faith let graceless zealots fight ;
His can't be wrong whose life is in the right :
In Faith and Hope the world will disagree,
But all Mankind's concern is Charity :

All must be false that thwarts this one great end :
And all of God, that bless Mankind, or mend.

Man, like the gen'rous vine, supported lives :
The strength he gains is from th' embrace he
On their own axis as the Planets run, [gives.
Yet make at once their circle round the Sun ;
So two consistent motions act the Soul,
And one regards Itself, and one the Whole.

Thus God and Nature link'd the gen'ral frame,
And bade Self-love and Social be the same.

EPISTLE IV.

ARGUMENT.

Of the Nature and State of Man, with respect to Happiness.

*False Notions of Happiness, Philosophical and Popular.—It is the End of all Men, and attainable by all.—God intends Happiness to be equal ; and to be so, it must be social, since all particular Happiness depends on general, and since he governs by general not particular Laws.—As it is necessary for Order, and the peace and welfare of Society, that external goods should be unequal, Happiness is not made to consist in these.—But, notwithstanding that inequality, the balance of Happiness among mankind is kept even by Providence, by the two Passions of Hope and Fear.—What the Happiness of Individuals is, as far as is consistent with the constitution of this world ; and that the Good Man has here the advantage.—The error of imputing to Virtue what are only the calamities of Nature or of Fortune.—The folly of expecting that God should alter his general laws in favor of particulars.—That we are not judges who are good ; but that, whoever they are, they must be happiest.—That external goods are not the proper rewards, but often inconsistent with, or destructive of,
Virtue.—That even these can make no Man
happy without Virtue : instanced in Riches—
Honors—Nobility—Greatness—Fame—Superior Talents.—With pictures of human infelicity in Men possessed of them all.—That Virtue only constitutes a Happiness whose object is universal, and whose prospect eternal.—
That the perfection of Virtue and Happiness consists in a conformity to the Order of Providence here, and a Resignation to it here and hereafter.*

O HAPPINESS ! our being's end and aim !
Good, Pleasure, Ease, Content, whate'er thy
name ;

That something still which prompts th' eternal
For which we bear to live, or dare to die ; [sigh,
Which still so near us, yet beyond us lies ;
O'erlook'd, seen double, by the fool and wise ;

Plant of celestial seed ! if dropt below,
 Say, in what mortal soil thou deign'st to grow ?
 Fair op'ning to some Court's propitious shine,
 Or deep with diamonds in the flaming mine ?
 Twin'd with the wreaths Parnassian laurels yield,
 Or reap'd in iron harvests of the field ? [toil,
 Where grows ? where grows it not ? if vain our
 We ought to blame the culture, not the soil.
 Fix'd to no spot is happiness sincere,
 'Tis no where to be found, or ev'ry where :
 'Tis never to be bought, but always free ; [thee.
 And fled from monarchs, St. John, dwells with Ask of the Learn'd the way : the Learn'd are blind :

This bids to serve, and that to shun mankind ;
 Some place the bliss in action, some in ease ;
 Those call it pleasure, and contentment these ;
 Some, sunk to beasts, find pleasure end in pain ;
 Some, swell'd to gods, confess e'en virtue vain ;
 Or indolent to each extreme they fall,
 To trust in ev'ry thing, or doubt of all.

Who thus define it, say they more or less
 Than this, that happiness is happiness ?

Take Nature's path, and mad opinions leave ;
 All states can reach it, and all heads conceive ;
 Obvious her goods, in no extreme they dwell ;
 There needs but thinking right, and meaning
 well ;

And, mourn our various portions as we please,
 Equal is common sense and common ease.

Remember, Man, " the Universal Cause
 " Acts not by partial, but by gen'ral laws ;"
 And makes what Happiness we justly call,
 Subsist not in the good of one, but all.
 There's not a blessing individuals find,
 But some way leans and hearkens to the kind.
 No bandit fierce, no tyrant mad with pride,
 No cavern'd hermit rests self-satisfied :
 Who most to shun or hate mankind pretend,
 Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend :
 Abstract what others feel, what others think,
 All pleasures sicken, and all glories sink :
 Each has his share ; and who would more obtain,
 Shall find the pleasure pays not half the pain.

Order is Heaven's first law ; and this confest,
 Some are, and must be, greater than the rest,
 More rich, more wise ; but who infers from hence

That such are happier, shocks all common sense.
 Heaven to mankind impartial we confess,
 If all are equal in their happiness ;
 But mutual wants this happiness increase ;
 All nature's diff'rence keeps all nature's peace.
 Condition, circumstance, is not the thing ;
 Bliss is the same in subject or in king,
 In who obtain defence, or who defend,
 In him who is, or him who finds a friend :
 Heaven breathes through ev'ry member of the whole

One common blessing, as one common soul.
 But Fortune's gifts, if each alike possess'd,
 And each were equal, must not all contest ?
 If then to all men Happiness was meant,
 God in Externals could not place content.

Fortune her gifts may variously dispose,
 And these be happy call'd, unhappy those ;
 But Heaven's just balance equal will appear,
 While those are placed in hope, and these in fear :
 Not present good or ill, the joy or curse ;
 But future views of better, or of worse.

Oh, sons of earth ! attempt ye still to rise,
 By mountains pil'd on mountains, to the skies ?
 Heaven still with laughter the vain toil surveys,
 And buries madmen in the heaps they raise.

Know, all the good that individuals find,
 Or God and Nature meant to mere mankind,
 Reason's whole pleasure, all the joys of sense,
 Lie in three words, Health, Peace, and Competence.

But Health consists with Temperance alone ;
 And Peace, Oh, Virtue ! Peace is all thy own.
 The good or bad the gifts of fortune gain ;
 But these less taste them, as they worse obtain.
 Say, in pursuit of profit or delight,
 Who risque the most, that take wrong means or right ?

Of Vice or Virtue, whether blest or curst, [first ?
 Which meets Contempt or which Compassion
 Count all th' advantage prosp'rous Vice attains,
 'Tis but what Virtue flies from, and disdains :
 And grant the bad what happiness they wou'd,
 One they must want, which is, to pass for good,
 Oh, blind to truth, and God's whole scheme
 below,

Who fancy bliss to vice, to virtue woe !
 Who sees and follows that great scheme the best,
 Best knows the blessing, and will most be blest.
 But fools the good alone unhappy call,
 For ills or accidents that chance to all.
 See Falkland dies, the virtuous and the just !
 See godlike Turenne prostrate on the dust !
 See Sydney bleeds amid the martial strife !
 Was this their virtue, or contempt of life ?
 Say, was it virtue, more though Heaven ne'er gave,
 Lamented Digby ! sunk thee to the grave ?
 Tell me, if virtue made the son expire,
 Why, full of days and honour, lives the sire ?
 Why drew Marseilles' good bishop purer breath,
 When Nature sicken'd, and each gale was death ?
 Or why so long (in life if long can be)
 Lent Heaven a parent to the poor and me ?

What makes all physical or moral ill ?
 There deviates Nature, and here wanders will.
 God sends not ill, if rightly understood ;
 Or partial ill is universal good,
 Or change admits, or Nature lets it fall,
 Short, and but rare, till man improv'd it all.
 We just as wisely might of Heaven complain,
 That righteous Abel was destroy'd by Cain,
 As that the virtuous son is ill at ease
 When his lewd father gave the dire disease.
 Think we, like some weak prince, th'Eternal
 Cause

Prone for his fav'rites to reverse his laws ?

Shall burning Ætna, if a sage requires,
 Forget to thunder, and recal her fires ?
 On air or sea new motions be imprest,
 Oh blameless Bethel ! to relieve thy breast ?

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,
Shall gravitation cease, if you go by?
Or some old temple, nodding to its fall,
For Chartres' head reserve the hanging wall?

But still this world (so fitted for the knave)
Contents us not. A better shall we have?
A kingdom of the just then let it be:
But first consider how those just agree.
The good must merit God's peculiar care;
But who, but God, can tell us who they are?
One thinks, on Calvin Heaven's own Spirit fell;
Another deems him instrument of Hell.

If Calvin feel Heaven's blessing, or its rod,
This cries there is, and that, there is no God.

What shocks one part will edify the rest,
Nor with one system can they all be blest.

The very best will variously incline,
And what rewards your virtue, punish mine.

Whatever is, is right.—This world, 'tis true,
Was made for Cæsar—but for Titus too;

And which more blest? who chain'd his country, say,

Or he whose virtue sigh'd to lose a day?

“But sometimes virtue starves while vice is “fed.”

What then? is the reward of virtue bread?

That vice may merit, 'tis the price of toil;

The knave deserves it, when he tills the soil;

The knave deserves it, when he tempts the main,
Where folly fights for kings, or dives for gain.

The good man may be weak, be indolent;

Nor is his claim to plenty, but content.

But grant him riches, your demand is o'er?

“No—shall the good want health, the good
“want pow'r?”

Add health and pow'r, and ev'ry earthly thing,

“Why bounded pow'r? why private? why no

Nay, why external for internal giv'n? [king?”

Why is not man a God, and earth a heaven?

Who ask and reason thus, will scarce conceive

God gives enough, while he has more to give;

Immense the pow'r, immense were the demand;

Say, at what part of nature will they stand?

What nothing earthly gives, or can destroy,

The soul's calm sunshine, and the heart-felt joy,

Is virtue's prize: a better would you fix?

Then give humility a coach and six,

Justice a conqueror's sword, or truth a gown,

Or public spirit its great cure, a crown.

Weak, foolish man! will heaven reward us there

With the same trash mad mortals wish for here?

The boy and man an individual makes,

Yet sigh'st thou now for apples and for cakes?

Go, like the Indian, in another life

Expect thy dog, thy bottle, and thy wife;

As well as dream such trifles are assign'd,

As toys and empires, for a godlike mind.

Rewards, that either would to virtue bring

No joy, or be destructive of the thing;

How oft by these at sixty are undone

The virtues of a saint at twenty-one!

To whom can riches give repute, or trust,

Content or pleasure, but the good and just?

Judges and senates have been bought for gold;
Esteem and love were never to be sold.

Oh fool! to think God hates the worthy mind,
The lover and the love of human kind, [clear,
Whose life is healthful, and whose conscience
Because he wants a thousand pounds a-year.

Honor and shame from no condition rise;
Act well your part, there all the honor lies.
Fortune in men has some small diff'rence made;
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade;
The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd,
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd.

“What differ more (you cry) than crown and “cowl?”

I'll tell you, friend; a wise man and a fool.

You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobbler-like, the parson will be drunk,

Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow:
The rest is all but leather or prunella. [strings,

Stuck o'er with titles, and hung round with
That thou mayst be by kings, or whores of kings,

Boast the pure blood of an illustrious race,

In quiet flow from Lucrece to Lucrece:

But by your fathers' worth, if yours you rate,

Count me those only who were good and great.

Go! if your ancient, but ignoble blood

Has crept thro' scoundrels ever since the flood,

Go! and pretend your family is young;

Nor own your fathers have been fools so long.

What can ennoble sots, or slaves, or cowards?

Alas! not all the blood of all the Howards.

Look next on greatness; say where greatness lies?

“Where, but among the heroes and the wise?”

Heroes are much the same, the point's agreed,

From Macedonia's madman to the Swede;

The whole strange purpose of their lives, to find,

Or make, an enemy of all mankind!

Not one looks backward, onward still he goes,

Yet ne'er looks forward farther than his nose.

No less alike the politic and wise;

All sly, slow things, with circumspective eyes:

Men in their loose unguarded hours they take,

Not that themselves are wise, but others weak.

But grant that those can conquer, these can cheat;

'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great:

Who wickedly is wise, or madly brave,

Is but the more a fool, the more a knave.

Who noble ends by noble means obtains,

Or failing, smiles in exile or in chains,

Like good Aurelius let him reign, or bleed

Like Socrates, that man is great indeed.

What's fame? a fancy'd life in others' breath;

A thing beyond us, e'en before our death.

Just what you hear you have, and what's un-
known,

The same (my Lord) if Tully's, or your own.

All that we feel of it begins and ends

In the small circle of our foes or friends;

To all beside as much an empty shade;

An Eugene living, as a Cæsar dead;

Alike or when, or where, they shone, or shine,

Or on the Rubicon or on the Rhine.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
 An honest man's the noblest work of God.
 Fame but from death a villain's name can save,
 As justice tears his body from the grave;
 When what t' oblivion better were resign'd,
 Is hung on high, to poison half mankind.
 All fame is foreign, but of true desert;
 Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart:
 One self-approving hour whole years outweighs
 Of stupid starers, and of loud huzzas;
 And more true joy Marcellus exil'd feels,
 Than Cæsar with a senate at his heels.

In parts superior what advantage lies?
 Tell (for you can) what is it to be wise?
 'Tis but to know how little can be known,
 To see all others' faults, and feel our own;
 Condemn'd in business or in arts to drudge,
 Without a second, or without a judge.
 Truths would you teach, or save a sinking land?
 All fear, none aid you, and few understand:
 Painful pre-eminence! yourself to view
 Above life's weakness, and its comforts too.

Bring then these blessings to a strict account;
 Make fair deductions; see to what they mount;
 How much of other each is sure to cost;
 How each for other oft is wholly lost;
 How inconsistent greater goods with these;
 How sometimes life is risqu'd, and always ease:
 Think, and if still these things thy envy call,
 Say, wouldst thou be the man to whom they fall?
 To sigh for ribands if thou art so silly,
 Mark how they grace Lord Umbra, or Sir Billy!
 Is yellow dirt the passion of thy life?
 Look but on Gripus, or on Gripus' wife!
 If parts allure thee, think how Bacon shin'd,
 The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind!
 Or ravish'd with the whistling of a name,
 See Cromwell damn'd to everlasting fame!
 If all, united, thy ambition call,
 From ancient story learn to scorn them all.
 There, in the rich, the honor'd, fam'd, and great,

See the false scale of happiness complete!
 In hearts of kings, or arms of queens who lay,
 How happy those to ruin, these betray.
 Mark by what wretched steps their glory grows,
 From dirt and sea-weed as proud Venice rose;
 In each how guilt and greatness equal ran,
 And all that rais'd the hero sunk the man:
 Now Europe's laurels on their brows behold,
 But stain'd with blood, or ill exchang'd for
 gold;

Then see them broke with toils, or sunk in ease,
 Or infamous for plunder'd provinces.
 Oh wealth ill-fated! which no act of fame
 E'er taught to shine, or sanctified from shame!
 What greater bliss attends their close of life?
 Some greedy minion, or imperious wife,
 The trophied arches, storied halls invade,
 And haunt their slumbers in the pompous shade.
 Alas! not dazzled with their noon-tide ray,
 Compute the morn and ev'ning to the day;
 The whole amount of that enormous fame,
 A tale that blends their glory with their shame!

Know then this truth—(enough for man to
 "Virtue alone is happiness below." [know])
 The only point where human bliss stands still,
 And tastes the good without the fall to ill:
 Where only merit constant pay receives,
 Is blest in what it takes, and what it gives:
 The joy unequall'd, if its end it gain;
 And if it lose, attended with no pain:
 Without satiety, though e'er so blest,
 And but more relish'd as the more distress;
 The broadest mirth unfeeling folly wears,
 Less pleasing far than virtue's very tears:
 Good, from each object, from each place ac-
 For ever exercis'd, yet never tir'd; [quir'd,
 Never elated, while one man's oppress;
 Never dejected, while another's blest;
 And where no wants, no wishes can remain,
 Since but to wish more virtue, is to gain.

See the sole bliss Heaven could on all bestow;
 Which who but feels can taste, but thinks can
 know!

Yet poor with fortune, and with learning blind,
 The bad must miss, the good untaught will find;
 Slave to no sect, who takes no private road,
 But looks through nature, up to nature's God;
 Pursues that chain which links the immense
 design,

Joins heaven and earth, and mortal and divine;
 Sees that no being any bliss can know,
 But touches some above, and some below;
 Learns, from this union of the rising whole,
 The first, last purpose of the human soul;
 And knows where faith, law, morals, all began,
 All end, in love of God and love of man.

For him alone, hope leads from goal to goal,
 And opens still, and opens on his soul;
 Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
 It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind.
 He sees why nature plants in man alone
 Hope of known bliss, and faith in bliss unknown:
 (Nature, whose dictates to no other kind
 Are giv'n in vain, but what they seek they find).
 Wise is her present; she connects in this
 His greatest virtue with his greatest bliss;
 At once his own bright prospect to be blest,
 And strongest motive to assist the rest.

Self-love, thus push'd to social, to divine,
 Gives thee to make thy neighbour's blessing thine.
 Is this too little for the boundless heart?
 Extend it, let thy enemies have part;
 Grasp the whole world of reason, life, and sense,
 In one close system of benevolence:
 Happier as kinder, in whate'er degree,
 And height of bliss but height of charity.

God loves from whole to parts: but human
 Must rise from individual to the whole. [soul
 Self-love but serves the virtuous mind to wake,
 As the small pebble stirs the peaceful lake;
 The centre mov'd, a circle straight succeeds,
 Another still, and still another spreads;
 Friend, parent, neighbour, first it will embrace;
 His country next, and next all human race;
 Wide and more wide, th' o'erflowings of the mind
 Take ev'ry creature in, of ev'ry kind;

Earth smiles around, with boundless bounty blest,
And Heaven beholds its image on his breast.

Come then, my friend! my genius! come
Oh master of the poet, and the song! [along;
And while the Muse now stoops, or now ascends,
To man's low passions, or their glorious ends,
Teach me, like thee, in various nature wise,
To fall with dignity, with temper rise;
Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer,
From grave to gay, from lively to severe;
Correct with spirit, eloquent with ease,
Intent to reason, or polite to please.

Oh! while along the stream of time thy name
Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame,
Say, shall my little bark attendant sail,
Pursue the triumph, and partake the gale?
When statesmen, heroes, kings, in dust repose,
Whose sons shall blush their fathers were thy foes,
Shall then this verse to future age pretend
Thou wert my guide, philosopher, and friend?
That urg'd by thee, I turn'd the tuneful art,
From sounds to things, from fancy to the heart;
For wit's false mirror held up nature's light;
Show'd erring pride, whatever is, is right;
That reason, passion, answer one great aim;
That true self-love and social are the same;
That virtue only makes our bliss below;
And all our knowledge is, ourselves to know.

§ 17. Moral Essays. In Four Epistles. Pope.

To Sir Richard Temple, L. Cobham.

EPISTLE I.

YES, you despise the man to books confin'd,
Who from his study rails at human kind;
Though what he learns he speaks, and may advance

Some gen'ral maxims, or be right by chance.
The coxcomb bird, so talkative and grave,
That from his cage, calls Cuckold, Whore, and Knave,

Though many a passenger he rightly call,
You hold him no philosopher at all.

And yet the fate of all extremes is such,
Men may be read, as well as books, too much.
To observations which ourselves we make,
We grow more partial for th' observer's sake;
To written wisdom, as another's, less; [guess.
Maxims are drawn from notions, these from
There's some peculiar in each leaf and grain,
Some unmark'd fibre, or some varying vein:
Shall only man be taken in the gross?
Grant but as many sorts of mind as moss.

That each from other differs, first confess;
Next, that he varies from himself no less:
Add nature's, custom's, reason's, passion's strife,
And all opinion's colors cast on life.

Our depths who fathoms, or our shallows finds,
Quick whirls, and shifting eddies, of our minds?
On human actions reason though you can,
It may be reason, but it is not man;
His principle of action once explore,
That instant 'tis his principle no more.

Like following life, through creatures you dissect,
You lose it in the moment you detect.

Yet more; the diff'rence is as great between
The optics seeing, as the objects seen.
All manners take a tincture from our own;
Or come discolored through our passions shown.
Or fancy's beam enlarges, multiplies,
Contracts, inverts, and gives ten thousand dyes.

Nor will life's stream for observation stay;
It hurries all too fast to mark their way:
In vain sedate reflections we would make,
When half our knowledge we must snatch, not Oft, in the passions' wild rotation tost, [take.
Our spring of action to ourselves is lost:
Tir'd, not determin'd, to the last we yield;
And what comes then is master of the field.
As the last image of that troubled heap,
When sense subsides, and fancy sports in sleep,
(Though past the recollection of the thought,)
Becomes the stuff of which our dream is wrought:

Something as dim to our internal view,
Is thus, perhaps, the cause of most we do.

True, some are open, and to all men known;
Others so very close, they're hid from none,
(So darkness strikes the sense no less than light;)
Thus gracious Chandos is belov'd at sight;
And ev'ry child hates Shylock, though his soul
Still sits at squat, and peeps not from its hole.
At all mankind when generous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue, for he thinks them knaves.
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise.
When flatt'ry glares, all hate it in a queen;
While one there is who charms us with his spleen.

But these plain characters we rarely find:
Though strong the bent, yet quick the turns of mind;

Or puzzling contraries confound the whole;
Or affectations quite reverse the soul.
The dull, flat falsehood serves for policy;
And in the cunning, truth itself's a lie:
Unthought-of frailties cheat us in the wise;
The fool lies hid in inconsistencies.

See the same man, in vigor, in the gout;
Alone, in company; in place, or out;
Early at business, and at hazard late;
Mad at a fox-chase, wise at a debate;
Drunk at a borough, civil at a ball;
Friendly at Hackney, faithless at Whitehall.

Catius is ever moral, ever grave,
Thinks, who endures a knave is next a knave,
Save just at dinner—then prefers, no doubt,
A rogue with venison to a saint without.

Who would not praise Patricio's high desert,
His hand unstain'd, his uncorrupted heart,
His comprehensive head; all int'rests weigh'd,
All Europe sav'd, yet Britain not betray'd?
He thanks you not, his pride is in piquet,
Newmarket fame, and judgement at a bet.

What made (say, Montagne, or more sage Charron!)
Otho a warrior, Cromwell a buffoon?

A perjurd prince a leaden saint severe,
A godless regent tremble at a star?
The throne a bigot keep, a genius quit,
Faithless through piety, and dup'd through wit?
Europe a woman, child, or dotard rule,
And just her wisest monarch made a fool?

Know, God and Nature only are the same:
In man, the judgement shoots at flying game;
A bird of passage! gone as soon as found;
Now in the moon perhaps, now under ground.

In vain the sage, with retrospective eye,
Would from th' apparent What conclude the
Why;

Infer the Motive from the Deed, and show
That what we chanc'd was what we meant to do.
Behold! if Fortune or a Mistress frowns,
Some plunge in business, others shave their crowns:

To ease the soul of one oppressive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a state:
The same adust complexion has impell'd
Charles to the convent, Philip to the field.

Not always actions show the man; we find
Who does a kindness, is not therefore kind:
Perhaps prosperity becalm'd his breast,
Perhaps the wind just shifted from the east.
Not therefore humble he who seeks retreat;
Pride guides his steps, and bids him shun the great.

Who combats bravely is not therefore brave;
He dreads a death-bed like the meanest slave.
Who reasons wisely is not therefore wise;
His pride in reas'ning, not in acting, lies.

But grant that actions best discover man;
Take the most strong, and sort them as you can.
The few that glare, each character must mark;
You balance not the many in the dark.

What will you do with such as disagree?
Suppress them, or miscall them policy?
Must then at once (the character to save)
The plain rough hero turn a crafty knave?
Alas! in truth the man but chang'd his mind;
Perhaps was sick, in love, or had not din'd.
Ask why from Britain Cæsar would retreat?
Cæsar himself might whisper, he was beat.
Why risk the world's great empire for a punk?
Cæsar perhaps might answer, he was drunk.
But, sage historians! 'tis your task to prove,
One action, conduct; one, heroic love.

'Tis from high life high characters are drawn;
A saint in crape, is twice a saint in lawn;
A judge is just, a chanc'llor juster still;
A gownman, learn'd; a bishop, what you will;
Wise, if a minister; but if a king, [thing.
More wise, more learn'd, more just, more ev'ry
Court virtues bear, like gems, the highest rate,
Born where Heaven's influence scarce can penetrate;

In life's low vale, the soil the virtues like,
They please as beauties, here as wonders strike.
Though the same sun, with all-diffusive rays,
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze;
We prize the stronger effort of his pow'r,
And justly set the gem above the flow'r.

'Tis education forms the common mind;
Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclin'd.
Boastful and rough, your first son is a squire;
The next a tradesman, meek, and much a liar;
Tom struts a soldier, open, bold, and brave;
Will sneaks a scriv'ner, an exceeding knave:
Is he a churchman? then he's fond of pow'r;
A Quaker? sly; a Presbyterian? sour;
A smart Free-thinker? all things in an hour.

Ask men's opinions: Scoto now shall tell
How trade increases, and the world goes well;
Strike off his pension, by the setting sun,
And Britain, if not Europe, is undone.

That gay Free-thinker, a fine talker once,
What turns him now a stupid silent dunce?
Some god, or spirit, he has lately found;
Or chanc'd to meet a minister that frown'd.

Judge we by nature? habit can efface,
Int'rest o'ercome, or policy take place:
By actions? those uncertainty divides;
By passions? these dissimulation hides;
Opinions? they still take a wider range:
Find, if you can, in what you cannot change.

Manners with fortunes, humors turn with climes,

Tenets with books, and principles with times.

Search then the ruling passion: there, alone,
The wild are constant, and the cunning known;
The fool consistent, and the false sincere;
Priests, princes, women, no dissemblers here.
This clew once found, unravels all the rest;
The prospect clears, and Wharton stands confest.
Wharton, the scorn and wonder of our days,
Whose ruling passion was the lust of praise;
Born with whate'er could win it from the wise,
Women and fools must like him, or he dies:
Though wond'ring senates hung on all he spoke,

The club must hail him master of the joke.
Shall parts so various aim at nothing new?
He'll shine a Tully and a Wilmot too;
Then turns repentant, and his God adores
With the same spirit that he drinks and whores;
Enough if all around him but admire,
And now the punk applaud, and now the friar.
Thus with each gift of nature and of art,
And wanting nothing but an honest heart;
Grown all to all, from no one vice exempt,
And most contemptible to shun contempt;
His passion still, to covet gen'ral praise;
His life, to forfeit it a thousand ways;
A constant bounty, which no friend has made;
An angel tongue, which no man can persuade;
A fool, with more of wit than half mankind;
Too rash for thought, for action too refin'd;
A tyrant to the wife his heart approves;
A rebel to the very king he loves;
He dies, sad outcast of each church and state,
And, harder still! flagitious, yet not great.
Ask you why Wharton broke through ev'ry rule?
'Twas all for fear the knaves should call him fool.

Nature well known, no prodigies remain;
Comets are regular, and Wharton plain.

Yet, in this search, the wisest may mistake,
If second qualities for first they take.
When Catiline by rapine swell'd his store;
When Cæsar made a noble dame a whore;
In this the lust, in that the avarice,
Were means, not ends; ambition was the vice.
That very Cæsar, born in Scipio's days,
Had aim'd, like him, by chastity at praise.
Lucullus, when frugality could charm,
Had roasted turnips in the Sabine farm.
In vain th' observer eyes the builder's toil;
But quite mistakes the scaffold for the pile.

In this one passion man can strength enjoy,
As fits give vigor just when they destroy.
Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,
Yet tames not this; it sticks to our last sand.
Consistent in our follies and our sins,
Here honest Nature ends as she begins.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,
And totter on in business to the last:
As weak, as earnest, and as gravely out,
As sober Lanesb'row dancing in the gout.

Behold a rev'rend sire, whom want of grace
Has made the father of a nameless race,
Shov'd from the wall perhaps, or rudely prest
By his own son, that passes by unblest:
Still to his wench he crawls on knocking knees,
And envies ev'ry sparrow that he sees.

A salmon's belly, Helluo, was thy fate:
The doctor call'd declares all help too late.

"Mercy!" cries Helluo, "mercy on my soul!
"Is there no hope?—Alas!—then bring the jowl.

The frugal crone, whom praying priests attend,
Still strives to save the hallow'd taper's end,
Collects her breath, as ebbing life retires,
For one puff more, and in that puff expires.

"Odious! in woollen! 'twould a saint provoke,"

(Were the last words that poor Narcissa spoke;)

"No, let a charming chintz and Brussels lace

"Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face:

"One would not, sure, be frightful when one's
"dead—

"And—Betty—give this cheek a little red."

The courtier smooth, who forty years had shin'd

An humble servant to all human kind,
Just brought out this, when scarce his tongue
could stir,

"If—where I'm going—I could serve you, sir?"

"I give and I devise" (old Euclio said,
And sigh'd) "my lands and tenements to Ned."

Your money, sir?—"My money, sir, what all?"

"Why—if I must—(then wept) I give it Paul."

The manor, sir?—"the manor, hold," he cried, [died.

"Not that,—I cannot part with that,"—and

And you, brave Cobham, to your latest breath,
Shall feel your ruling passion strong in death:

Such in those moments, as in all the past,

"Oh, save my country, Heaven!" shall be your last.

EPISTLE II.

To a Lady.

Of the Characters of Women.

NOTHING so true as what you once let fall,
"Most women have no characters at all:"
Matter too soft a lasting mark to bear,
And best distinguish'd by black, brown, or fair.

How many pictures of one nymph we view,
All how unlike each other, all how true!
Arcadia's countess, here, in ermin'd pride,
Is there Pastora by a fountain side.

Here Fannia, leering on her own good man;
And there a naked Leda with a swan.

Let then the fair one beautifully cry,
In Magdalene's loose hair and lifted eye;
Or drest in smiles of sweet Cecilia shine,
With simp'ring angels, palms, and harps divine;
Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,
If folly grow romantic, I must paint it.

Come, then, the colors and the ground pre-
Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air; [pare!
Choose a firm cloud, before it fall, and in it
Catch, ere she change, the Cynthia of this minute.

Rufa, whose eye, quick glancing o'er the Park,
Attracts each light gay meteor of a spark,
Agrees as ill with Rufa studying Locke,
As Sappho's diamonds with her dirty smock;
Or Sappho at her toilet's greasy task,
With Sappho fragrant at an ev'ning mask:
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting sun.

How soft is Silia! fearful to offend;
The frail one's advocate, the weak one's friend!
To her, Calista prov'd her conduct nice;
And good Simplicius asks of her advice. [wink;
Sudden, she storms! she raves! You tip the
But spare your censure, Silia does not drink.
All eyes may see from what the change arose;
All eyes may see—a pimple on her nose.

Papilia, wedded to her am'rous spark,
Sighs for the shades—"How charming is a park!"

A park is purchas'd; but the fair he sees
All bath'd in tears—"Oh odious, odious trees!"

Ladies, like variegated tulips, show,
'Tis to their changes half their charms we owe;
Fine by defect, and delicately weak,
Their happy spots the nice admirer take.

'Twas thus Calypso once each heart alarm'd,
Aw'd without virtue, without beauty charm'd;
Her tongue bewitch'd as oddly as her eyes;
Less wit than mimic, more a wit than wise;
Strange graces still, and stranger flights she had,
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad;
Yet ne'er so sure our passion to create,
As when she touch'd the brink of all we hate.

Narcissa's nature, tolerably mild,
To make a wash, would hardly stew a child;
Has e'en been prov'd to grant a lover's pray'r,
And paid a tradesman once, to make him stare;
Gave alms at Easter, in a Christian trim,
And made a widow happy, for a whim.

Why then declare good-nature is her scorn,
When 'tis by that alone she can be borne?
Why pique all mortals, yet affect a name?
A fool to pleasure, yet a slave to fame:
Now deep in Taylor and the Book of Martyrs,
Now drinking citron with his grace and Chartres.
Now conscience chills her, and now passion
burns;

And atheism and religion take their turns;
A very Heathen in the carnal part,
Yet still a sad good Christian at her heart.

See sin in state, majestically drunk,
Proud as a peeress, prouder as a punk;
Chaste to her husband, frank to all beside,
A teeming mistress, but a barren bride.
What then? let blood and body bear the fault,
Her head's untouch'd, that noble seat of
thought:

Such this day's doctrine—in another fit
She sins with poets through pure love of wit.
What has not fir'd her bosom or her brain?
Cæsar and Tall-boy, Charles and Charlemagne.
As Helluo, late dictator of the feast,
The nose of haut-gout, and the tip of taste,
Critiqu'd your wine, and analys'd your meat,
Yet on plain pudding deign'd at home to eat:
So Philomédé, lect'ring all mankind,
On the soft passion, and the taste refin'd,
Th' address, the delicacy—stoops at once,
And makes her hearty meal upon a dunce.

Flavia's a wit, has too much sense to pray;
To toast our wants and wishes, is her way;
Nor asks of God, but of her stars to give
The mighty blessing, "while we live, to live."
Then all for death, that opiate of the soul!
Lucretia's dagger, Rosamonda's bowl.
Say, what can cause such impotence of mind?
A spark too fickle, or a spouse too kind.
Wise wretch! with pleasures too refin'd to please;

With too much spirit to be e'er at ease;
With too much quickness, ever to be taught;
With too much thinking, to have common
thought;

You purchase pain with all that joy can give,
And die of nothing but a rage to live.

Turn then from wits, and look on Simo's mate;

No ass so meek, no ass so obstinate:
Or her that owns her faults, but never mends,
Because she's honest, and the best of friends:
Or her, whose life the church and scandal share,
For ever in a passion or a pray'r:
Or her who laughs at hell, but (like her grace) Cries, "Ah! how charming, if there's no such place!"

Or who in sweet vicissitude appears
Of mirth and opium, ratafie and tears,
The daily anodyne, and nightly draught,
To kill those foes to fair ones, time and thought!
Woman and fool are two hard things to hit;
For true no-meaning puzzles more than wit.

But what are these to great Atossa's mind?
Scarce once herself, by turns all womankind!

Who, with herself, or others, from her birth
Finds all her life one warfare upon earth:
Shines in exposing knaves, and painting fools,
Yet is whate'er she hates and ridicules.
No thought advances, but her eddy brain
Whisks it about, and down it goes again.
Full sixty years the world has been her trade,
The wisest fool much time has ever made.
From loveless youth to unrespected age,
No passion gratified, except her rage:
So much the fury still outran the wit,
The pleasure miss'd her, and the scandal hit.
Who breaks with her, provokes revenge from
hell;

But he's a bolder man who dares be well.
Her ev'ry turn with violence pursu'd,
Nor more a storm her hate than gratitude:
To that each passion turns or soon or late;
Love, if it makes her yield, must make her
hate;

Superiors? death! and equals? what a curse!
But an inferior not dependent! worse.
Offend her, and she knows not to forgive;
Oblige her, and she'll hate you while you live:
But die, and she'll adore you—then the bust
And temple rise—then fall again to dust.
Last night, her lord was all that's good and great;

A knave this morning, and his will a cheat.
Strange! by the means defeated of the ends,
By spirit robb'd of pow'r, by warmth of friends,
By wealth of followers! without one distress,
Sick of herself, through very selfishness!
Atossa, curs'd with ev'ry granted pray'r,
Childless, with all her children, wants an heir.
To heirs unknown descends th' unguarded store,
Or wanders, Heaven-directed, to the poor.

Pictures like these, dear madam, to design,
Asks no firm hand, and no unerring line;
Some wand'ring touches, some reflected light,
Some flying stroke alone can hit them right:
For how should equal colors do the knack?
Cameleons who can paint in white and black?
"Yet Chloe sure was form'd without a spot."
Nature in her then err'd not, but forgot.
"With ev'ry pleasing, ev'ry prudent part,
"Say, what can Chloe want?"—She wants a
heart.

She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought;
But never, never reach'd one gen'rous thought.
Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour;
Content to dwell in decencies for ever.
So very reasonable, so unmov'd,
As never yet to love, or to be lov'd.
She, while her lover pants upon her breast,
Can mark the figures on an Indian chest;
And, when she sees her friend in deep despair,
Observes how much a chintz exceeds mohair.
Forbid it, Heav'n! a favor or a debt
She e'er should cancel—but she may forget.
Safe is your secret still in Chloe's ear;
But none of Chloe's shall you ever hear.
Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
But cares not if a thousand are undone.

Would Chloe know if you're alive or dead?
 She bids her footman put it in her head.
 Chloe is prudent—would you too be wise?
 Then never break your heart when Chloe dies.

One certain portrait may, I grant, be seen,
 Which Heaven has varnish'd out, and made a queen:

The same for ever! and describ'd by all [ball.
 With truth and goodness, as with crown and Poets heap virtues, painters gems at will,
 And show their zeal, and hide their want of skill.
 'Tis well—but, artists! who can paint or write,
 To draw the naked is your true delight.
 That robe of quality so struts and swells,
 None see what parts of nature it conceals:
 Th' exactest traits of body or of mind,
 We owe to models of an humble kind.
 If Queensberry to strip there's no compelling,
 'Tis from a handmaid we must take a Helen.
 From peer or bishop, 'tis no easy thing
 To draw the man who loves his God or king:
 Alas! I copy (or my draught would fail)
 From honest Mah'met, or plain Parson Hale.

But grant, in public men sometimes are shown,

A woman's seen in private life alone:
 Our bolder talents in full light display'd;
 Your virtues open fairest in the shade.
 Bred to disguise, in public 'tis you hide;
 There none distinguish 'twixt your shame or
 Weakness or delicacy; all so nice, [pride,
 That each may seem a virtue or a vice.

In men we various ruling passions find;
 In women, two almost divide the kind;
 Those, only fix'd, they first or last obey,
 The love of pleasure and the love of sway.

That nature gives; and where the lesson taught

Is but to please, can pleasure seem a fault?
 Experience, this; by man's oppression curst,
 They seek the second not to lose the first.

Men, some to bus'ness, some to pleasure take,
 But ev'ry woman is at heart a rake:
 Men, some to quiet, some to public strife;
 But ev'ry lady would be queen for life.
 Yet mark the fate of a whole sex of queens!
 Pow'r all their end, but beauty all the means:
 In youth they conquer with so wild a rage,
 As leaves them scarce a subject in their age:
 For foreign glory, foreign joy, they roam;
 No thought of peace or happiness at home.
 But wisdom's triumph is well-tim'd retreat,
 As hard a science to the fair as great;
 Beauties, like tyrants, old and friendless grown,
 Yet hate repose, and dread to be alone;
 Worn out in public, weary ev'ry eye,
 Nor leave one sigh behind them when they die.

Pleasures the sex, as children birds, pursue;
 Still out of reach, yet never out of view;
 Sure, if they catch, to spoil the toy at most,
 To covet flying, and regret when lost:
 At last, to follies youth could scarce defend,
 It grows their age's prudence to pretend;

Asham'd to own they gave delight before,
 Reduc'd to feign it when they give no more:
 As hags hold sabbaths less for joy than spite,
 So these their merry, miserable night;
 Still round and round the ghosts of beauty glide,
 And haunt the places where their honor died.

See how the world its veterans rewards!
 A youth of frolics, an old age of cards;
 Fair to no purpose, artful to no end,
 Young without lovers, old without a friend;
 A fop their passion, but their prize a sot,
 Alive ridiculous, and dead forgot!

Ah, friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
 To raise the thought and touch the heart be thine!

[ring,
 That charm shall grow, while what fatigues the Flaunts and goes down an unregarded thing;
 So when the sun's broad beam has tir'd the sight,
 All mild ascends the moon's more sober light;
 Serene in virgin modesty she shines,
 And unobserv'd the glaring orb declines.

Oh! blest with temper, whose unclouded ray
 Can make to-morrow cheerful as to-day;
 She who can love a sister's charms, or hear
 Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear;
 She who ne'er answers till a husband cools;
 Or, if she rules him, never shows she rules:
 Charms by accepting, by submitting sways,
 Yet has her humour most when she obeys;
 Lets fops or fortune fly which way they will;
 Disdains all loss of tickets, or codille;
 Spleen, vapors, or small-pox, above them all,
 And mistress of herself though china fall.

And yet, believe me, good as well as ill,
 Woman's at best a contradiction still.
 Heaven, when it strives to polish all it can
 Its last best work, but forms a softer man;
 Picks from each sex, to make the fav'rite blest,
 Your love of pleasure, our desire of rest:
 Blends, in exception to all gen'ral rules,
 Your taste of follies with our scorn of fools;
 Reserve with frankness, art with truth allied,
 Courage with softness, modesty with pride;
 Fix'd principles, with fancy ever new;
 Shakes all together, and produces—you.

Be this a woman's fame; with this unblest,
 Toasts live a scorn, and queens may die a jest.
 This Phœbus promis'd (I forget the year)
 When those blue eyes first open'd on the sphere;
 Ascendant Phœbus watch'd that hour with care,
 Averted half your parents' simple pray'r;
 And gave you beauty, but denied the pelf
 That buys your sex a tyrant o'er itself.
 The gen'rous god, who wit and gold refines,
 And ripens spirits, as he ripens mines,
 Kept dross for duchesses, the world shall know it,
 To you gave sense, good-humor, and a poet.

EPISTLE III.

To Allen, Lord Bathurst.

P. Who shall decide, when doctors disagree,
 And soundest casuists doubt, like you and me?
 You hold the word, from Jove to Momus given,
 That man was made the standing jest of heaven;

And gold but sent to keep the fools in play,
For some to heap, and some to throw away.

But I, who think more highly of our kind
(And surely Heaven and I are of a mind),
Opine, that nature, as in duty bound,
Deep hid the shining mischief under ground;
But when by man's audacious labor won,
Flam'd forth this rival to its sire the sun,
Then careful Heaven supplied two sorts of men;
To squander these, and those to hide again.

Like doctors thus, when much dispute has
We find our tenets just the same at last. [pass'd,
Both fairly owning, riches, in effect,
No grace of Heaven, or token of th' elect;
Giv'n to the fool, the mad, the vain, the evil,
To Ward, to Waters, Chartres, and the devil.

B. What nature wants, commodious gold be-
'Tis thus we eat the bread another sows. [stows;

P. But how unequal it bestows, observe:
'Tis thus we riot, while who sow it starve:
What nature wants (a phrase I must distrust)
Extends to luxury, extends to lust:
Useful, I grant, it serves what life requires;
But, dreadful too, the dark assassin hires.

B. Trade it may help, society extend:

P. But lures the pirate, and corrupts the friend.

B. It raises armies in a nation's aid: [tray'd.

P. But bribes a senate, and the land's be-
In vain may heroes fight, and patriots rave,
If secret gold sap on from knave to knave.
Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And, jingling down the back-stairs, told the crew,
"Old Cato is as great a rogue as you."

Blest paper-credit! last and best supply!
That lends corruption lighter wings to fly!
Gold, imp'd by thee, can compass hardest things;
Can pocket states, can fetch or carry kings;
A single leaf shall waft an army o'er,
Or ship off senates to some distant shore;
A leaf, like Sibyl's, scatter to and fro
Our fates and fortunes, as the wind shall blow:
Pregnant with thousands flits the scrap unseen,
And silent sells a king, or buys a queen.

Oh! that such bulky bribes as all might see,
Still, as of old, encumber'd villany!
Could France or Rome divert our brave designs
With all their brandies, or with all their wines?
What could they more than knights and 'squires
confound,

Or water all the quorum ten miles round?
A statesman's slumbers how this speech would
"Sir, Spain has sent a thousand jars of oil: [spoil!
"Huge bales of British cloth blockade the door;
"A hundred oxen at your levee roar."

Poor avarice one torment more would find;
Nor could profusion squander all in kind.
Astride his cheese Sir Morgan might we meet;
And Worldly crying coals from street to street;
Whom, with a wig so wild, and mien so maz'd,
Pity mistakes for some poor tradesman craz'd.
Had Colepepper's whole wealth been hops and hogs,

Could he himself have sent it to the dogs?

His grace will game; to White's a bull be led,
With spurning heels and with a butting head:
To White's be carried, as to ancient games,
Fair coursers, vases, and alluring dames.

Shall then Uxorio, if the stakes he sweep,
Bear home six whores, and make his lady weep?
Or soft Adonis, so perfum'd and fine,
Drive to St. James's a whole herd of swine?
O filthy check on all industrious skill,
To spoil the nation's last great trade, quadrille!
Since then, my lord, on such a world we fall,
What say you? B. Say? why take it, gold and all.

P. What riches give us, let us then inquire:
Meat, fire, and clothes. B. What more? P.
Meat, clothes, and fire.

Is this too little? would you more than live?
Alas! 'tis more than Turner finds they give.
Alas! 'tis more than (all his visions past)
Unhappy Wharton, waking, found at last!
What can they give? to dying Hopkins, heirs;
To Chartres, vigor; Japhet, nose and ears?
Can they in gems bid pallid Hippias glow?
In Fulvia's buckle ease the throbs below?
Or heal, old Narses, thy obscener ail,
With all th' embroidery plaster'd at thy tail?
They might (were Harpax not too wise to spend)
Give Harpax self the blessing of a friend;
Or find some doctor that would save the life
Of wretched Shylock, spite of Shylock's wife;
But thousands die, without or this or that;
Die, and endow a college, or a cat.
To some, indeed, Heaven grants the happier fate,
To enrich a bastard, or a son they hate.

Perhaps you think the poor might have their part. [heart:

Bond damns the poor, and hates them from his
The grave sir Gilbert holds it for a rule,
That ev'ry man in want is knave or fool:
"God cannot love (says Blunt, with tearless eyes)
"The wretch he starves"—and piously denies:
But the good bishop, with a meeker air,
Admits, and leaves them Providence's care.

Yet, to be just to these poor men of pelf,
Each does but hate his neighbour as himself:
Damn'd to the mines, an equal fate betides
The slave that digs it, and the slave that hides.

B. Who suffer thus, mere charity should own,
Must act on motives powerful, though unknown.

P. Some war, some plague, or famine they
Some revelation hid from you and me. [foresee,
Why Shylock wants a meal, the cause is found;
He thinks a loaf will rise to fifty pound.
What made directors cheat in South-sea year?
To live on ven'son when it sold so dear.
Ask you why Phryne the whole auction buys?
Phryne foresees a general excise.

Why she and Sappho raise that monstrous sum?
Alas! they fear a man will cost a plum.

Wise Peter sees the world's respect for gold,
And therefore hopes this nation may be sold:
Glorious ambition! Peter, swell thy store,
And be what Rome's great Didius was before.

The crown of Poland, venal twice an age,
To just three millions stinted modest Gage.

But nobler scenes Maria's dreams unfold,
Hereditary realms, and worlds of gold.

Congenial souls! whose life one av'rice joins,
And one fate buries in th' Asturian mines.

Much-injur'd Blunt! why bears he Britain's hate?

A wizard told him in these words our fate;

"At length corruption, like a gen'ral flood

"(So long by watchful ministers withstood),

"Shall deluge all; and av'rice, creeping on,

"Spread like a low-born mist, and blot the sun;

"Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks,

"Peeress and butler share alike the box,

"And judges job, and bishops bite the town,

"And mighty dukes pack cards for half a
"crown:

* See Britain sunk in lucre's sordid charms,

"And France reveng'd of Anne's and Edward's
"arms!" [brain,

'Twas no court badge, great scriv'ner! fir'd thy
Nor lordly luxury, nor city gain:

No, 'twas thy righteous end, asham'd to see

Senates degen'rate, patriots disagree;

And nobly wishing party-rage to cease,

To buy both sides, and give thy country peace.

"All this is madness," cries a sober sage:

"But who, my friend, has reason in his rage?

"The ruling passion, be it what it will,

"The ruling passion conquers reason still."

Less mad the wildest whimsey we can frame,

Than even that passion, if it has no aim;

For though such motives folly you may call,

The folly's greater to have none at all.

Hear then the truth—" 'Tis Heaven each "passion sends,

"And diff'rent men directs to diff'rent ends.

"Extremes in nature equal good produce;

"Extremes in man concur to gen'ral use."

Ask we what makes one keep, and one bestow?

That Pow'r who bids the ocean ebb and flow;

Bids seed-time, harvest, equal course maintain,

Through reconcil'd extremes of drought and rain;

Builds life on death, on change duration founds,

And gives th' eternal wheels to know their rounds.

Riches, like insects, when conceal'd they lie,
Wait but for wings, and in their season fly.

Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,

Sees but a backward steward for the poor:

This year a reservoir, to keep and spare;

The next, a fountain, spouting through his heir,

In lavish streams to quench a country's thirst;

And men and dogs shall drink him till they burst.

Old Cotta sham'd his fortune and his birth,

Yet was not Cotta void of wit or worth:

What though (the use of barb'rous spits forgot)
His kitchen vied in coolness with his grot?

His court with nettles, moats with cresses stor'd,

With soups unbought and salads blest his board?

If Cotta liv'd on pulse, it was no more

Than Bramins, saints, and sages did before:

To cram the rich was prodigal expence;

And who would take the poor from Providence?

Like some lone Chartreux stands the good old hall,

Silence without, and fasts within the wall:

No rafter'd roofs with dance and tabor sound,

No noontide bell invites the country round:

Tenants with sighs the smokeless tow'rs survey,

And turn th' unwilling steeds another way:

Benighted wanderers, the forest o'er,

Curse the sav'd candle, and unop'ning door;

While the gaunt mastiff, growling at the gate,

Affrights the beggar, whom he longs to eat.

Not so his son: he mark'd this oversight,

And then mistook reverse of wrong for right;

(For what to shun, will no great knowledge need;

But what to follow is a task indeed:)

Yet sure, of qualities deserving praise,

More go to ruin fortunes than to raise.

Whatslaughter'd hecatombs, what floods of wine,

Fill the capacious 'squire, and deep divine!

Yet no mean motive this profusion draws,

His oxen perish in his country's cause;

'Tis George and Liberty that crowns the cup,

And zeal for that great house which eats him up.

The woods recede around the naked seat,

The sylvans groan—no matter—for the fleet:

Next goes his wool—to clothe our valiant bands:

Last, for his country's love, he sells his lands.

To town he comes, completes the nation's hope,

And heads the bold train-bands, and burns a
pope.

And shall not Britain now reward his toils,

Britain, that pays her patriots with her spoils?

In vain at court the bankrupt pleads his cause;

His thankless country leaves him to her laws.

The sense to value riches, with the art

To enjoy them, and the virtue to impart,

Not meanly, nor ambitiously pursued,

Not sunk by sloth, nor rais'd by servitude;

To balance fortune by a just expence,

Join with economy, magnificence;

With splendor, charity; with plenty, health!

Oh teach us, Bathurst! yet unspoil'd by wealth!

That secret rare, between the extremes to move,

Of mad good-nature, and of mean self-love.

B. To worth or want well weigh'd be bounty given,

And ease or emulate the care of Heaven,

(Whose measure full o'erflows on human race;)

Mend fortune's fault, and justify her grace.

Wealth in the gross is death, but life diffus'd;

As poison heals, in just proportion us'd:

In heaps, like ambergris, a stink it lies;

But well dispers'd is incense to the skies.

P. Who starves by nobles, or with nobles eats?

The wretch that trusts them, and the rogue that cheats.

Is there a lord, who knows a cheerful noon

Without a fiddler, flatt'rer, or buffoon?

Whose table wit or modest merit share,

Unelbow'd by a gamester, pimp, or play'r?

Who copies yours, or Oxford's better part,

To ease th' oppress'd, and raise the sinking heart?

Where'er he shines, O fortune, gild the scene,

And angels guard him in the golden mean!

There English bounty yet a while may stand,
And honour linger ere it leaves the land.

But all our praises why should lords engross?
Rise, honest Muse! and sing the Man of Ross:
Pleas'd Vaga echoes through her winding bounds,
And rapid Severn hoarse applause resounds.
Who hung with woods yon mountain's sultry brow?

From the dry rock who bade the waters flow?
Not to the skies in useless columns tost,
Or in proud falls magnificently lost,
But clear and artless, pouring through the plain
Health to the sick, and solace to the swain.
Whose causeway parts the vale with shady rows?
Whose seats the weary traveller repose?
Who taught that heaven-directed spire to rise?
"The Man of Ross," each lisping babe replies.
Behold the market-place with poor o'erspread!
The Man of Ross divides the weekly bread:
He feeds yon alms-house, neat, but void of state,
Where age and want sit smiling at the gate:
Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans
bless'd,

The young who labor, and the old who rest.
Is any sick? the Man of Ross relieves,
Prescribes, attends, the medicine makes and gives.
Is there a variance? enter but his door,
Balk'd are the courts, and contest is no more.
Despairing quacks with curses fled the place,
And vile attorneys, now a useless race.

B. Thrice happy man! enabled to pursue
What all so wish, but want the pow'r to do!
Oh say, what sums that gen'rous hand supply!
What mines to swell that boundless charity?

P. Of debts and taxes, wife and children,
clear,
This man possess'd five hundred pounds a-year.
Blush, grandeur, blush! proud courts, withdraw your blaze!

Ye little stars! hide your diminish'd rays.

B. And what? no monument, inscription, stone?

His race, his form, his name almost unknown?

P. Who builds a church to God, and not to fame,

Will never mark the marble with his name:
Go, search it there, where to be born and die,
Of rich and poor makes all the history;
Enough, that virtue fill'd the space between;
Prov'd by the ends of being, to have been.
When Hopkins dies, a thousand lights attend
The wretch who living sav'd a candle's end;
Should'ring God's altar a vile image stands,
Belies his features, nay extends his hands;
That live-long wig, which Gorgon's self might Eternal buckle takes in Parian stone. [own,
Behold what blessings wealth to life can lend!
And see what comfort it affords our end. [hung,

In the worst inn's worst room, with mat half
The floors of plaster, and the walls of dung,
On once a flock-bed, but repair'd with straw,
With tape-tied curtains, never meant to draw,
The George and Garter dangling from that bed
Where tawdry yellow strove with dirty red,

Great Villiers lies—alas! how chang'd from him,

That life of pleasure, and that soul of whim!
Gallant and gay, in Cliveden's proud alcove,
The bow'r of wanton Shrewsbury and love;
Or just as gay at council, in a ring
Of mimic statesmen, and their merry king;
No wit to flatter left of all his store,
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more:
There, victor of his health, of fortune, friends,
And fame—this lord of useless thousands ends!

His grace's fate sage Cutler could foresee,
And well (he thought) advis'd him, "Live like
"me."

As well his grace replied, "Like you, Sir John?
"That I can do, when all I have is gone."
Resolve me, Reason, which of these is worse,
Want with a full, or with an empty purse?
Thy life more wretched, Cutler, was confess'd;
Arise, and tell me, was thy death more bless'd?
Cutler saw tenants break, and houses fall;
For very want he could not build a wall.
His only daughter in a stranger's pow'r;
For very want he could not pay a dow'r.
A few gray hairs his rev'rend temples crown'd;
'Twas very want that sold them for two pound.
What even denied a cordial at his end,
Banish'd the doctor, and expell'd the friend?
What but a want, which you perhaps think mad,
Yet numbers feel—the want of what he had!
Cutler and Brutus, dying, both exclaim,
"Virtue! and wealth! what are ye but a name!"

Say, for such worth are other worlds prepar'd!
Or are they both in this their own reward?
A knotty point! to which we now proceed.
But you are tir'd—I'll tell a tale.—B. Agreed.

P. Where London's column, pointing at the
Like a tall bully, lifts the head, and lies; [skies,
There dwelt a citizen of sober fame,
A plain good man, and Balaam was his name;
Religious, punctual, frugal, and so forth;
His word would pass for more than he was worth.
One solid dish his week-day meal affords,
An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's:
Constant at church and 'change; his gains were sure,

His givings rare, save farthings to the poor.

The devil was piqu'd such saintship to behold,
And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old:
But Satan now is wiser than of yore,
And tempts by making rich, not making poor.

Rous'd by the prince of air, the whirlwinds
sweep

The surge, and plunge his father in the deep;
Then full against his Cornish lands they roar,
And two rich shipwrecks bless the lucky shore.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, and cracks his jokes;
"Live like yourself," was soon my lady's word;
And lo! two puddings smok'd upon the board.

Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honest factor stole a gem away:
He pledg'd it to the knight: the knight had wit,
So kept the diamond, and the rogue was bit.

Some scruple rose, but thus he eas'd his thought:
 "I'll now give sixpence where I gave a groat;
 "Where once I went to church, I'll now go
 "twice—

"And am so clear too of all other vice."

The tempter saw his time; the work he plied;
 Stocks and subscriptions pour on ev'ry side,
 'Till all the dæmon makes his full descent
 In one abundant show'r of cent. per cent.;
 Sinks deep within him, and possesses whole,
 Then dubs director, and secures his soul.

Behold Sir Balaam, now a man of spirit,
 Ascribes his gettings to his parts and merit;
 What late he call'd a blessing, now was wit,
 And God's good providence, a lucky hit.
 Things change their titles, as our manners turn:
 His compting-house employ'd the Sunday morn:
 Seldom at church ('twas such a busy life),
 But duly sent his family and wife.

There (so the devil ordain'd) one Christmas-tide
 My good old lady catch'd a cold, and died.

A nymph of quality admires our knight;
 He marries, bows at court, and grows polite;
 Leaves the dull cits, and joins (to please the fair)
 The well-bred cuckolds in St. James's air;
 First, for his son a gay commission buys,
 Who drinks, whores, fights, and in a duel dies.
 His daughter flaunts a viscount's tawdry wife;
 She bears a coronet and p—x for life.

In Britain's senate he a seat obtains,
 And one more pensioner St. Stephen gains.
 My lady falls to play: so bad her chance,
 He must repair it; takes a bribe from France;
 The House impeach him, Coningsby harangues;
 The Court forsake him, and Sir Balaam hangs;
 Wife, son, and daughter, Satan! are thy own,
 His wealth, yet dearer, forfeit to the crown;
 The devil and the king divide the prize,
 And sad sir Balaam curses God and dies.

EPISTLE IV.

To Richard Boyle, Earl of Burlington.

'Tis strange, the miser should his cares employ
 To gain those riches he can ne'er enjoy:
 Is it less strange, the prodigal should waste
 His wealth, to purchase what he ne'er can taste?
 Not for himself he sees, or hears, or eats;
 Artists must choose his pictures, music, meats:
 He buys for Topham drawings and designs;
 For Pembroke statues, dirty gods, and coins;
 Rare monkish manuscripts for Hearne alone;
 And books for Mead, and butterflies for Sloane.
 Think we all these are for himself? No more
 Than his fine wife, alas! or finer whore.

For what has Virro painted, built, and planted?
 Only to show how many tastes he wanted.
 What brought Sir Visto's ill-got wealth to waste?
 Some dæmon whisper'd, "Visto! have a taste."
 Heav'n visits with a taste the wealthy fool,
 And needs no rod but Ripley with a rule.
 See! sportive fate, to punish awkward pride,
 Bids Bubo build, and sends him such a guide:
 A standing sermon, at each year's expence,
 That never coxcomb reach'd magnificence!

You show us, Rome was glorious, not profuse,
 And pompous buildings once were things of use;
 Yet shall (my Lord) your just, your noble rules
 Fill half the land with imitating fools; [take,
 Who random drawings from your sheets shall
 And of one beauty many blunders make;
 Load some vain church with old theatric state,
 Turn arcs of triumph to a garden-gate;
 Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all
 On some patch'd dog-hole ek'd with ends of wall;
 Then clap four slices of pilaster on't,
 That, lac'd with bits of rustic, makes a front:
 Shall call the winds through long arcades to roar,
 Proud to catch cold at a Venetian door;
 Conscious they act a true Palladian part,
 And if they starve, they starve by rules of art.

Oft have you hinted to your brother peer,
 A certain truth, which many buy too dear:
 Something there is more needful than expence,
 And something previous e'en to taste—'tis sense;
 Good sense, which only is the gift of Heaven,
 And, though no science, fairly worth the seven:
 A light, which in yourself you must perceive;
 Jones and Le Nôtre have it not to give.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
 To rear the column, or the arch to bend,
 To swell the terrace, or to sink the grot—
 In all, let Nature never be forgot;
 But treat the goddess like a modest fair,
 Nor over-dress, nor leave her wholly bare;
 Let not each beauty ev'ry where be spied,
 Where half the skill is decently to hide.
 He gains all points, who decently confounds,
 Surprises, varies, and conceals the bounds.

Consult the genius of the place in all;
 That tells the waters or to rise or fall;
 Or help th' ambitious hill the heavens to scale,
 Or scoops in circling theatres the vale;
 Calls in the country, catches op'ning glades,
 Joins willing woods, and varies shades from
 shades;

Now breaks, or now directs, th' intending lines,
 Paints as you plant, and, as you work, designs.

Still follow sense, of ev'ry art the soul,
 Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole,
 Spontaneous beauties all around advance,
 Start ev'n from difficulty, strike from chance:
 Nature shall join you; time shall make it grow
 A work to wonder at—perhaps a Stow.

Without it, proud Versailles! thy glory falls;
 And Nero's terraces desert their walls:
 The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make,
 Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake;
 Or cut wide views through mountains to the
 plain,

You'll wish your hill or shelter'd seat again.
 E'en in an ornament its place remark,
 Nor in an hermitage set Dr. Clarke.

Behold Villario's ten years' toil complete,
 His quincunx darkens, his espaliers meet;
 The wood supports the plain, the parts unite,
 And strength of shade contends with strength of
 A waving glow the bloomy beds display, [light;
 Blushing in bright diversities of day,

With silver-quiv'ring rills meander'd o'er—
Enjoy them, you! Villario can no more:
Tir'd of the scene, parterres and fountains yield,
He finds at last he better likes a field.

Thro' his young woods how pleas'd Sabinus
Orsat delighted in the thick'ning shade, [stray'd,
With annual joy the redd'ning shoots to greet,
Or see the stretching branches long to meet!
His son's fine taste an op'ner vista loves,
Foe to the dryads of his father's groves;
One boundless green, or flourish'd carpet views,
With all the mournful family of yews;
The thriving plants, ignoble broomsticks made,
Now sweep those alleys they were born to shade.

At Timon's villa let us pass a day, [away!"
Where all cry out, "What sums are thrown
So proud, so grand; of that stupendous air,
Soft and agreeable come never there.
Greatness, with Timon, dwells in such a drought
As brings all Brobdignag before your thought.
To compass this, his building is a town,
His pond an ocean, his parterre a down:
Who but must laugh, the master when he sees,
A puny insect, shiv'ring at a breeze!
Lo, what huge heaps of littleness around!
The whole a labor'd quarry above ground.
Two Cupids squirt before; a lake behind
Improves the keenness of the northern wind.
His gardens next your admiration call;
On ev'ry side you look, behold the wall!
No pleasing intricacies intervene,
No artful wildness to perplex the scene;
Grove nods at grove, each alley has a brother,
And half the platform just reflects the other.
The suff'ring eye inverted nature sees,
Trees cut to statues, statues thick as trees;
With here a fountain never to be play'd;
And there a summer-house that knows no shade;
Here Amphitrite sails through myrtle bow'rs;
There gladiators fight, or die in flow'rs;
Unwater'd see the drooping sea-horse mourn,
And swallows roost in Nilus' dusty urn.

My lord advances with majestic mien,
Smit with the mighty pleasure to be seen:
But soft—by regular approach—not yet—
First through the length of yon hot terrace sweat;
And when up ten steep slopes you've dragg'd your
Just at his study-door he'll bless your eyes. [thighs,

His study! with what authors is it stor'd?
In books, not authors, curious is my lord;
To all their dated backs he turns you round,
These Aldus printed, those Du Sueil has bound.
Lo, some are vellum; and the rest as good,
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood.
For Locke or Milton 'tis in vain to look,
These shelves admit not any modern book.

And now the chapel's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of pray'r:
Light quirks of music, broken and uneven,
Make the soul dance upon a jig to heaven.
On painted ceilings you devoutly stare,
Where sprawl the saints of Verrio or Laguerre,
Or gilded clouds in fair expansion lie,
And bring all Paradise before your eye.

To rest, the cushion and soft dean invite,
Who never mentions hell to ears polite.
But hark! the chiming clocks to dinner call;
A hundred footsteps scrape the marble hall;
The rich buffet well-color'd serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face.
Is this a dinner? this a genial room?
No, 'tis a temple, and a hecatomb!
A solemn sacrifice perform'd in state;
You drink by measure, and to minutes eat.
So quick retires each flying course, you'd swear
Sancho's dread doctor and his wand were there.
Between each act the trembling salvers ring,
From soup to sweet-wine, and God bless the king.
In plenty starving, tantaliz'd in state,
And complaisantly help'd to all I hate;
Treated, caress'd, and tir'd, I take my leave,
Sick of his civil pride from morn to eve;
I curse such lavish cost, and little skill,
And swear no day was ever pass'd so ill!

Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed;
Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The lab'rer bears: what his hard heart denies,
His charitable vanity supplies.

Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre,
Deep harvest bury all his pride has plann'd,
And laughing Ceres re-assume the land.

Who then shall grace, or who improve the soil?
Who plants like Bathurst, or who builds like
'Tis use alone that sanctifies expence, [Boyle.
And splendor borrows all her rays from sense.

His father's acres who enjoys in peace,
Or makes his neighbours glad, if he increase;
Whose cheerful tenants bless their yearly toil,
Yet to their lord owe more than to the soil;
Whose ample lawns are not asham'd to feed
The milky heifer and deserving steed;
Whose rising forests, not for pride or show,
But future buildings, future navies, grow:
Let his plantations stretch from down to down,
First shade a country, and then raise a town.

You too proceed! make falling arts your care,
Erect new wonders, and the old repair;
Jones and Palladio to themselves restore,
And be whate'er Vitruvius was before:
Till kings call forth th' ideas of your mind
(Proud to accomplish what such hands design'd),
Bid harbours open, public ways extend;
Bid temples, worthier of the God, ascend;
Bid the broad arch the dang'rous flood contain,
The mole projected break the roaring main;
Back to his bounds their subject sea command,
And roll obedient rivers through the land;
These honors peace to happy Britain brings;
These are imperial works, and worthy kings.

§ 18. Epistle to Mr. Addison, occasioned by his Dialogues on Medals. Pope.

SEE the wild waste of all-devouring years!
How Rome her own sad sepulchre appears!
With nodding arches, broken temples spread!
The very tombs now vanish'd like their dead!

Imperial wonders rais'd on nations spoil'd,
Where, mix'd with slaves, the groaning martyr
toil'd :

Huge theatres, that now unpeopled woods,
Now drain'd a distant country of her floods :
Fanes, which admiring gods with pride survey ;
Statues of men scarce less alive than they !
Some felt the silent stroke of mould'ring age,
Some hostile fury, some religious rage :
Barbarian blindness, Christian zeal conspire,
And Papal piety, and Gothic fire.
Perhaps, by its own ruins sav'd from flame,
Some buried marble half preserves a name ;
That name the learn'd with fierce disputes pursue,
And give to Titus old Vespasian's due.

Ambition sigh'd : she found it vain to trust
The faithless column and the crumbling bust :
Huge moles, whose shadow stretch'd from shore
to shore,

Their ruins perish'd, and their place no more !
Convinc'd, she now contracts her vast design,
And all her triumphs shrink into a coin.
A narrow orb each crowded conquest keeps,
Beneath her palm here sad Judea weeps.
Now scantier limits the proud arch confine,
And scarce are seen the prostrate Nile or Rhine ;
A small Euphrates through the piece is roll'd,
And little eagles wave their wings in gold.

The Medal, faithful to its charge of fame,
Through climes and ages bears each form and
In one short view, subjected to our eye, [name ;
Gods, emp'rors, heroes, sages, beauties, lie.
With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore.
This the blue varnish, that the green endears,
The sacred rust of twice ten hundred years !
To gain Pescennius one employs his schemes ;
One grasps a Cecrops in ecstatic dreams.
Poor Vadius, long with learned spleen devour'd,
Can taste no pleasure since his shield was scour'd ;
And Curio, restless by the fair one's side,
Sighs for an Otho, and neglects his bride.

Theirs is the vanity, the learning thine :
Touch'd by thy hand, again Rome's glories shine ;
Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garments bloom a-new.
Nor blush, these studies thy regard engage ;
These pleas'd the fathers of poetic rage :
The verse and sculpture bore an equal part,
And art reflected images to art.

Oh, when shall Britain, conscious of her claim,
Stand emulous of Greek and Roman fame ?
In living medals see her wars enroll'd,
And vanquish'd realms supply recording gold ?
Here, rising bold, the patriot's honest face ;
There, warriors frowning in historic brass :
Then future ages with delight shall see
How Plato's, Bacon's, Newton's looks agree ;
Or in fair series laurell'd bards be shown,
A Virgil there, and here an Addison.

Then shall thy Craggs (and let me call him mine)
On the cast ore, another Pollio, shine ;
With aspect open shall erect his head,
And round the orb in lasting notes be read,—

“ Statesman, yet friend to truth ! of soul sincere,
“ In action faithful, and in honor clear ;
“ Who broke no promise, serv'd no private end,
“ Who gain'd no title, and who lost no friend ;
“ Ennobled by himself, by all approv'd,
“ And prais'd, unenvy'd, by the Muse he lov'd.”

§ 19. Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, being the Prologue to the Satires. Pope.

P. “ SHUT, shut the door, good John,” fatigu'd, I said,

“ Tie up the knocker ; say I'm sick, I'm dead.”
The Dog-star rages ! nay, 'tis past a doubt,
All Bedlam, or Parnassus, is let out :
Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,
They rave, recite, and madden round the land.

What walls can guard me, or what shades
can hide ? [glide ;

They pierce my thickets, through my grot they
By land, by water, they renew the charge ;
They stop the chariot, and they board the barge :
No place is sacred, not the Church is free,
E'en Sunday shines no Sabbath-day to me ;
Then from the Mint walks forth the man of
Happy ! to catch me, just at dinner-time. [rhyme,
Is there a Parson, much bemus'd in beer,
A maudlin Poetess, a rhyming Peer,
A Clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
Who pens a Stanza when he should engross ?
Is there who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls
With desp'rate charcoal round his darken'd walls ?
All fly to Twit'nam, and in humble strain
Apply to me, to keep them mad or vain.

Arthur, whose giddy son neglects the laws,
Imputes to me and my damn'd works the cause :
Poor Cornus sees his frantic wife elope ;
And curses Wit, and Poetry, and Pope. [long,

Friend to my Life ! (which did not you pro-
The world had wanted many an idle song,)
What Drop or Nostrum can this plague remove ?
Or which must end me, a Fool's wrath or love ?
A dire dilemma ! either way I'm sped ;
If foes, they write ; if friends, they read me dead.
Seiz'd and tied down to judge, how wretched I !
Who can't be silent, and who will not lie :
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace ;
And to be grave, exceeds all pow'r of face.

I sit with sad civility ; I read
With honest anguish, and an aching head ;
And drop at last, but in unwilling ears,
This saving counsel, “ Keep your piece nine years.”

Nine years ! cries he, who high in Drury-lane,
Lull'd by soft Zephyrs through the broken pane,
Rhymes ere he wakes, and prints before Term
Oblig'd by hunger and request of friends : [ends,
“ The piece, you think, is incorrect ? why take it ;
“ I'm all submission, what you'd have it make it.”

Three things another's modest wishes bound,
My Friendship, and a Prologue, and Ten Pound.

Pitholeon sends to me : “ You know his Grace :
“ I want a Patron ; ask him for a Place.”

Pitholeon libell'd me—“ but here's a letter [ter.
“ Informs you, Sir, 'twas when he knew no bet-

"Dare you refuse him? Curll invites to dine;
 "He'll write a Journal, or he'll turn Divine."
 Bless me! a packet.—"Tis a stranger sues,
 "A Virgin Tragedy, an Orphan Muse."
 If I dislike it, "Furies, death, and rage!"
 If I approve, "Commend it to the stage." [ends,
 There (thank my stars!) my whole commission
 The players and I are, luckily, no friends.

Fir'd that the house reject him, "'Sdeath, I'll
 "print it, [Lintot,
 "And shame the fools—Your int'rest, Sir, with Lintot, dull rogue! will think your price too
 "Not, Sir, if you revise it, and retouch." [much:
 All my demurs but double his attacks;
 At last he whispers, "Do; and we go snacks."
 Glad of a quarrel, straight I clap the door;
 Sir, let me see your works and you no more.

'Tis sung, when Midas' ears began to spring
 (Midas, a sacred person and a king),
 His very minister, who spied them first
 (Some say his Queen), was forc'd to speak, or
 And is not mine, my friend, a sorer case, [burst.
 When ev'ry coxcomb perks them in my face?

A. Good friend, forbear! you deal in dang'rous things,
 I'd never name Queens, Ministers, or Kings,
 Keep close to Ears, and those let Asses prick,
 'Tis nothing—P. Nothing, if they bite and kick?
 Out with it, Dunciad! let the secret pass,
 That secret to each fool, that he's an Ass: [lie?)
 The truth once told (and wherefore should we
 The Queen of Midas slept, and so may I.

You think this cruel: take it for a rule,
 No creature smarts so little as a fool.
 Let peals of laughter, Codrus, round thee break,
 Thou unconcern'd canst hear the mighty crack:
 Pit, box, and gall'ry, in convulsions hurl'd,
 Thou stand'st unshook amidst a bursting world.
 Who shames a Scribbler? break one cobweb through,

He spins the slight self-pleasing thread anew:
 Destroy his fib or sophistry, in vain,
 The creature's at his dirty work again,
 Thron'd on the centre of his thin designs,
 Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines!
 Whom have I hurt? has Poet yet, or Peer,
 Lost the arch'd eyebrow, or Parnassian sneer?
 And has not Colley still his lord and whore?
 His butchers Henley, his free-masons Moore?
 Does not one table Bavus still admit?
 Still to one bishop Philips seem a Wit?
 Still Sappho—A. Hold, for God's sake—you'll offend:

No names—be calm—learn prudence of a friend:
 I too could write, and I am twice as tall; [all.
 But foes like these—P. One flatt'rer's worse than
 Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,
 It is the slaver kills, and not the bite.
 A fool quite angry is quite innocent:
 Alas! 'tis ten times worse when they repent.

One dedicates in high heroic prose,
 And ridicules beyond a hundred foes:
 One from all Grub-street will my fame defend,
 And, more abusive, calls himself my friend.

This prints my Letters, that expects a bribe,
 And others roar aloud, "Subscribe, subscribe."
 There are who to my person pay their court:
 I cough like Horace, and, though lean, am short.
Ammon's great son one shoulder had too high;
 Such Ovid's nose; and, "Sir! you have an Eye"—

Go on, obliging creatures, make me see
 All that disgrac'd my betters met in me.
 Say for my comfort, languishing in bed,
 "Just so immortal Maro held his head;"
 And when I die, be sure you let me know
 Great Homer died three thousand years ago.

Why did I write? what sin to me unknown
 Dipp'd me in ink—my parents', or my own?
 As yet a child, nor yet a fool to fame,
 I lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers came.
 I left no calling for this idle trade,
 No duty broke, no father disobey'd: [Wife;
 The Muse but serv'd to ease some Friend, not
 To help me through this long disease, my Life;
 To second, Arbuthnot! thy Art and Care,
 And teach the being you preserv'd to bear.

But why then publish? Granville the polite,
 And knowing Walsh, would tell me I could write;

Well-natur'd Garth inflam'd with early praise,
 And Congreve lov'd, and Swift endur'd my lays;
 The courtly Talbot, Somers, Sheffield read;
 E'en mitred Rochester would nod the head;
 And St. John's self (great Dryden's friend be-
 With open arms receiv'd one Poet more. [fore)
 Happy my studies, when by these approv'd!
 Happier their Author when by these belov'd!
 From these the world will judge of men and books,

Not from the Burnets, Oldmixons, and Cooks.
 Soft were my numbers, who could take offence
 While pure Description held the place of Sense?
 Like gentle Fanny's was my flow'ry theme,
 A painted mistress, or a purling stream.
 Yet then did Gildon draw his venal quill;
 I wish'd the man a dinner, and sat still.
 Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
 I never answer'd, I was not in debt.
 If want provok'd, or madness made them print,
 I wag'd no war with Bedlam or the Mint.

Did some more sober Critic come abroad;
 If wrong, I smil'd; if right, I kiss'd the rod.
 Pains, reading, study, are their just pretence;
 And all they want is spirit, taste, and sense.
 Commas and points they set exactly right;
 And 'twere a sin to rob them of their mite.
 Yet ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribalds,
 From slashing Bentley down to piddling Tibbalds.
 Each wight who reads not, and but scans and spells,

Each Word-catcher, that lives on syllables,
 E'en such small Critics some regard may claim,
 Preserv'd in Milton's or in Shakspeare's name.
 Pretty! in amber to observe the forms
 Of hairs, or straws, or dirt, or grubs, or worms!
 The things we know are neither rich nor rare,
 But wonder how the devil they got there.

Were others angry: I excus'd them too;
Well might they rage, I gave them but their due.
A man's true merit 'tis not hard to find;
But each man's secret standard in his mind,
That casting-weight pride adds to emptiness,
This who can gratify? for who can guess?
The Bard whom pilfer'd Pastorals renown,
Who turns a Persian tale for half a crown,
Just writes to make his barrenness appear,
And strains, from hard bound brains, eight lines
a-year;

He who, still wanting, though he lives on theft,
Steals much, spends little, yet has nothing left;
And He who, now to sense now nonsense leaning,

Means not, but blunders round about a meaning;
And he, whose fustian's so sublimely bad,
It is not poetry, but prose run mad:

All these my modest Satire bade translate,
And own'd that ninesuch Poets made a Tate.
How did they fume, and stamp, and roar and
And swear, not Addison himself was safe. [chafe!

Peace to all such! but were there one whose fires

True Genius kindles, and fair Fame inspires;
Blest with each talent and each art to please,
And born to write, converse, and live with ease:
Should such a man, too fond to rule alone,
Bear, like the Turk, no brother near the throne;
View him with scornful, yet with jealous eyes,
And hate for arts that caus'd himself to rise;
Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
And, without sneering, teach the rest to sneer;
Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend;
Dreading e'en Fools, by Flatterers besieg'd,
And so obliging, that he ne'er oblig'd;
Like Cato, gives his little senate laws,
And sit attentive to his own applause;
While Wits and Templars ev'ry sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise—
Who but must laugh, if such a man there be?
Who would not weep, if Atticus were he?

What though my name stood rubric on the walls,

Or plaster'd posts, with claps, in capitals?
Or smoking forth, a hundred hawkers' load,
On wings of winds came flying all abroad?
I sought no homage from the race that write;
I kept, like Asian monarchs, from their sight:
Poems I heeded (now be-rhym'd so long) [song.
No more than thou, great George! a birth-day
I ne'er with wits or witlings pass'd my days,
To spread about the itch of verse and praise;
Nor, like a puppy, dangled through the town,
To fetch and carry sing-song up and down;
Nor at rehearsals sweat, and mouth'd, and cry'd,
With handkerchief and orange at my side:
But, sick of fops, and poetry, and prate,
To Bufo left the whole Castalian state.

Proud, as Apollo on his forked hill,
Sat full-blown Bufo, puff'd by ev'ry quill;

Fed with soft dedication all day long,
Horace and he went hand in hand in song.
His library (where busts of poets dead
And a true Pindar stood without a head)
Receiv'd of wits an undistinguish'd race,
Who first his judgment ask'd, and then a place;
Much they extoll'd his pictures, much his seat,
And flatter'd ev'ry day, and some days eat:
Till grown more frugal in his riper days, [praise;
He paid some bards with port, and some with
To some a dry rehearsal was assign'd;
And others (harder still) he paid in kind.

Dryden alone (what wonder?) came not nigh;
Dryden alone escap'd this judging eye:
But still the great have kindness in reserve;
He help'd to bury whom he help'd to starve.

May some choice patron bless each grey goose
May ev'ry Bavius have his Bufo still! [quill!
So when a statesman wants a day's defence,
Or envy holds a whole week's war with sense,
Or simple pride for flatt'ry makes demands,
May Dunc by Dunc be whistled off my hands!
Blest be the great for those they take away,
And those they left me, for they left me Gay;
Left me to see neglected Genius bloom,
Neglected die, and tell it on his tomb:
Of all thy blameless life the sole return,
My Verse and Queensb'ry weeping o'er thy urn.

O let me live my own, and die so too!
(To live and die is all I have to do):
Maintain a Poet's dignity and ease, [please:
And see what friends, and read what books I
Above a patron, though I condescend
Sometimes to call a minister my friend.
I was not born for courts or great affairs:
I pay my debts, believe, and say my pray'rs;
Can sleep without a poem in my head,
Nor know if Dennis be alive or dead.

Why am I ask'd what next shall see the light?
Heavens! was I born for nothing but to write?
Has life no joys for me? or (to be grave)
Have I no friend to serve, no soul to save? [doubt
"I found him close with Swift"—"Indeed? no (Cries prating Balbus) something will come out.
'Tis all in vain, deny it as I will;

"No, such a Genius never can lie still:"
And then for mine obligingly mistakes
The first lampoon Sir Will or Bubo makes.
Poor guiltless I! and can I choose but smile,
When every coxcomb knows me by my style?

Curst be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe,
Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
Or from the soft-ey'd virgin steal a tear!
But he who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Insults fall'n worth, or beauty in distress;
Who loves a lie, lame slander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out;
That fop whose pride affects a patron's name,
Yet absent wounds an author's honest fame;
Who can your merit selfishly approve,
And show the sense of it without the love;
Who has the vanity to call you friend,
Yet wants the honor, injur'd, to defend;

Who tells whate'er you think, whate'er you say,
And, if he lie not, must at least betray;
Who to the dean and silver bell can swear,
And sees at Cannons what was never there;
Who reads but with a lust to misapply,
Make satire a lampoon, and fiction lie—
A lash like mine no honest man shall dread,
But all such babbling blockheads in his stead.

Let Sporus tremble.—A. What! that thing of silk?

Sporus, that mere white curd of ass's milk?

Satire or sense, alas! can Sporus feel?

Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel?

P. Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings;
Whose buzz the witty and the fair annoys,
Yet wit ne'er tastes, and beauty ne'er enjoys:
So well-bred spaniels civilly delight
In mumbling of the game they dare not bite.
Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
As shallow streams run dimpling all the way.
Whether in florid impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet
squeaks;

Or at the ear of Eve, familiar toad,
Half froth, half venom, spits himself abroad,
In puns, or politics, or tales, or lies,
Or spite, or smut, or rhymes, or blasphemies;
His wit all see-saw, between that and this;
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile antithesis.

Amphibious thing! that acting either part,
The trifling head, or the corrupted heart;
Fop at the toilet, flatt'rer at the board,
Now trips a lady, and now struts a lord.
Eve's temper thus the rabbins have express'd:
A cherub's face, a reptile all the rest;
Beauty that shocks you, parts that none will trust, [dust.

Wit that can creep, and pride that licks the
Not fortune's worshipper, nor fashion's fool,
Not lucre's madman, nor ambition's tool,
Not proud, nor servile; be one Poet's praise,
That, if he pleas'd, he pleas'd by manly ways:
That flatt'ry ev'n to kings he held a shame,
And thought a lie in verse or prose the same:
That not in Fancy's maze he wander'd long,
But stoop'd to Truth, and moraliz'd his song:
That not for fame, but virtue's better end,
He stood the furious foe, the timid friend,
The damning critic, half-approving wit,
The coxcomb hit, or fearing to be hit;
Laugh'd at the loss of friends he never had,
The dull, the proud, the wicked, and the mad;
The distant threats of vengeance on his head,
The blow unfelt the tear he never shed;
The tale reviv'd, the lie so oft o'erthrown,
Th' imputed trash and dulness not his own;
The morals blacken'd when the writings 'scape,
The libell'd person, and the pictur'd shape;
Abuse on all he lov'd, or lov'd him spread;
A friend in exile, or a father dead;
The whisper that, to greatness still too near,
Perhaps yet vibrates on his Sov'reign's ear—

Welcome for thee, fair Virtue! all the past;
For thee, fair Virtue! welcome e'en the last!

A. But why insult the poor, affront the great?

P. A knave's a knave to me in ev'ry state.

Alike my scorn if he succeed or fail,
Sporus at court, or Japhet in a jail;
A hireling scribbler, or a hireling peer,
Knight of the post corrupt, or of the shire;
If on a pillory, or near a throne,
He gain his Prince's ear, or lose his own.

Yet soft by nature, more a dupe than wit,
Sappho can tell you how this man was bit:
This dreaded Sat'rist Dennis will confess
Foe to his pride, but friend to his distress:
So humble, he has knock'd at Tibbald's door,
Has drunk with Cibber, nay has rhym'd for Moore.

Full ten years slander'd, did he once reply?
Three thousand suns went down on Welsted's lie.
To please a Mistress, one aspers'd his life;
He lash'd him not, but let her be his wife:
Let Budgell charge low Grub-street on his quill,
And write whate'er he pleas'd, except his Will;
Let the two Curls of Town and Court abuse
His father, mother, body, soul, and muse.
Yet why? that Father held it for a rule,
It was a sin to call our neighbour fool:
That harmless Mother thought no wife a whore:
Hear this, and spare his family, James Moore!
Unspotted names, and memorable long!
If there be force in Virtue or in Song.

Of gentle blood (part shed in Honor's cause,
While yet in Britain honor had applause)
Each parent sprung.—A. What fortune, pray?—

P. Their own;

And better got than Bestia's from the throne.
Born to no pride, inheriting no strife,
Nor marrying discord in a noble wife;
Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innoxious through his age:
No Courts he saw, no suits would ever try,
Nor dar'd an oath, nor hazarded a lie.
Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolman's subtle art,
No language but the language of the heart.
By nature honest, by experience wise,
Healthy by temperance and by exercise;
His life, though long, to sickness pass'd un-
known,

His death was instant, and without a groan.
O grant me thus to live, and thus to die!
Who sprung from kings shall know less joy than I.

O Friend! may each domestic bliss be thine!
Be no unpleasing melancholy mine:
Me let the tender office long engage,
To rock the cradle of reposing age;
With lenient arts extend a mother's breath,
Make languor smile, and smooth the bed of
death;
Explore the thought, explain the asking eye,
And keep a while one parent from the sky!
On cares like these if length of days attend,
May Heaven, to bless those days, preserve my friend!

Preserve him social, cheerful, and serene,
And just as rich as when he serv'd a queen.

A. Whether that blessing be denied or given,
Thus far was right, the rest belongs to Heaven.

§ 20. Satires and Epistles of Horace imitated.
Pope.

SATIRE I.

To Mr. Fortescue.

P. THERE are (I scarce can think it, but am told)
There are to whom my satire seems too bold;
Scarce to wise Peter complaisant enough,
And something said of Chartres much too rough.
The lines are weak, another's pleas'd to say;
Lord Fanny spins a thousand such a day.

Tim'rous by nature, of the rich in awe,
I come to counsel learned in the law:
You'll give me, like a friend both sage and free,
Advice; and (as you use) without a fee.

F. I'd write no more.

P. Not write? but then I think:
And for my soul I cannot sleep a wink.
I nod in company, I wake at night;
Fools rush into my head, and so I write.

F. You could not do a worse thing for your life.
Why, if the nights seem tedious, take a wife:
Or rather truly, if your point be rest,
Lettuce and cowslip wine—probatum est.
But talk with Celsus; Celsus will advise Hartshorn, or something that shall close your eyes. [praise;

Or, if you needs must write, write Cæsar's
You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays.

P. What! like Sir Richard, rumbling, rough, and fierce, [the verse,
With Arms, and George, and Brunswick crowd
Rend with tremendous sound your ears asunder,
With gun, drum, trumpet, blunderbuss, and thunder?

Or nobly wild, with Budgell's fire and force,
Paint angels trembling round his falling horse?

F. Then all your Muse's softer art display,
Let Carolina smooth the tuneful lay,
Lull with Amelia's liquid name the Nine,
And sweetly flow through all the royal line.

P. Alas! few verses touch their nicer ear;
They scarce can bear their Laureate twice
a-year:

And justly Cæsar scorns the poet's lays;
It is to history he trusts for praise.

F. Better be Cibber, I'll maintain it still,
Than ridicule all taste, blaspheme quadrille,
Abuse the city's best good men in metre,
And laugh at peers that put their trust in Peter.
E'en those you touch not, hate you.

P. What should ail them?

F. A hundred smart in Timon and in Balaam.
The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score.

P. Each mortal has his pleasure: none deny
Scarsdale his bottle, Darty his ham-pie;
Ridotta sips and dances, till she see
The doubling lustres dance as fast as she;

F—loves the senate, Hockley-hole his brother,
Like in all else as one egg to another.
I love to pour out all myself, as plain
As downright Shippen, or as old Montagne:
In them, as certain to be lov'd as seen,
The soul stood forth, nor kept a thought within:
In me what spots (for spots I have) appear,
Will prove at least the medium must be clear.
In this impartial glass my Muse intends
Fair to expose myself, my foes, my friends;
Publish the present age; but where my text
Is vice too high, reserve it for the next:
My foes shall wish my life a longer date,
And ev'ry friend the less lament my fate.
My head and heart thus flowing through my quill, [will,

Verseman or proseman, term me which you
Papist or Protestant, or both between,
Like good Erasmus, in an honest mean,
In moderation placing all my glory,
While Tories call me Whig, and Whigs a Tory.

Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet
To run a-muck, and tilt at all I meet;
I only wear it in a land of hectors,
Thieves, supercargoes, sharpers, and directors.
Save but our army! and let Jove incrust
Swords, pikes, and guns, with everlasting rust!
Peace is my dear delight—not Fleury's more:
But touch me, and no minister so sore.
Who'er offends, at some unlucky time
Slides into verse, and hitches in a rhyme,
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song.

Slander or poison dread from Delia's rage;
Hard words or hanging, if your judge be Page.
From furious Sappho scarce a milder fate,
P-x'd by her love, or libell'd by her hate.
Its proper pow'r to hurt, each creature feels;
Bulls aim their horns, and asses lift their heels;
'Tis a bear's talent not to kick, but hug;
And no man wonders he's not stung by pug.
So drink with Waters, or with Chartres eat;
They'll never poison you, they'll only cheat.

Then, learned Sir! (to cut the matter short)
Whate'er my fate, or well or ill at Court;
Whether old age, with faint but cheerful ray,
Attends to gild the ev'ning of my day;
Or death's black wing already be display'd,
To wrap me in the universal shade;
Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skewer to write;
In durance, exile, Bedlam, or the Mint,
Like Lee or Budgell, I will rhyme and print.

F. Alas, young man! your days can ne'er be
In flow'r of age you perish for a song! [long;
Plums and directors, Shylock and his wife,
Will club their testers now to take your life!

P. What? arm'd for virtue when I point the pen,
Brand the bold front of shameless guilty men;
Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car;
Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star;
Can there be wanting, to defend her cause,
Lights of the church, or guardians of the laws?

Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain
 Flatt'ers and bigots even in Louis' reign?
 Could Laureate Dryden pimp and friar engage,
 Yet neither Charles nor James be in a rage?
 And I not strip the gilding off a knave,
 Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave?
 I will, or perish in the gen'rous cause:
 Hear this, and tremble! you who 'scape the laws.
 Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave
 Shall walk the world in credit to his grave.
 To virtue only and her friends a friend,
 The world beside may murmur or commend.
 Know, all the distant din that world can keep,
 Rolls o'er my grotto, and but soothes my sleep.
 There, my retreat the best companions grace,
 Chiefs out of war, and statesmen out of place.
 There St. John mingles with my friendly bowl
 The feast of reason and the flow of soul:
 And he, whose lightning pierc'd th' Iberian lines,
 Now forms my quincunx, and now ranks my vines;

Or tames the genius of the stubborn plain,
 Almost as quickly as he conquer'd Spain.

Envy must own, I live among the great,
 No pimp of pleasure, and no spy of state;
 With eyes that pry not, tongue that ne'er
 repeats,

Fond to spread friendships, but to cover heats;
 To help who want, to forward who excel;
 This all who know me know, who love me tell;

And who unknown defame me, let them be
 Scribblers or peers, alike are mob to me.

This is my plea, on this I rest my cause—
 What saith my counsel, learned in the laws?

F. Your plea is good; but still I say, beware!
 Laws are explain'd by men—so have a care.

It stands on record, that in Richard's times
 A man was hang'd for very honest rhymes!

Consult the statute, quart. I think it is,
Edwardi sext. or prim. et quint. Eliz.

See Libels, Satires—here you have it—read.

P. Libels and Satires! lawless things indeed!

But grave Epistles, bringing vice to light,
 Such as a king might read, a bishop write,
 Such as Sir Robert would approve—

F. Indeed?

The case is alter'd—you may then proceed;
 In such a case the plaintiff will be hiss'd,
 My lords the judges laugh, and you're dismiss'd.

SATIRE II.

To Mr. Bethel.

WHAT, and how great, the virtue and the art,
 To live on little with a cheerful heart
 (A doctrine sage, but truly none of mine),
 Let's talk, my friends, but talk before we dine:
 Not when a gilt buffet's reflected pride
 Turns you from sound philosophy aside;
 Not when from plate to plate your eye-balls roll,
 And the brain dances to the mantling bowl.

Hear Bethel's Sermon, one not vers'd in schools,

But strong in sense, and wise without the rules.

“Go work, hunt, exercise (he thus began),
 Then scorn a homely dinner if you can.

Your wine lock'd up, your butler stroll'd abroad,
 Or fish denied (the river yet unthaw'd),

If then plain bread and milk will do the feat,
 The pleasure lies in you, and not the meat.

Preach as I please, I doubt our curious men
 Will choose a pheasant still before a hen;

Yet hens of Guinea full as good I hold,
 Except you eat the feathers green and gold.

Of carps and mullets why prefer the great
 (Though cut in pieces ere my Lord can eat),

Yet for small turbot's such esteem profess?
 Because God made these large, the other less.

Oldfield, with more than harpy throat endued,
 Cries, ‘Send me, gods! a whole hog barbecued!’

O blast it, south winds, till a stench exhale
 Rank as the ripeness of a rabbit's tail!

By what criterion do you eat, d'ye think,
 If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink?

When the tir'd glutton labors through a treat,
 He finds no relish in the sweetest meat;

He calls for something bitter, something sour,
 And the rich feast concludes extremely poor:

Cheap eggs, and herbs, and olives still we see;
 Thus much is left of old simplicity!

The Robin-red-breast till of late had rest,
 And children sacred held a Martin's nest.

Till Becca-ficos sold so dev'lish dear
 To one that was, or would have been, a Peer.

Let me extol a Cat on oysters fed,
 I'll have a party at the Bedford-head;

Or e'en to crack live Crawfish recommend,
 I'd never doubt at Court to make a friend.

'Tis yet in vain, I own, to keep a pother
 About one vice, and fall into the other:

Between Excess and Famine lies a mean;
 Plain, but not sordid; though not splendid,

clean.

Avidien, or his Wife (no matter which,
 For him you'll call a dog, and her a bitch),

Sell their presented partridges and fruits,
 And humbly live on rabbits and on roots:

One half-pint bottle serves them both to dine,
 And is at once their vinegar and wine.

But on some lucky day (as when they found
 A lost bank bill, or heard their son was drown'd)

At such a feast, old vinegar to spare,
 Is what two souls so gen'rous cannot bear:

Oil, though it stink, they drop by drop impart;
 But souse the cabbage with a bounteous heart.

He knows to live who keeps the middle state,
 And neither leans on this side nor on that;

Nor stops for one bad cork his butler's pay;
 Swears, like Albutius, a good cook away;

Nor lets, like Nævius, ev'ry error pass;
 The musty wine, foul cloth, or greasy glass.

Now hear what blessings Temperance can bring:

(Thus said our friend, and what he said I sing)

First Health: the stomach (cramm'd from ev'ry dish,
A tomb of boil'd and roast, and flesh and fish,
Where bile, and wind, and phlegm, and acid jar,
And all the man is one intestine war.)

Remembers oft the school-boy's simple fare,
The temp'rate sleeps, and spirits light as air.

How pale each worshipful and rev'rend guest
Rise from a Clergy or a City feast!

What life in all that ample body, say?

What heavenly particle inspires the clay?

The soul subsides, and wickedly inclines

To seem but mortal, e'en in sound Divines.

On morning wings how active springs the mind

That leaves the load of yesterday behind!

How easy ev'ry labor it pursues!

How coming to the Poet ev'ry Muse!

Not but we may exceed, some holy time,

Or tir'd in search of Truth, or search of Rhyme;

Ill health some just indulgence may engage,

And more, the sickness of long life, Old Age;

For fainting Age what cordial drop remains,

If our intemp'rate Youth the vessel drains?

Our fathers prais'd rank Ven'son. You suppose,

Perhaps, young men! our fathers had no nose.

Not so: a Buck was then a week's repast,

And 'twas their point, I ween, to make it last;

More pleas'd to keep it till their friends could come,

Than eat the sweetest by themselves at home.

Why had not I in those good times my birth,

Ere coxcomb-pies or coxcombs were on earth?

Unworthy he the voice of Fame to hear,

That sweetest music to an honest ear

(For, faith, Lord Fanny! you are in the wrong!

The world's good word is better than a song);

Who has not learn'd, fresh sturgeon and ham-

Are no rewards for want and infamy? [pie

When luxury has lick'd up all thy pelf,

Curs'd be thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself;

To friends, to fortune, to mankind a shame,

Think how posterity will treat thy name:

And buy a rope, that future times may tell

Thou hast at least bestow'd one penny well.

"Right," cries his Lordship, "for a rogue in need "To have a taste, is insolence indeed:

"In me, 'tis noble, suits my birth and state,

"My wealth unwieldy, and my heap too great."

Then, like the Sun, let Bounty spread her ray,

And shine that superfluity away.

O Impudence of wealth! with all thy store,

How dar'st thou let one worthy man be poor?

Shall half the new-built churches round thee fall?

Make Quays, build Bridges, or repair White-hall:

Or to thy Country let that heap be lent,

As M—o's was, but not at five per cent.

Who thinks that fortune cannot change her mind,

Prepares a dreadful jest for all mankind.

And who stands safest? tell me, is it he
That spreads and swells in puff'd prosperity;
Or blest with little, whose preventing care
In peace provides fit arms against a war?"

Thus Bethel spoke, who always speaks his thought,

And always thinks the very thing he ought:

His equal mind I copy what I can,

And as I love, would imitate, the man.

In South-sea days not happier, when surmis'd

The lord of thousands, than if now excis'd;

In forest planted by a father's hand,

Than in five acres now of rented land.

Content with little, I can piddle here

On brocoli and mutton round the year;

But ancient friends (though poor, or out of play)

That touch my bell, I cannot turn away.

'Tis true, no turbots dignify my boards;

But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords.

To Hounslow heath I point, and Bansted-down;

Thence comes your mutton, and these chicks my own:

From yon old walnut-tree a show'r shall fall;

And grapes, long-ling'ring on my only wall;

And figs from standard and espalier join;

The devil is in you, if you cannot dine:

Then cheerful healths (your mistress shall have place);

And, what's more rare, a poet shall say grace.

Fortune not much of humbling me can boast:

Though double tax'd, how little have I lost!

My life's amusements have been just the same,

Before and after standing armies came.

My lands are sold, my father's house is gone:

I'll hire another's; is not that my own,

And yours, my friends? through whose free-op'ning gate

None comes too early, none departs too late;

For I, who hold sage Homer's rule the best,

Welcome the coming, speed the going guest.

"Pray Heaven it last! (cries Swift) as you go on:

"I wish to God this house had been your own.

"Pity! to build, without a son or wife;

"Why, you'll enjoy it only all your life."

Well, if the use be mine, can it concern one,

Whether the name belong to Pope or Vernon?

What's property? dear Swift! you see it alter

From you to me, from me to Peter Walter;

Or, in a mortgage, prove a lawyer's share;

Or, in a jointure, vanish from the heir;

Or in pure equity (the case not clear)

The Chancery takes your rents for twenty year;

At best, it falls to some ungracious son,

Who cries, "My father's damn'd, and all's my own."

Shades, that to Bacon could retreat afford,

Become the portion of a booby lord;

And Hemsley, once proud Buckingham's delight,

Slides to a scriv'ner, or a city knight.

Let lands and houses have what lords they will,

Let us be fix'd, and our own masters still.

The First Epistle of the First Book of Horace.

EPISTLE I.

To Lord Bolingbroke.

ST. JOHN, whose love indulg'd my labors
past,
Matures my present, and shall bound my last!
Why will you break the Sabbath of my days?
Now sick alike of envy and of praise.
Public too long, ah let me hide my age!
See, modest Cibber now has left the stage;
Our gen'als, now, retir'd to their estates,
Hang their old trophies o'er the garden gates;
In life's cool ev'ning, satiate of applause,
Nor fond of bleeding, e'en in Brunswick's
cause.

A voice there is, that whispers in my ear, (Tis Reason's voice, which sometimes one can hear,)

"Friend Pope! be prudent, let your Muse
"take breath,

"And never gallop Pegasus to death;

"Lest stiff and stately, void of fire or force,

"You limp, like Blackmore on a Lord Mayor's "horse."

Farewell, then, Verse, and Love, and ev'ry toy,
The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy;
What right, what true, what fit we justly call,
Let this be all my care—for this is All:
To lay this harvest up, and hoard with haste,
What ev'ry day will want, and most, the last.

But ask not to what Doctors I apply;
Sworn to no master, of no sect am I:
As drives the storm, at any door I knock;
And house with Montagne now, or now with Locke.

Sometimes a Patriot, active in debate,
Mix with the World, and battle for the State;
Free as young Lyttelton, her cause pursue,
Still true to Virtue, and as warm as true:
Sometimes with Aristippus, or St. Paul,
Indulge my candor, and grow all to all;
Back to my native moderation slide,
And win my way by yielding to the tide.

Long as to him who works for debt, the
day,

Long as the night to her whose Love's away;
Long as the year's dull circle seems to run,
When the brisk Minor pants for twenty-one;
So slow th' unprofitable moments roll,
That lock up all the functions of my soul;
That keep me from myself, and still delay
Life's instant business to a future day:
That task, which as we follow or despise,
The eldest is a fool, the youngest wise:
Which done, the poorest can no wants endure;
And which not done, the richest must be poor.

Late as it is, I put myself to school,
And feel some comfort not to be a fool.
Weak though I am of limb, and short of sight,
Far from a Lynx, and not a Giant quite;
I'll do what Mead and Cheselden advise,
To keep these limbs, and to preserve these eyes.

Not to go back, is somewhat to advance;
And men must walk at least before they dance.
Say, does thy blood rebel, thy bosom move
With wretched Av'rice, or as wretched Love?
Know, there are words and spells which can control,

Between the Fits, this Fever of the soul;
Know, there are rhymes, which, fresh and fresh applied,

Will cure the arrant'st puppy of his pride.
Be furious, envious, slothful, mad, or drunk,
Slave to a wife, or vassal to a punk,
A Switz, a High Dutch, or a Low Dutch bear;
All that we ask is but a patient ear.

'Tis the first Virtue, Vices to abhor;
And the first Wisdom, to be Fool no more.
But to the world no bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate.
To either India see the merchant fly,
Scar'd at the spectre of pale Poverty!

See him, with pains of body, pangs of soul,
Burn through the Tropic, freeze beneath the
Wilt thou do nothing for a nobler end, [Pole!
Nothing, to make Philosophy thy friend?
To stop thy foolish views, thy long desires,
And ease thy heart of all that it admires?

Here Wisdom calls: "Seek Virtue first, be "bold!

"As Gold to Silver, Virtue is to Gold."
There, London's voice: "Get money, money
"still!

"And then let Virtue follow, if she will."
This, this the saving doctrine preach'd to all,
From low St. James's up to high St. Paul!
From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster.

Barnard in spirit, sense, and truth abounds;
"Pray then, what wants he?" Fourscore thousand pounds;

A pension, or such harness for a slave
As Bug now has, and Dorimant would have.
Barnard, thou art a Cit, with all thy worth;
But Bug and D*l, their Honors, and so forth.

Yet ev'ry child another song will sing:
"Virtue, brave boys! 'tis Virtue makes a King."

True, conscious Honor is to feel no sin;
He's arm'd without that's innocent within:
Be this thy screen, and this thy wall of brass
Compar'd to this, a Minister's an Ass.

And say, to which shall our applause belong,
This new Court-jargon, or the good old song?
The modern language of corrupted peers,
Or what was spoke at Cressy or Poitiers?
Who counsels best? who whispers, "Be but
"great,

"With praise or infamy, leave that to fate;
"Get Place and Wealth, if possible, with grace;
"If not, by any means get Wealth and Place:"
For what? to have a box where Eunuchs sing,
And foremost in the circle eye a King:—
Or he, who bids thee face with steady view
Proud Fortune, and look shallow Greatness
through;

And, while he bids thee, sets th' Example too?

If such a doctrine in St. James's air
Should chance to make the well-drest rabble stare ;

If honest S*z take scandal at a spark
That less admires the Palace than the Park,
'Faith I shall give the answer Reynard gave :
" I cannot like, dread Sire, your Royal Cave ;
" Because I see, by all the tracks about,
" Full many a beast goes in, but none come
" out."

Adieu to Virtue, if you're once a Slave ;
Send her to Court, you send her to her grave.

Well, if a King's a Lion, at the least
The people are a many-headed beast :
Can they direct what measures to pursue,
Who know themselves so little what to do ?
Alike in nothing but one lust of gold,
Just half the land would buy, and half be sold ;
Their country's wealth our mightier Misers
drain,

Or cross, to plunder provinces, the main ;
The rest, some farm the poor-box, some the pews ; [stews ;
Some keep assemblies, and would keep the
Some with fat bucks on childish dotards fawn ;
Some win rich widows by their chine and brawn :

While with the silent growth of ten per cent,
In dirt and darkness, hundreds stink content.

Of all these ways, if each pursues his own,
Satire, be kind, and let the wretch alone ;
But show me one who has it in his pow'r
To act consistent with himself an hour.
Sir Job sail'd forth, the evening bright and still,
" No place on earth (he cried) like Greenwich
" hill ?"

Up starts a palace, lo ! th' obedient base
Slopes at its foot, the woods its sides embrace,
The silver Thames reflects its marble face.
Now let some whimsey, or that devil within Which guides all those who know not what they mean,

But give the Knight (or give his Lady) spleen,
" Away, away ! take all your scaffolds down,
" For snug's the word : my dear ! we'll live in
" town."

At am'rous Flavio is the stocking thrown ;
That very night he longs to lie alone.
The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a
For matrimonial solace dies a martyr. [quarter,
Did ever Proteus, Merlin, any witch,
Transform themselves so strangely as the rich ?
Well, but the poor—the poor have the same itch ;

They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their shoes, [run
Discharge their garrets, move their beds, and (They know not wither) in a chaise and one ;
They hire their sculler, and when once aboard,
Grow sick, and damn the climate like a lord.

You laugh, half beau half sloven if I stand,
My wig all powder, and all snuff my band ;
You laugh, if coat and breeches strangely vary,
White gloves, and linen worthy lady Mary !

But when no prelate's lawn with hair-shirt lin'd
Is half so incoherent as my mind,
When (each opinion with the next at strife,
One ebb and flow of follies all my life)
I plant, root up ; I build, and then confound ; Turn round to square, and square again to round,

You never change one muscle of your face,
You think this madness but a common case,
Nor once to Chanc'ry nor to Hale apply ;
Yet hang your lip, to see a seam awry !
Careless how ill I with myself agree,
Kind to my dress, my figure, not to me.
Is this my guide, philosopher, and friend ?
This he who loves me, and who ought to mend ? [none)

Who ought to make me (what he can, or
That man divine whom wisdom calls her own ;
Great without title, without fortune blest ;
Rich e'en when plunder'd, honor'd while op-
prest ; [pow'r ;
Lov'd without youth, and follow'd without
At home, though exil'd ; free, though in the Tow'r :

In short, that reas'ning, high, immortal thing,
Just less than Jove, and much above a king ;
Nay, half in heaven—except (what's mighty odd)

A fit of vapors clouds this demi-god !

EPISTLE VI.

To Mr. Murray.

" Not to admire, is all the art I know
" To make men happy, and to keep them so." (Plain truth, dear Murray ! needs no flow'rs of speech ;

So take it in the very words of Creech.)

This vault of air, this congregated ball,
Self-centred sun, and stars that rise and fall,
There are, my friend ! whose philosophic eyes
Look through and trust the Ruler with his skies ;

To him commit the hour, the day, the year,
And view this dreadful all without a fear.

Admire we then what earth's low entrails
hold,

Arabian shores, or Indian seas infold ;
All the mad trade of fools and slaves for gold ;
Or popularity, or stars and strings ?

The mob's applauses, or the gifts of kings ?
Say with what eyes we ought at courts to gaze,
And pay the great our homage of amaze ?

If weak the pleasure that from these can
spring,

The fear to want them is as weak a thing.
Whether we dread, or whether we desire,
In either case, believe me, we admire ;
Whether we joy or grieve, the same the curse,
Surpris'd at better, or surpris'd at worse.
Thus, good or bad to one extreme betray
Th' unbalanc'd mind, and snatch the man away :
For virtue's self may too much zeal be had ;
The worst of madmen is a saint run mad.

Go then, and if you can, admire the state
Of beaming diamonds, and reflected plate:
Procure a taste to double the surprise,
And gaze on Parian charms with learned eyes:
Be struck with bright brocade, or Tyrian dye,
Our birth-day nobles' splendid livery.
If not so pleas'd, at council board rejoice,
To see their judgements hang upon thy voice;
From morn to night, at senate, rolls, and hall,
Plead much, read more, dine late, or not at all.
But wherefore all this labor, all this strife?
For fame, for riches, for a noble wife?
Shall one whom nature, learning, birth con-
spir'd

To form, not to admire, but be admir'd,
Sigh while his Chloe, blind to wit and worth,
Weds the rich dullness of some son of earth?
Yet time ennobles or degrades each line;
It brighten'd Craggs's, and may darken thine.
And what is fame? the meanest have their day;
The greatest can but blaze, and pass away.
Grac'd as thou art, with all the pow'r of words;
So known, so honor'd, at the House of Lords:
Conspicuous scene! another yet is nigh,
(More silent far) where kings and poets lie:
Where Murray (long enough his country's pride)

Shall be no more than Tully, or than Hyde!

Rack'd with sciatics, martyr'd with the stone,
Will any mortal let himself alone?

See Ward by batter'd beaux invited over,
And desp'rate misery lays hold on Dover.
The case is easier in the mind's disease;
There all men may be cur'd whene'er they
please.

Would ye be blest? despise low joys, low gains;
Disdain whatever Cornbury disdains;
Be virtuous, and be happy for your pains.

But art thou one whom new opinions sway,
One who believes as Tindal leads the way;
Who virtue and a church alike disowns;
Thinks that but words, and this but brick and stones?

Fly then on all the wings of wild desire,
Admire whate'er the maddest can admire.
Is wealth thy passion? Hence! from pole to pole,

Where winds can carry, or where waves can
For Indian spices, for Peruvian gold, [roll;
Prevent the greedy, or outbid the bold:

Advance thy golden mountain to the skies;
On the broad base of fifty thousand rise, [fair)
Add one round hundred, and (if that's not
Add fifty more, and bring it to a square.

For, mark th' advantage; just so many score
Will gain a wife with half as many more;
Procure her beauty, make that beauty chaste;
And then such friends—as cannot fail to last.

A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth;
Venus shall give him form, and Anstis birth.
(Believe me, many a German prince is worse,
Who, proud of pedigree, is poor of purse.)

His wealth brave Timon gloriously confounds;
Ask'd for a groat, he gives a hundred pounds;

Or if three ladies like a luckless play,
Take the whole house upon the poet's day.

Now in such exigences not to need,
Upon my word, you must be rich indeed;
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves;
Something, which for your honor they may cheat,

And which it much becomes you to forget.
If wealth alone then make and keep us blest,
Still, still be getting; never, never rest.

But if to pow'r and place your passion lie,
If in the pomp of life consists the joy,
Then hire a slave, or (if you will) a lord,
To do the honors, and to give the word:
Tell at your levee, as the crowds approach,
To whom to nod, whom take into your coach,
Whom honor with your hand: to make remarks,

Who rules in Cornwall, or who rules in Berks:
"This may be troublesome, is near the chair;
"That makes three members, this can choose
"a mayor."

Instructed thus, you bow, embrace, protest,
Adopt him son, or cousin at the least,
Then turn about, and laugh at your own jest.

Or if your life be one continued treat,
If to live well means nothing but to eat,
Up, up! cries Gluttony, 'tis break of day;
Go, drive the deer, and drag the finny prey,
With hounds and horns go hunt an appetite—
So Russel did, but could not eat at night;
Call'd "happy dog" the beggar at his door;
And envied thirst and hunger to the poor.

Or shall we ev'ry decency confound;
Through taverns, stews, and bagnios take our
round;

Go dine with Chartres, in each vice outdo
K—l's lewd cargo, or Ty—y's crew;
From Latian Syrens, French Circæan feasts, Return well travell'd, and transform'd to beasts:

Or for a titled punk, or foreign flame,
Renounce our country and degrade our name?

If, after all, we must with Wilmot own,
The cordial drop of life is love alone,
And Swift cry wisely, "Vive la Bagatelle!"
The man that loves and laughs may sure do
well.

Adieu—if this advice appear the worst,
E'en take the counsel which I gave you first;
Or, better precepts if you can impart,
Why do; I'll follow them with all my heart.

To Augustus.

WHILE you, great patron of mankind! sus-tain

The balanc'd world, and open all the main;
Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend,
At home with morals, arts, and laws amend;
How shall the Muse from such a monarch steal
An hour, and not defraud the public weal?

Edward and Henry, now the boast of fame,
 And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name,
 After a life of gen'rous toils endur'd,
 The Gaul subdued, or property secur'd,
 Ambition humbled, mighty cities storm'd,
 Or laws establish'd, and the world reform'd;
 Clos'd their long glories with a sigh, to find
 Th' unwilling gratitude of base mankind!
 All human virtue, to its latest breath,
 Finds envy never conquer'd but by death.
 The great Alcides, ev'ry labor past,
 Had still this monster to subdue at last.
 Sure fate of all, beneath whose rising ray
 Each star of meaner merit fades away!
 Opprest we feel the beam directly beat:
 Those suns of glory please not till they set.

To thee the world its present homage pays,
 The harvest early, but mature the praise:
 Great friend of liberty! in kings a name
 Above all Greek, above all Roman fame:
 Whose word is truth, as sacred and rever'd
 As Heaven's own oracles from altars heard.
 Wonder of kings! like whom, to mortal eyes
 None e'er has risen, and none e'er shall rise.

Just in one instance, be it yet confest,
 Your people, sir, are partial in the rest:
 Foes to all living worth except your own,
 And advocates for folly dead and gone.
 Authors, like coins, grow dear as they grow old,
 It is the rust we value, not the gold.
 Chaucer's worst ribaldry is learn'd by rote,
 And beastly Skelton heads of houses quote;
 One likes no language but the Fairy Queen;
 A Scot will fight for Christ's kirk o' the Green:
 And each true Briton is to Ben so civil,
 He swears the Muses met him at the Devil.

Though justly Greece her eldest sons admires,
 Why should not we be wiser than our sires?
 In ev'ry public virtue we excel;
 We build, we paint, we sing, we dance as well:
 And learned Athens to our art must stoop,
 Could she behold us trembling through a hoop.

If time improve our wits as well as wine,
 Say at what age a poet grows divine?
 Shall we, or shall we not, account him so,
 Who died, perhaps, an hundred years ago?
 End all dispute, and fix the year precise
 When British bards begin t' immortalize?

"Who lasts a century can have no flaw?
 "I hold that wit a classic, good in law."

Suppose he wants a year, will you compound?
 And shall we deem him ancient, right, and
 Or damn to all eternity at once, [sound?
 At ninety-nine, a modern and a dunc?

"We shall not quarrel for a year or two;
 "By courtesy of England he may do." [bare,
 Then, by the rule that made the horse-tail
 I pluck out year by year, as hair by hair,
 And melt down ancients like a heap of snow,
 While you, to measure merits, look in Stowe;
 And, estimating authors by the year,
 Bestow a garland only on a bier. [bill

Shakspeare (whom you and ev'ry playhouse Style the divine, the matchless, what you will)

For gain, not glory, wing'd his roving flight,
 And grew immortal in his own despite.
 Ben, old and poor, as little seem'd to heed
 The life to come, in ev'ry poet's creed.
 Who now reads Cowley? if he pleases yet,
 His moral pleases, not his pointed wit;
 Forgot his epic, nay Pindaric art!
 But still I love the language of his heart.

"Yet surely, surely, these were famous men!
 "What boy but hears the sayings of old Ben?
 "In all debates where critics bear a part,
 "Not one but nods, and talks of Jonson's art,
 "Of Shakspeare's nature, and of Cowley's wit;
 "How Beaumont's judgement check'd what
 "Fletcher writ;
 "How Shadwell hasty, Wycherley was slow;
 "But, for the passions, Southern sure and "Rowe.

"These, only these, support the crowded stage,
 "From eldest Heywood down to Cibber's age."

All this may be; the people's voice is odd;
 It is, and it is not, the voice of God.
 To Gammer Gurton if it give the bays,
 And yet deny the Careless Husband praise,
 Or say, our fathers never broke a rule;
 Why then, I say, the public is a fool.
 But let them own that greater faults than we
 They had, and greater virtues, I'll agree.

Spenser himself affects the obsolete,
 And Sydney's verse halts ill on Roman feet:
 Milton's strong pinion now not heaven can bound, [ground;

Now, serpent-like, in prose he sweeps the
 In quibbles, angel and archangel join,
 And God the Father turns a school-divine.
 Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
 Like slashing Bentley, with his desp'rate hook;
 Or damn all Shakspeare, like th' affected fool
 At court, who hates whate'er he read at school.

But for the wits of either Charles's days,
 The mob of gentlemen who wrote with ease;
 Sprat, Carew, Sedley, and a hundred more
 (Like twinkling stars the miscellanies o'er),
 One simile, that solitary shines
 In the dry desert of a thousand lines,
 Or lengthen'd thought that gleams through many a page,

Has sanctified whole poems for an age.
 I lose my patience, and I own it too,
 When works are censur'd not as bad, but new;
 While, if our elders break all reason's laws,
 These fools demand not pardon, but applause.

On Avon's bank, where flow'rs eternal blow,
 If I but ask if any weed can grow;
 One tragic sentence if I dare deride,
 Which Betterton's grave action dignified,
 Or well-mouth'd Booth with emphasis proclaims,

(Though but, perhaps, a muster-roll of names,)
 How will our fathers rise up in a rage,
 And swear all shame is lost in George's age!
 You'd think no fools disgrac'd the former
 reign,

Did not some grave examples yet remain,

Who scorn a lad should teach his father skill,
And, having once been wrong, will be so still.
He who, to seem more wise than you or I,
Extols old bards, or Merlin's prophecy,
Mistake him not; he envies, not admires;
And to debase the sons, exalts the sires.
Had ancient times conspir'd to disallow
What then was new, what had been ancient now?

Or what remain'd, so worthy to be read
By learned critics, of the mighty dead?

In days of ease, when now the weary sword
Was sheath'd, and luxury with Charles restor'd;
In ev'ry taste of foreign courts improv'd,
"All, by the king's example, liv'd and lov'd."
Then peers grew proud in horsemanship t' excel;
Newmarket's glory rose as Britain's fell;
The soldier breath'd the gallantries of France,
And ev'ry flow'ry courtier writ romance.
Then marble, soften'd into life, grew warm;
And yielding metal flow'd to human form:
Lely on animated canvas stole
The sleepy eye that spoke the melting soul.
No wonder then, when all was love and sport,
The willing Muses were debauch'd at court:
On each enervate string they taught the note
To pant, or tremble through an eunuch's throat.

But Britain, changeful as a child at play,
Now calls in princes, and now turns away.
Now Whig, now Tory, what we lov'd we hate;
Now all for pleasure, now for church and state;
Now for prerogative, and now for laws;
Effects unhappy! from a noble cause.

Time was, a sober Englishman would knock
His servants up, and rise by five o'clock,
Instruct his family in ev'ry rule,
And send his wife to church, his son to school.
To worship like his fathers was his care;
To teach their frugal virtues to his heir;
To prove that luxury could never hold;
And place, on good security, his gold.
Now times are chang'd, and one poetic itch
Has seiz'd the court and city, poor and rich:
Sons, sires, and grandsires, all will wear the bays,
Our wives read Milton, and our daughters plays;
To theatres and to rehearsals throng;
And all our grace at table is a song!
I, who so oft renounce the Muses, lie;
Not —'s self e'er tells more fibs than I:
When, sick of muse, our follies we deplore,
And promise our best friends to rhyme no more,
We wake next morning in a raging fit,
And call for pen and ink to show our wit.

He serv'd a 'prenticeship, who sets up shop;
Ward tried on puppies, and the poor, his drop;
Even Radcliffe's doctors travel first to France,
Nor dare to practise till they've learn'd to dance.
Who builds a bridge that never drove a pile?
(Should Ripley venture, all the world would smile.)

But those who cannot write, and those who can,
All rhyme, and scrawl, and scribble, to a man.

Yet, sir, reflect, the mischief is not great;
These madmen never hurt the church or state:

Sometimes the folly benefits mankind;
And rarely av'rice taints the tuneful mind.
Allow him but his plaything of his pen,
He ne'er rebels, nor plots, like other men:
Flight of cashiers, or mobs, he'll never mind;
And knows no losses while the muse is kind.
To cheat a friend, or ward, he leaves to Peter,
The good man heaps up nothing but mere metre;
Enjoys his garden and his book in quiet;
And then—a perfect hermit in his diet.

Of little use the man you may suppose,
Who says in verse what others say in prose:
Yet let me show a poet's of some weight,
And (though no soldier) useful to the state.
What will a child learn sooner than a song?
What better teach a foreigner the tongue?
What's long or short, each accent where to place,
And speak in public with some sort of grace?
I scarce can think him such a worthless thing,
Unless he praise some monster of a king;
Or virtue or religion turn to sport,
To please a lewd or unbelieving court.
Unhappy Dryden! in all Charles's days,
Roscommon only boasts unspotted bays;
And in our own (excuse some courtly stains),
No whiter page than Addison remains.
He from the taste obscene reclaims our youth,
And sets the passions on the side of truth;
Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art,
And pours each human virtue in the heart.
Let Ireland tell, how wit upheld her cause,
Her trade supported, and supplied her laws:
And leave on Swift this grateful verse engrav'd:
"The rights a court attack'd, a poet sav'd."
Behold the hand that wrought a nation's cure,
Stretch'd to relieve the idiot and the poor,
Proud vice to brand, or injur'd worth adorn,
And stretch the ray to ages yet unborn.
Not but there are who merit other palms;
Hopkins and Sternhold glad the heart with psalms:

The boys and girls whom charity maintains,
Implore your help in these pathetic strains:
How could devotion touch the country pews,
Unless the gods bestow'd a proper muse?
Verse cheers their leisure, verse assists their work,
Verse prays for peace, or sings down Pope and Turk.

The silenc'd preacher yields to potent strain,
And feels that grace his pray'r besought in vain;
The blessing thrills thro' all the lab'ring throng,
And heaven is won by violence of song.

Our rural ancestors, with little blest,
Patient of labor when the end was rest,
Indulg'd the day that hous'd their annual grain
With feasts and off'rings, and a thankful strain.
The joy their wives, their sons, and servants share,
Ease of their toil, and partners of their care:
The laugh, the jest, attendants on the bowl,
Smooth'd ev'ry brow, and open'd ev'ry soul:
With growing years the pleasing licence grew,
And taunts alternate innocently flew.
But times corrupt, and nature ill-inclin'd,
Produc'd the point that left a sting behind

Till friend with friend, and families at strife,
Triumphant malice rag'd through private life.
Who felt the wrong, or fear'd it, took th' alarm,
Appeal'd to law, and justice lent her arm.
At length, by wholesome dread of statutes bound,
The poets learn'd to please, and not to wound :
Most warp'd to flattery's side ; but some, more
Preserv'd the freedom, and forbore the vice. [nice,
Hence Satire rose, that just the medium hit,
And heals with morals what it hurts with wit.

We conquer'd France, but felt our captive's
charms ;

Her arts victorious triumph'd o'er our arms :
Britain to soft refinement less a foe,
Wit grew polite, and numbers learn'd to flow.
Waller was smooth ; but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine.
Though still some traces of our rustic vein
And splayfoot verse remain'd, and will remain ;
Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war.
Exact Racine, and Corneille's noble fire,
Show'd us that France had something to admire !
Not but the tragic spirit was our own,
And full in Shakspeare, fair in Otway shone :
But Otway fail'd to polish or refine,
And fluent Shakspeare scarce effac'd a line.
E'en copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
The last and greatest art, the art to blot.

Some doubt if equal pains or equal fire
The humbler muse of comedy require.
But, in known images of life, I guess
The labor greater, as th' indulgence less.
Observe how seldom even the best succeed :
Tell me if Congreve's Fools are fools indeed ?
What pert low dialogue has Farquhar writ !
How Van wants grace, who never wanted wit !
The stage how loosely does Astræa tread,
Who fairly puts all characters to bed !
And idle Cibber, how he breaks the laws,
To make poor Pinkey eat with vast applause !
But fill their purse, our poets' work is done ;
Alike to them, by pathos or by pun.

O you ! whom vanity's light bark conveys
On fame's mad voyage by the wind of praise,
With what a shifting gale your course you ply,
For ever sunk too low, or borne too high !
Who pants for glory finds but short repose ;
A breath revives him, or a breath o'erthrows.
Farewell the stage ! if, just as thrives the play,
The silly bard grows fat, or falls away.

There still remains, to mortify a wit,
The many-headed monster of the Pit ;
A senseless, worthless, and unhonour'd crowd,
Who, to disturb their betters mighty proud,
Clatt'ring their sticks before ten lines are spoke,
Call for the Farce, the Bear, or the Black Joke.
What dear delight to Britons farce affords !
Ever the taste of mobs, but now of lords !
Taste, that eternal wanderer ! which flies
From head to ears, and now from ears to eyes.)
The play stands still ! damn action and discourse,
Back fly the scenes, and enter foot and horse ;

Pageants on pageants, in long order drawn,
Peers, heralds, bishops, ermine, gold, and lawn ;
The champion too ! and, to complete the jest,
Old Edward's armor beams on Cibber's breast.
With laughter sure Democritus had died,
Had he beheld an audience gape so wide.
Let bear or elephant be e'er so white,
The people, sure the people, are the sight !
Ah, luckless poet ! stretch thy lungs and roar,
That bear or elephant shall heed thee more ;
While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends !
Loud as the wolves, on Orcas' stormy steep,
Howl to the roarings of the northern deep,
Such is the shout, the long-applauding note,
At Quin's high plume, or Oldfield's petticoat :
Or when from Court a birth-day suit bestow'd,
Sinks the lost actor in the tawdry load.
Booth enters—hark ! the universal peal !
“ But has he spoken ? ” Not a syllable. [stare ? ”
“ What shook the stage, and made the people
Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacquer'd chair.

Yet, lest you think I rally more than teach,
Or praise malignly arts I cannot reach ;
Let me for once presume t' instruct the times,
To know the poet from the man of rhymes :
'Tis he who gives my breast a thousand pains,
Can make me feel each passion that he feigns ;
Enrage, compose, with more than magic art,
With pity and with terror tear my heart ;
And snatch me, o'er the earth, or through the air,
To Thebes, to Athens, when he will, and where.

But not this part of the poetic state
Alone deserves the favor of the great :
Think of those authors, sir, who would rely
More on a reader's sense than gazer's eye.
Or who shall wander where the Muses sing ?
Who climb their mountain, or who taste their spring ?

How shall we fill a library with wit,
When Merlin's cave is half unfurnish'd yet ?
My liege ! why writers little claim your thought
I guess ; and, with their leave, will tell the fault :
We poets are (upon a poet's word)
Of all mankind the creatures most absurd :
The season when to come and when to go,
To sing or cease to sing, we never know ;
And, if we will recite nine hours in ten,
You lose your patience just like other men.
Then, too, we hurt ourselves, when, to defend
A single verse, we quarrel with a friend ;
Repeat unask'd ; lament the wit's too fine
For vulgar eyes, and point out ev'ry line.
But most when, straining with too weak a wing,
We needs will write epistles to the king ;
And, from the moment we oblige the town,
Expect a place or pension from the crown ;
Or dubb'd historians by express command,
T' enroll your triumphs o'er the seas and land ;
Be call'd to court to plan some work divine,
As once, for Louis, Boileau and Racine.

Yet think, great sir ! (so many virtues shown)
Ah think what poet best may make them known !

Or choose at least some minister of grace,
Fit to bestow the Laureat's weighty place.

Charles, to late times to be transmitted fair,
Assign'd his figure to Bernini's care;
And great Nassau to Kneller's hand decreed
To fix him graceful on the bounding steed;
So well in paint and stone they judg'd of merit:
But kings in wit may want discerning spirit.
The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd
Quarles;

Which made old Ben and surly Dennis swear,
"No Lord's annointed, but a Russian bear."

Not with such majesty, such bold relief,
The forms august of king or conqu'ring chief
E'er swell'd in marble, as in verse have shin'd
(In polish'd verse) the manners and the mind.
Oh! could I mount on the Mæonian wing,
Your arms, your actions, your repose to sing!
What seas you travers'd, and what fields you fought!

Your country's peace how oft, how dearly
How barb'rous rage subsided at your word,
And nations wondered while they dropp'd the sword!

How, when you nodded, o'er the land and deep Peace stole her wing, and wrapp'd the world in sleep;

Till earth's extremes your mediation own,
And Asia's tyrants tremble at your throne.
But verse, alas! your majesty disdains;
And I'm not used to panegyric strains:
The zeal of fools offends at any time,
But, most of all, the zeal of fools in rhyme.
Besides, a fate attends on all I write;
That, when I aim at praise, they say I bite.
A vile encomium doubly ridicules:
There's nothing blackens like the ink of fools.
If true, a woeful likeness; and, if lies,
"Praise undeserv'd is satire in disguise:"
Well may he blush who gives it or receives;
And, when I flatter, let my dirty leaves
(Like journals, odes, and such forgotten things
As Eusden, Philips, Settle, writ of kings)
Clothe spice, line trunks, or flutt'ring in a row
Befringe the rails of Bedlam and Soho.

EPISTLE II. BOOK II.

DEAR Col'nel, Cobham's and your country's
You love a verse, take such as I can send. [friend!

A Frenchman comes, presents you with his boy,

Bows and begins—"This lad, sir, is of Blois:
"Observe his shape how clean, his locks how curl'd!

"My only son, I'd have him see the world:
"His French is pure; his voice too—you shall hear.

"Sir, he's your slave for twenty pounds a-year.

"Mere wax as yet, you fashion him with ease,

"Your barber, cook, upholst'rer, what you please:

"A perfect genius at an opera song—

'To say too much might do my honour wrong.

"Take him with all his virtues, on my word;
"His whole ambition was to serve a lord:
"But, sir, to you, with what would I not part?
"Though, faith, I fear 'twill break his mother's heart.

"Once (and but once) I caught him in a lie,
"And then, unwhipp'd, he had the grace to cry.
"The fault he has I fairly shall reveal;
"(Could you o'erlook but that) it is—to steal."

If, after this, you took the graceless lad,
Could you complain, my friend, he prov'd so bad?
Faith, in such case, if you should prosecute,
I think Sir Godfrey should decide the suit,
Who sent the thief that stole the cash away,
And punish'd him that put it in his way.

Consider then, and judge me in this light;
I told you, when I went, I could not write;
You said the same; and are you discontent
With laws to which you gave your own assent?
Nay worse, to ask for verse at such a time!
D'ye think me good for nothing but to rhyme?

In Anna's wars, a soldier poor and old
Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold:
Tir'd with a tedious march, one luckless night
He slept, poor dog! and lost it to a doit.
This put the man in such a desperate mind,
Between revenge, and grief, and hunger join'd,
Against the foe, himself, and all mankind;
He leap'd the trenches, scal'd a castle wall,
Tore down a standard, took the fort and all.

"Prodigious well!" his great commander cried;
Gave him much praise, and some reward beside.
Next pleas'd his excellence a town to batter;
(Its name I know not, and 'tis no great matter:)
"Go on, my friend (he cried), see yonder walls!
"Advance and conquer! go where glory calls!
"More honors, more rewards, attend the brave:"
Don't you remember what reply he gave?

"D'ye think me, noble gen'ral, such a sot?
"Let him take castles who has ne'er a groat."

Bred up at home, full early I begun
To read in Greek the wrath of Peleus' son.
Besides, my father taught me, from a lad,
The better art to know the good from bad:
(And little sure imported to remove,
To hunt for truth in Maudlin's learned grove.)
But knottier points, we knew not half so well,
Depriv'd us soon of our paternal cell;
And certain laws, by suff'ers thought unjust,
Denied all posts of profit or of trust:
Hopes after hopes of pious Papists fail'd,
While mighty William's thund'ring arm pre-
For Right Hereditary tax'd and fin'd, [vail'd.
He stuck to poverty with peace of mind;
And me the Muses help'd to undergo it;
Convict a Papist he, and I a poet.

But (thanks to Homer!) since I live and thrive,
Indebted to no prince or peer alive,
Sure I should want the care of ten Monroes,
If I would scribble rather than repose.

Years following years steal something ev'ry
At last they steal us from ourselves away; [day,
In one our frolics, one amusements end,
In one a mistress drops, in one a friend;

This subtle thief of life, this paltry Time,
What will it leave me, if it snatch my rhyme?
If ev'ry wheel of that unwearied mill,
That turn'd ten thousand verses, now stand still?

But, after all, what would you have me do,
When out of twenty I can please not two?
When this heroics only deigns to praise,
Sharp satire that, and that Pindaric lays?
One likes the pheasant's wing, and one the leg;
The vulgar boil, the learned roast, an egg:
Hard task! to hit the palate of such guests,
When Oldfield loves what Dartineuf detests.

But grant I may relapse, for want of grace,
Again to rhyme: can London be the place?
Who there his muse, or self, or soul attends,
In crowds and courts, law, business, feasts, and friends?

My counsel sends to execute a deed:
A poet begs me I will hear him read:
In Palace-yard, at nine, you'll find me there—
At ten, for certain, sir, in Bloomsbury-square—
Before the lords at twelve my cause comes on—
There's a rehearsal, sir, exact at one.

"Oh! but a wit can study in the streets,
"And raise his mind above the mob he meets."
Not quite so well, however, as one ought;
A hackney-coach may chance to spoil a thought;
And then a nodding-beam, or pig of lead,
God knows, may hurt the very ablest head.
Have you not seen, at Guildhall's narrow pass,
Two aldermen dispute it with an ass?
And peers give way, exalted as they are,
E'en to their own s-r-v-nce in a car?

Go, lofty poet! and in such a crowd
Sing thy sonorous verse—but not aloud.
Alas! to grottoes and to groves we run;
To ease and silence ev'ry Muse's son:
Blackmore himself, for any grand effort,
Would drink and doze at Tooting or Earl's-court.
How shall I rhyme in this eternal roar? [before?
How match the bards whom none e'er match'd

The man who, stretch'd in Isis' calm retreat,
To books and study gives seven years complete,
See! strew'd with learned dust, his nightcap on,
He walks, an object new beneath the sun!
The boys flock round him, and the people stare;
So stiff, so mute! some statue, you would swear,
Stept from its pedestal to take the air!
And here, while town, and court, and city roars,
With mobs, and duns, and soldiers at their doors,
Shall I in London act this idle part,
Composing songs for fools to get by heart?

The Temple late two brother serjeants saw,
Who deem'd each other oracles of law;
With equal talents, these congenial souls,
One lull'd th' Exchequer, and one stunn'd the Rolls;

Each had a gravity would make you split,
And shook his head at Murray as a wit.

'Twas, "Sir, your law,"—and "Sir, your eloquence;"

"Yours, Cowper's manners;" and "Yours, Thus we dispose of all poetic merit;

Yours Milton's genius, and mine Homer's spirit.

Call Tibbald Shakspeare, and he'll swear the Nine,

Dear Cibber! never match'd one ode of thine.
Lord! how we strut thro' Merlin's Cave to see
No poets there but Stephen, you, and me.

Walk with respect behind, while we at ease
Weave laurel crowns, and take what names we
"My dear Tibullus!" if that will not do, [please.

"Let me be Horace, and be Ovid you:

"Or, I'm content; allow me Dryden's strains,
"And you shall rise up Otway for your pains."

Much do I suffer, much, to keep in peace [race;
This jealous, waspish, wrong-head, rhyming
And much must flatter, if the whim should bite
To court applause, by printing what I write:

But, let the fit pass o'er, I'm wise enough
To stop my ears to their confounded stuff.

In vain bad rhymers all mankind reject, [spect:
They treat themselves with most profound re-
'Tis to small purpose that you hold your tongue;
Each, prais'd within, is happy all day long:

But how severely with themselves proceed
The men who write such verse as we can read!

Their own strict judges, not a word they spare
That wants or force, or light, or weight, or care.

Howe'er unwillingly, it quits its place,
Nay, tho' at court (perhaps), it may find grace:

Such they'll degrade; and sometimes, in its stead,
In downright charity revive the dead;

Mark where a bold expressive phrase appears,
Bright thro' the rubbish of some hundred years;

Command old words that long have slept t'awake,
Words that wise Bacon or brave Raleigh spake;

Or bid the new be English ages hence,
(For use will father what's begot by sense)

Pour the full tide of eloquence along,
Serenely pure, and yet divinely strong,

Rich with the treasures of each foreign tongue;
Prune the luxuriant, the uncouth refine,

But show no mercy to an empty line:
Then polish all with so much life and ease,

You think 'tis nature, and a knack to please:
"But ease in writing flows from art, not chance;

"As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance."

If such the plague and pains to write by rule,
Better (say I) be pleas'd, and play the fool:

Call, if you will, bad rhyming a disease;
It gives men happiness, or leaves them ease.

There liv'd in primo Georgii (they record)
A worthy member, no small fool, a lord;

Who, though the House was up, delighted sate,
Heard, noted, answer'd, as in full debate:

In all but this, a man of sober life,
Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife;

Not quite a madman though a pasty fell,
And much too wise to walk into a well. [mur'd,

Him the damn'd doctors and his friends im-
They bled, they cupp'd, they purg'd; in short,

they cur'd:

Whereat the gentleman began to stare—
My friends! he cried, p-x take you for your care!

That, from a patriot of distinguish'd note,
Have bled and purg'd me to a simple vote.

Well, on the whole, plain prose must be my fate :

Wisdom (curse on it!) will come soon or late.
There is a time when poets will grow dull :
I'll e'en leave verses to the boys at school :
To rules of poetry no more confin'd,
I'll learn to smooth and harmonize my mind ;
Teach ev'ry thought within its bounds to roll,
And keep the equal measure of the soul.

Soon as I enter at my country door,
My mind resumes the thread it dropp'd before :
Thoughts which at Hyde-park corner I forgot,
Meet and rejoin me in the pensive grot ;
There, all alone, and compliments apart,
I ask these sober questions of my heart :

If, when the more you drink the more you crave,

You tell the doctor ; when the more you have
The more you want, why not with equal ease
Confess as well your folly, as disease ?

The heart resolves this matter in a trice :

“ Men only feel the smart, but not the vice.”

When golden angels cease to cure the evil,
You give all royal witchcraft to the devil ;
When servile chaplains cry that birth and place
Endue a peer with honor, truth, and grace ;
Look in that breast, most dirty D— ! be fair ;
Say, can you find out one such lodger there ?
Yet still, not heeding what your heart can teach,

You go to church to hear these flatt'ers preach.

Indeed, could wealth bestow or wit or merit,
A grain of courage, or a spark of spirit,
The wisest man might blush, I must agree,
If D*** lov'd sixpence more than he.

If there be truth in law, and use can give
A property, that's yours on which you live.
Delightful Abs-court, if its fields afford
Their fruits to you, confesses you its lord ;
All Worldly's hens, nay partridge, sold to town,
His ven'son, too, a guinea makes your own :
He bought at thousands, what with better wit
You purchase as you want, and bit by bit ;
Now, or long since, what diff'rence will be found ?
You pay a penny, and he paid a pound.

Heathcote himself, and such large-acred men,
Lords of fat E'sham, or of Lincoln fen,
Buy ev'ry stick of wood that lends them heat ;
Buy ev'ry pullet they afford to eat.

Yet these are wights who fondly call their own
Half that the devil o'erlooks from Lincoln town.
The laws of God, as well as of the land,
Abhor a perpetuity should stand :

Estates have wings, and hang in fortune's pow'r,
Loose on the point of ev'ry waving hour,
Ready, by force, or of your own accord,
By sale, at least by death, to change their lord.

Man ? and for ever ? wretch ! what wouldst thou have ?

Heir urges heir, like wave impelling wave ;
All vast possessions (just the same the case
Whether you call them Villa, Park, or Chase)
Alas, my Bathurst ! what will they avail ?
Join Gotswood hills to Saperton's fair dale ;

Let rising granaries and temples here,
There mingled farms and pyramids appear ;
Link towns to towns with avenues of oak ;
Inclose whole towns in walls—'tis all a joke !
Inexorable Death shall level all,

And trees, and stones, and farms, and farmer fall.

Gold, Silver, Iv'ry, Vases sculptur'd high,
Paint, Marble, Gems, and robes of Persian dye,
There are who have not—and, thank Heaven !

there are, [care.

Who, if they have not, think not worth their

Talk what you will of Taste, my friend, you'll
Two of a face, as soon as of a mind. [find,

Why, of two brothers, rich and restless one [sun ;

Ploughs, burns, manures, and toils from sun to

The other slights, for women, sports, and wines,

All Townshend's turnips, and all Grosvenor's mines ; [tent,

Why one, like Bu—, with pay and scorn con-

Bows, and votes on, in Court and Parliament ;

One, driven by strong Benevolence of soul,

Shall fly, like Oglethorpe, from pole to pole ;

Is known alone to that Directing Pow'r

Who forms the Genius in the natal hour ;

That God of Nature, who, within us still,

Inclines our action, not restrains our will :

Various of temper, as of face or frame,

Each individual ; His great end the same.

Yes, Sir, how small soever be my heap,

A part I will enjoy, as well as keep.

My heir may sigh, and think it want of grace

A man so poor would live without a place :

But sure no statute in his favor says,

How free or frugal I shall pass my days ;

I, who at some times spend, at others spare,

Divided between carelessness and care.

'Tis one thing madly to disperse my store ;

Another, not to heed to treasure more ;

Glad, like a boy, to snatch the first good day,

And pleas'd if sordid want be far away.

What is 't to me, a passenger (God wot),

Whether my vessel be first rate or not ?

The ship itself may make a better figure,

But I that sail am neither less nor bigger ;

I neither strut with ev'ry fav'ring breath,

Nor strive with all the tempest in my teeth :

In power, wit, figure, virtue, fortune, plac'd

Behind the foremost, and before the last.

“ But why all this of avarice ? I have none.”

I wish you joy, Sir, of a tyrant gone !

But does no other lord it at this hour,

As wild and mad—the avarice of pow'r ?

Does neither rage inflame, nor fear appall ?

Not the black fear of death that saddens all ?

With terrors round, can reason hold her throne,

Despise the known, nor tremble at th' unknown ?

Survey both worlds, intrepid and entire,

In spite of witches, devils, dreams, and fire ?

Pleas'd to look forward, pleas'd to look behind,

And count each birth-day with a grateful mind ?

Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end ?

Canst thou endure a foe, forgive a friend ?

Has age but melted the rough parts away,

As winter fruits grow mild ere they decay ?

Or will you think, my friend, your business done,
When, of a hundred thorns, you pull out one?

Learn to live well, or fairly make your will;
You've play'd, and lov'd, and eat, and drunk your fill:
Walk sober off, before a sprightlier age
Come titt'ring on, and shove you from the stage:
Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, and whose follies please.

§ 21. Epilogue to the Satires. In two Dialogues.
Pope.

DIALOGUE I.

Fr. Not twice a twelvemonth you appear in print;

And when it comes, the Court see nothing in't.
You grow correct, that once with rapture writ;
And are, besides, too moral for a Wit.

Decay of parts, alas! we all must feel—

Why now, this moment, don't I see you steal?
'Tis all from Horace; Horace, long before ye,
Said, "Tories call'd him Whig, and Whigs a "Tory;"

And taught his Romans, in much better metre,
"To laugh at fools who put their trust in Peter."

But Horace, Sir, was delicate, was nice;
Bubo observes, he lash'd no sort of Vice:
Horace would say, Sir Billy serv'd the Crown;
Blunt could do business, Higgins knew the town;
In Sappho touch the Failings of the Sex,
In rev'rend Bishops note some small neglects;
And own the Spaniard did a waggish thing,
Who cropp'd our ears, and sent them to the
His sly, polite, insinuating style [King.
Could please at Court, and make Augustus smile:
An artful manager, that crept between
His friend and shame, and was a kind of screen.
But, 'faith, your very friends will soon be sore;
Patriots there are who wish you'd jest no more—
And where's the glory? 'twill be only thought
The great man never offer'd you a groat.
Go see Sir Robert—

P. See Sir Robert!—hum—
And never laugh for all my life to come?
Seen him I have, but in his happier hour
Of Social Pleasure, ill-exchanged for Pow'r;
Seen him, uncumber'd with a venal tribe,
Smile without art, and win without a bribe.
Would he oblige me? let me only find
He does not think me what he thinks mankind.
Come, come—at all I laugh he laughs, no doubt;
The only difference is—I dare laugh out.

F. Why yes, with Scripture still you may be free;
A horse-laugh, if you please, at Honesty;
A joke on JEKYL, or some odd Old Whig,
Who never chang'd his principle, or wig;
A patriot is a fool in ev'ry age,
Whom all Lord Chamberlains allow the stage;
These nothing hurts; they keep their fashion
still,

And wear their strange old virtue, as they will.

If any ask you, "Who's the man, so near "His prince, that writes in verse, and has his Why answer, Lyttelton; and I'll engage [ear?"
The worthy youth shall ne'er be in a rage:

But were his verses vile, his whisper base,
You'd quickly find him in Lord Fanny's case.
Sejanus, Wolsey, hurt not honest Fleury;
But well may put some statesmen in a fury.

Laugh then at any but at fools or foes;
These you but anger, and you mend not those.
Laugh at your friends; and if your friends are sore,
So much the better, you may laugh the more.
To vice and folly to confine the jest,
Sets half the world, God knows, against the rest;
Did not the sneer of more impartial men
At sense and virtue, balance all again.
Judicious wits spread wide the ridicule,
And charitably comfort knave and fool.

P. Dear Sir, forgive the prejudice of youth;
Adieu, distinction, satire, warmth, and truth!
Come, harmless characters that no one hit;
Come, Henley's oratory, Osborne's wit!
The honey dropping from Favonio's tongue,
The flow'rs of Bubo, and the flow of Y—ng!
The gracious dew of pulpit eloquence,
And all the well-whipt cream of courtly sense,
The first was H—vy's, F—'s next, and then
The S—te's, and then H—vy's once again.
O come, that easy, Ciceronian style,
So Latin, yet so English all the while,
As, though the pride of Middleton and Bland,
All boys may read, and girls may understand!
Then might I sing, without the least offence,
And all I sung should be the Nation's Sense;
Or teach the melancholy Muse to mourn,
Hang the sad verse on Carolina's urn,
And hail her passage to the Realms of Rest,
All parts perform'd, and all her children blest!
So Satire is no more—I feel it die—
No Gazetteer more innocent than I—
And let, a-God's name, ev'ry fool and knave
Be grac'd through life, and flatter'd in his grave.

F. Why so? if Satire knows his time and
place,
You still may lash the greatest—in disgrace:
For merit will by turns forsake them all:
Would you know when? exactly when they fall.
But let all satire in all changes spare
Immortal S—k, and gave D—re.
Silent and soft as saints remov'd to Heaven,
All ties dissolv'd, and ev'ry sin forgiven,
These may some gentle ministerial wing
Receive, and place for ever near a King! [port,
There, where no passion, pride, or shame trans-
Lull'd with the sweet nepenthe of a Court;
There, where no father's, brother's, friend's dis-
grace

Once break their rest, or stir them from their place;
But, past the sense of human miseries.
All tears are wip'd for ever from all eyes;
No cheek is known to blush, no heart to throb,
Save when they lose a question, or a job.

P. Good Heaven forbid that I should blast their glory,
Who know how like Whig Ministers to Tory,
And when three Sov'reigns died, could scarce be next,

Consid'ring what a gracious Prince was next.

Have I, in silent wonder, seen such things
 As pride in slaves, and avarice in kings ;
 And at a peer or peeress shall I fret,
 Who starves a sister, or forswears a debt ?
Virtue, I grant you, is an empty boast :
 But shall the dignity of Vice be lost ?
 Ye Gods ! shall Cibber's son, without rebuke,
 Swear like a Lord, or Rich outwhore a Duke ?
 A fav'rite's porter with his master vie,
 Be brib'd as often, and as often lie ?
 Shall Ward draw contracts with a statesman's
 Or Japhet pocket, like his Grace, a will ? [skill ?
 Is it for Bond or Peter (paltry things !)
 To pay their debts, or keep their faith, like kings ?
 If Blount dispatch'd himself, he play'd the man ;
 And so mayst thou, illustrious Passeran !
 But shall a printer, weary of his life,
 Learn from their books to hang himself and wife ?
 This, this, my friend, I cannot, must not bear ;
 Vice thus abus'd demands a nation's care :
 This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
 And hurls the thunder of the laws on gin.
 Let modest Foster, if he will, excel
 Ten Metropolitans in preaching well ;
 A simple Quaker, or a Quaker's wife,
 Outdo Landaff in doctrine—yea in life :
 Let humble Allen, with an awkward shame,
 Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame.
Virtue may choose the high or low degree,
 'Tis just alike to virtue, and to me ;
 Dwell in a Monk, or light upon a King,
 She's still the same belov'd, contented thing.
Vice is undone if she forgets her birth,
 And stoops from angels to the dregs of earth.
 But 'tis the Fall degrades her to a whore :
 Let Greatness own her, and she's mean no more.
 Her birth, her beauty, crowds and courts confess,
 Chaste matrons praise her, and grave bishops bless ;
 In golden chains the willing world she draws,
 And hers the Gospel is, and hers the laws ;
 Mounts the tribunal, lifts her scarlet head,
 And sees pale Virtue carted in her stead.
 Lo ! at the wheels of her triumphal car,
 Old England's Genius, rough with many a scar,
 Dragg'd in the dust ! his arms hang idly round,
 His flag inverted trains along the ground !
 Our youth, all livery'd o'er with foreign gold,
 Before her dance ; behind her, crawl the old !
 See thronging millions to the Pagod run,
 And offer country, parent, wife, or son !
 Hear her black trumpet thro' the land proclaim,
 That not to be corrupted is the shame.
 In soldier, churchman, patriot, man in pow'r,
 'Tis av'rice all, ambition is no more !
 See all our nobles begging to be slaves !
 See all our fools aspiring to be knaves !
 The wit of cheats, the courage of a whore,
 Are what ten thousand envy and adore :
 All, all look up, with reverential awe,
 At crimes that 'scape or triumph o'er the law ;
 While truth, worth, wisdom, daily they decry :
 " Nothing is sacred now but villainy."

Yet may this verse (if such a verse remain)
 Show there was one who held it in disdain.

DIALOGUE II.

Fr. 'Tis all a libel—Paxton, Sir, will say.

P. Not yet, my friend ! to-morrow, 'faith, it
 And for that very cause I print to-day. [may ;
 How should I fret to mangle ev'ry line,
 In reverence to the sins of Thirty-nine !

Vice with such giant strides comes on amain,
 Invention strives to be before in vain ;
 Feign what I will, and paint it e'er so strong,
 Some rising genius sins up to my song.

F. Yet none but you by name the guilty lash ;
 Even Guthry saves half Newgate by a dash.
 Spare then the person, and expose the vice.

P. How, Sir ! not damn the sharper, but the dice ?

Come on then, satire ! gen'ral, unconfin'd,
 Spread thy broad wing, and souse on all the kind.
 Ye statesmen, priests, of one religion all !
 Ye tradesmen, vile, in army, court, or hall !
 Ye rev'rend atheists—F. Scandal ! name them ;
 who ?

P. Why that's the thing you bid me not to do.
 Who starv'd a sister, who forswore a debt,
 I never nam'd ; the town's inquiring yet.
 The pois'ning dame—F. You mean—P. I don't.
 —F. You do.

P. See, now I keep the secret, and not you !
 The bribing statesman.—F. Hold, too high you go.

P. The brib'd elector.—F. There you stoop too low.

P. I fain would please you, if I knew with what ;

Tell me which knave is lawful game, which not.
 Must great offenders, once escap'd the Crown,
 Like royal harts, be never more run down ?
 Admit your law to spare the knight requires,
 As beasts of nature may we hunt the 'squires ?
 Suppose I censure—you know what I mean—
 To save a Bishop, may I name a Dean ?

F. A Dean, Sir ? no ; his fortune is not made ;
 You hurt a man that's rising in the trade.

P. If not the tradesman who set up to-day,
 Much less the 'prentice who to-morrow may.
 Down, down, proud satire ! though a realm be spoil'd,

Arraign no mightier thief than wretched Wild ;
 Or, if a court or country's made a job,
 Go drench a pickpocket, and join the mob.

But, Sir, I beg you (for the love of vice !)
 The matter's weighty, pray consider twice :
 Have you less pity for the needy cheat,
 The poor and friendless villain, than the great ?
 Alas ! the small discredit of a bribe
 Scarce hurts the Lawyer, but undoes the Scribe.
 Then better sure it Charity becomes
 To tax Directors, who, thank God, have plums ;
 Still better Ministers ; or, if the thing
 May pinch even there—why lay it on a King.

F. Stop ! stop !

P. Must satire, then, nor rise nor fall ?
 Speak out, and bid me blame no rogues at all.

F. Yes, strike that Wild, I'll justify the blow.

P. Strike? why the man was hang'd ten years ago ;

Who now that obsolete example fears ?

E'en Peter trembles only for his ears.

F. What, always Peter? Peter thinks you mad ;
You make men desp'rate, if they once are bad :

Else might he take to virtue some years hence—

P. As S—k, if he lives, will love the Prince.

F. Strange spleen to S—k !

P. Do I wrong the man ?

God knows, I praise a Courtier where I can.

When I confess, there is who feels for fame,

And melts to goodness, need I Scarb'row name ?

Pleas'd let me own, in Esher's peaceful grove

(Where Kent and nature vie for Pelham's love),

The scene, the master, op'ning to my view,

I sit and dream I see my Craggs anew !

Even in a Bishop I can spy desert ;

Secker is decent, Rundel has a heart :

Manners with candor are to Benson given ;

To Berkeley ev'ry virtue under Heaven.

But does the Court a virtuous man remove ?

That instant, I declare, he has my love ;

I shun his zenith, court his mild decline ;

Thus Somers once and Halifax were mine.

Oft, in the clear still mirror of retreat,

I studied Shrewsbury, the wise and great ;

Carleton's calm sense and Stanhope's noble
flame

Compar'd, and knew their gen'rous end the same.

How pleasing Atterbury's softer hour !

How shin'd the soul, unconquer'd in the Tow'r !

How can I Pult'ney, Chesterfield forget,

While Roman spirit charms, and Attic wit ?

Argyle, the State's whole thunder born to wield,

And shake alike the senate and the field ?

Or Wyndham, just to freedom and the throne,

The master of our passions, and his own ?

Names which I long have lov'd, nor lov'd in vain,

Rank'd with their friends, not number'd with their train ;

And if yet higher the proud list should end,

Still let me say, No follower, but a friend.

Yet think not, friendship only prompts my lays ;

I follow Virtue ; where she shines, I praise ;

Point she to Priest or Elder, Whig or Tory,

Or round a Quaker's beaver cast a glory.

I never (to my sorrow I declare)

Din'd with the Man of Ross, or my Lord May'r.

Some in their choice of friends (nay, look not grave)

Have still a secret bias to a knave ;

To find an honest man, I beat about,

And love him, court him, praise him, in or out.

F. Then why so few commended ?

P. Not so fierce ;

Find you the virtue, and I'll find the verse.

But random praise—the task can ne'er be done :

Each mother asks it for her booby son ;

Each widow asks it for the best of men ;

For him she weeps, for him she weds again.

Praise cannot stoop, like satire, to the ground :

The number may be hang'd, but not be crown'd.

Enough for half the greatest of these days,

To 'scape my censure, not expect my praise.

Are they not rich? what more can they pretend?

Dare they to hope a poet for their friend—

What Richlieu wanted, Louis scarce could gain ;

And what young Ammon wish'd, but wish'd in vain?

No pow'r the Muse's friendship can command ;

No pow'er, when virtue claims it, can withstand :

To Cato, Virgil paid one honest line ;

O let my country's friends illumine mine !

—What are you thinking? F. 'Faith, the thought's no sin ;

I think your friends are out, and would be in.

P. If merely to come in, sir, they go out,

The way they take is strangely round about.

F. They too may be corrupted, you'll allow.

P. I only call those knaves who are so now.

Is that too little? Come then, I'll comply—

Spirit of Arnall ! aid me while I lie.

Cobham's a coward, Polwart is a slave ;

And Lyttelton a dark, designing knave ;

St. John has ever been a wealthy fool—

But let me add, Sir Robert's mighty dull ;

Has never made a friend in private life,

And was, besides, a tyrant to his wife.

But pray, when others praise him, do I

Call Verres, Wolsey, any odious name? [blame?

Why rail they then, if but a wreath of mine,

O all-accomplish'd St. John ! deck thy shrine ?

What shall each spur-gall'd hackney of the
day,

When Paxton gives him double pots and pay,

Or each new-pension'd sycophant, pretend

To break my windows if I treat a friend :

Then wisely plead, to me they meant no hurt,

But 'twas my guest at whom they threw the

Sure, if I spare the Minister, no rules [dirt?

Of honor bind me not to maul his tools :

Sure, if they cannot cut, it may be said

His saws are toothless, and his hatches lead.

It anger'd Turenne, once upon a day,

To see a footman kick'd that took his pay ;

But when he heard th'affront the fellow gave,

Knew one a man of honor, one a knave ;

The prudent gen'ral turn'd it to a jest, [rest :

And begg'd he'd take the pains to kick the

Which not at present having time to do— [you?

F. Hold, sir, for God's sake, where's th'affront to Against your worship when had S—k writ?

Or P—ge pour'd forth the torrent of his wit?

Or grant the Bard whose distich all commend

(In pow'r a servant, out of pow'r a friend)

To W—le guilty of some venial sin ;

What's that to you, who ne'er was out nor in?

The Priest whose flattery bedropp'd the Crown,

How hurt he you? he only stain'd the gown.

And how did, pray, the florid youth offend,

Whose speech you took, and gave it to a friend?

P. 'Faith, it imports not much from whom it came ;

Whoever borrow'd could not be to blame,

Since the whole House did afterwards the same.

Let courtly wits to wits afford supply,
As hog to hog in huts of Westphaly:
If one through nature's bounty, or his lord's,
Has what the frugal dirty soil affords,
From him the next receives it, thick or thin,
As pure a mess almost as it came in;
The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind:
From tail to mouth they feed and they carouse;
The last full fairly gives it to the House.

F. This filthy simile, this beastly line
Quite turns my stomach—

P. So does flattery mine;
And all your courtly Civet-cats can vent,
Perfume to you, to me is excrement.
But hear me farther—Japhet, 'tis agreed,
Writnot, and Chartres scarce could write or read,
In all the Courts of Pindus guiltless quite;
But pens can forge, my friend, that cannot
write;

And must no egg in Japhet's face be thrown,
Because the deed he forg'd was not my own?
Must never Patriot then declaim at gin,
Unless, good man! he has been fairly in?
No zealous pastor blame a failing spouse,
Without a staring reason on his brows?
And each blasphemer quite escape the rod,
Because the insult's not on man, but God?
Ask you what provocation I have had?
The strong antipathy of good to bad.
When truth or virtue an affront endures,
Th' affront is mine, my friend, and should be Mine, as a foe profess to false pretence, [yours:
Who think a Coxcomb's honor like his sense;
Mine, as a friend to ev'ry worthy mind;
And mine, as man, who feel for all mankind.

F. You're strangely proud.

P. So proud, I am no slave;
So impudent, I own myself no knave;
So odd, my country's ruin makes me grave.
Yes, I am proud, I must be proud, to see
Men not afraid of God afraid of me?
Safe from the bar, the pulpit, and the throne,
Yet touch'd and sham'd by ridicule alone.
O sacred weapon! left for truth's defence;
Sole dread of folly, vice, and insolence!
To all but Heaven-directed hands denied,
The Muse may give thee, but the gods must guide;
Rev'rent I touch thee! but with honest zeal;
To rouse the watchmen of the public weal,
To virtue's work provoke the tardy hall,
And goad the Prelate slumb'ring in his stall.
Ye tinsel insects! whom a court maintains,
That counts your beauties only by your stains,
Spin all your cobwebs o'er the eye of day!
The Muse's wing shall brush you all away:
All his Grace preaches, all his Lordship sings,
All that makes saints of queens, and gods of
kings,
All, all but truth, drops dead-born from the press,
Like the last Gazette, or the last address.

When black ambition stains a public cause,
A monarch's sword when mad vain-glory draws,

Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's scar,
Nor Boileau turn the feather to a star.

Not so, when diadem'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that break's from Virtue's
shrine,

Her priestess Muse forbids the good to die,
And opes the temple of Eternity.

There, other trophies deck the truly brave,
Than such as Anstis casts into the grave;

Far other stars than * and ** wear,
And may descend to Mordington from Stair;

(Such as on Hough's unsullied mitre shine,
Or beam, good Digby, from a heart like thine;)
Let Envy howl, while heaven's whole chorus
sings,

And bark at honor not conferr'd by kings;
Let Flatt'ry, sick'ning, see the incense rise,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the skies:
Truth guards the Poet, sanctifies the line,
And makes immortal, verse as mean as mine.

Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law;
Here, last of Britons! let your names be read:
Are none, none living? let me praise the dead;
And, for that cause which made your fathers
Fall by the votes of their degen'rate line. [shine,

F. Alas! alas! pray end what you began,
And write next winter more Essays on Man.

§ 22. IMITATIONS OF HORACE. Pope.

EPISTLE VII.

Imitated in the Manner of Dr. Swift.

'Tis true, my Lord, I gave my word
I would be with you, June the third;
Chang'd it to August; and, in short,
Have kept it—as you do at Court.

You humour me when I am sick,
Why not when I am splenetic?
In town what objects could I meet?
The shops shut up in ev'ry street,
And fun'ral black'ning all the doors,
And yet more melancholy whores:
And what a dust in ev'ry place!
And a thin Court that wants your face,
And fevers raging up and down,
And W * and H * * both in town!

“The dog-days are no more the case.”

'Tis true, but winter comes apace:
Then southward let your bard retire,
Hold out some months 'twixt sun and fire;
And you shall see, the first warm weather,
Me and the butterflies together.

My lord, your favors well I know;
'Tis with distinction you bestow;
And not to ev'ry one that comes,
Just as a Scotsman does his plums.

“Pray, take them, sir; enough's a feast:
“Eat some, and pocket up the rest.”

What, rob your boys, those pretty rogues?
“No, sir, you'll leave them to the hogs.”

Thus fools with compliments besiege ye,
Contriving never to oblige ye,

Scatter your favors on a fop,
Ingratitude's the certain crop;
And 'tis but just; I'll tell you wherefore,
You give the things you never care for.
A wise man always is or should
Be mighty ready to do good;
But makes a difference in his thought
Betwixt a guinea and a groat.

Now this I'll say; you'll find in me
A safe companion, and a free:
But if you'd have me always near—
A word, pray, in your Honor's ear:
I hope it is your resolution
To give me back my Constitution!
The sprightly wit, the lively eye,
Th' engaging smile, the gaiety,
That laugh'd down many a summer sun,
And kept you up so oft till one;
And all that voluntary vein,
As when Belinda rais'd my strain.

A weazel once made shift to slink
In at a corn-loft through a chink;
But, having amply stuff'd his skin,
Could not get out as he got in:
Which one belonging to the house
('Twas not a man, it was a mouse)
Observing, cried, "You 'scape not so;
"Lean as you came, sir, you must go."

Sir, you may spare your application,
I'm no such beast, nor his relation;
Nor one that temperance advance,
Cramm'd to the throat with ortolans:
Extremely ready to resign
All that may make me none of mine.
South-sea subscriptions take who please,
Leave me but liberty and ease.

'Twas what I said to Craggs and Child,
Who prais'd my modesty, and smil'd.
"Give me," I cried (enough for me),
"My bread, and independency!"
So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd—just as you see I do;
Near fifty, and without a wife,
I trust that sinking fund, my life.
Can I retrench? Yes, mighty well;
Shrink back to my paternal cell,
A little house, with trees a-row,
And, like its master, very low.
There died my father, no man's debtor—
And there I'll die, nor worse nor better.

To set this matter full before ye,
Our old friend Swift will tell his story:
"Harley, the nation's great support,"—
But you may read it, I stop short.

SATIRE VI.

*The first part imitated in the year 1714 by Dr.
Swift; the latter part added afterwards.*

I've often wish'd that I had clear,
For life, six hundred pounds a-year,
A handsome house to lodge a friend,
A river at my garden's end,

A terrace walk, and half a rood
Of land set out to plant a wood.

Well, now I have all this and more,
I ask not to increase my store;
'But here a grievance seems to lie,
'All this is mine but till I die;
'I can't but think 't would sound more clever,
"To me, and to my heirs for ever."
'If I ne'er got or lost a groat
'By any trick or any fault;
'And if I pray by reason's rules,
'And not like forty other fools,
'As thus: "Vouchsafe, O gracious Maker!
"To grant me this and t'other acre;
"Or if it be thy will and pleasure,
"Direct my plough to find a treasure;"
'But only what my station fits,
'And to be kept in my right wits:
'Preserve, Almighty Providence!
'Just what you gave me, competence:
'And let me in the shades compose
'Something in verse as true as prose;
'Remov'd from all th' ambitious scene,
'Nor puff'd by pride, nor sunk by spleen.'

In short, I'm perfectly content,
Let me but live on this side Trent;
Nor cross the Channel twice a-year,
To spend six months with statesmen here.

I must by all means come to town,
'Tis for the service of the crown.
"Lewis, the Dean will be of use;
"Send for him up, take no excuse."
The toil, the danger of the seas,
Great ministers ne'er think of these;
Or let it cost five hundred pound,
No matter where the money's found:
It is but so much more in debt,
And that they ne'er consider'd yet.

"Good Mr. Dean, go change your gown,
"Let my Lord know you're come to town."
I hurry me in haste away,
Not thinking it is levee day;
And find his honor in a pound,
Hemm'd by a triple circle round,
Chequer'd with ribbons blue and green;
How should I thrust myself between?
Some wag observes me much perplex'd,
And smiling, whispers to the next,
"I thought the Dean had been too proud
"To jostle here among a crowd."

Another, in a surly fit,
Tells me I have more zeal than wit:
"So eager to express your love,
"You ne'er consider whom you shove,
"But rudely press before a Duke."
I own I'm pleas'd with this rebuke,
And take it kindly meant to show
What I desire the world should know.

I get a whisper, and withdraw;
When twenty fools I never saw
Come with petitions fairly penn'd,
Desiring I would stand their friend.

This humbly offers me his case,
That begs my int'rest for a place:

A hundred other men's affairs,
 Like bees, are humming in my ears.
 "To-morrow my appeal comes on ;
 "Without your help the cause is gone—"
 The Duke expects my Lord and you,
 About some great affairs, at two—
 "Put my Lord Bolingbroke in mind,
 "To get my warrant quickly signed :
 "Consider, 'tis my first request."
 Be satisfied, I'll do my best.
 Then presently he falls to tease:
 "You may for certain, if you please ;
 "I doubt not, if his Lordship knew—
 "And, Mr. Dean, one word from you—"
 'Tis (let me see) three years and more
 (October next it will be four)
 Since Harley bid me first attend,
 And chose me for an humble friend ;
 Would take me in his coach to chat,
 And question me of this and that ;
 As, "What's o'clock," and "How's the wind?"
 "Whose chariot's that we left behind?"
 Or gravely try to read the lines
 Writ underneath the country signs ;
 Or, "Have you nothing new to-day
 "From Pope, from Parnell, or from Gay?"
 Such tattle often entertains
 My Lord and me as far as Stains ;
 As once a week we travel down
 To Windsor, and again to town,
 Where all that passes inter nos
 Might be proclaim'd at Charing-Cross.
 Yet some I know with envy swell,
 Because they see me used so well :
 "How think you of our friend the Dean ?
 "I wonder what some people mean ;
 "My Lord and he are grown so great,
 "Always together tête-a-tête :
 "What, they admire him for his jokes—
 "See but the fortune of some folks !"
 There flies about a strange report
 Of some express arriv'd at Court :
 I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,
 And catechis'd in ev'ry street.
 "You, Mr. Dean, frequent the Great ;
 "Inform us, will the Emp'ror treat ?
 "Or do the prints and papers lie ?"
 Faith, Sir, you know as much as I.
 "Ah, Doctor, how you love to jest !
 " 'Tis now no secret"—I protest
 'Tis one to me—"Then tell us, pray,
 "When are the troops to have their pay ?"
 And, though I solemnly declare
 I know no more than my Lord May'r,
 They stand amaz'd, and think me grown
 The closest mortal ever known.
 Thus, in a sea of folly tost,
 My choicest hours of life are lost ;
 Yet always wishing to retreat :
 Oh, could I see my country seat !
 There, leaning near a gentle brook,
 Sleep, or peruse some ancient book ;
 And there in sweet oblivion drown
 Those cares that haunt the court and town.

Oh charming noons, and nights divine !
 Or when I sup, or when I dine,
 My friends above, my folks below,
 Chatting and laughing all a-row,
 The beans and bacon set before 'em,
 The grace-cup serv'd with all decorum ;
 Each willing to be pleas'd, and please,
 And even the very dogs at ease !
 Here no man prates of idle things,
 How this or that Italian sings,
 A neighbour's madness, or his spouse's,
 Or what's in either of the houses :
 But something much more our concern,
 And quite a scandal not to learn :
 Which is the happier or the wiser,
 A man of merit or a miser ?
 Whether we ought to choose our friends
 For their own worth, or our own ends ?
 What good or better we may call,
 And what the very best of all ?
 Our friend Dan Prior told (you know)
 A tale extremely à propos :
 Name a town life, and in a trice
 He had a story of two mice.
 Once on a time, so runs the fable,
 A country mouse, right hospitable,
 Receiv'd a town mouse at his board,
 Just as a farmer might a lord :
 A frugal mouse upon the whole,
 Yet lov'd his friend and had a soul ;
 Knew what was handsome, and would do't,
 On just occasion, coute qui coute.
 He brought him bacon (nothing lean),
 Pudding that might have pleas'd a dean ;
 Cheese, such as men in Suffolk make,
 But wish'd it Stilton for his sake ;
 Yet, to his guest though no way sparing,
 He ate himself the rind and paring.
 Our courtier scarce would touch a bit,
 But show'd his breeding and his wit ;
 He did his best and seem'd to eat,
 And cried : "I vow you're mighty neat :
 "But, Lord ! my friend, the savage scene !
 "For God's sake, come and live with men ;
 "Consider, mice like men must die,
 "Both small and great, both you and I :
 "Then spend your life in joy and sport ;
 "This doctrine, friend, I learn'd at court."

The veriest hermit in the nation
 May yield, God knows, to strong temptation.
 Away they come, through thick and thin,
 To a tall house near Lincoln's-Inn :
 'Twas on the night of a debate,
 When all their lordships had sate late.

Behold the place where, if a poet
 Shin'd in description, he might show it ;
 Tell how the moon-beam trembling falls,
 And tips with silver all the walls ;
 Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
 Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors :
 But let it in a word be said,
 The moon was up, and men a bed,
 The napkin white, the carpet red :

The guests withdrawn had left the treat,
And down the mice sat, tête-a-tête.

Our courtier walks from dish to dish,
Tastes for his friend of fowl and fish;
Tells all their names, lays down the law,
“Que ça est bon! Ah, goutez ça!”
“That jelly’s rich, this malmesey healing;
“Pray dip your whiskers and your tail in.”

Was ever such a happy swain?
He stuffs and swills; and stuffs again.

“I’m quite asham’d—’tis mighty rude

“To eat so much—but all ’s so good!

“I have a thousand thanks to give—

“My lord alone knows how to live.”

No sooner said, but from the hall
Rush chaplain, butler, dogs and all:

“A rat! a rat! clap to the door.”—

The cat comes bouncing on the floor!

O for the heart of Homer’s mice,

Or gods, to save them in a trice!

(It was by Providence, they think,
For your damn’d stucco has no chink.)

“An’t please your Honor,” quoth the peasant,

“This same dessert is not so pleasant:

“Give me again my hollow tree,

“A crust of bread and liberty!”

ODE I. BOOK IV.

To Venus.

AGAIN? new tumults in my breast?

Ah spare me, Venus! let me, let me rest!

I am not now, alas! the man

As in the gentle reign of my queen Anne.

Ah sound no more thy soft alarms,

Nor circle sober fifty with thy charms!

Mother too fierce of dear desires!

Turn, turn, to willing hearts your wanton fires.

To number five direct your doves, [loves;

There spread round Murray all your blooming

Noble and young, who strikes the heart

With ev’ry sprightly, ev’ry decent, part;

Equal, the injur’d to defend,

To charm the mistress, or to fix the friend.

He, with a hundred arts refin’d,

Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind:

To him each rival shall submit,

Make but his riches equal to his wit.

Then shall thy form the marble grace

(Thy Grecian form), and Chloe lend the face:

His house embosom’d in the grove,

Sacred to social life and social love,

Shall glitter o’er the pendant green,

Where Thames reflects the visionary scene:

Thither the silver-sounding lyres

Shall call the smiling loves and young desires;

There ev’ry grace and Muse shall throng,

Exalt the dance, or animate the song;

There youths and nymphs, in concert gay,

Shall hail the rising, close the parting day.

With me, alas! those joys are o’er;

For me the vernal garlands bloom no more.

Adieu, fond hope of mutual fire!

The still-believing, still renew’d desire;

Adieu, the heart-expanding bowl!

And all the kind deceivers of the soul!

But why? ah tell me, ah, too dear!

Steals down my cheek th’ involuntary tear?

Why words so flowing, thoughts so free,

Stop, or turn nonsense, at one glance of thee?

Thee, drest in fancy’s airy beam,

Absent I follow through th’ extended dream;

Now, now, I cease, I clasp thy charms,

And now you burst (ah cruel!) from my arms;

And swiftly shoot along the Mall,

Or softly glide by the Canal;

Now shown by Cynthia’s silver ray,

And now on rolling waters snatch’d away.

Part of the Ninth Ode of the Fourth Book.

A FRAGMENT.

LEST you should think that verse shall die,

Which sounds the silver Thames along,

Taught on the wings of truth to fly,

Above the reach of vulgar song.

Though daring Milton sits sublime,

In Spenser native muses play;

Nor yet shall Waller yield to time,

Nor pensive Cowley’s moral lay.

Sages and chiefs long since had birth,

Ere Cæsar was, or Newton nam’d;

These rais’d new empires o’er the earth,

And those new heavens and systems fram’d.

Vain was the chief’s, the sage’s pride!

They had no poet, and they died;

In vain they schem’d, in vain they bled!

They had no poet, and are dead.

§ 23. Cooper’s Hill. Denham.

SURE there are poets which did never dream

Upon Parnassus, nor did take the stream

Of Helicon; we therefore may suppose

Those made not poets, but the poets those.

And as courts make not kings, but kings the court,

So where the Muses and their train resort,

Parnassus stands; if I can be to thee

A poet, thou Parnassus art to me.

Nor wonder, if (advantag’d in my flight

By taking wing from thy auspicious height)

Through untrac’d ways and airy paths I fly,

More boundless in my fancy than my eye;

My eye, which swift as thought contracts the space

That lies between, and first salutes the place.

Crown’d with that sacred pile, so vast, so high,

That whether ’tis a part of earth or sky

Uncertain seems, and may be thought a proud

Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud, [flight

Paul’s, the late theme of such a Muse*, whose

Has bravely reach’d and soar’d above thy height:

* Mr. Waller.

Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time,
 or fire,
 Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire;
 Secure whilst thee the best of poets sings,
 Preserv'd from ruin by the best of kings.
 Under his proud survey the city lies,
 And, like a mist beneath a hill, doth rise;
 Whose state and wealth, the business and the
 Seem at this distance but a darker cloud; [crowd,
 And is, to him who rightly things esteems,
 No other in effect than what it seems: [they run,
 Where, with like haste, though sev'ral ways
 Some to undo, and some to be undone;
 While luxury and wealth, like war and peace,
 Are each the other's ruin and increase;
 As rivers lost in seas some secret vein
 Thence reconveys, there to be lost again.
 Oh happiness of sweet retir'd content!
 To be at once secure and innocent. [dwells,
 Windsor the next (where Mars with Venus Beauty with strength) above the valley swells
 Into my eye, and doth itself present
 With such an easy and unforc'd ascent,
 That no stupendous precipice denies
 Access, no horror turns away our eyes;
 But such a rise as doth at once invite
 A pleasure and a rev'rence from the sight.
 Thy mighty master's emblem, in whose face
 Sat meekness, heighten'd with majestic grace;
 Such seems thy gentle height, made only proud
 To be the basis of that pompous load:
 Than which a nobler weight no mountain bears,
 But Atlas only which supports their spheres.
 When nature's hand this ground did thus advance,
 'Twas guided by a wiser Pow'r than Chance;
 Mark'd out for such an use, as if 'twere meant
 To invite the builder, and his choice prevent.
 Nor can we call it choice, when what we choose
 Folly or blindness only could refuse.
 A crown of such majestic tow'rs doth grace
 The god's great mother, when her heav'nly race
 Do homage to her; yet she cannot boast,
 Among that num'rous and celestial host,
 More heroes than can Windsor; nor doth Fame's
 Immortal book record more noble names.
 Not to look back so far, to whom this isle
 Owes the first glory of so brave a pile,
 Whether to Cæsar, Albanact, or Brute,
 The British Arthur, or the Danish Cnut,
 (Though this of old no less contest did move,
 Than when for Homer's birth seven cities strove;
 Like him in birth, thou shouldst be like in
 fame,
 As thine his fate, if mine had been his flame;) )
 But whosoe'er it was, Nature design'd
 First a brave place, and then as brave a mind.
 Not to recount those sev'ral kings, to whom
 It gave a cradle, or to whom a tomb;
 But thee, great Edward, and thy greater son*,
 (The lilies which his father wore he won,)

* Edward III. and the Black Prince.

† The Kings of France and Scotland.

And thy Bellona†, who the consort came
 Not only to thy bed, but to thy fame.
 She to thy triumph led one captive king†,
 And brought that son which did the second
 bring.†
 Then didst thou found that order (whether love
 Or victory thy royal thoughts did move,
 Each was a noble cause, and nothing less Than the design has been the great success),
 Which foreign kings and emperors esteem
 The second honor to their diadem.
 Had thy great destiny but given thee skill
 To know, as well as pow'r to act, her will;
 That from those kings, who then thy captives
 In after-times should spring a royal pair, [were,
 Who should possess all that thy mighty pow'r,
 Or thy desires more mighty, did devour;
 To whom their better fate reserves whate'er
 The victor hopes for, or the vanquish'd fear;
 That blood which thou and thy great grand-
 sire shed,
 And all that since these sister nations bled,
 Had been unspilt, had happy Edward known
 That all the blood he spilt had been his own.
 When he that patron chose, in whom are join'd
 Soldier and martyr, and his arms confin'd
 Within the azure circle, he did seem
 But to foretel and prophesy of him
 Who to his realms that azure round hath join'd,
 Which Nature for their bound at first design'd;
 That bound to which the world's extremest ends,
 Endless itself, its liquid arms extends.
 Nor doth he need those emblems which we paint,
 But is himself the soldier and the saint. [praise;
 Here should my wonder dwell, and here my
 But my fix'd thoughts my wand'ring eye betrays,
 Viewing a neighb'ring hill, whose top of late
 A chapel crown'd, till in the common fate
 Th'adjoining abbey fell (may no such storm
 Fall on our times, where ruin must reform!)
 Tell me, my Muse, what monstrous dire offence,
 What crime, could any Christian king incense
 To such a rage? Was't luxury, or lust?
 Was he so temperate, so chaste, so just?
 Were these their crimes? They were his own much more.
 But wealth is crime enough to him that's poor;
 Who, having spent the treasure of his crown,
 Condemns their luxury to feed his own.
 And yet this act to varnish o'er the shame
 Of sacrilege, must bear Devotion's name,
 No crime so bold but would be understood
 A real, or at least a seeming, good:
 Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name,
 And, free from conscience, is a slave to fame:
 Thus he the church at once protects and spoils:
 But princes' swords are sharper than their styles.
 And thus to th' ages past he makes amends,
 Their charity destroys, their faith defends.
 Then did religion in a lazy cell,
 In empty airy contemplations dwell;

† Queen Philippa.

And, like the block, unmoved lay; but ours,
 As much too active, like the stork devours.
 Is there no temperate region can be known
 Betwixt their frigid and our torrid zone?
 Could we not wake from that lethargic dream,
 But to be restless in a worse extreme?
 And for that lethargy was there no cure,
 But to be cast into a calenture?
 Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance
 So far, to make us wish for ignorance;
 And rather in the dark to grope our way,
 Than led by a false guide to err by day?
 Who sees these dismal heaps, but would demand
 What barbarous invader sack'd the land?
 But when he hears, no Goth, no Turk did bring
 This desolation, but a Christian king;
 When nothing but the name of zeal appears
 'Twixt our best actions and the worst of theirs;
 What does he think our sacrilege would spare,
 When such th' effects of our devotions are?
 Parting from thence 'twixt anger, shame, and
 fear,
 Those for what's past, and this for what's too
 My eye, descending from the hill, surveys [near,
 Where Thames among the wanton valleys strays.
 Thames, the most lov'd of all the Ocean's sons
 By his old sire, to his embraces runs;
 Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
 Like mortal life to meet eternity. [hold
 Though with those streams he no resemblance
 Whose foam is amber, and their gravel gold,
 His genuine and less guilty wealth t' explore,
 Search not his bottom, but survey his shore,
 O'er which he kindly spreads his spacious wing,
 And hatches plenty for th' ensuing spring;
 Nor then destroys it with too fond a stay,
 Like mothers who their infants overlay;
 Nor with a sudden and impetuous wave,
 Like profuse kings, resumes the wealth he gave.
 No unexpected inundations spoil [toil:
 The mower's hopes, or mock the plowman's
 But godlike his unwearied bounty flows;
 First loves to do, then loves the good he does.
 Nor are his blessings to his banks confin'd,
 But free and common, as the sea or wind;
 When he, to boast or to disperse his stores,
 Full of the tributes of his grateful shores,
 Visits the world, and in his flying tow'rs
 Brings home to us, and makes both Indies ours;
 Finds wealth where 'tis, bestows it where it wants;
 Cities in deserts, woods in cities, plants.
 So that to us, no thing, no place is strange,
 While his fair bosom is the world's exchange.
 O could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
 My great example, as it is my theme!
 Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;
 Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full.
 Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast,
 Whose fame in thine, like lesser current, 's lost.
 Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes,
 To shine among the stars*, and bathe the gods.

* The Forest.

Here Nature, whether more intent to please
 Us for herself, with strange varieties,
 (For things of wonder give no less delight
 To the wise Maker's than beholder's sight:
 Though these delights from sev'ral causes move;
 For so our children, thus our friends we love,)
 Wisely she knew, the harmony of things,
 As well as that of sounds, from discord springs.
 Such was the discord which did first disperse
 Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
 While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
 All that we have, and that we are, subsists.
 While the steep horrid roughness of the wood
 Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood.
 Such huge extremes when nature doth unite,
 Wonder from thence results, from thence de-
 light.

The stream is so transparent, pure, and clear,
 That had the self-enamour'd youth gaz'd here,
 So fatally deceiv'd he had not been,
 While he the bottom, not his face, had seen.
 But his proud head the airy mountain hides
 Among the clouds; his shoulders and his sides
 A shady mantle clothes; his curled brows
 Frown on the gentle stream, which calmly
 flows;

While winds and storms his lofty forehead beat,
 The common fate of all that's high or great.
 Low at his foot a spacious plain is plac'd,
 Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd;
 Which shade and shelter from the hill derives,
 While the kind river health and beauty gives;
 And in the mixture of all these appears
 Variety, which all the rest endears.
 This scene had some bold Greek or British bard
 Beheld of old, what stories had we heard
 Of fairies, satyrs, and the nymphs their dames,
 Their feasts, their revels, and their am'rous flames!

'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
 All but a quick poetic sight escape.
 There Faunus and Sylvanus keep their courts,
 And thither all the horned host resorts
 To graze the ranker mead, that noble herd,
 On whose sublime and shady fronts is rear'd
 Nature's great master-piece; to show how soon
 Great things are made, but sooner are undone.
 Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
 Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
 Attended to the chace by all the flow'r
 Of youth, whose hopes a noble prey devour;
 Pleasure with praise and danger they would buy,
 And wish a foe that would not only fly.
 The stag, now conscious of his fatal growth,
 At once indulgent to his fear and sloth,
 To some dark covert his retreat had made,
 Where nor man's eyes nor heaven's should invade

His soft repose; when th' unexpected sound
 Of dogs, and men, his wakeful ear does wound:
 Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
 Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
 Had given this false alarm, but straight his view
 Confirms, that more than all his fears are true.

Betray'd in all his strengths, the wood beset ;
 All instruments, all arts of ruin met ;
 He calls to mind his strength, and then his speed,
 His winged heels, and then his armed head :
 With these t'avoid, with that his fate to
 meet :

But fear prevails, and bids him trust his feet.
 So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye
 Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry ;
 Exulting, till he finds their nobler sense
 Their disproportion'd speed doth recompense ;
 Then curses his conspiring feet, whose scent
 Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent.
 Then tries his friends ; among the baser herd,
 Where he so lately was obey'd and fear'd,
 His safety seeks ; the herd, unkindly wise,
 Or chases him from thence, or from him flies ;
 Like a declining statesman, left forlorn
 To his friends' pity, and pursuers' scorn,
 With shame remembers, while himself was one
 Of the same herd, himself the same had done.
 Thence to the coverts and the conscious groves,
 The scene of his past triumphs and his loves ;
 Sadly surveying where he rang'd alone
 Prince of the soil, and all the herd his own ;
 And, like a bold knight-errant, did proclaim
 Combat to all, and bore away the dame ;
 And taught the woods to echo to the stream
 His dreadful challenge and his clashing beam :
 Yet faintly now declines the fatal strife,
 So much his love was dearer than his life.
 Now ev'ry leaf and ev'ry moving breath
 Presents a foe, and ev'ry foe a death.
 Wearied, forsaken, and pursued, at last
 All safety in despair of safety plac'd,
 Courage he thence resumes, resolv'd to bear
 All their assaults, since 'tis in vain to fear.
 And now, too late, he wishes for the fight
 That strength he wasted in ignoble flight :
 But when he sees the eager chace renew'd,
 Himself by dogs, the dogs by men pursu'd,
 He straight revokes his bold resolve, and more
 Repents his courage than his fear before ;
 Finds that uncertain ways unsafest are,
 And doubt a greater mischief than despair.
 Then to the stream, when neither friends nor
 force,
 Nor speed, nor art avail, he shapes his course ;
 Thinks not their rage so desp'rate to essay
 An element more merciless than they.
 But fearless they pursue, nor can the flood Quench their dire thirst ; alas, they thirst for blood !

So towards a ship the oar-finn'd galleys ply,
 Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly,
 Stands but to fall reveng'd on those that dare
 Tempt the last fury of extreme despair.
 So fares the stag among th' enraged hounds, Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds ;
 And as a hero, whom his baser foes
 In troops surround, now these assaults, now those ;
 Though prodigal of life, disdains to die
 By common hands ; but if he can descry

Some nobler foe approach, to him he calls,
 And begs his fate, and then contented falls :
 So when the king a mortal shaft lets fly
 From his unerring hand, then glad to die,
 Proud of the wound, to it resigns his blood,
 And stains the crystal with a purple flood.
 This a more innocent and happy chace,
 Than when of old, but in the self-same place,
 Fair Liberty pursued*, and meant a prey
 To lawless pow'r, here turn'd, and stood at bay.
 When in that remedy all hope was plac'd
 Which was, or should have been at least, the last,
 Here was that charter seal'd, wherein the crown
 All marks of arbitrary pow'r lays down :
 Tyrant and slave, those names of hate and fear,
 The happier style of king and subject bear :
 Happy, when both to the same centre move,
 When kings give liberty, and subjects love.
 Therefore not long in force this charter stood ;
 Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood.
 The subjects arm'd, the more their princes gave,
 Th' advantage only took the more to crave ;
 Till kings by giving give themselves away,
 And e'en that pow'r that should deny betray.
 " Who gives constrain'd, but his own fear
 reviles ;

" Not thank'd, but scorn'd ; nor are they gifts,
 but spoils." [hold,
 Thus kings, by grasping more than they could
 First made their subjects by oppression bold ;
 And pop'lar sway, by forcing kings to give
 More than was fit for subjects to receive,
 Ran to the same extremes : and one excess
 Made both, by striving to be greater, less.
 When a calm river, rais'd with sudden rains,
 Or snows dissolv'd, o'erflows th' adjoining plains,
 The husbandmen with high-rais'd banks secure
 Their greedy hopes ; and this he can endure.
 But if with bays and dams they strive to force
 His channel to a new or narrow course,
 No longer then within his banks he dwells ;
 First to a torrent, then a deluge swells ;
 Stronger and fiercer by restraint he roars,
 And knows no bound, but makes his pow'r his shores.

§ 24. On Mr. Abraham Cowley's Death and Burial amongst the Ancient Poets.
 Denham.

OLD Chaucer, like the morning star,
 To us discovers day from far ;
 His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd
 Which our dark nation long involv'd ;
 But, he descending to the shades,
 Darkness again the age invades.
 Next (like Aurora) Spenser rose,
 Whose purple blush the day foreshows ;
 The other three with his own fires
 Phœbus, the poet's god, inspires ;
 By Shakspeare's, Jonson's, Fletcher's lines,
 Our stage's lustre Rome outshines ;
 These poets near our princes sleep,
 And in one grave our mansion keep.
 * Runny-mead.

They liv'd to see so many days,
 Till time had blasted all their bays;
 But cursed be the fatal hour
 That pluck'd the fairest, sweetest flow'r
 That in the muse's garden grew,
 And amongst wither'd laurels threw!
 Time, which made their fame outlive,
 To Cowley scarce did ripeness give.
 Old mother Wit and Nature gave Shakspeare and Fletcher all they have;
 In Spenser, and in Jonson, Art
 Of slower Nature got the start;
 But both in him so equal are,
 None knows which bears the happiest share.
 To him no author was unknown,
 Yet what he wrote was all his own;
 He melted not the ancient gold,
 Nor, with Ben Jonson, did make bold
 To plunder all the Roman stores
 Of poets and of orators:
 Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
 He did not steal, but emulate!
 And when he would like them appear,
 Their garb, but not their clothes, did wear:
 He not from Rome alone, but Greece,
 Like Jason, brought the golden fleece;
 To him that language (though to none
 Of th' others) as his own was known.
 On a stiff gale (as Flaccus sings)
 The Theban swan extends his wings:
 When through th' ethereal clouds he flies,
 To the same pitch our swan doth rise;
 Old Pindar's flights by him are reach'd,
 When on that gale his wings are stretch'd:
 His fancy and his judgement such,
 Each to the other seem'd too much;
 His severe judgement (giving law)
 His modest fancy kept in awe;
 As rigid husbands jealous are,
 When they believe their wives too fair.
 His English streams so pure did flow,
 As all that saw and tasted know;
 But for his Latin vein, so clear,
 Strong, full, and high, it doth appear,
 That, were immortal Virgil here,
 Him for his judge he would not fear;
 Of that great portraiture, so true
 A copy pencil never drew.
 My muse her song had ended here,
 But both their genii straight appear;
 Joy and amazement her did strike,
 Two twins she never saw so like.
 'Twas taught by wise Pythagoras,
 One soul might through more bodies pass:
 Seeing such transmigration there,
 She thought it not a fable here;
 Such a resemblance of all parts,
 Life, death, age, fortune, nature, arts:
 Then lights her torch at theirs, to tell,
 And show the world this parallel:
 Fix'd and contemplative their looks,
 Still turning over nature's books;
 Their works chaste, moral, and divine,
 Where profit and delight combine;

They, gilding dirt, in noble verse
 Rustic philosophy rehearse.
 When heroes, gods, or godlike kings
 They praise, on their exalted wings
 To the celestial orbs they climb,
 And with th' harmonious spheres keep time:
 Nor did their actions fall behind
 Their words, but with like candor shin'd;
 Each drew fair characters, yet none
 Of those they feign'd excels their own.
 Both by two generous princes lov'd,
 Who knew, and judg'd what they approv'd;
 Yet having each the same desire,
 Both from the busy throng retire.
 Their bodies, to their minds resign'd,
 Car'd not to propagate their kind;
 Yet though both fell before their hour,
 Time on their offspring hath no pow'r;
 Nor fire nor fate their bays shall blast,
 Nor death's dark veil their day o'ercast.

§ 25. Absalom and Achitophel. Dryden.

In pious times, ere priestcraft did begin,
 Before polygamy was made a sin;
 When man on many multiplied his kind,
 Ere one to one was cursedly confin'd!
 When nature prompted, and no law denied
 Promiscuous use of concubine and bride;
 Then Israel's monarch, after Heaven's own
 heart,
 His vigorous warmth did variously impart
 To wives and slaves; and wide as his command,
 Scatter'd his Maker's image through the land.
 Michal, of royal blood, the crown did wear;
 A soil ungrateful to the tiller's care:
 Not so the rest; for several mothers bore
 To godlike David several sons before:
 But since, like slaves, his bed they did ascend,
 No true succession could their seed attend.
 Of all the numerous progeny, was none
 So beautiful, so brave, as Absalom:
 Whether inspired by some diviner lust,
 His father got him with a greater gust;
 Or that his conscious destiny made way,
 By manly beauty, to imperial sway.
 Early in foreign fields he won renown,
 With kings and states allied to Israel's crown:
 In peace the thoughts of war he could remove,
 And seem'd as he were only born for love.
 Whate'er he did was done with so much ease,
 In him alone 'twas natural to please:
 His motions all accompanied with grace;
 And paradise was open'd in his face.
 With secret joy indulgent David view'd
 His youthful image in his son renew'd:
 To all his wishes nothing he denied;
 And made the charming Annabel his bride.
 What faults he had (for who from faults is free?)
 His father could not, or he would not see.
 Some warm excesses which the law forbore,
 Were construed youth that purg'd by boiling o'er;
 And Ammon's murder, by a specious name,
 Was call'd a just revenge for injur'd fame.

Thus prais'd and lov'd the noble youth remain'd,
While David undisturb'd in Sion reign'd ;
But life can never be sincerely blest :
Heaven punishes the bad, and proves the best.
The Jews, a headstrong, moody, murmur'ing

race,
As ever tried th' extent and stretch of grace ;
God's pamper'd people, whom, debauched with ease,

No king could govern, nor no god could please.
Gods they had tried of every shape and size,
That goldsmiths could produce, or priests devise :
These Adam-wits, too fortunately free,
Began to dream they wanted liberty ;

And when no rule, no precedent was found
Of men by laws less circumscrib'd and bound,
They led their wild desires to woods and caves,
And thought that all but savages were slaves.
They who, when Saul was dead, without a blow,
Made foolish Ishbosheth the crown forego ;
Who banish'd David did from Hebron bring,
And with a gen'ral shout proclaim'd him king ;
Those very Jews, who at their very best
Their humor more than loyalty express'd,
Now wonder'd why so long they had obey'd
An idol monarch which their hands had made ;
Thought they might ruin him they could create,
Or melt him to that golden calf of state.

But these were random bolts : no form'd design,
Nor int'rest made the factious crowd to join :
The sober part of Israel, free from stain,
Well knew the value of a peaceful reign ;
And looking backward with a wise affright,
Saw seams of wounds dishonest to the sight ;
In contemplation of whose ugly scars,
They curs'd the memory of civil wars.

The moderate sort of men thus qualified,
Inclin'd the balance to the better side :
And David's mildness manag'd it so well,
The bad found no occasion to rebel.
But when to sin our bias'd nature leans,
The careful devil is still at hand with means ;
And providently pimps for ill desires :
The good old cause reviv'd a plot requires.
Plots true or false are necessary things
To raise up commonwealths, and ruin kings.

Th' inhabitants of old Jerusalem——
Were Jebusites ; the town so call'd from them ;
And theirs the native right——
But when the chosen people grew more strong,
The rightful cause at length became the wrong ;
And ev'ry loss the men of Jebus bore,
They still were thought God's enemies the more.
Thus worn or weaken'd, well or ill content,
Submit they must to David's government ;
Impoverish'd, and deprived of all command,
Their taxes doubled as they lost their land ;
And what was harder yet to flesh and blood,
Their gods disgrac'd, and burnt like common

wood.
This set the heathen priesthood in a flame ;
For priests of all religions are the same.
Of whatsoe'er descent their godhead be,
Stock, stone, or other homely pedigree,

In his defence his servants are as bold
As if he had been born of beaten gold.
The Jewish rabbins, though their enemies,
In this conclude them honest men and wise :
For 'twas their duty, all the learned think,
T' espouse his cause by whom they eat and drink.
From hence began that plot, the nation's curse,
Bad in itself, but represented worse ;
Rais'd in extremes, and in extremes decried ;
With oaths affirm'd, with dying vows denied.
Not weigh'd nor winnow'd by the multitude ;
But swallow'd in the mass, unchew'd and crude.
Some truth there was, but dash'd and brew'd with lies ;

To please the fools, and puzzle all the wise.
Succeeding times did equal folly call,
Believing nothing, or believing all.
Th' Egyptian rites the Jebusites embrac'd ;
Where gods were recommended by their taste.
Such savory deities must needs be good,
As serv'd at once for worship and for food.
By force they could not introduce these gods ;
For ten to one in former days was odds ;
So fraud was us'd, the sacrificer's trade :
Fools are more hard to conquer than persuade.
Their busy teachers mingled with the Jews,
And rak'd for converts ev'n the court and stews :
Which Hebrew priests the more unkindly took,
Because the fleece accompanies the flock.
Some thought they God's anointed meant to slay
By guns, invented since full many a day :
Our author swears it not ; but who can know
How far the devil and Jebusites may go ?
This plot, which fail'd for want of common sense,

Had yet a deep and dangerous consequence :
For as, when raging fevers boil the blood,
The standing lake soon floats into a flood,
And ev'ry hostile humor, which before
Slept quiet in its channel, bubbles o'er ;
So sev'ral factions, from this first ferment,
Work up to foam, and threat the government.
Some by their friends, more by themselves,
thought wise,
Oppos'd the pow'r to which they could not rise.
Some had in courts been great ; and thrown from thence

Like fiends, were harden'd in impenitence.
Some, by their monarch's fatal mercy, grown
From pardon'd rebels kinsmen to the throne,
Were rais'd in pow'r and public office high ;
Strong bands, if bands ungrateful men could tie.

Of these the false Achitophel was first ;
A name to all succeeding ages curst :
For close designs and crooked counsels fit ;
Sagacious, bold, and turbulent of wit ;
Restless, unfix'd in principles and place ;
In pow'r unpleas'd, impatient of disgrace :
A fiery soul, which, working out its way,
Fretted the pigmy-body to decay,
And o'er-inform'd the tenement of clay.
A daring pilot in extremity ;
Pleas'd with the danger when the waves went

high,

He sought the storms ; but, for a calm unfit,
Would steer too nigh the sands to boast his wit.
Great wits are sure to madness near allied,
And thin partitions do their bounds divide ;
Else why should he, with wealth and honor
blest,

Refuse his age the needful hours of rest ?
Punish a body which he could not please ;
Bankrupt of life, yet prodigal of ease ?
And all to leave what with his toil he won
To that unfeather'd two-legg'd thing, a son ;
Got, while his soul did huddled notions try ;
And born a shapeless lump, like anarchy.
In friendship false, implacable in hate ;
Resolv'd to ruin or to rule the state :
To compass this, the triple bond he broke ;
The pillars of the public safety shook ;
And fitted Israel for a foreign yoke :
Then, seiz'd with fear, yet still affecting fame,
Usurp'd a patriot's all-atoning name.
So easy still it proves, in factious times,
With public zeal to cancel private crimes,
How safe is treason, and how sacred ill,
Where none can sin against the people's will !
Where crowds can wink, and no offence be
known,

Since in another's guilt they find their own !
Yet fame deserv'd no enemy can grudge :
The statesman we abhor, but praise the judge.
In Israel's courts ne'er sat an Abethdin
With more discerning eyes, or hands more
clean,

Unbrib'd, unsought, the wretched to redress,
Swift of dispatch, and easy of access.
Oh ! had he been content to serve the crown
With virtues only proper to the gown ;
Or had the rankness of the soil been freed
From cockle, that oppress'd the noble seed ;
David for him his tuneful harp had strung,
And heaven had wanted one immortal song.
But wild ambition loves to slide, not stand :
And fortune's ice prefers to virtue's land.
Achitophel, grown weary to possess
A lawful fame, and lazy happiness,
Disdain'd the golden fruit to gather free,
And lent the crowd his arm to shake the tree.
Now, manifest of crimes contriv'd long since,
He stood at bold defiance with his prince ;
Held up the buckler of the people's cause Against the crown, and sculk'd behind the laws.

The wish'd occasion of the plot he takes ;
Some circumstances finds, but more he makes :
By buzzing emissaries fills the ears
Of list'ning crowds with jealousies and fears
Of arbitrary counsels brought to light,
And proves the King himself a Jebusite.
Weak arguments ! which yet, he knew full well,
Were strong with people easy to rebel.
For, govern'd by the moon, the giddy Jews
Tread the same track when she the prime re-
news ;

And once in twenty years, their scribes record,
By natural instinct they change their lord.

Achitophel still wants a chief, and none
Was found so fit as warlike Absalom.
Not that he wish'd his greatness to create,
For politicians neither love nor hate :
But, for he knew his title not allow'd
Would keep him still depending on the crowd :
That kingly pow'r, thus ebbing out, might be Drawn to the dregs of a democracy.

Him he attempts with studied arts to please,
And sheds his venom in such words as these :
Auspicious prince ! at whose nativity
Some royal planet rul'd the southern sky ;
Thy longing country's darling and desire ;
Their cloudy pillar and their guardian fire ;
Their second Moses, whose extended wand
Divides the seas, and shows the promis'd land ;
Whose dawning day, in ev'ry distant age,
Has exercis'd the sacred prophet's rage ;
The people's pray'r, the glad diviner's theme,
The young men's vision, and the old men's dream !

Thee, Saviour, thee the nation's vows confess,
And, never satisfied with seeing, bless :
Swift unbespoken pomps thy steps proclaim,
And stammering babes are taught to lisp thy
name.

How long wilt thou the gen'ral joy detain,
Starve and defraud the people of thy reign ;
Content ingloriously to pass thy days,
Like one of virtue's fools that feed on praise ;
Till thy fresh glories, which now shine so
bright,

Grow stale, and tarnish with our daily sight ?
Believe me, royal youth, thy fruit must be
Or gather'd ripe, or rot upon the tree.
Heaven has to all allotted, soon or late,
Some lucky revolution of their fate ;
Whose motions if we watch and guide with
skill,

For human good depends on human will,
Our fortune rolls as from a smooth descent,
And from the first impression takes the bent :
But if unseiz'd, she glides away like wind,
And leaves repenting folly far behind.
Now, now she meets you with a glorious prize,
And spreads her locks before you as she flies.
Had thus old David, from whose loins you
spring,

Not dar'd when fortune call'd him to be king,
At Gath an exile he might still remain,
And Heaven's anointing oil had been in vain.
Let his successful youth your hopes engage ;
But shun the example of declining age :
Behold him setting in his western skies,
The shadows length'ning as the vapors rise.
He is not now, as when on Jordan's sand
The joyful people throng'd to see him land, Covering the beach, and blackening all the strand ;

But, like the prince of angels, from his height,
Come tumbling downward with diminish'd
light ;

Betray'd by one poor plot to public scorn ;
Our only blessing since his curs'd return :

Those heaps of people which one sheaf did bind,
Blown off and scatter'd by a puff of wind,
What strength can he to your designs oppose,
Naked of friends, and round beset with foes?
If Pharaoh's doubtful succour he should use,
A foreign aid would more incense the Jews:
Proud Egypt would dissembled friendship bring;
Foment the war, but not support the king:
Nor would the royal party ere unite
With Pharaoh's arms to assist the Jebusite;
Or, if they should, their int'rest soon would
break,

And with such odious aid make David weak.
All sorts of men, by my successful arts,
Abhorring kings, estrange their alter'd hearts
From David's rule; and 'tis their gen'ral cry,
Religion, commonwealth, and liberty.
If you, as champion of the public good,
Add to their arms a chief of royal blood,
What may not Israel hope, and what applause
Might such a gen'ral gain by such a cause?
Not barren praise alone, that gaudy flow'r,
Fair only to the sight, but solid pow'r;
And nobler is a limited command,
Given by the love of all your native land,
Than a successive title, long and dark,
Drawn from the mouldy rolls of Noah's ark.

What cannot praise effect in mighty minds,
When flatt'ry soothes, and when ambition blinds?

Desire of pow'r, on earth a vicious weed,
Yet sprung from high, is of celestial seed:
In God 'tis glory; and when men aspire,
'Tis but a spark too much of heavenly fire.
Th' ambitious youth, too covetous of fame,
Too full of angel's metal in his frame,
Unwarily was led from virtue's ways, [praise.
Made drunk with honor, and debauch'd with Half loth, and half consenting to the ill,
For royal blood within him struggled still,
He thus replied:—And what pretence have I
To take up arms for public liberty?
My father governs with unquestion'd right;
The faith's defender, and mankind's delight:
Good, gracious, just, observant of the laws;
And Heaven by wonders has espous'd his cause.
Whom has he wrong'd in all his peaceful reign?
Who sues for justice to his throne in vain?
What millions has he pardon'd of his foes,
Whom just revenge did to his wrath expose!
Mild, easy, humble, studious of our good;
Inclin'd to mercy, and averse from blood.
If mildness ill with stubborn Israel suit,
His crime is God's belov'd attribute.
What could he gain his people to betray,
Or change his right for arbitrary sway?
Let haughty Pharaoh curse with such a reign
His fruitful Nile, and yoke a servile train.
If David's rule Jerusalem displease,
The dog-star heats their brains to this disease.
Why then should I, encouraging the bad,
Turn rebel, and run popularly mad?
Were he the tyrant, who by lawless might
Oppress'd the Jews, and rais'd the Jebusite,

Well might I mourn; but nature's holy bands
Would curb my spirits, and restrain my hands:
The people might assert their liberty;
But what was right in them were crime in me.
His favor leaves me nothing to require,
Prevents my wishes, and outruns desire;
What more can I expect while David lives?
All but his kingly diadem he gives:
And that—but here he paus'd; then, sighing,
said—

Is justly destin'd for a worthier head.
For when my father from his toils shall rest,
And late augment the number of the blest,
His lawful issue shall the throne ascend,
Or the collateral line, where that shall end.
His brother, though oppress'd with vulgar spite,
Yet dauntless, and secure of native right,
Of ev'ry royal virtue stands possess'd;
Still dear to all the bravest and the best.
His courage foes, his friends his truth proclaim,
His loyalty the king, the world his fame.
His mercy e'en th' offending crowd will find;
For sure he comes of a forgiving kind.
Why should I then repine at Heaven's decree,
Which gives me no pretence to royalty?
Yet, oh that fate, propitiously inclin'd,
Had rais'd my birth, or had debas'd my mind!
To my large soul not all her treasure lent,
And then betray'd it to a mean descent!
I find, I find my mounting spirits bold,
And David's part disdains my mother's mould.
Why am I scanted by a niggard birth?
My soul disclaims the kindred of her earth;
And, made for empire, whispers me within,
Desire of greatness is a godlike sin.

Him staggering so when hell's dire agent found,
While fainting virtue scarce maintain'd her
ground,

He pours fresh forces in, and thus replies:
Th' eternal God, supremely good and wise,
Imparts not these prodigious gifts in vain:
What wonders are reserv'd, to bless your reign!
Against your will your arguments have shown,
Such virtue's only giv'n to guide a throne.
Not that your father's mildness I contemn;
But manly force becomes the diadem.
'Tis true, he grants the people all they crave;
And more perhaps than subjects ought to have:

For lavish grants suppose a monarch tame,
And more his goodness than his wit proclaim.
But when should people strive their bonds to break,

If not when kings are negligent or weak?
Let him give on till he can give no more,
The thrifty sanhedrim shall keep him poor:
And ev'ry shekel which he can receive
Shall cost a limb of his prerogative.
To ply him with new plots shall be my care,
Or plunge him deep in some expensive war;
Which when his treasure can no more supply,
He must, with the remains of kingship, buy.
His faithful friends, his jealousies and fears
Call Jebusites, and Pharaoh's pensioners;

Whom when our fury from his aid has torn,
He shall be naked left to public scorn.
The next successor, whom I fear and hate,
My arts have made obnoxious to the state;
Turn'd all his virtues to his overthrow,
And gain'd our elders to pronounce a foe.
His right, for sums of necessary gold,
Shall first be pawn'd, and afterwards be sold;
Till time shall ever-wanting David draw
To pass your doubtful title into law:
If not, the people have a right supreme
To make their kings; for kings are made for them.

All empire is no more than pow'r in trust,
Which, when resum'd, can be no longer just.
Succession, for the general good design'd,
In its own wrong a nation cannot bind;
If alt'ring that the people can relieve,
Better one suffer than the nation grieve.
The Jews well know their pow'r: ere Saul
they chose,

God was their king, and God they durst depose.
Urge now your piety, your filial name,
A father's right, and fear of future fame;
The public good, that universal call,
To which e'en Heaven submitted, answers all.
Nor let his love enchant your gen'rous mind;
'Tis nature's trick to propagate her kind.
Our fond begetters, who would never die,
Love but themselves in their posterity.
Or let his kindness by th' effects be tried,
Or let him lay his vain pretence aside.
God said, he lov'd your father; could he bring
A better proof than to anoint him king?
It surely show'd, he lov'd the shepherd well,
Who gave so fair a flock as Israel.
Would David have you thought his darling son,
What means he then to alienate the crown?
The name of Godly he may blush to bear;
Is't after God's own heart to cheat his heir?
He to his brother gives supreme command,
To you a legacy of barren land;
Perhaps th' old harp on which he thrumps his
lays,

Or some dull Hebrew ballad in your praise.
Then the next heir, a prince severe and wise,
Already looks on you with jealous eyes;
Sees through the thin disguises of your arts,
And marks your progress in the people's hearts;
Though now his mighty soul his grief contains;
He meditates revenge who least complains:
And like a lion, slumb'ring in the way,
Or sleep dissembling, while he waits his prey,
His fearless foes within his distance draws,
Constrains his roaring, and contracts his paws;
Till at the last, his time for fury found,
He shoots with sudden vengeance from the
ground;

The prostrate vulgar passes o'er and spares,
But with a lordly rage his hunters tears.
Your case no tame expedients will afford:
Resolve on death, or conquest by the sword,
Which for no less a stake than life you draw;
And self-defence is nature's eldest law.

Leave the warm people no considering time;
For then rebellion may be thought a crime.
Avail yourself of what occasion gives,
But try your title while your father lives:
And, that your arms may have a fair pretence,
Proclaim you take them in the king's defence;
Whose sacred life each moment would expose
To plots, from seeming friends and secret foes.
And, who can sound the depth of David's soul?
Perhaps his fear his kindness may control.
He fears his brother, though he loves his son,
For plighted vows too late to be undone.
If so, by force he wishes to be gain'd:
Like women's lechery to seem constrain'd.
Doubt not: but, when he most affects the frown,
Commit a pleasing rape upon the crown.
Secure his person to secure your cause:
They who possess the prince possess the laws.

He said: and this advice above the rest,
With Absalom's mild nature suited best;
Unblam'd of life, ambition set aside,
Not stain'd with cruelty, nor puff'd with pride.
How happy had he been, if destiny
Had higher plac'd his birth, or not so high!
His kingly virtues might have claim'd a throne,
And bless'd all other countries but his own.
But charming greatness since so few refuse,
'Tis juster to lament him than accuse.
Strong were his hopes a rival to remove,
With blandishments to gain the public love:
To head the faction while their zeal was hot,
And popularly prosecute the plot,
To further this, Achitophel unites
The malcontents of all the Israelites;
Whose diff'ring parties he could wisely join,
For sev'ral ends, to serve the same design.
The best, and of the princes some were such,
Who thought the pow'r of monarchy too much;
Mistaken men, and patriots in their hearts;
Not wicked, but seduc'd by impious arts:
By these the springs of property were bent,
And wound so high, they crack'd the government.
The next for int'rest sought t' embroil the state,
To sell their duty at a dearer rate,
And make their Jewish markets of the throne;
Pretending public good to serve their own.
Others thought kings an useless, heavy load,
Who cost too much, and did too little good.
These were for laying honest David by,
On principles of pure good husbandry.
With them join'd all th' haranguers of the throng,
That thought to get preferment by the tongue.
Who follow next, a double danger bring,
Not only hating David, but the king.
The Solymæan rout; well vers'd of old
In godly faction, and in treason bold;
Cow'ring and quaking at a conqueror's sword,
But lofty to a lawful prince restor'd;
Saw with disdain an Ethnic plot begun,
And scorn'd by Jebusites to be outdone.
Hot Levites headed these; who pull'd before
From th' ark, which in the judges' days they bore.
Resum'd their cant, and, with a zealous cry,
Pursu'd their old belov'd theocracy:

When sanhedrim and priest enslav'd the nation,
 And justified their spoils by inspiration :
 For who so fit to reign as Aaron's race,
 If once dominion they could found in grace ?
 These led the pack, though not of surest scent,
 Yet deepest mouth'd against the government.
 A num'rous host of dreaming saints succeed,
 Of the true old enthusiastic breed ;
 'Gainst form and order they their pow'r employ,
 Nothing to build, and all things to destroy.
 But far more num'rous was the herd of such
 Who think too little, and who talk too much ;
 These, out of mere instinct, they knew not why,
 Ador'd their fathers' God, and property ;
 And, by the same blind benefit of fate,
 The devil and the Jebusite did hate :
 Born to be sav'd, e'en in their own despite,
 Because they could not help believing right.
 Such were the tools : but a whole Hydra more
 Remains of sprouting heads too long to score.
 Some of their chiefs were princes of the land :
 In the first rank of these did Zimri stand ;
 A man so various that he seem'd to be,
 Not one, but all mankind's epitome :
 Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong ;
 Was ev'ry thing by starts, and nothing long ;
 But, in the course of one revolving moon,
 Was chemist, fiddler, statesman, and buffoon ;
 Then all for women, painting, rhyming, drinking,
 Besides ten thousand freaks that died in thinking.
 Blest madman ! who could ev'ry hour employ
 With something new to wish, or to enjoy.
 Railing and praising were his usual themes ;
 And both, to show his judgement, in extremes :
 So over-violent, or over-civil,
 That ev'ry man with him was God or devil.
 In squandering wealth was his peculiar art ;
 Nothing went unrewarded but desert :
 Beggar'd by fools, whom still he found too late,
 He had his jest, and they had his estate :
 He laugh'd himself from court ; then sought relief
 By forming parties, but could ne'er be chief ;
 For, spite of him, the weight of business fell
 On Absalom and wise Achitophel :
 Thus, wicked but in will, of means bereft,
 He left not faction, but of that was left.
 Titles and names 't were tedious to rehearse,
 Of lords, below the dignity of verse.
 Wits, warriors, commonwealths-men, were the best ;
 Kind husbands and mere nobles all the rest.
 And therefore, in the name of dulness, be
 The well-hung Balaam and cold Caleb free :
 And canting Nadab let oblivion damn,
 Who made new porridge for the pascal lamb.
 Let friendship's holy band some names assure ;
 Some their own worth, and some let scorn secure.
 Nor shall the rascal rabble here have place,
 Whom kings no title gave, and God no grace :
 Not bull-fac'd Jonas, who could statutes draw
 To mean rebellion, and make treason law.
 But he, though bad, is follow'd by a worse,
 The wretch who heaven's anointed dar'd to curse ;

Shimei, whose youth did early promise bring
 Of zeal to God and hatred to his king,
 Did wisely from expensive sins refrain,
 And never broke the sabbath but for gain :
 Nor ever was he known an oath to vent,
 Or curse, unless against the government.
 Thus heaping wealth, by the most ready way
 Among the Jews, which was to cheat and pray :
 The city, to reward his pious hate
 Against his master, chose him magistrate.
 His hand a vase of justice did uphold ;
 His neck was loaded with a chain of gold ;
 During his office treason was no crime ?
 The sons of Belial had a glorious time ;
 For Shimei, though not prodigal of pelf,
 Yet lov'd his wicked neighbour as himself.
 When two or three were gather'd to declaim
 Against the monarch of Jerusalem,
 Shimei was always in the midst of them ;
 And, if they curs'd the king when he was by,
 Would rather curse than break good company ;
 If any durst his factious friends accuse,
 He pack'd a jury of dissenting Jews ;
 Whose fellow-feeling in the godly cause
 Would free the suff'ring saint from human laws :
 For laws are only made to punish those
 Who serve the king, and to protect his foes.
 If any leisure-time he had from pow'r,
 Because 'tis sin to misemploy an hour,
 His business was, by writing to persuade
 That kings were useless, and a clog to trade :
 And, that his noble style he might refine,
 No Rechabite more shunn'd the fumes of wine.
 Chaste were his cellars, and his shrieval board
 The grossness of a city-feast abhor'd :
 His cooks, with long disuse, their trade forgot ;
 Cool was his kitchen, tho' his brains were hot.
 Such frugal virtue malice may accuse ;
 But sure 'twas necessary to the Jews :
 For towns, once burnt, such magistrates require
 As dare not tempt God's providence by fire.
 With spiritual food he fed his servants well,
 But free from flesh that made the Jews rebel :
 And Moses' laws he held in more account,
 For forty days of fasting in the mount.
 To speak the rest, who better are forgot,
 Would tire a well-breath'd witness of the plot.
 Yet, Corah, thou shalt from oblivion pass ;
 Erect thyself, thou monumental brass,
 High as the serpent of thy metal made,
 While nations stand secure beneath thy shade.
 What though his birth were base, yet comets
 rise
 From earthly vapors ere they shine in skies.
 Prodigious actions may as well be done
 By weaver's issue as by prince's son.
 This arch-attestor for the public good,
 By that one deed, ennobles all his blood.
 Who ever ask'd the witness's high race,
 Whose oath with martyrdom did Stephen grace ?
 Ours was a Levite : and, as times went then,
 His tribe were God Almighty's gentlemen.
 Sunk were his eyes, his voice was harsh and loud ;
 Sure signs he neither choleric was, nor proud :

His long chin prov'd his wit; his saint-like grace
 A church vermillion, and a Moses' face.
 His memory, miraculously great,
 Could plots, exceeding man's belief, repeat;
 Which, therefore, cannot be accounted lies,
 For human wit could never such devise.
 Some future truths are mingled in his book;
 But, where the witness fail'd, the prophet spoke;
 Some things like visionary flights appear;
 The spirit caught him up the Lord knows where;
 And gave him his rabbinical degree,
 Unknown to foreign university.
 His judgement yet his memory did excel;
 Which pierc'd his wondrous evidence so well,
 And suited to the temper of the times,
 Then groaning under Jebusitic crimes.
 Let Israel's foes suspect his heavenly call,
 And rashly judge his writ apocryphal:
 Our laws for such affronts have forfeits made;
 He takes his life who takes away his trade.
 Were I myself in witness Corah's place,
 The wretch who did me such a dire disgrace
 Should whet my memory, though once forgot,
 To make him an appendix of my plot.
 His zeal to Heav'n made him his prince despise,
 And load his person with indignities.
 But zeal peculiar privilege affords,
 Indulging latitude to deeds and words:
 And Corah might for Agag's murder call,
 In terms as coarse as Samuel us'd to Saul.
 What others in his evidence did join,
 The best that could be had for love or coin,
 In Corah's own predicament will fall;
 For witness is a common name to all.

Surrounded thus with friends of ev'ry sort,
 Deluded Absalom forsakes the court:
 Impatient of high hopes, urg'd with renown,
 And fir'd with near possession of a crown,
 Th' admiring crowd are dazzled with surprise,
 And on his goodly person feed their eyes.
 His joy conceal'd, he sets himself to show;
 On each side bowing popularly low:
 His looks, his gestures, and his words he frames,
 And with familiar ease repeats their names.
 Thus form'd by nature, furnish'd out with arts,
 He glides unfelt into their secret hearts.
 Then, with a kind compassionating look,
 And sighs, bespeaking pity ere he spoke,
 Few words he said; but easy those and fit,
 More slow than Hybla-drops, and far more sweet.

I mourn, my countrymen, your lost estate,
 Though far unable to prevent your fate:
 Behold a banish'd man, for your dear cause
 Expos'd a prey to arbitrary laws!
 Yet oh! that I alone should be undone,
 Cut off from empire, and no more a son!
 Now all your liberties a spoil are made;
 Egypt and Tyrus intercept your trade;
 And Jebusites your sacred rights invade.
 My father, whom with reverence yet I name,
 Charm'd into ease, is careless of his fame;
 And, brib'd with petty sums of foreign gold,
 Is grown in Bathsheba's embraces old;

Exalts his enemies, his friends destroys;
 And all his pow'r against himself employs.
 He gives, and let him give my right away;
 But why should he his own and yours betray?
 He, only he, can make the nation bleed,
 And he alone from my revenge is freed.
 Take then my tears (with that he wip'd his eyes),
 'Tis all the aid my present pow'r supplies;
 No court-informer can these arms accuse;
 These arms may sons against their fathers use:
 And 'tis my wish, the next successor's reign
 May make no other Israelite complain.

Youth, beauty, graceful action, seldom fail;
 But common int'rest always will prevail:
 And pity never ceases to be shown
 To him who makes the people's wrongs his own.
 The crowd, that still believe their kings oppress,
 With lifted hands their young Messiah bless;
 Who now begins his progress to ordain
 With chariots, horsemen, and a numerous train;
 From east to west his glories he displays,
 And, like the sun, the promis'd land surveys.
 Fame runs before him as the morning star,
 And shouts of joy salute him from afar:
 Each house receives him as a guardian god,
 And consecrates the place of his abode.
 But hospitable treats did most commend
 Wise Issachar, his wealthy western friend.
 This moving court, that caught the people's eyes,
 And seem'd but pomp, did other ends disguise;
 Achitophel had form'd it, with intent
 To sound the depths, and fathom where it went,
 The people's hearts; distinguish friends from foes,
 And try their strength before they came to blows:
 Yet all was color'd with a smooth pretence
 Of specious love and duty to their prince.
 Religion, and redress of grievances,
 Two names that always cheat and always please,
 Are often urg'd; and good king David's life
 Endanger'd by a brother and a wife.
 Thus, in a pageant show, a plot is made;
 And peace itself is war in masquerade.
 Oh foolish Israel! never warn'd by ill!
 Still the same bait, and circumvented still!
 Did ever men forsake the present ease?
 In midst of health imagine a disease?
 Take pains contingent mischiefs to foresee?
 Make heirs for monarchs, and for God decree?
 What shall we think? Can people give away,
 Both for themselves and sons, their native sway?
 Then they are left defenceless to the sword
 Of each unbounded, arbitrary lord:
 And laws are vain, by which we right enjoy,
 If kings unquestion'd can those laws destroy:
 Yet, if the crowd be judge of fit and just,
 And kings are only officers in trust,
 Then this resuming cov'nant was declar'd
 When kings were made, or is for ever barr'd.
 If those who gave the sceptre could not tie
 By their own deed their own posterity,
 How, then, could Adam bind his future race?
 How could his forfeit on mankind take place?

Or how could heavenly justice damn us all,
 Who ne'er consented to our father's fall?
 Then kings are slaves to those whom they command,
 And tenants to their people's pleasure stand.
 Add, that the pow'r for property allow'd
 Is mischievously seated in the crowd:
 For who can be secure of private right,
 If sovereign sway may be dissolv'd by might?
 Nor is the people's judgement always true:
 The most may err as grossly as the few;
 And faultless kings run down by common cry,
 For vice, oppression, and for tyranny.
 What standard is there in a fickle rout,
 Which, flowing to the mark, runs faster out?
 Nor only crowds, but sanhedrims may be Infected with this public lunacy,
 And share the madness of rebellious times,
 To murder monarchs for imagin'd crimes.
 If they may give and take whene'er they please;
 Not kings alone, the Godhead's images,
 But government itself, at length must fall
 To nature's state, where all have right to all.
 Yet, grant our lords the people kings can make,
 What prudent men a settled throne would shake?
 For, whatsoe'er their sufferings were before,
 That change they covet makes them suffer more.
 All other errors but disturb a state;
 But innovation is the blow of fate.
 If ancient fabrics nod, and threat to fall,
 To patch their flaws, and buttress up the wall,
 Thus far 'tis duty: but here fix the mark;
 For all beyond it is to touch the ark.
 To change foundations, cast the frame anew,
 Is work for rebels, who base ends pursue,
 At once divine and human laws control,
 And mend the parts by ruin of the whole.
 The tamp'ring world is subject to this curse,
 To physic their disease into a worse.

Now what relief can righteous David bring?
 How fatal 'tis to be too good a king!
 Friends he has few, so high the madness grows;
 Who dares be such must be the people's foes.
 Yet some there were, e'en in the worst of days;
 Some let me name, and naming is to praise.
 In this short file Barzillai first appears;
 Barzillai, crown'd with honor and with years.
 Long since, the rising rebels he withstood
 In regions waste beyond the Jordan's flood:
 Unfortunately brave to buoy the state;
 But sinking underneath his master's fate:
 In exile with his godlike prince he mourn'd;
 For him he suffer'd, and with him return'd.
 The court he practis'd, not the courtier's art:
 Large was his wealth, but larger was his heart;
 Which well the noblest objects knew to choose,
 The fighting warrior, and recording muse.
 His bed could once a fruitful issue boast;
 Now more than half a father's name is lost.
 His eldest hope, with ev'ry grace adorn'd,
 By me (so Heaven will have it) always mourn'd,
 And always honor'd, snatch'd in manhood's prime,
 B' unequal fates, and providence's crime:

Yet not before the goal of honor won,
 All parts fulfill'd of subject and of son:
 Swift was the race, but short the time to run.
 Oh, narrow circle, but of pow'r divine,
 Scanted in space, but perfect in thy line!
 By sea, by land, thy matchless worth was known,
 Arms thy delight, and war was all thy own:
 Thy force infus'd, the fainting Tyrians propp'd;
 And haughty Pharaoh found his fortune stopp'd.
 Oh ancient honor! oh unconquer'd hand,
 Whom foes unpunish'd never could withstand!
 But Israel was unworthy of his name:
 Short is the date of all immoderate fame:
 It looks as Heaven our ruin had design'd,
 And durst not trust thy fortune and thy mind.
 Now, free from earth, thy disencumber'd soul
 Mounts up, and leaves behind the clouds and starry pole:
 From thence thy kindred legions mayst thou
 To aid the guardian angel of thy king. [bring,
 Here stop, my Muse, here cease thy painful
 flight:

No pinions can pursue immortal height:
 Tell good Barzillai thou canst sing no more,
 And tell thy soul she should have fled before:
 Or fled she with his life, and left this verse
 To hang on her departed patron's hearse?
 Now take thy steepy flight from heaven, and see
 If thou canst find on earth another he:
 Another he would be too hard too find;
 See, then, whom thou canst see not far behind.
 Zadoc the priest, whom, shunning pow'r and
 place,

His lowly mind advanc'd to David's grace.
 With him the Sagan of Jerusalem,
 Of hospitable soul, and noble stem;
 Him of the western dome, whose weighty sense
 Flows in fit words and heav'nly eloquence.
 The prophet's sons, by such example led,
 To learning and to loyalty were bred:
 For colleges on bounteous kings depend;
 And never rebel was to arts a friend.
 To these succeed the pillars of the laws;
 Who best can plead, and best can judge a cause.
 Next them a train of loyal peers ascend;
 Sharp-judging Adriel, the muses' friend,
 Himself a muse: in sanhedrim's debate
 True to his prince, but not a slave of state;
 Whom David's love with honors did adorn,
 That from his disobedient son were torn.
 Jotham, of piercing wit, and pregnant thought,
 Endued by nature, and by learning taught
 To move assemblies, who but only tried
 The worse a while, then chose the better side:
 Nor chose alone, but turn'd the balance too;
 So much the weight of one brave man can do.
 Hushai, the friend of David in distress,
 In public storms of manly steadfastness:
 By foreign treaties he inform'd his youth,
 And join'd experience to his native truth.
 His frugal care supplied the wanting throne;
 Frugal for that, but bounteous of his own.
 'Tis easy conduct when exchequers flow;
 But hard the task to manage well the low:

For sov'reign pow'r is too depress'd or high,
 When kings are forc'd to sell, or crowds to buy.
 Indulge one labor more, my weary muse,
 For Amiel : who can Amiel's praise refuse ?
 Of ancient race by birth, but nobler yet
 In his own worth, and without title great :
 The sanhedrim long time as chief he rul'd,
 Their reason guided, and their passion cool'd :
 So dext'rous was he in the crown's defence,
 So form'd to speak a loyal nation's sense,
 That, as their band was Israel's tribes in small,
 So fit was he to represent them all.

Now rasher charioteers the seat ascend,
 Whose loose careers his steady skill commend :
 They, like th' unequal ruler of the day,
 Misguide the seasons, and mistake the way ;
 While he, withdrawn, at their mad labors smiles,
 And safe enjoys the sabbath of his toils.

These were the chief, a small but faithful band
 Of worthies, in the breach who dar'd to stand,
 And tempt th' united fury of the land.
 With grief they view'd such pow'rful engines bent

To batter down the lawful government :
 A num'rous faction, with pretended frights,
 In sanhedrims to plume the regal rights ;
 The true successor from the court remov'd ;
 The plot by hireling witnesses improv'd.
 These ills they saw, and, as their duty bound,
 They show'd the king the danger of the wound :
 That no concessions from the throne would
 But lenitives fomented the disease : [please,
 That Absalom, ambitious of the crown,
 Was made the lure to draw the people down ;
 That false Achitophel's pernicious hate
 Had turn'd the plot to ruin church and state ;
 The council violent, the rabble worse :
 That Shimei taught Jerusalem to curse.

With all these loads of injuries oppress'd,
 And long revolving in his careful breast
 Th' event of things, at last his patience tir'd,
 Thus from his royal throne, by heaven inspir'd,
 The godlike David spoke ; with awful fear
 His train their Maker in their master hear :

Thus long have I, by native mercy sway'd,
 My wrongs dissembled, my revenge delay'd :
 So willing to forgive th' offending age ;
 So much the father did the king assuage.
 But now so far my clemency they slight,
 Th' offenders question my forgiving right :
 That one was made for many they contend ;
 But 'tis to rule, for that's a monarch's end.
 They call my tenderness of blood my fear ;
 Though manly tempers can the longest bear.
 Yet, since they will divert my native course,
 'Tis time to show I am not good by force.
 Those heap'd affronts that haughty subjects bring
 Are burthens for a camel, not a king.
 Kings are the public pillars of the state,
 Born to sustain and prop the nation's weight :
 If my young Samson will pretend a call
 To shake the column, let him share the fall :
 But, oh ! that yet he would repent and live !
 How easy 'tis for parents to forgive !

With how few tears a pardon might be won
 From nature, pleading for a darling son !
 Poor, pitied youth, by my paternal care
 Rais'd up to all the height his fame could bear :
 Had God ordain'd his fate for empire born,
 He would have giv'n his soul another turn :
 Gull'd with a patriot's name, whose modern
 sense

Is one that would by law supplant his prince ;
 The people's brave, the politician's tool ;
 Ne'er was patriot yet but was a fool.

Whence comes it that religion and the laws
 Should more be Absalom's than David's cause ?
 His old instructor, ere he lost his place,
 Was never thought endued with so much grace.
 Good Heavens ! how faction can a patriot paint !
 My rebel ever proves my people's saint.

Would they impose an heir upon the throne,
 Let sanhedrims be taught to give their own.

A king's at least a part of government ;
 And mine as requisite as their consent :

Without my leave a future king to choose
 Infers a right the present to depose.

True, they petition me t' approve their choice
 But Esau's hands suit ill with Jacob's voice.

My pious subjects for my safety pray,
 Which to secure, they take my pow'r away.

From plots and treasons heav'n preserve my years,
 But save me most from my petitioners !

Unsatiated as the barren womb or grave,
 God cannot grant so much as they can crave.

What then is left, but, with a jealous eye,
 To guard the small remains of loyalty ?

The law shall still direct my peaceful sway,
 And the same law teach rebels to obey :

Votes shall no more establish'd power control,
 Such votes as make a part exceed the whole.

No groundless clamors shall my friends remove,
 Nor crowds have pow'r to punish ere they prove ;

For Gods and godlike kings their care express,
 Still to defend their servants in distress.

Oh, that my pow'r to saving were confin'd !

Why am I forc'd, like heaven, against my mind,
 To make examples of another kind ?

Must I at length the sword of justice draw ?

Oh curst effects of necessary law !

How ill my fear they by my mercy scan !

Beware the fury of a patient man.

Law they require, let law then show her face ;

They could not be content to look on grace,

Her hinder parts, but with a daring eye

To tempt the terror of her front, and die.

By their own arts 'tis righteously decreed,

Those dire artificers of death shall bleed ;

Against themselves their witnesses will swear,

Till, viper-like, their mother plot they tear ;

And suck for nutriment that bloody gore,

Which was their principle of life before.

Their Belial with their Beelzebub will fight ;

Thus on my foes my foes shall do me right.

Nor doubt th' event : for factious crowds engage,

In their first onset, all their brutal rage.

Then let them take an unresisted course :

Retire, and traverse, and delude their force :

But when they stand all breathless, urge the fight,
And rise upon them with redoubled might;
For lawful pow'r is still superior found;
When long driv'n back, at length it stands the
ground.

He said: th' Almighty nodding gave consent;
And peals of thunder shook the firmament.
Henceforth a series of new time began,
The mighty years in long procession ran:
Once more the godlike David was restor'd,
And willing nations knew their lawful lord.

PART II.

“—Si quis tamen hæc quoque, si quis
“Captus amore leget—”

In the year 1680, Mr. Dryden undertook the poem of Absalom and Achitophel, upon the desire of king Charles II. The performance was applauded by every one; and several persons pressing him to write a Second Part, he, upon declining it himself, spoke to Mr. Tate to write one, and gave him his advice in the direction of it: and that part beginning with

“Next these, a troop of busy spirits press,” and ending with

“To talk like Doeg, and to write like thee,” containing near two hundred verses, was entirely Mr. Dryden's composition, besides some touches in other places.—The preceding lines, upwards of three hundred in number, were written by Mr. Tate. The poem is here printed complete.

ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL.

SINCE men, like beasts, each other's prey were
made;
Since trade began, and priesthood grew a trade;
Since realms were form'd, none sure so curst as those

That madly their own happiness oppose;
There Heav'n itself, and godlike kings in vain
Show'r down the manna of a gentle reign;
While pamper'd crowds to mad sedition run,
And monarchs by indulgence are undone.
Thus David's clemency was fatal grown,
While wealthy faction aw'd the wanting throne;
For now, their sovereign's orders to contemn,
Was held the charter of Jerusalem;
His rights t' invade, his tributes to refuse,
A privilege peculiar to the Jews;
As if from heav'nly call this licence fell,
And Jacob's seed were chosen to rebel!

Achitophel with triumph sees his crimes
Thus suited to the madness of the times;
And Absalom, to make his hopes succeed,
Of flatt'ring charms no longer stands in need;
While, fond of change, though ne'er so dearly bought, [thought,
Our tribes outstript the youth's ambitious
His swiftest hopes with swifter homage meet,
And crowd their servile necks beneath his feet.
Thus to his aid while pressing tides repair,
He mounts, and spreads his streamers in the air.

The charms of empire might his youth mislead,
But what can our besotted Israel plead?
Sway'd by a monarch, whose serene command
Seems half the blessing of our promis'd land;
Whose only grievance is excess of ease;
Freedom our pain, and plenty our disease!
Yet, as all folly would lay claim to sense,
And wickedness ne'er wanted a pretence,
With argument, they'd make their treason good,
And righteous David's self with slanders load;
That arts of foreign sway he did affect,
And guilty Jebusites from law protect,
Whose very chiefs, convict, were never freed;
Nay, we have seen their sacrifices bleed!
Accusers' infamy is urg'd in vain,
While in the bounds of sense they did contain;
But soon they launch'd into th' unfathom'd tide,
And in the depths they knew disdain'd to ride.
For probable discoveries to dispense
Was thought below a pension'd evidence;
Mere truth was dull, nor suited with the port
Of pamper'd Corah, when advanc'd to court.
No less than wonders now they will impose,
And projects void of grace or sense disclose.
Such was the change on pious Michal brought,
Michal that ne'er was cruel e'en in thought;
The best of queens, and most obedient wife,
Impeach'd of curst designs on David's life!
His life, the theme of her eternal pray'r,
'Tis scarce so much his guardian angel's care:
Not summer morns such mildness can disclose,
The Hermon lily, nor the Sharon rose.
Neglecting each vain pomp of majesty,
Transported Michal feeds her thoughts on high:
She lives with angels, and as angels do,
Quits heaven sometimes to bless the world below;
Where, cherish'd by her bounty's plenteous
spring,
Reviving widows smile, and orphans sing.
Oh! when rebellious Israel's crimes at height
Are threaten'd with her lord's approaching fate;
The piety of Michal then remain
In Heav'n's remembrance, and prolong his reign!
Less desolation did the pest pursue
That from Dan's limits to Beersheba slew;
Less fatal the repeated wars of Tyre,
And less Jerusalem's avenging fire;
With gentler terror these our state o'er-ran,
Than since our evidencing days began!
On ev'ry cheek a pale confusion sat,
Continued fear beyond the worst of fate!
Trust was no more; art, science, useless made;
All occupation's lost but Corah's trade.
Meanwhile a guard on modest Corah wait,
If not for safety, needful yet for state.
Well might he deem each peer and prince his slave,
And lord it o'er the tribes which he could save:
E'en vice in him was virtue—what sad fate,
But for his honesty, had seiz'd our state!
And with what tyranny had we been curst,
Had Corah never prov'd a villain first!
'T have told his knowledge of th' intrigue in
Had been, alas! to our deponent's loss: [gross,

The travell'd Levite had th' experience got,
To husband well, and make the best of 's plot;
And therefore, like an evidence of skill,
With wise reserves secur'd his pension still;
Not quite of future pow'r himself bereft,
But limbos large for unbelievers left.
And now his writ such reverence had got,
'Twas worse than plotting to suspect his plot.
Some were so well convinc'd, they made no doubt
Themselves to help the founder'd swearers out.
Some had their sense impos'd on by their fear,
But more for interest sake believe and swear:
E'en to that height with some the phrensy grew,
They rag'd to find their danger not prove true.

Yet, than all these a viler crew remain,
Who with Achitophel the cry maintain;
Not urg'd by fear, nor through misguided sense—
Blind zeal and starving need had some pretence—
But for the good old cause that did excite
Th' original rebel's wiles—revenge and spite.
These raise the plot to have the scandal thrown Upon the bright successor of the crown,
Whose virtue with such wrongs they had pursu'd,
As seem'd all hope of pardon to exclude.
Thus, while on private ends their zeal is built,
The cheated crowd applaud and share their guilt.

Such practices as these, too gross to lie
Long unobserv'd by each discerning eye,
The more judicious Israelites unspell'd,
Though still the charm the giddy rabble held.
E'en Absalom, amidst the dazzling beams
Of empire, and ambition's flatt'ring dreams,
Perceives the plot, too foul to be excus'd,
To aid designs, no less pernicious, us'd:
And, filial sense yet striving in his breast,
Thus to Achitophel his doubts express'd:
Why are my thoughts upon a crown employ'd,
Which, once obtain'd, can be but half enjoy'd?
Not so when virtue did my arms require,
And to my father's wars I flew entire.
My regal pow'r how will my foes resent,
When I myself have scarce my own consent!
Give me a son's unblemish'd truth again,
Or quench the sparks of duty that remain.
How slight to force a throne that legions guard,
The task to me; to prove unjust, how hard!
And if th' imagin'd guilt thus wound my thought,
What will it, when the tragic scene is wrought?
Dire war must first be conjur'd from below;
The realm we'd rule we first must overthrow;
And when the civil furies are on th' wing,
That blind and undistinguish'd slaughters fling,
Who knows what impious chance may reach the king?

Oh! rather let me perish in the strife,
Than have my crown the price of David's life!
Or, if the tempest of the war he stand,
In peace, some vile officious villain's hand
His soul's anointed temple may invade;
Or, press'd by clam'rous crowds, myself be made
His murderer—rebellious crowds, whose guilt
Shall dread his vengeance, till his blood be spilt;
Which if my filial tenderness oppose,
Since to the empire by their arms I rose,

Those very arms on me shall be employ'd,
A new usurper crown'd, and I destroy'd.
The same pretence of public good will hold,
And new Achitophels be found as bold
To urge the needful change, perhaps the old.

He said; the statesman with a smile replies,
A smile that did his rising spleen disguise:
My thoughts presum'd our labors at an end,
And are we still with conscience to contend,
Whose want in kings as needful is allow'd,
As 'tis for them to find it in the crowd?
Far in the doubtful passage you are gone,
And only can be safe by pressing on.

The crown's true heir, a prince severe and wise,
Has view'd your motions long with jealous eyes;
Your person's charms, your more prevailing arts,

And mark'd your progress in the people's hearts;
Whose patience is th' effect of stinted pow'r,
But treasures vengeance for the fatal hour;
And, if remote the peril he can bring,
Your present danger's greater from the king.
Let not a parent's name deceive your sense,
Nor trust the father in a jealous prince!
Your trivial faults if he could so resent,
To doom you little less than banishment,
What rage must your presumption since inspire!

Against his orders you return from Tyre;
Nor only so, but with a pomp more high,
And open court of popularity,
The factious tribes—and this reproof from thee?
The prince replies, O statesman's winding skill!
They first condemn that first advis'd the ill!
Illustrious youth, return'd Achitophel,
Misconstrue not the words that mean you well.
The course you steer I worthy blame conclude,
But 'tis because you leave it unpursued.

A monarch's crown with fate surrounded lies;
Who reach, lay hold on death that miss the prize.
Did you for this expose yourself to show,
And to the crowd bow popularly low?
For this your glorious progress next ordain,
With chariots, horsemen, and a numerous train;
With fame before you like the morning star,
And shouts of joy saluting from afar? [view;
Oh, from the heights you've reach'd but take a
Scarce leading Lucifer could fall like you.
And must I here my shipwreck'd arts bemoan?
Have I for this so oft made Israel groan?
Your single int'rest with the nation weigh'd?
And turn'd the scale where your desires were laid?

E'en when at helm a course so dang'rous mov'd
To land your hopes, as my removal prov'd?

I'll not dispute, the royal youth replies,
The known perfection of your policies;
Nor in Achitophel yet grudge or blame
The privilege that statesmen ever claim;
Who private int'rest never yet pursu'd,
But still pretended 'twas for others' good:
What politician yet e'er scap'd his fate,
Who saving his own neck not sav'd the state?
From hence on ev'ry hum'rous wind that veer'd,
With shifted sails a several course you steer'd.

What from a sway did David e'er pursue,
That seem'd like absolute, but sprung from you?
Who at your instance quash'd each penal law,
That kept dissenting factious Jews in awe;
And who suspends fix'd laws, may abrogate;
That done, form new, and so enslave the state.
E'en property, whose champion now you stand,
And seem for this the idol of the land,
Did ne'er sustain such violence before,
As when your counsel shut the royal store;
Advice, that ruin to whole tribes procur'd,
But secret kept till your own bank's secur'd.
Recount with this the triple cov'nant broke,
And Israel fitted for a foreign yoke;
Nor here your counsel's fatal progress staid,
But sent our levied pow'rs to Pharaoh's aid.
Hence Tyre and Israel low in ruins laid,
And Egypt, once their scorn, their common terror made,

E'en yet of such a season can we dream,
When royal rights you made your darling theme?
For pow'r unlimited could reasons draw,
And place prerogative above the law?
Which, on your fall from office, grew unjust;
The laws made king, the king a slave in trust:
Whom with state-craft, to int'rest only true,
You now accuse of ills contriv'd by you.

To this hell's agent—Royal youth, fix here;
Let int'rest be the star by which you steer;
Hence to repose your trust in me was wise,
Whose int'rest most in your advancement lies:
A tie so firm as always will avail,
When friendship, nature, and religion fail.
On ours the safety of the crowd depends;
Secure the crowd, and we obtain our ends;
Whom I will cause so far our guilt to share,
Till they are made our champions by their fear.
What opposition can your rival bring,
While sanhedrims are jealous of the king?
His strength as yet in David's friendship lies,
And what can David's self without supplies?
Who with exclusive bills must now dispense,
Debar the heir, or starve in his defence;
Conditions which our elders ne'er will quit,
And David's justice never can admit.
Or forc'd by wants his brother to betray,
To your ambition next he clears the way;
For if succession once to nought they bring,
Their next advance removes the present king:
Persisting else his senates to dissolve,
In equal hazard shall his reign involve.
Our tribes, whom Pharaoh's pow'r so much alarms,

Shall rise without their prince t' oppose his arms:
Nor boots it on what cause at first they join,
Their troops, once up, are tools for our design.
At least, such subtle cov'nants shall be made,
Till peace itself is war in masquerade.

Associations of mysterious sense,
Against, but seeming for, the king's defence;
E'en on their courts of justice fetters draw,
And from our agents muzzle up their law;
By which a conquest if we fail to make, [stake.
'Tis a drawn game at worst, and we secure our

He said; and for the dire success depends
On various sects, by common guilt made friends;
Whose heads, though ne'er so diff'ring in their creed,

I' th' point of treason yet were well agreed.
'Mongst these, extorting Ishban first appears,
Pursued by meagre troops of bankrupt heirs.
Blest times, when Ishban, he whose occupation
So long has been to cheat, reforms the nation!
Ishban, of conscience suited to his trade,
As good a saint as usurer ever made.

Yet Mammon has not so engross'd him quite,
But Belial lays as large a claim of spite;
Who, for those pardons from his prince he draws,
Returns reproaches, and cries up the cause.
That year in which the city he did sway,
He left rebellion in a hopeful way.

Yet his ambition once was found so bold,
To offer talents of extorted gold,
Could David's wants have so been brib'd, to shame
And scandalise our peerage with his name,
For which, his dear sedition he'd forswear,
And e'en turn loyal to be made a peer.
Next him, let railing Rabsheka have place,
So full of zeal he has no need of grace;
A saint that can both flesh and spirit use,
Alike haunt conventicles and the stews;
Of whom the question difficult appears,
If most i' th' preacher's or the bawd's arrears.
What caution could appear too much in him
That keeps the treasure of Jerusalem?
Let David's brother but approach the town,
Double our guards, he cries, we are undone!
Protesting that he dares not sleep in 's bed,
Lest he should rise next morn without his head.

“ Next these, a troop of busy spirits press,
Of little fortunes, and of conscience less;
With them the tribe, whose luxury had drain'd
Their banks, in former sequestrations gain'd;
Who rich and great by past rebellions grew,
And long to fish the troubled streams anew.
Some future hopes, some present payment draws,
To sell their conscience and espouse the cause.
Such stipends those vile hirelings best befit,
Priests without grace, and poets without wit.
Shall that false Hebronite escape our curse,
Judas that keeps the rebels' pensive purse;
Judas that pays the treason-writer's fee;
Judas that well deserves his name-sake's tree;
Who at Jerusalem's own gates erects
His college for a nursery of sects;
Young prophets with an early care secures,
And with the dung of his own arts manures?
What have the men of Hebron here to do?
What part in Israel's promis'd land have you?
Here Phaleg the lay-Hebronite is come,
'Cause, like the rest, he could not live at home;
Who from his own possessions could not drain
An omer e'en of Hebronitish grain,
Here struts it like a patriot, and talks high
Of injur'd subjects, alter'd property:
An emblem of that buzzing insect just, [dust.
That mounts the wheel, and thinks she raises

Can dry bones live? or skeletons produce
 The vital warmth of cuckoldising juice?
 Slim Phaleg could, and at the table fed,
 Return'd the grateful product to the bed.
 A waiting man to travelling nobles chose,
 He his own laws would saucily impose;
 Till bastinadoed, back again he went,
 To learn those manners he to teach was sent.
 Chastis'd he ought to have retreated home;
 But he reads politics to Absalom.
 For never Hebronite, though kick'd and scorn'd,
 To his own country willingly return'd.
 But, leaving famish'd Phaleg to be fed,
 And to talk treason for his daily bread,
 Let Hebron, nay let hell, produce a man
 So made for mischief as Ben-Jochanan;
 A Jew of humble parentage was he;
 By trade a Levite, though of low degree:
 His pride no higher than the desk aspir'd;
 But for the drudgery of priests was hir'd,
 To read and pray in linen ephod brave,
 And pick up single shekels from the grave.
 Married at last, but finding charge come faster,
 He could not live by God, so chang'd his master.

Inspir'd by want, was made a factious tool;
 They got a villain, and we lost a fool.
 Still violent, whatever cause he took,
 But most against the party he forsook,
 For renegadoes, who ne'er turn by halves,
 Are bound in conscience to be double knaves.
 So this prose-prophet took most monstrous pains,
 To let his masters see he earn'd his gains.
 But, as the dev'l owes all his imps a shame,
 He chose th' apostate for his proper theme;
 With little pains he made the picture true,
 And from reflection took the rogue he drew.
 A wondrous work, to prove the Jewish nation
 In every age a murmur'ing generation:
 To trace them from their infancy of sinning,
 And show them factious from their first beginning;
 To prove they could rebel, and rail, and mock,
 Much to the credit of the chosen flock:
 A strong authority, which must convince,
 That saints owe no allegiance to their prince;
 As 'tis a leading card to make a whore,
 To prove her mother had turn'd up before.
 But, tell me, did the drunken patriarch bless
 The son that show'd his father's nakedness.
 Such thanks the present church thy pen will give
 Which proves rebellion was so primitive.
 Must ancient failings be examples made?
 Then murderers from Cain may learn their trade.
 As thou the heathen and the saint hast drawn,
 Methinks th' apostate was the better man;
 And thy hot father, waving my respect,
 Not of a mother-church, but of a sect:
 And such he needs must be of thy inditing;
 This comes of drinking asses' milk, and writing.
 If Balak should he call'd to leave his place,
 As profit is the loudest call of grace,
 His temple, dispossess'd of one, would be Replenish'd with sev'n devils more by thee.

Levi, thou art a load, I'll lay thee down,
 And show rebellion bare, without a gown;
 Poor slaves, in metre, dull and addle-pated,
 Who rhyme below e'en David's Psalms translated.

Some in my speedy pace I must out-run,
 As lame Mephibosheth, the wizard's son;
 To make quick way, I'll leap o'er heavy blocks,
 Shun rotten Uzza as I would the pox;
 And hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,
 Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse;
 Who by my muse, to all succeeding times
 Shall live, in spite of their own doggrel rhymes.

Doeg, though without knowing how or why,
 Made still a blundering kind of melody;
 Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,

Through sense and nonsense, never out nor in;
 Free from all meaning, whether good or bad,
 And, in one word, heroically mad:

He was too warm on picking-work to dwell,
 But faggotted his notions as they fell,
 And, if they rhymed and rattled, all was well;
 Spiteful he is not, though he wrote a satire,
 For still there goes some thinking to ill-nature;
 He needs no more than birds and beasts to think,
 All his occasions are to eat and drink.

If he call rogue and rascal from a garret,
 He means you no more mischief than a parrot;
 The words for friend and foe alike were made;
 To fetter them in verse is all his trade.

For almonds he'll cry whore to his own mother;
 And call young Absalom king David's brother.
 Let him be gallows-free by my consent,
 And nothing suffer, since he nothing meant:
 Hanging supposes human soul and reason;
 This animal's below committing treason;
 Shall he be hang'd who never could rebel?
 That's a preferment for Achitophel.

The woman that committed burglary,
 Was rightly sentenc'd by the law to die;
 But 'twas hard fate that to the gallows led
 The dog that never heard the statute read.
 Railing in other men may be a crime,
 But ought to pass for mere instinct in him.
 Instinct he follows, and no farther knows;
 For to write verse with him is to transpose.

'Twere pity treason at his door to lay,
 Who makes heaven's gate a lock to its own key:
 Let him rail on, let his invective muse
 Have four-and-twenty letters to abuse;
 Which, if he jumbles to one line of sense,
 Indict him of a capital offence.

In fire-works give him leave to vent his spite,
 Those are the only serpents he can write;
 The height of his ambition is, we know,
 But to be master of a puppet-show;

On that one stage his works may yet appear:
 And a month's harvest keeps him all the year.

Now stop your noses, readers, all and some,
 For here's a turn of midnight-work to come,
 Og from a treason-tavern rolling home.
 Round as a globe, and liquor'd ev'ry chink,
 Goodly and great, he sails behind his link;

With all this bulk, there's nothing lost in Og;
 For every inch that is not fool, is rogue:
 A monstrous mass of foul corrupted matter,
 As all the devils had spew'd to make the batter.
 When wine has given him courage to blas-
 pheme,
 He curses God, but God before curs'd him;
 And, if man could have reason, none has more, [poor.
 That made his paunch so rich, and him so
 With wealth he was not trusted, for Heav'n knew
 What 'twas of old to pamper up a Jew;
 To what would he on quail and pheasant swell,
 That e'en on tripe and carrion could rebel?
 But though Heaven made him poor, with reverence speaking,
 He never was a poet of God's making;
 The midwife laid her hand on his thick skull,
 With this prophetic blessing—"Be thou dull;
 Drink, swear, and roar; forbear no lewd de-
 light
 Fit for thy bulk; do any thing but write:
 Thou art of lasting make, like thoughtless men;
 A strong nativity—but for the pen!
 Eat opium, mingle arsenic in thy drink,
 Still thou mayst live, avoiding pen and ink:
 I see, I see, 'tis counsel giv'n in vain,
 For treason botch'd in rhyme will be thy bane:
 Rhyme is the rock on which thou art to wreck,
 'Tis fatal to thy fame and to thy neck:
 Why should thy metre good king David blast?
 A psalm of his will surely be thy last.
 Dar'st thou presume in verse to meet thy foes,
 Thou whom the penny pamphlet foil'd in prose?
 Doeg, whom God for mankind's mirth has
 O'ertops thy talent in thy very trade: [made,
 Doeg to thee, thy paintings are so coarse,
 A poet is, though he's the poet's horse.
 A double noose thou on thy neck dost pull,
 For writing treason, and for writing dull:
 To die for faction is a common evil;
 But to be hang'd for nonsense is the devil.
 Hadst thou the glories of thy king express'd,
 Thy praises had been satire at the best;
 But thou in clumsy verse, unlick'd, unpointed,
 Hast shamefully defied the Lord's anointed:
 I will not rake the dunghill of thy crimes,
 For who would read thy life that reads thy rhymes?
 But of king David's foes be this the doom;
 May all be like the young man Absalom!
 And for my foes, may this their blessing be,
 To talk like Doeg, and to write like thee!
 Achitophel each rank, degree, and age,
 For various ends neglects not to engage;
 The wise and rich for purse and council brought,
 The fools and beggars for their numbers sought;
 Who yet not only on the town depends,
 For e'en in court the faction had its friends;
 These thought the places they possess'd too small, fall:
 And in their hearts wish'd court and king to Whose name the Muse disdaining, holds i' th' dark,

 Thrust in the villain herd without a mark;
 With parasites and libel-spawning imps,
 Intriguing fops, dull jesters, and worse pimps;
 Disdain the rascal rabble to pursue;
 Their set cabals are yet a viler crew.
 See where involv'd in common smoke they sit;
 Some for our mirth, some for our satire fit:
 These, gloomy, thoughtful, and on mischief
 bent,
 While for those mere good fellowship frequent
 Th' appointed club, can let sedition pass,
 Sense, no sense, any thing, t' employ the glass;
 And who believe in their dull honest hearts,
 The rest talk treason but to show their parts;
 Who ne'er had wit or will for mischief yet,
 But pleas'd to be reputed of a set.
 But, in the sacred annals of our plot,
 Industrious Arod never be forgot:
 The labors of this midnight magistrate
 May vie with Corah's to preserve the state;
 In search of arms he fail'd not to lay hold
 On war's most pow'rful, dangerous weapon,
 gold;
 And last, to take from Jebusites all odds,
 Their altars pillag'd, stole their very gods.
 Oft would he cry, when treasure he surpris'd,
 'Tis Baalish gold in David's coin disguis'd:
 Which to his house with richer relics came,
 While lumber idols only fed the flame:
 For our wise rabble ne'er took pains to inquire
 What 'twas he burnt, so 't made a rousing fire;
 With which our elder was enrich'd no more
 Than false Gehazi with the Syrian's store;
 So poor, that when our choosing tribes were met,
 E'en for his stinking votes he ran in debt;
 For meat the wicked, and, as authors think,
 The saints he chous'd for his electing drink;
 Thus ev'ry shift and subtle method past,
 And all to be no Zaken at the last.
 Now, rais'd on Tyre's sad ruins, Pharaoh's
 pride
 Soar'd high, his legions threat'ning far and wide.
 As when a battering storm engender'd high,
 By wings upheld, hangs hovering in the sky,
 Is gaz'd upon by ev'ry trembling swain;
 This for his vineyard fears, and that his grain;
 For blooming plants, and flow'rs new opening,
 these,
 For lambs yearn'd lately, and far-laboring bees:
 To guard his stock each to the gods does call,
 Uncertain where the fire-charg'd clouds will fall.
 E'en so the doubtful nations watch his arms,
 With terror each expecting his alarms.
 Where, Judah, where was now the lion's roar?
 Thou only couldst the captive lands restore:
 But thou, with inbred broils and faction prest,
 From Egypt needst a guardian with the rest.
 Thy prince from sanhedrims no trust allow'd,
 Too much the representers of the crowd,

Who for their own defence give no supply,
But what the crown's prerogative must buy:
As if their monarch's right to violate,
More needful were, than to preserve the state!
From present dangers they divert their care,
And all their fears are of the royal heir;
Whom now the reigning malice of his foes,
Unjudg'd would sentence, and ere crown'd
depose,

Religion the pretence, but their decree
To bar his reign, whate'er his faith may be!
By sanhedrims and clam'rous crowds thus prest,
What passions rent the righteous David's breast!

Who knows not how t' oppose or to comply,
Unjust to grant, and dang'rous to deny!
How near in this dark juncture Israel's fate,
Whose peace one sole expedient could create,
Which yet th' extremest virtue did require,
E'en of that prince whose downfall they con-
spire!

His absence David does with tears advise,
T' appease their rage: undaunted he complies.
Thus he who, prodigal of blood and ease,
A royal life expos'd to winds and seas,
At once contending with the waves and fire,
And heading danger in the wars of Tyre,
Inglorious now forsakes his native sand,
And, like an exile, quits the promis'd land!
Our monarch scarce from pressing tears refrains,
And painfully his royal state maintains;
Who now, embracing on th' extremest shore,
Almost revokes what he enjoin'd before:
Concludes at last more trust to be allow'd
To storms and seas than to the raging crowd!
Forbear, rash Muse, the parting scene to draw,
With silence charm'd as deep as theirs that saw!
Not only our attending nobles weep,
But hardy sailors swell with tears the deep!
The tide restrain'd her course, and more amaz'd

The twin-stars on the royal brothers gaz'd:
While this sole fear——
Does trouble to our suffering hero bring,
Lest next the pop'lar rage oppress the king!
Thus parting, each for th' other's danger griev'd,
The shore the king, and seas the prince receiv'd.
Go, injur'd hero, while propitious gales,
Soft as thy consort's breath, inspire thy sails;
Well may she trust her beauties on a flood,
Where thy triumphant fleets so oft have rode!
Safe on thy breast reclin'd, her rest be deep,
Rock'd like a Nereid by waves asleep;
While happiest dreams her fancy entertain,
And to Elysian fields convert the main!
Go, injur'd hero, while the shores of Tyre
At thy approach so silent shall admire,
Who on thy thunder still their thoughts employ,
And greet thy landing with a trembling joy.

On heroes thus the prophet's fate is thrown,
Admir'd by ev'ry nation but their own;
Yet while our factious Jews his worth deny,
Their aching conscience gives their tongue the lie.

E'en in the worst of men, the noblest parts
Confess him, and he triumphs in their hearts,
Who to his king the best respects commend
Of subject, soldier, kinsman, prince, and friend;
All sacred names of most divine esteem,
And to perfection all sustain'd by him;
Wise, just, and constant, courtly without art,
Swift to discern and to reward desert:
No hour of his in fruitless ease destroy'd,
But on the noblest subjects still employ'd:
Whose steady soul ne'er learnt to separate
Between his monarch's int'rest and the state;
But heaps those blessings on the royal head,
Which he well knows must be on subjects shed.

On what pretence could then the vulgar rage
Against his worth and native rights engage?
Religious fears their arguments are made,
Religious fears his sacred rights invade!
Of future superstition they complain,
And Jebusitic worship in his reign:
With such alarms his foes the crowd deceive,
With dangers fright which not themselves believe.

Since nothing can our sacred rights remove,
Whate'er the faith of the successor prove:
Our Jews their ark shall undisturb'd retain,
At least while their religion is their gain;
Who know, by old experience, Baal's commands [lands;
Not only claim'd their conscience, but their They grudg'd God's tithes, how therefore shall they yield

An idol full possession of the field?
Grant such a prince enthron'd, we must confess
The people's sufferings than that monarch's less,

Who must to hard conditions still be bound,
And for his quiet with the crowd compound;
Or, should his thoughts to tyranny incline,
Where are the means to compass the design?
Our crown's revenues are too short a store,
And jealous sanhedrims would give no more.

As vain our fears of Egypt's potent aid;
Not so has Pharaoh learnt ambition's trade;
Nor ever with such measures can comply,
As shock the common rules of policy;
None dread like him the growth of Israel's king,

And he alone sufficient aids can bring;
Who knows that prince to Egypt can give law;
That on our stubborn tribes his yoke could
draw,

At such profound expence he has not stood,
Nor dyed for this his hands so deep in blood;
Would ne'er through wrong and right his progress take,

Grudge his own rest, and keep the world awake,
To fix a lawless prince on Judah's throne,
First to invade our rights, and then his own;
His dear-gain'd conquests cheaply to despoil,
And reap the harvests of his crimes and toil.
We grant his wealth vast as our ocean's sand,
And curse its fatal influence on our land,

Which our brib'd Jews so num'rously partake,
That e'en an host his pensioners would make;
From these deceivers our divisions spring,
Our weakness, and the growth of Egypt's king;
These, with pretended friendship to the state,
Our crowds' suspicion of their prince create;
Both pleas'd and frighten'd with the specious
To guard their sacred rights and property; [cry,
To ruin thus the chosen flock are sold,
While wolves are ta'en for guardians of the fold;

Seduc'd by these, we groundlessly complain,
And loathe the manna of a gentle reign:
Thus our forefathers' crooked paths are trod;
We trust our prince no more than they their God.

But all in vain our reas'ning prophets preach
To those whom sad experience ne'er could teach; [scars,

Who can commence new broils in bleeding
And fresh remembrance of intestine wars;

When the same household mortal foes did yield, [field;

And brothers stain'd with brothers' blood the
When sons' curst steel the fathers' gore did stain,

And mothers mourn'd for sons by fathers slain!
When thick as Egypt's locusts on the sand,
Our tribes lay slaughter'd through the promis'd land,

Whose few survivors with worse fate remain,
To drag the bondage of a tyrant's reign:
Which scene of woes, unknowing, we renew,
And madly, e'en those ills we fear, pursue;
While Pharaoh laughs at our domestic broils,
And safely crowds his tents with nations' spoils.

Yet our fierce sanhedrim in restless rage
Against our absent hero still engage;
And chiefly urge, such did their phrenzy prove,
The only suit their prince forbids to move;
Which, till obtain'd, they cease affairs of state,
And real dangers wave for groundless hate.

Long David's patience waits relief to bring,
With all th' indulgence of a lawful king,
Expecting till the troubled waves would cease,
But found the raging billows still increase.

The crowd, whose insolence forbearance swells,
While he forgives too far, almost rebels.

At last his deep resentment silence broke,
Th' imperial palace shook while thus he spoke:

Then Justice wake, and Rigor take her time,
For, lo! our mercy is become our crime.
While halting Punishment her stroke delays,
Our sov'reign right, heaven's sacred trust,
decays!

For whose support e'en subjects' interest calls,
Woe to that kingdom where the monarch falls!
That prince who yields the least of regal sway,
So far his people's freedom does betray.

Right lives by law, and law subsists by pow'r;
Disarm the shepherd, wolves the flock devour.
Hard lot of empire o'er a stubborn race,
Which Heav'n itself in vain has tried with grace!

When will our reason's long-charm'd eyes
unclose,

And Israel judge between her friends and foes?
When shall we see expir'd deceivers' sway,
And credit what our God and monarchs say?

Dissembled patriots, brib'd with Egypt's gold,
E'en sanhedrims in blind obedience hold;

Those patriots falsehood in their actions see,
And judge by the pernicious fruit the tree;

If aught for which so loudly they declaim,
Religion, laws, and freedom, were their aim;

Our senates in due methods they had led,
T' avoid those mischiefs which they seem'd to dread:

But first, ere yet they propp'd the sinking state,
T' impeach and charge, as urg'd by private hate;

Proves that they ne'er believ'd the fears they
press'd,

But barb'rously destroy'd the nation's rest!
O! whither will ungovern'd senates drive,

And to what bounds licentious votes arrive?
When their injustice we are press'd to share;

The monarch urg'd t' exclude the lawful heir;
Are princes thus distinguish'd from the crowd,

And this the privilege of royal blood?
But grant we should confirm the wrongs they press,

His sufferings yet were than the people's less;
Condemn'd for life the murdering sword to wield,

And on their heirs entail a bloody field:
Thus madly their own freedom they betray,

And for th' oppression which they fear make
way;

Succession fix'd by Heav'n, the kingdom's bar,
Which once dissolv'd admits the flood of war:

Waste, rapine, spoil, without, th' assault begin;
And our mad tribes supplant the fence within.

Since then their good they will not understand,
'Tis time to take the monarch's pow'r in hand;

Authority and force to join with skill,
And save the lunatics against their will.

The same rough means that 'suage the crowd,
appease

Our senates raging with the crowd's disease.
Henceforth unbiass'd measures let them draw

From no false gloss, but genuine text of law;
Nor urge those crimes upon religion's score,

Themselves so much in Jebusites abhor.
Whom laws convict, and only they, shall bleed;

Nor Pharisees by Pharisees be freed.
Impartial justice from our throne shall show'r;

All shall have right, and we our sov'reign
pow'r.

He said: th' attendants heard with awful joy,
And glad presages their fix'd thoughts employ;

From Hebron now the suffering heir return'd,
A realm that long with civil discord mourn'd,

Till his approach, like some arriving God,
Compos'd and heal'd the place of his abode;

The deluge check'd that to Judea spread,
And stopp'd sedition at the fountain's head.

Thus in forgiving David's paths he drives,
And, chas'd from Israel, Israel's peace contrives.

The field confess'd his pow'r in arms before,
 And seas proclaim'd his triumphs to the shore;
 As nobly has his sway in Hebron shown,
 How fit t' inherit godlike David's throne.
 Through Sion's streets his glad arrival's spread,
 And conscious faction shrinks her snaky head;
 His train their sufferings think o'erpaid, to see
 The crowd's applause with virtue once agree.
 Success charms all, but zeal for worth distrest,
 A virtue proper to the brave and best;
 'Mongst whom was Jothran, Jothran always bent

To serve the crown, and loyal by descent;
 Whose constancy so firm, and conduct just,
 Deserv'd at once two royal masters' trust;
 Who Tyre's proud arms had manfully withstood

On seas, and gather'd laurels from the flood;
 Of learning yet no portion was denied,
 Friend to the Muses, and the Muses' pride.
 Nor can Benaiah's worth forgotten lie,
 Of steady soul when public storms were high;
 Whose conduct, while the Moor fierce onsets made,

Secur'd at once our honor and our trade.
 Such were the chiefs who most his sufferings mourn'd,

And view'd with silent joy the prince return'd;
 While those that sought his absence to betray,
 Press first their nauseous false respects to pay;
 Him still th' officious hypocrites molest,
 And with malicious duty break his rest.

While real transports thus his friends employ,
 And foes are loud in their dissembled joy,
 His triumphs, so resounded far and near,
 Miss'd not his young ambitious rival's ear;
 And as when joyful hunters' clam'rous train
 Some slumb'ring lion wakes in Moab's plain,
 Who oft had forc'd the bold assailants yield,
 And scatter'd his pursuers through the field;
 Disdaining, furls his main and tears the ground,
 His eyes inflaming all the desert round,
 With roar of seas directs his chasers' way,
 Provokes from far, and dares them to the fray:
 Such rage storm'd now in Absalom's fair breast,
 Such indignation his fir'd eyes confess'd;
 Where now was the instructor of his pride?
 Slept the old pilot in so rough a tide?
 Whose wiles had from the happy shore betray'd,
 And thus on shelves the credulous youth convey'd.

In deep revolving thought he weighs his state,
 Secure of craft, nor doubts to baffle fate;
 At least, if his storm'd bark should go adrift,
 To baulk his charge, and for himself to shift,
 In which his dextrous wit had oft been shown,
 And in the wreck of kingdoms sav'd his own.
 But now, with more than common danger prest,

Of various resolutions stands possest,
 Perceives the crowd's unstable zeal decay,
 Lest their recanting chief the cause betray:
 Who on a father's grace his hopes may ground,
 And for his pardon with their heads compound.

Him therefore, ere his fortune slip her time,
 The statesman plots t' engage in some bold crime,

Past pardon, whether to attempt his bed;
 Or threat with open arms the royal head,
 Or other daring method, and unjust,
 That may confirm him in the people's trust:
 But failing thus t' ensnare him, nor secure
 How long his foil'd ambition may endure,
 Plots next to lay him by, as past his date,
 And try some new pretender's luckier fate;
 Whose hopes with equal toil he would pursue,
 Nor cares what claimer's crown'd, except the true.

Wake, Absalom, approaching ruin shun,
 And see, oh see, for whom thou art undone!
 How are thy honors and thy fame betray'd,
 The property of desp'rate villains made!
 Lost pow'r and conscious fear their crimes create,

And guilt in them was little less than fate:
 But why shouldst thou, from ev'ry grievance free,

Forsake thy vineyards for their stormy sea?
 For thee did Canaan's milk and honey flow;
 Love dress'd thy bow'rs, and laurels sought thy brow;

Preferment, wealth, and pow'r, thy vassals were,
 And of a monarch all things but the care.
 Oh, should our crimes again that curse draw down,

And rebel-arms once more attempt the crown,
 Sure ruin waits unhappy Absalom,
 Alike by conquest or defeat undone.
 Who could relentless see such youth and charms
 Expire with wretched fate in impious arms?
 A prince so form'd with earth's and heaven's applause

To triumph o'er crown'd heads in David's cause:

Or, grant him victor, still his hopes must fail,
 Who conquering would not for himself prevail;
 The faction whom he trusts for future sway,
 Him and the public would alike betray;
 Amongst themselves divide the captive state,
 And found their hydra empire in his fate!
 Thus having beat the clouds with painful flight,
 The pitied youth, with sceptres in his sight,
 (So have their cruel politics decreed,)
 Must, by that crew that made him guilty bleed!
 For could their pride brook any prince's sway,
 Whom but mild David would they choose t' obey?

Who once at such a gentle reign repine,
 The fall of monarchy itself design;
 From hate to that their reformations spring,
 And David not the grievance, but the king.
 Seiz'd now with panic fear the faction lies,
 Lest this clear truth strike Absalom's charm'd eyes;

Lest he perceive, from long enchantment free,
 What all beside the flatter'd youth must see.
 But whate'er doubts his troubled bosom swell,
 Fair carriage still became Achitophel;

Who now an envious festival installs,
 And to survey their strength the faction calls,
 Which fraud, religious worship too must gild;
 But oh, how weakly does sedition build!
 For, lo! the royal mandate issues forth,
 Dashing at once their treason, zeal, and mirth!
 So have I seen disastrous chance invade,
 Where careful emmets had their forage laid;
 Whether fierce Vulcan's rage the furzy plain
 Had seiz'd, engender'd by some careless swain;
 Or swelling Neptune lawless inroads made,
 And to their cell of store his flood convey'd;
 The commonwealth broke up, distracted go,
 And in wild haste their loaded mates o'erthrow:
 E'en so our scatter'd mates confus'dly meet,
 With boil'd, bake, roast, all justling in the street;

Dejected all, and ruefully dismay'd,
 For shekel without treat or treason paid.

Sedition's dark eclipse now fainter shows,
 More bright each hour the royal planet grows,
 Of force the clouds of envy to disperse,
 In kind conjunction of assisting stars.
 Here, lab'ring Muse, those glorious chiefs relate,
 That turn'd the doubtful scale of David's fate;
 The rest of that illustrious band rehearse,
 Immortaliz'd in laurel'd Asaph's verse:
 Hard task! yet will not I thy flight recall;
 View heaven, and then enjoy thy glorious fall.

First write Bezaliel, whose illustrious name
 Forestals our praise, and gives his poet fame.
 The Kenites' rocky province his command,
 A barren limb of fertile Canaan's land;
 Which for its generous natives yet could be Held worthy such a president as he!
 Bezaliel with such grace and virtue fraught,
 Serene his looks, serene his life and thought;
 On whom so largely nature heap'd her store,
 There scarce remain'd for arts to give him more!
 To aid the crown and state his greatest zeal,
 His second care that service to conceal:
 Of dues observant, firm to ev'ry trust,
 And to the needy always more than just;
 Who truth from specious falsehood can divide,
 Has all the gownsmen's skill without their pride:
 Thus crown'd with worth from heights of honor won,

See all his glories copied in his son,
 Whose forward fame should ev'ry Muse engage;
 Whose youth boasts skill denied to others' age.
 Men, manners, language, books of noblest kind,
 Already are the conquest of his mind;
 Whose loyalty before its date was prime,
 Nor waited the dull course of rolling time:
 The monster Faction early he dismay'd,
 And David's cause long since confess'd his aid.

Brave Abdael o'er the prophet's school was
 plac'd;
 Abdael with all his father's virtue grac'd;
 A hero, who, while stars look'd wond'ring down,
 Without one Hebrew's blood restor'd the crown.
 That praise was his; what therefore did remain
 For following chiefs, but boldly to maintain

That crown restor'd? and in this rank of fame,
 Brave Abdael with the first a place must claim.
 Proceed, illustrious, happy chief! proceed,
 Foreseize the garlands for thy brow decreed,
 While th' inspir'd tribe attend with noblest strain
 To register the glories thou shalt gain:
 For sure the dew shall Gilboah's hills forsake,
 And Jordan mix his stream with Sodom's lake;
 Or seas retir'd their secret stores disclose,
 And to the sun their scaly broad expose;
 Or swell'd above the cliffs their billows raise,
 Before the Muses leave their patron's praise.

Eliab our next labor does invite,
 And hard the task to do Eliab right:
 Long with the royal wanderer he rov'd,
 And firm in all the turns of fortune prov'd!
 Such ancient service, and desert so large,
 Well claim'd the royal household for his charge;
 His age with only one mild heiress blest,
 In all the bloom of smiling nature drest,
 And blest again to see his flow'r allied
 To David's stock, and made young Othniel's bride!

The bright restorer of his father's youth,
 Devoted to a son's and subject's truth:
 Resolv'd to bear that prize of beauty home,
 So bravely sought, while sought by Absalom.
 Ah prince! th' illustrious planet of thy birth,
 And thy more pow'rful virtue, guard thy worth!
 That no Achitophel thy ruin boast!
 Israel too much in one such wreck has lost.

E'en envy must consent to Helon's worth,
 Whose soul, though Egypt glories in his birth,
 Could for our captive ark its zeal retain,
 And Pharaoh's altars in their pomp disdain:
 To slight his goods was small; with nobler pride,
 He all th' allurements of his court defied;
 Whom profit nor example could betray,
 But Israel's friend, and true to David's sway.
 What acts of favor in his province fall,
 On merit he confers, and freely all.

Our list of nobles next let Amri grace,
 Whose merits claim'd the Abethdin's high place;
 Who, with a loyalty that did excel,
 Brought all th' endowments of Achitophel.
 Sincere was Amri, and not only knew,
 But Israel's sanctions into practice drew;
 Our laws, that did a boundless ocean seem,
 Were coasted all, and fathom'd all by him.
 No rabbin speaks like him their mystic sense,
 So just, and with such charms of eloquence:
 To whom the double blessing does belong,
 With Moses's inspiration, Aaron's tongue.
 Than Sheva none more loyal zeal have shown,
 Wakeful as Judah's lion for the crown,
 Who for that cause still combats in his age,
 For which his youth with danger did engage.
 In vain our factious priests the cant revive;
 In vain seditious scribes with libel strive
 T' inflame the crowd; while he with watchful
 eye

Observes, and shoots their treasons as they fly;
 Their weekly frauds his keen replies detect;
 He undeceives more fast than they infect.

So Moses, when the pest on legions prey'd,
 Advanc'd his signal, and the plague was stay'd.
 Once more, my fainting Muse, thy pinions
 try,

And strength's exhausted store let love supply.
 What tribute, Asaph, shall we render thee?
 We'll crown thee with a wreath from thy own
 tree!

Thy laurel grove no envy's flash can blast:
 The song of Asaph shall for ever last.
 With wonder late posterity shall dwell
 On Absalom and false Achitophel:
 Thy strain shall be our slumb'ring prophet's
 dream,

And when our Sion virgins sing their theme,
 Our jubilees shall with thy verse be grac'd;
 The song of Asaph shall for ever last. [tame!

How fierce his satire loos'd! restrain'd, how
 How tender of th' offending young man's fame!
 How well his worth and brave adventures styl'd!
 Just to his virtues, to his error mild.

No page of thine, that fears the strictest view,
 But teems with just reproof, or praise as true.

Not Eden could a fairer prospect yield;
 All paradise without one barren field:
 Whose wit the censure of his foes has past;
 The song of Asaph shall for ever last.

What praise for such rich strains shall we allow?

What just rewards the grateful crown bestow?
 While bees in flow'rs rejoice, and flow'rs in dew,
 While stars and fountains to their course are true;
 While Judah's throne and Sion's rock stand fast,
 The song of Asaph and the fame shall last.

Still Hebron's honor'd happy soil retains
 Our royal hero's beauteous dear remains;
 Who now sails off with winds nor wishes slack,
 To bring his suff'rings' bright companion back,
 But ere such transport can our sense employ,
 A bitter grief must poison half our joy;
 Nor can our coasts restor'd those blessings see
 Without a bribe to envious destiny!
 Curs'd Sodom's doom for ever fix the tide
 Where, by inglorious chance, the valiant died!
 Give not insulting Askalon to know,
 Nor let Gath's daughters triumph in our woe!
 No sailor with the news swell Egypt's pride,
 By what inglorious fate our valiant died!
 Weep, Arnon! Jordan, weep thy fountains dry,
 While Sion's rock dissolves for a supply.

Calm were the elements, night's silence deep,
 The waves scarce murmuring, and the winds
 Yet fate for ruin takes so still an hour, [asleep;
 And treach'rous sands the princely bark devour;
 Then death unworthy seiz'd a gen'rous race,
 To virtue's scandal, and the stars' disgrace!
 Oh! had th' indulgent pow'rs vouchsaf'd to
 Instead of faithless shelves, a listed field; [yield,
 A listed field of Heaven's and David's foes,
 Fierce as the troops that did his youth oppose;
 Each life had on his slaughter'd heap retir'd,
 Not tamely and unconq'ring thus expir'd:
 But destiny is now their only foe,
 And dying e'en o'er that they triumph too;

With loud last breaths their master's 'scape applaud, [fraud;
 Of whom kind force could scarce the fates de-
 Who for such followers lost, O matchless mind!
 At his own safety now almost repin'd!
 Say, royal sir, by all your fame in arms,
 Your praise in peace, and by Urania's charms,
 If all your sufferings past so nearly press'd,
 Or pierc'd with half so painful grief, your breast?
 Thus some diviner Muse her hero forms,
 Not sooth'd in soft delights, but toss'd in storms;
 Nor stretch'd on roses in the myrtle grove,
 Nor crowns his days with mirth, his nights with
 love;

But far remov'd in thund'ring camps is found,
 His slumbers short, his bed the herbless ground:
 In tasks of danger always seen the first,
 Feeds from the hedge, and slakes with ice his thirst.

Long must his patience strive with fortune's rage,
 And long opposing gods themselves engage:
 Must see his country flame, his friends destroy'd,
 Before the promis'd empire be enjoy'd:
 Such toils of fate must build a man of fame,
 And such to Israel's crown, the godlike David came.

What sudden beams dispel the clouds so fast,
 Whose drenching rains laid all our vineyards
 waste?

The spring so far behind her course delay'd,
 On th' instant is in all her bloom array'd;
 The winds breathe low, the elements serene;
 Yet mark what motion in the waves is seen!
 Thronging and busy as Hyblean swarms,
 Or straggled soldiers summon'd to their arms.
 See where the princely bark in loosest pride,
 With all her guardian fleet, adorns the tide!
 High on her deck the royal lovers stand,
 Our crimes to pardon ere he touch'd our land.
 Welcome to Israel and to David's breast!
 Here all your toils, here all your suff'rings rest.

This year did Ziloah rule Jerusalem,
 And boldly all sedition's syrtes stem.
 Howe'er encumber'd with a viler pair
 Than Ziph or Shimei to assist the chair;
 Yet Ziloah's loyal labors so prevail'd,
 That faction at the next election fail'd;
 When e'en the common cry did justice sound,
 And merit by the multitude was crown'd:
 With David then was Israel's peace restor'd;
 Crowds mourn'd their error, and obey'd their lord.

§ 26. Palamon and Arcite: or, the Knight's Tale. Dryden.

BOOK I.

IN days of old, there liv'd of mighty fame,
A valiant prince, and Theseus was his name :
A chief who more in feats of arms excell'd,
The rising nor the setting sun beheld.
Of Athens he was lord ; much land he won,
And added foreign countries to his crown.
In Scythia with the warrior queen he strove,
Whom first by force he conquer'd, then by love ;
He brought in triumph back the beauteous
dame,
With whom her sister, fair Emilia came.
With honor to his home let Theseus ride,
With love to friend, and fortune for his guide,
And his victorious army at his side.
I pass their warlike pomp, their proud array,
Their shouts, their songs, their welcome on the
way :

But, were it not too long, I would recite
The fear of Amazons, the fatal fight
Betwixt the hardy queen and hero knight ;
The town besieg'd, and how much blood it cost
The female army and th' Athenian host ;
The spousals of Hippolita the queen ;
What tilts and tourneys at the feast were seen ;
The storm at their return, the ladies' fear :
But these and other things, I must forbear.
The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough ;
The remnant of my tale is of a length
To tire your patience, and to waste my strength ;
And trivial accidents shall be forborne,
That others may have time to take their turn ;
As was at first enjoin'd us by mine host,
That he whose tale is best, and pleases most,
Should win his supper at our common cost.

And therefore where I left I will pursue
This ancient story, whether false or true,
In hope it may be mended with a new.
The prince I mention'd, full of high renown,
In this array drew near the Athenian town ;
When in his pomp and utmost of his pride,
Marching he chanc'd to cast his eye aside,
And saw a choir of mourning dames, who lay
By two and two across the common way :
At his approach they rais'd a rueful cry, [high,
And beat their breasts, and held their hands on Creeping and crying, till they seiz'd at last
His courser's bridle, and his feet embrac'd.

Tell me, said Theseus, what and whence you
are,

And why this fun'ral pageant you prepare :
Is this the welcome of my worthy deeds,
To meet my triumph in ill-omen'd weeds ?
Or envy you my praise, and would destroy
With grief my pleasures, and pollute my joy ?
Or are you injur'd, and demand relief ?
Name your request, and I will ease your grief.
The most in years of all the mourning train,
Began (but swooned first away for pain) ;
Then scarce recover'd spoke : Nor envy we Thy great renown, nor grudge thy victory :

'Tis thine, O king, th' afflicted to redress,
 And fame has fill'd the world with thy success:
 We wretched women sue for that alone,
 Which of thy goodness is refus'd to none;
 Let fall some drops of pity on our grief,
 If that we beg be just, and we deserve relief:
 For none of us, who now thy grace implore,
 But held the rank of sov'reign queen before;
 Till, thanks to giddy chance, which never bears
 That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
 She cast us headlong from our high estate;
 And here in hope of thy return we wait:
 And long have waited in the temple nigh,
 Built to the gracious goddess Clemency. [bears,
 But rev'rence thou the pow'r whose name it
 Relieve th' opprest, and wipe the widow's tears.
 I, wretched I, have other fortune seen,
 The wife of Capaneus, and once a queen:
 At Thebes he fell; curst be the fatal day;
 And all the rest thou seest in this array,
 To make their moan, their lords in battle lost,
 Before that town besieg'd by our confed'rate host;

But Creon, old and impious, who commands
 The Theban city, and usurps the lands,
 Denies the rites of fun'ral fires to those Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his foes.
 Unburn'd, unburied, on a heap they lie;
 Such is their fate, and such his tyranny;
 No friend has leave to bear away the dead,
 But with their lifeless limbs his hounds are fed.
 At this she shriek'd aloud; the mournful train
 Echoed her grief, and grov'ling on the plain,
 With groans, and hands upheld, to move his Besought his pity to their helpless kind! [mind,
 The prince was touch'd, his tears began to
 flow,

And, as his tender heart would break in two,
 He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
 So wretched now, so fortunate before.
 Then lightly from his lofty steed he flew,
 And raising one by one the suppliant crew,
 To comfort each, full solemnly he swore,
 That by the faith which knights to knighthood
 bore,

And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,
 He would not cease, till he reveng'd their wrongs;
 That Greece should see perform'd what he de-
 And cruel Creon find his just reward. [clar'd;
 He said no more, but, shunning all delay,
 Rode on, nor enter'd Athens on his way;
 But left his sister and his queen behind,
 And wav'd his royal banner in the wind;
 Where in an argent field the god of war
 Was drawn triumphant on his iron car:
 Red was his sword, and shield, and whole attire;

And all the godhead seem'd to glow with fire;
 E'en the ground glitter'd where the standard flew,
 And the green grass was dy'd to sanguine hue.
 High on his pointed lance his pennon bore
 His Cretan fight, th' conquer'd Minotaur;
 The soldiers shout around with gen'rous rage,
 And in that victory their own presage.

He prais'd their ardor, inly pleas'd to see
 His host the flow'r of Grecian chivalry.
 All day he march'd, and all th' ensuing night;
 And saw the city with returning light.
 The process of the war I need not tell,
 How Theseus conquer'd, and how Creon fell;
 Or after, how by storm the walls were won,
 Or how the victor sack'd and burn'd the town;
 How to the ladies he restor'd again
 The bodies of their lords in battle slain;
 And with what ancient rites they were interr'd:
 All these to fitter times shall be deferr'd.
 I spare the widows' tears, their woeful cries,
 And howling at their husbands' obsequies;
 How Theseus at these fun'erals did assist,
 And with what gifts the mourning dames dis-
 miss'd.

Thus, when the victor chief had Creon slain,
 And conquer'd Thebes, he pitch'd upon the plain
 His mighty camp, and when the day return'd,
 The country wasted, and the hamlets burn'd;
 And left the pillagers, to rapine bred,
 Without control to strip and spoil the dead.

There, in a heap of slain, among the rest,
 Two youthful knights they found, beneath a load opprest [sent,
 Of slaughter'd foes, whom first to death they
 The trophies of their strength, a bloody monument:

Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
 Whom kinsmen to the crown the heralds deem'd:
 That day in equal arms they fought for fame;
 Their swords, their shields, their surcoats, were the same.

Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
 Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grisly
 wound;

Nor well alive, nor wholly dead, they were,
 But some faint signs of feeble life appear;
 The wand'ring breath was on the wing to part,
 Weak was the pulse, and hardly heav'd the heart;
 These two were sister's sons, and Arcite one,
 Much fam'd in fields, with valiant Palamon:
 From these their costly arms the spoilers rent;
 And softly both convey'd to Theseus' tent;
 Whom known of Creon's line, and cur'd with care,
 He to his city sent, as pris'ners of the war,
 Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie
 In durance, doom'd a ling'ring death to die.
 This done, he march'd away with warlike
 sound,

And to his Athens turn'd with laurels crown'd,
 Where happy long he liv'd, much lov'd, and more renown'd.

But in the tow'r, and never to be loos'd,
 The woeful captive kinsmen are inclos'd.

Thus year by year they pass, and day by day,
 Till once, 'twas on the morn of cheerful May,
 The young Emilia, fairer to be seen
 Than the fair lily on the flow'ry green;
 More fresh than May herself in blossoms new,
 For with the rosy color strove her hue,
 Wak'd, as her custom was, before the day,
 To do th' observance due to sprightly May;

For sprightly May commands our youth to keep
The vigils of her night, and breaks their slug-
gard sleep ; [moves ;
Each gentle breast with kindly warmth she
Inspires new flames, revives extinguish'd loves.
In this remembrance, Emily ere day
Arose, and dress'd herself in rich array ;
Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair,
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair :
A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose, and wanton'd in the wind :
Aurora had but newly chas'd the night,
And purpled o'er the sky with blushing light,
When to the garden walk she took her way,
To sport and trip along in cool of day,
And offer maiden vows in honor of the May.

At ev'ry turn she made a little stand,
And thrust among the thorns her lily hand
To draw the rose ; and ev'ry rose she drew,
She shook the stalk, and brush'd away the dew.
Then party-color'd flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head :
This done, she sung and carol'd out so clear,
That men and angels might rejoice to hear :
E'en wond'ring Philomel forgot to sing ;
And learn'd from her to welcome in the spring.
The tow'r, of which before was mention made,
Within whose keep the captive knights were laid,

Built of a large extent and strong withal,
Was one partition of the palace wall :
The garden was inclos'd within the square,
Where young Emilia took the morning air.

It happen'd Palamon, the pris'ner knight,
Restless for woe, arose before the light,
And, with his jailer's leave, desir'd to breathe
An air more wholesome than the damps beneath.
This granted, to the tow'r he took his way,
Cheer'd with the promise of a glorious day :
Then cast a languishing regard around,
And saw with hateful eyes the temples crown'd
With golden spires, and all the hostile ground.
He sigh'd, and turn'd his eyes because he knew
'Twas but a larger gaol he had in view :
Then look'd before, and from the castle's height
Beheld a nearer and more pleasing sight :
The garden, which before he had not seen,
In spring's new liv'ry clad of white and green,
Fresh flow'rs in wide parterres and shady walks between.

This view'd, but not enjoy'd, with arms across
He stood, reflecting on his country's loss ;
Himself an object of the public scorn,
And often wish'd he never had been born.
At last, for so his destiny requir'd,
With walking giddy, and with thinking tir'd,
He through a little window cast his sight,
Though thick of bars, that gave a scanty light :
But e'en that glimm'ring serv'd him to descry
Th' inevitable charms of Emily. [smart,

Scarce had he seen, but seiz'd with sudden
Stung to the quick, he felt it at his heart ;
Struck blind with overpow'ring light he stood,
Then started back amaz'd, and cried aloud.

Young Arcite heard ; and up he ran with haste,
To help his friend, and in his arms embrac'd ;
And ask'd him why he look'd so deadly wan,
And whence and how his change of cheer
began ?

Or who had done th' offence ? But if, said he,
Your grief alone is hard captivity,
For love of heav'n, with patience undergo
A cureless ill, since fate will have it so :
So stood on horoscope in chains to lie,
And Saturn in the dungeon of the sky,
Or other baleful aspect, rul'd our birth,
When all the friendly stars were under earth ;
Whate'er betides, my destiny 'tis done ;
And better bear, like men, than vainly seek to shun.

Nor of my bonds, said Palamon again,
Nor of unhappy planets, I complain :
But when my mortal anguish caus'd my cry,
That moment I was hurt through either eye ;
Pierc'd with a random shaft, I faint away,
And perish with insensible decay :
A glance of some new goddess gave the wound,
Whom, like Acteon, unaware I found.
Look how she walks along yon shady space,
Not Juno moves with more majestic grace ;
And all the Cyprian queen is in her face.
If thou art Venus (for thy charms confess
That face was form'd in heaven ; or art thou less ;
Disguis'd in habit, undisguis'd in shape),
O help us captives from our chains to 'scape ;
But if our doom be pass'd in bonds to lie
For life, and in a loathsome dungeon die ;
Then be thy wrath appeas'd with our disgrace,
And show compassion to the Theban race,
Oppress'd by tyrant pow'r ! While yet he spoke,
Arcite on Emily had fix'd his look ;
The fatal dart a ready passage found,
And deep within his heart infix'd the wound :
So that if Palamon were wounded sore,
Arcite was hurt as much as he, or more :
Then from his inmost soul he sigh'd, and said,
The beauty I beheld has struck me dead :
Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance ;
Poison is in her eyes, and death in ev'ry glance.
O, I must ask ; nor ask alone, but move
Her mind to mercy, or must die for love.

Thus Arcite : and thus Palamon replies
(Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes) :
Speak'st thou in earnest, or in jesting vain ?
Jesting, said Arcite, suits but ill with pain.
It suits far worse (said Palamon again,
And bent his brows,) with men who honor
weigh,

Their faith to break, their friendship to betray ;
But worst with thee of noble lineage born,
My kinsman, and in arms my brother sworn.
Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both ;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love ?
To this before the gods we gave our hands,
And nothing but our death can break the bands.

This binds thee, then, to further my design,
As I am bound by vow to further thine:
Nor canst, nor dar'st thou, traitor, on the plain
Approach my honor, or thine own maintain,
Since thou art of my council, and the friend
Whose faith I trust, and on whose care depend:

And wouldst thou court my lady's love, which I Much rather than rehearse would choose to die?

But thou, false Arcite, never shalt obtain
Thy bad pretence. I told thee first my pain:
For first my love began ere thine was born:
Thou, as my counsel and my brother sworn,
Art bound t' assist my eldership of right,
Or justly to be deem'd a perjurd knight.

Thus Palamon; but Arcite with disdain,
In haughty language, thus replied again:
Forsworn thyself; the traitor's odious name
I first return, and then disprove thy claim.
If love be passion, and that passion nurs'd
With strong desires, I lov'd the lady first.
Canst thou pretend desire, whom zeal inflam'd
To worship, and a pow'r celestial nam'd?
Thine was devotion to the blest above;
I saw the woman, and desir'd her love;
First own'd my passion, and to thee commend
Th' important secret, as my chosen friend.
Suppose (which yet I grant not) thy desire
A moment elder than my rival fire:
Can chance of seeing first thy title prove?
And know'st thou not, no law is made for love?
Law is to things which to free choice relate;
Love is not in our choice, but in our fate;
Laws are but positive; love's pow'r we see
Is nature's sanction, and her first decree.
Each day we break the bond of human laws
For love, and vindicate the common cause.
Laws for defence of civil rights are plac'd;
Love throws the fences down, and makes a
gen'ral waste:
Maids, widows, wives, without distinction fall;
The sweeping deluge, Love, comes on, and covers all.

If then the laws of friendship I transgress,
I keep the greater, while I break the less;
And both are mad alike, since neither can possess;

Both hopeless to be ransom'd, never more
To see the sun, but as he passes o'er.

Like Æsop's hounds contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone;
The fruitless fight continued all the day;
A cur came by, and snatch'd the prize away.
As courtiers therefore juggle for a grant,
And when they break their friendship plead
their want,

So thou, if fortune will thy suit advance,
Love on, nor envy me my equal chance:
For I must love, and am resolv'd to try
My fate, or, failing in th' adventure, die.

Great was their strife, which hourly was re-
new'd,

'Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd:

Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand,

But when they met they made a surly stand;
And glar'd like angry lions as they pass'd,
And wish'd that ev'ry look might be their last.

It chanc'd at length, Pirithous came t' attend
This worthy Theseus, his familiar friend;
Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man.
Companions of the war; and lov'd so well,
That when one died, as ancient stories tell,
His fellow to redeem him went to hell.

But to pursue my tale; to welcome home
His warlike brother, is Pirithous come:
Arcite of Thebes was known in arms long since,

And honor'd by this young Thessalian prince.
Theseus, to gratify his friend and guest,
Who made our Arcite's freedom his request,
Restor'd to liberty our captive knight,
But on these hard conditions I recite:
That if hereafter Arcite should be found
Within the compass of Athenian ground,
By day or night, or on whate'er pretence,
His head should pay the forfeit of th' offence.
To this Pirithous for his friend agreed,
And on his promise was the pris'ner freed.

Unpleas'd and pensive thus he takes his way,
At his own peril; for his life must pay.
Who now but Arcite mourns his bitter fate,
Finds his dear purchase, and repents too late?
What have I gain'd, he said, in prison pent,
If I but change my bonds for banishment?
And banish'd from her sight, I suffer more
In freedom, than I felt in bonds before;
Forc'd from her presence, and condemn'd to
love;

Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve!
Heav'n is not but where Emily abides;
And where she's absent all is hell besides.
Next to my day of birth was that accurs'd,
Which bound my friendship to Pirithous first;
Had I not known that prince, I still had been
In bondage, and had still Emilia seen:
For though I never can her grace deserve,
'Tis recompense enough to see and serve.
O Palamon, my kinsman and my friend,
How much more happy fates thy love attend!
Thine is th' adventure, thine the victory;
Well has thy fortune turn'd the dice for thee:
Thou on that angel's face mayst feed thine eyes,
In prison—no—but blissful paradise!
Thou daily seest that sun of beauty shine,
And lov'st at least in love's extremest line.
I mourn in absence, love's external night;
And who can tell, but, since thou hast her
sight,

And art a comely, young, and valiant knight,
Fortune (a various pow'r) may cease to frown,
And by some ways unknown thy wishes crown?
But I, the most forlorn of human kind,
Nor help can hope, nor remedy can find;
But doom'd to drag my loathsome life in care,
For my reward, must end it in despair.

Fire, water, air, and earth, and force of fates
That governs all, and Heav'n that all creates,
Nor art, nor nature's hand, can ease my grief;
Nothing but death, the wretch's last relief:
Then farewell youth, and all the joys that dwell
With youth and life, and life itself farewell.

But why, alas! do mortal men in vain
Of fortune, fate, or providence complain?
God gives us what he knows our wants require,
And better things than those which we desire.
Some pray for riches, riches they obtain;
But, watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain:

Some pray from prison to be freed; and come,
When guilty of their vows, to fall at home;
Murder'd by those they trusted with their life,
A favor'd servant, or a bosom wife.
Such dear-bought blessings happen ev'ry day,
Because we know not for what things to pray.
Like drunken sots about the street we roam:
Well knows the sot he has a certain home;
Yet knows not how to find th' uncertain place,
And blunders on, and staggers ev'ry pace.
Thus all seek happiness, but few can find:
For far the greater part of men are blind.
This is my case, who thought our utmost good
Was in one word of freedom understood:
The fatal blessing came: from prison free,
I starve abroad, and lose the sight of Emily.

Thus Arcite: but if Arcite thus deplore
His suff'rings, Palamon yet suffers more.
For when he knew his rival freed and gone,
He swells with wrath, he makes outrageous moan: [ground;

He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the
The hollow tow'r with clamors rings around:
With briny tears he bath'd his fetter'd feet,
And dropp'd all o'er with agony of sweat.

Alas! he cried, I wretch in prison pine,
Too happy rival, while the fruit is thine:
Thou liv'st at large, thou draw'st thy native air,
Pleas'd with thy freedom, proud of my despair:
Thou mayst, since thou hast youth and courage
join'd,

A sweet behaviour, and a solid mind,
Assemble ours and all the Theban race,
To vindicate on Athens thy disgrace;
And after, by some treaty made, possess
Fair Emily, the pledge of lasting peace.
So thine shall be the beauteous prize, while I
Must languish in despair, in prison die.
Thus all th' advantage of the strife is thine;
Thy portion double joys, and double sorrows
mine.

The rage of Jealousy then fir'd his soul,
And his face kindled like a burning coal:
Now cold Despair, succeeding in her stead,
To livid paleness turns the glowing red.
His blood, scarce liquid, creeps within his veins,
Like water which the freezing wind constrains.
Then thus he said: Eternal Deities,
Who rule the world with absolute decrees,
And write whatever time shall bring to pass,
With pens of adamant, on plates of brass;

What, is the race of human kind your care
Beyond what all his fellow-creatures are?
He with the rest is liable to pain;
And like the sheep, his brother-beast, is slain.
Cold, hunger, prisons, ills without a cure,
All these he must, and guiltless oft, endure;
Or does your justice, pow'r, or prescience fail
When the good suffer, and the bad prevail?
What worse to wretched virtue could befall,
If fate or giddy fortune, govern'd all?
Nay, worse than other beasts is our estate:
Them to pursue their pleasures you create;
We, bound by harder laws, must curb our will,
And your commands, not our desires fulfil;
Then when the creature is unjustly slain,
Yet after death at least he feels no pain:
But man, in life surcharg'd with woe before,
Not freed when dead, is doom'd to suffer more.
A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller:
The man lies murder'd; while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake.
This let divines decide; but well I know,
Just or unjust, I have my share of woe;
Through Saturn, seated in a luckless place,
And Juno's wrath, that persecutes my race;
Or Mars and Venus, in a quartil, move
My pangs of jealousy for Arcite's love.

Let Palamon oppress'd in bondage mourn,
While to his exil'd rival we return.
By this, the sun, declining from his height,
The day had shorten'd, to prolong the night:
The lengthen'd night gave length of misery
Both to the captive lover and the free;
For Palamon in endless prison mourns,
And Arcite forfeits life if he returns:
The banish'd never hopes his love to see,
Nor hopes the captive lord his liberty.
'Tis hard to say who suffers greater pains:
One sees his love, but cannot break his chains;
One free, and all his motions uncontroll'd, Beholds whate'er he would, but what he would behold.

Judge as you please, for I will haste to tell
What fortune to the banish'd knight befel.
When Arcite was to Thebes return'd again,
The loss of her he lov'd renew'd his pain;
What could be worse, than never more to see
His life, his soul, his charming Emily?
He rav'd with all the madness of despair,
He roar'd, he beat his breast, he tore his hair.
Dry sorrow in his stupid eyes appears;
For, wanting nourishment, he wanted tears:
His eye-balls in their hollow sockets sink;
Bereft of sleep, he loaths his meat and drink.
He withers at his heart, and looks as wan
As the pale spectre of a murder'd man:
That pale turns yellow, and his face receives
The faded hue of sapless boxen leaves:
In solitary groves he makes his moan,
Walks early out, and ever is alone:
Nor mix'd in mirth, in youthful pleasures shares,
But sighs when songs and instruments he hears.

His spirits are so low, his voice is drown'd,
 He hears as from afar, or in a swoon,
 Like the deaf murmurs of a distant sound:
 Uncomb'd his locks, and squalid his attire,
 Unlike the trim of love and gay desire:
 But full of museful mopings, which presage
 The loss of reason, and conclude in rage.
 This when he had endur'd a year and more,
 Now wholly chang'd from what he was before,
 It happen'd once, that, slumb'ring as he lay,
 He dream'd (his dream began at break of day)
 That Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
 And with soft words his drooping spirits
 cheer'd:

His hat, adorn'd with wings, disclos'd the God,
 And in his hand he bore the sleep-compelling
 rod;

Such as he seem'd, when, at his sire's command,
 On Argus' head he laid the snaky wand.
 Arise, he said, to conquer Athens go;
 There fate appoints an end to all thy woe.
 The fright awaken'd Arcite with a start;
 Against his bosom bounc'd his heaving heart;
 But soon he said, with scarce-recover'd breath,
 And thither will I go to meet my death,
 Sure to be slain; but death is my desire,
 Since in Emilia's sight I shall expire.
 By chance he spied a mirror while he spoke,
 And gazing there, beheld his alter'd look;
 Wond'ring he saw his features and his hue
 So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew.

A sudden thought then started in his mind,
 Since I in Arcite cannot Arcite find,
 The world may search in vain with all their eyes,
 But never penetrate through this disguise.
 Thanks to the change which grief and sickness
 In low estate I may securely live, [give,
 And see, unknown, my mistress day by day.
 He said; and cloth'd himself in coarse array,
 A lab'ring hind in show; and forth he went,
 And to th' Athenian tow'rs his journey bent;
 One squire attended in the same disguise,
 Made conscious of his master's enterprise.
 Arriv'd at Athens, soon he came to court,
 Unknown, unquestion'd, in that thick resort;
 Proff'ring for hire his service at the gate,
 To drudge, draw water, and to run or wait.

So fair befel him, that for little gain
 He serv'd at first Emilia's chamberlain;
 And, watchful all advantages to spy,
 Was still at hand, and in his master's eye;
 And as his bones were big, his sinews strong,
 Refus'd no toil that could to slaves belong!
 But from deep wells with engines water drew,
 And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew.
 He pass'd a year at least attending thus
 On Emily, and call'd Philostratus.
 But never was there man of his degree
 So much esteem'd, so well belov'd as he.
 So gentle of condition was he known,
 That through the court his courtesy was blown;
 All think him worthy of a greater place,
 And recommend him to the royal grace;

That exercis'd within a higher sphere,
 His virtues more conspicuous might appear.
 Thus by the gen'ral voice was Arcite prais'd,
 And by great Theseus to high favor rais'd:
 Among his menial servants first enroll'd,
 And largely entertain'd with sums of gold:
 Besides what secretly from Thebes was sent,
 Of his own income, and his annual rent:
 This well employ'd, he purchas'd friends and fame,
 But cautiously conceal'd from whence it came.
 Thus for three years he liv'd with large increase,
 In arms of honor, and esteem in peace;
 To Theseus' person he was ever near;
 And Theseus, for his virtues, held him dear.

BOOK II.

WHILE Arcite lives in bliss, the story turns
 Where hopeless Palamon in prison mourns.
 For six long years immur'd, the captive knight
 Had dragg'd his chains, and scarcely seen the Lost liberty and love at once he bore: [light:
 His prison pain'd him much, his passion more:
 Nor dares he hope his fetters to remove,
 Nor ever wishes to be free from love.

But when the sixth revolving year was run,
 And May within the Twins receiv'd the sun,
 Were it by chance, or forceful destiny,
 Which forms in causes first whate'er shall be;
 Assisted by a friend, one moonless night,
 This Palamon from prison took his flight:
 A pleasant bev'rage he prepar'd before
 Of wine and honey mix'd with added store
 Of opium; to his keeper this he brought,
 Who swallow'd unaware the sleepy draught,
 And snor'd secure till morn, his senses bound
 In slumber, and in long oblivion drown'd.
 Short was the night, and careful Palamon
 Sought the next covert ere the rising sun.
 A thick-spread forest near the city lay,
 To this with lengthen'd strides he took his way
 (For far he could not fly, and fear'd the day).
 Safe from pursuit, he meant to shun the light,
 Till the brown shadows of the friendly night
 To Thebes might favor his intended flight.
 When to his country come, his next design
 Was all the Theban race in arms to join,
 And war on Theseus, till he lost his life,
 Or won the beauteous Emily to wife. [guile,
 Thus while his thoughts the ling'ring day be-
 To gentle Arcite let us turn our style;
 Who little dream'd how nigh he was to care,
 Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the snare.
 The morning-lark, the messenger of day,
 Saluted in her song the morning grey;
 And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,
 That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous
 He with his tepid rays the rose renews, [sight;
 And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews;
 When Arcite left his bed, resolv'd to pay
 Observance to the month of merry May:
 Forth on his fiery steed betimes he rode,
 That scarcely prints the turf on which he trod;
 At ease he seem'd, and, prancing o'er the plains,
 Turn'd only to the grove his horse's reins,

The grove I nam'd before ; and, lighted there,
A woodbine garland sought to crown his hair ;
Then turn'd his face against the rising day,
And rais'd his voice to welcome in the May.

For thee, sweet month, the groves green liveries
If not the first, the fairest of the year : [wear ;
For thee the Graces lead the dancing hours,
And Nature's ready pencil paints the flow'rs :
When thy short reign is past, the feverish sun
The sultry tropic fears, and moves more slowly on :
So may thy tender blossoms fear no blight,
Nor goats with venom'd teeth thy tendrils bite,
As thou shalt guide my wand'ring feet to find
The fragrant greens I seek, my brows to bind.

His vows address'd, within the grove he stray'd,
Till fate or fortune, near the place convey'd
His steps where secret Palamon was laid.
Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
Who flying death had there conceal'd his flight,
In brakes and brambles hid, and shunning mortal
sight ;

And less he knew him for his hated foe,
But fear'd him as a man he did not know.
But as it has been said of ancient years,
That fields are full of eyes, and woods have ears ;
For this the wise are ever on their guard ;
For unforeseen, they say, is unprepar'd.
Uncautious Arcite thought himself alone,
And less than all suspected Palamon,
Who list'ning heard him, while he search'd the
And loudly sung his roundelay of love ; [grove ;
But on the sudden stopp'd, and silent stood,
As lovers often muse, and change their mood ;
Now high as heaven, and then as low as hell ;
Now up, now down, as buckets in a well ;
For Venus, like her day, will change her cheer,
And seldom shall we see a Friday clear.

Thus, Arcite, having sung, with alter'd hue
Sunk on the ground, and from his bosom drew
A desp'rate sigh, accusing Heav'n and Fate,
And angry Juno's unrelenting hate.

Curs'd be the day when first I did appear !
Let it be blotted from the calendar, [year.
Lest it pollute the month, and poison all the Still will the jealous Queen pursue our race ?
Cadmus is dead, the Theban city was :

Yet ceases not her hate ; for all who come
From Cadmus are involv'd in Cadmus' doom.
I suffer for my blood : unjust decree !
That punishes another's crime on me.
In mean estate I serve my mortal foe,
The man who caus'd my country's overthrow.
This is not all ; for Juno, to my shame,
Has forc'd me to forsake my former name ;
Arcite I was, Philostratus I am.

That side of heav'n is all my enemy ;
Mars ruin'd Thebes, his mother ruin'd me.
Of all the royal race remains but one
Besides myself, th' unhappy Palamon,
Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free ;
Without a crime, except his kin to me.
Yet these, and all the rest I could endure ;
But love's a malady without a cure ;

Fierce Love has pierc'd me with his fiery dart ;
He fires within, and hisses at my heart.
Your eyes, fair Emily, my fate pursue ;
I suffer for the rest, I die for you.

Of such a Goddess no time leaves record,
Who burn'd the temple where she was ador'd ;
And let it burn, I never will complain ;
Pleas'd with my sufferings, if you knew my pain.

At this a sickly qualm his heart assail'd,
His ears rang inward, and his senses fail'd.
No word miss'd Palamon of all he spoke,
But soon to deadly pale he chang'd his look ;
He trembled every limb, and felt a smart,
As if cold steel had glided through his heart :
Nor longer staid ; but starting from his place,
Discover'd stood, and show'd his hostile face.
False traitor, Arcite, traitor to thy blood,
Bound by thy sacred oath to seek my good,
Now art thou found forsworn for Emily,
And dar'st attempt her love for whom I die.
So hast thou cheated Theseus with a wife,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name ; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free :
But rest assur'd that either thou shalt die,
Or else renounce thy claim in Emily :
For though unarm'd I am, and (freed by chance)
Am here without my sword or pointed lance,
Hope not, base man, unquestion'd hence to go ;
For I am Palamon thy mortal foe.

Arcite, who heard his tale, and knew the man,
His sword unsheath'd and fiercely thus began :
Now by the Gods who govern heav'n above,
Wert thou not weak with hunger, mad with
love,

That word had been thy last, or in this grove
This hand should force thee to renounce thy love.
The surety which I gave thee, I defy :
Fool, not to know that love endures no tie ;
And Jove but laughs at lovers' perjury.
Know, I will serve the fair in thy despite ;
But since thou art my kinsman and a knight,
Here, have my faith, to-morrow, in this grove,
Our arms shall plead the titles of our love :
And Heaven so help my right, as I alone
Will come, and keep the cause and quarrel both unknown,

With arms of proof both for myself and thee ;
Choose thou the best, and leave the worst to me.
And, that a better case thou mayst abide,
Bedding and clothes I will this night provide,
And needful sustenance, that thou mayst be
A conquest better won, and worthy me.
His promise Palamon accepts ; but pray'd
To keep it better than the first he made.
Thus fair they parted till the morrow's dawn ;
For each had laid his plighted faith to pawn.
Oh Love ! thou sternly dost thy pow'r maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign ;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain.
This was in Arcite prov'd, and Palamon ;
Both in despair, yet each would love alone.
Arcite return'd, and, as in honor tied,
His foe with bedding and with food supp

Then, ere the day, two suits of armor sought,
Which borne before him on his steed he brought :
Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure.
Now at the time, and in th'appointed place,
The challenger and challeng'd, face to face,
Approach ; each other from afar they knew,
And from afar their hatred chang'd their hue.
So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear ;
And hears him rustling in the wood, and sees
His course at distance by the bending trees ;
And thinks, here comes my mortal enemy,
And either he must fall in fight, or I :
This while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart :
A gen'ral chilness seizes ev'ry part ; [heart.
The veins pour back the blood and fortify the
Thus pale they meet, their eyes with fury burn ;
None greets, for none the greeting will return ;
But in dumb surliness each arm'd with care,
His foe profest, as brother of the war :
Then both, no moment lost, at once advance
Against each other, arm'd with sword and lance :
They lash, they foin, they pass, they strive to bore
Their corslets, and the thinnest parts explore.
Thus two long hours in equal arms they stood,
And wounded, wound ; till both were bath'd in
And not a foot of ground had either got, [blood ;
As if the world depended on the spot.
Fell Arcite like an angry tiger far'd,
And like a lion Palamon appear'd :
Or as two boars whom love to battle draws,
With rising bristles, and with frothy jaws,
Their adverse breasts with tusks oblique they
wound,
With grunts and groans the forest rings around.
So fought the knights, and fighting must abide,
Till fate an umpire sends their diff'rence to decide.
The pow'r that ministers to God's decrees,
And executes on earth what Heav'n foresees,
Call'd providence, or chance, or fatal sway,
Comes with resistless force, and finds or makes her way.
Nor kings, nor nations, nor united pow'r,
One moment can retard th' appointed hour ;
And some one day some wondrous chance appears,
Which happen'd not in centuries of years :
For sure whate'er we mortals hate, or love,
Or hope, or fear, depends on pow'rs above :
They move our appetites to good or ill,
And by foresight necessitate the will.
In Theseus this appears, whose youthful joy
Was beasts of chase in forests to destroy ;
This gentle knight, inspir'd by jolly May,
Forsook his easy couch at early day,
And to the wood and wilds pursued his way.
Beside him rode Hippolyta the queen,
And Emily attir'd in lively green,
With horns, and hounds, and all the tuneful cry,
To hunt a royal hart within the covert nigh :
And as he follow'd Mars before, so now
He serves the goddess of the silver bow.

The way that Theseus took was to the wood
Where the two knights in cruel battle stood :
The lawn on which they fought, th' appointed
place
In which th' uncoupled hounds began the chase.
Thither forth-right he rode to rouse the prey,
That shaded by the fern in harbour lay ;
And, thence dislodg'd, was wont to leave the wood
For open fields, and cross the crystal flood :
Approach'd, and looking underneath the sun,
He saw proud Arcite and fierce Palamon
In mortal battle doubling blow on blow ;
Like lightning flam'd their falchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam ; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak :
He gaz'd with wonder on their equal might,
Look'd eager on, but knew not either knight :
Resolv'd to learn, he spurr'd his fiery steed
With goring rowels to provoke his speed.
The minute ended that began the race,
So soon he was betwixt them on the place ;
And with his sword unsheath'd, on pain of life,
Commands both combatants to cease their
strife :
Then with imperious tone pursues his threat—
What are you ? why in arms together met ?
How dares your pride presume against my laws,
As in a listed field, to fight your cause ?
Unask'd the royal grant ; no marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try ?
Then Palamon, with scarce recover'd breath,
Thus hasty spoke : We both deserve the death,
And both would die ; for look the world around,
A pair so wretched is not to be found :
Our life's a load ; encumber'd with the charge,
We long to set th' imprison'd soul at large.
Now, as thou art a sov'reign judge, decree
The rightful doom of death to him and me ;
Let neither find thy grace, for grace is cruelty.
Me first, oh kill me first, and cure my woe ;
Then sheath the sword of justice in my foe :
Or kill him first ; for when his name is heard,
He foremost will receive his due reward.
Arcite of Thebes is he, thy mortal foe,
On whom thy grace did liberty bestow ;
But first contracted, that if ever found
By day or night upon th' Athenian ground,
His head should pay the forfeit ; see return'd
The perjurd knight, his oath and honor scorn'd.
For this is he who, with a borrow'd name,
And proffer'd service, to thy palace came ;
Now call'd Philostratus ; retain'd by thee,
A traitor trusted, and in high degree,
Aspiring to the bed of beauteous Emily.
My part remains ; from Thebes my birth I own,
And call myself th' unhappy Palamon,
Think me not like that man ; since no disgrace
Can force me to renounce the honor of my race.
Know me from what I am ; I broke my chain,
Nor promis'd I thy pris'ner to remain :
The love of liberty with life is given ;
And life itself th' inferior gift of Heaven.

Thus without crime I fled ; but further know,
 I with this Arcite am thy mortal foe :
 Then give me death, since I thy life pursue ;
 For safeguard of thyself, death is my due.
 More wouldst thou know ? I love bright Emily,
 And for her sake and in her sight will die :
 But kill my rival too ; for he no less
 Deserves ; and I thy righteous doom will bless,
 Assur'd that what I lose he never shall possess.
 To this replied the stern Athenian prince,
 And sourly smil'd—In owning your offence,
 You judge yourself ; and I but keep record
 In place of law, while you pronounce the word.
 Take your desert, the death you have decreed ;
 I seal your doom, and ratify the deed :
 By Mars, the patron of my arms, you die,
 He said ; dumb sorrow seiz'd the standers-by.
 The queen above the rest, by nature good
 (The pattern form'd of perfect womanhood),
 For tender pity wept ; when she began,
 Through the bright quire th' infectious virtue ran.
 All dropp'd their tears, e'en the contended maid ;
 And thus among themselves they softly said :
 What eyes can suffer this unworthy sight ?
 Two youths of royal blood, renown'd in fight,
 The mastership of heav'n in face and mind,
 And lovers far beyond their faithless kind :
 See their wide streaming wounds ; they neither came

For pride of empire, nor desire of fame.
 Kings fight for kingdoms, madmen for applause :
 But love for love alone ; that crowns the lover's cause.

This thought, which ever bribes the beauteous
 Such pity wrought in ev'ry lady's mind, [kind,
 They left their steeds, and prostrate on the place,
 From the fierce king implor'd the offenders' grace.

He paus'd a while, stood silent in his mood
 (For yet his rage was boiling in his blood) ;
 But soon his tender mind th' impression felt,
 (As softest metals are not slow to melt,
 And pity soonest runs in softest minds) :
 Then reasons with himself ; and first he finds
 His passion cast a mist before his sense,
 And either made or magnified th' offence.
 Offence ? of what ? to whom ? who judg'd the cause ?

The pris'ner freed himself by nature's laws :
 Born free, he sought his right : the man he freed
 Was perjurd ; but his love excus'd the deed.
 Thus pond'ring, he look'd under with his eyes.
 And saw the women's tears, and heard their cries,

Which mov'd compassion more : he shook his
 And, softly sighing, to himself he said : [head,
 Curse on th' unpardoning prince, whom tears
 can draw,

To no remorse, who rules by lions' law ;
 And deaf to prayers, by no submission bow'd,
 Rends all alike, the penitent and proud !
 At this, with look serene, he rais'd his head :
 Reason resum'd her place, and passion fled :
 Then thus aloud he spoke : The pow'r of love,
 In earth, and seas, and air, and heav'n above,

Rules, unresisted, with an awful nod ;
 By daily miracles declar'd a God :
 He blinds the wise, gives eye-sight to the blind ;
 And moulds and stamps anew the lover's mind.
 Behold that Arcite, and this Palamon,
 Freed from my fetters, and in safety gone ;
 What hinder'd either in their native soil
 At ease to reap the harvest of their toil ;
 But Love, their lord, did otherwise ordain,
 And brought them in their own despite again,
 To suffer death deserv'd ; for well they know
 'Tis in my pow'r, and I their deadly foe :
 The proverb holds, that to be wise and love,
 Is hardly granted to the Gods above.

See how the madmen bleed : behold the gains
 With which their master, Love, rewards their
 For seven long years, on duty ev'ry day, [pains ;
 Lo their obedience, and their monarch's pay :
 Yet, as in duty bound, they serve him on ;
 And, ask the fools, they think it wisely done ;
 Nor ease, nor wealth, nor life itself regard,
 For 'tis their maxim love is love's reward.
 This is not all ; the fair for whom they strove
 Nor knew before, nor could suspect, their love ;
 Nor thought when she beheld the fight from far,
 Her beauty was th' occasion of the war.
 But sure a gen'ral doom on man is past,
 And all are fools and lovers first or last.
 This both by others and myself I know,
 For I have serv'd their sov'reign long ago ;
 Oft have been caught within the winding train
 Of female snares, and felt the lover's pain,
 And learn'd how far the god can human hearts constrain.

To this remembrance, and the pray'rs of those
 Who for th' offending warriors interpose,
 I give their forfeit lives ; on this accord,
 To do me bondage as their sov'reign lord ;
 And as my vassals, to their utmost might,
 Assist my person and assert my right. [tain'd,
 This freely sworn, the knights their grace ob-
 Then thus the king his secret thoughts explain'd :
 If wealth, or honor, or a royal race,
 Or each, or all, may win a lady's grace,
 Then either of you knights may well deserve
 A princess born ; and such is she you serve :
 For Emily is sister to the crown,
 And but too well to both her beauty known ;
 But should you combat till you both were dead,
 Two lovers cannot share a single bed :
 As therefore both are equal in degree,
 The lot of both be left to destiny.
 Now hear th' award, and happy may it prove
 To her, and him who best deserves her love !
 Depart from hence in peace, and free as air
 Search the wide world, and where you please re-
 But on the day when this returning sun [pair ;
 To the same point through ev'ry sign has run,
 Then each of you his hundred knights shall bring,
 In royal lists, to fight before the king ;
 And then the knight whom fate or happy chance,
 Shall with his friends to victory advance,
 And grace his arms so far in equal fight
 From out the bars to force his opposite,

Or kill, or make him recreant on the plain,
 The prize of valor and of love shall gain;
 The vanquish'd party shall their claim release,
 And the long jars conclude in lasting peace.
 The charge be mine t' adorn the chosen ground,
 The theatre of war, for champions so re-
     nown'd,
 And take the patron's place of either knight,
 With eyes impartial to behold the fight:
 And heav'n of me so judge as I shall judge aright!
 If both are satisfied with this accord,
 Swear by the laws of knighthood on my sword.
 Who now but Palamon exults with joy?
 And ravish'd Arcite seems to touch the sky;
 The whole assembled troop was pleas'd as well;
 Extol th' award, and on their knees they fell
 To bless the gracious king. The knights with leave [ceive;
 Departing from the place, his last commands re-
 On Emily with equal ardor look,
 And from her eyes their inspiration took:
 From thence to Thebes' old walls pursue their
     way,

Each to provide his champions for the day.

It might be deem'd on our historian's part,
 Or too much negligence, or want of art,
 If he forgot the vast magnificence
 Of royal Theseus, and his large expense.
 He first inclos'd for lists a level ground,
 The whole circumference a mile around;
 The form was circular; and all without
 A trench was sunk, to moat the place about.
 Within an amphitheatre appear'd,
 Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd:
 That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
 Height was allow'd for him above to see.

Eastward was built a gate of marble white;
 The like adorn'd the western opposite.
 A nobler object than this fabric was,
 Rome never saw, nor of so vast a space:
 For, rich with spoils of many a conquer'd land,
 All arts and artists Theseus could command:
 Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame,
 The master-painters and the carvers came.
 So rose within the compass of the year
 An age's work, a glorious theatre.
 Then o'er its eastern gate was rais'd above
 A temple, sacred to the queen of love;
 An altar stood below: on either hand [wand.
 A priest, with roses crown'd, who held a myrtle
 The dome of Mars was on the gate oppos'd,
 And on the north a turret was inclos'd,
 Within the wall of alabaster white,
 And crimson coral for the queen of night,
 Who takes in sylvan sports her chaste delight.

Within these oratories might you see
 Rich carvings, portraitures, and imagery:
 Where each huge figure to the life express'd
 The godhead's pow'r, to whom it was ad-
     dress'd.

In Venus' temple, on the sides were seen
 The broken slumbers of enamour'd men,
 Pray'rs that e'en spoke, and pity seem'd to call,
 And issuing sighs that smok'd along the wall.

Complaints, and hot desires, the lover's hell,
 And scalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell:

And all around were nuptial bonds, the ties
 Of love's assurance, and a train of lies,
 That, made in lust, conclude in perjuries.
 Beauty, and youth, and wealth, and luxury,
 And sprightly hope, and short-enduring joy;
 And sorceries to raise th' infernal pow'rs,
 And sigils fram'd in planetary hours:
 Expense, and after-thought, and idle care,
 And doubts of motley hue, and dark despair;
 Suspicions, and fantastical surmise,
 And jealousy suffus'd with jaundice in her eyes,
 Discoloring all she view'd, in tawny drest;
 Down-look'd, and with a cuckoo on her fist.
 Oppos'd to her, on t' other side advance
 The costly feast, the carol, and the dance,
 Minstrels and music, poetry and play,
 And balls by night, and tournaments by day.
 All these were painted on the wall, and more;
 With acts and monuments of times before:
 And others added by prophetic doom,
 And lovers yet unborn, and loves to come:
 For there th' Idalian mount and Citheron,
 The court of Venus was in colors drawn:
 Before the palace gate, in careless dress,
 And loose array, sat portress Idleness:
 There, by the fount, Narcissus pin'd alone;
 There Samson was, with wiser Solomon,
 And all the mighty names by love undone.
 Medea's charms were there, Circean feasts,
 With bowls that turn'd enamour'd youths to beasts.

Here might be seen, that beauty, wealth, and wit,
 And prowess, to the pow'r of love submit:
 The spreading snare for all mankind is laid:
 And lovers all betray, and are betray'd.
 The goddess' self some noble hand had wrought;
 Smiling she seem'd, and full of pleasing thought:
 From ocean as she first began to rise,      skies;
 And smooth'd the ruffled seas and clear'd the
 She trod the brine all bare above the breast,
 And the green waves but ill conceal'd the rest;
 A lute she held; and on her head was seen
 A wreath of roses red, and myrtles green;
 Her turtles fann'd the buxom air above,
 And, by his mother stood an infant Love.
 With wings unfledg'd, his eyes were banded o'er,
 His hands a bow, his back a quiver bore,
 Supplied with arrows bright and keen, a deadly store.

But in the dome of mighty Mars, the red,
 With diff'rent figures all the sides were spread;
 This temple, less in form, with equal grace,
 Was imitative of the first in Thrace:
 For that cold region was the lov'd abode,
 And sov'reign mansion, of the warrior god.
 The landscape was a forest wide and bare,
 Where neither beast nor human kind repair;
 The fowls, that scent afar, the borders fly, [sky.
 And shun the bitter blast, and wheel about the
 A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground;
 And prickly stubs instead of trees are found;

Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old,
Headless the most, and hideous to behold :
A rattling tempest through the branches went,
That stript them bare, and one sole way they bent.

Heav'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal,
And through the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail :

Such was the face without : a mountain stood
Threat'ning from high, and overlook'd the wood.
Beneath the low'ring brow, and on a bent,
The temple stood of Mars armipotent :
The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air,
A straight-long entry to the temple led,
Blind with high walls, and horror over head :
Thence issued such a blast and hollow roar,
As threaten'd from the hinge to heave the door.
In through that door a northern light there shone ;

'Twas all it had, for windows there were none.
The gate was adamant ; eternal frame !
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,

The labor of a God ; and all along [strong.
Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it
A tun about was ev'ry pillar there :
A polish'd mirror shone not half so clear.
There saw I how the secret felon wrought,
And treason lab'ring in the traitor's thought ;
And midwife Time the ripen'd plot to murder brought.

There the red anger dar'd the pallid fear ;
Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling, and demurely looking down,
But hid the dagger underneath the gown ;
Th' assassinating wife, the household fiend ;
And, far the blackest there, the traitor friend.
On t' other side, there stood destruction bare,
Unpunish'd rapine, and a waste of war ;
Contest, with sharpen'd knives, in cloisters drawn,

And all with blood bespread the holy lawn.
Loud menaces were heard, and foul disgrace,
And bawling infamy, in language base ;
Till sense was lost in sound, and silence fled the place.

The slayer of himself yet saw I there,
The gore congeal'd was clotted in his hair ;
With eyes half clos'd, and gaping mouth he lay,
And grim as when he breath'd his sullen soul
In midst of all the dome misfortune sat, [away.
And gloomy discontent, and fell debate,
And madness laughing in his ireful mood ;
And arm'd complaint on theft, and cries of blood.
There was the murder'd corpse, in covert laid,
And violent death in thousand shapes display'd :
The city to the soldier's rage resign'd ;
Successful wars, and poverty behind ;
Ships burnt in fight, or forc'd on rocky shores,
And the rash hunter strangled by the boars ;
The new-born babe, by nurses overlaid ;
And the cook caught within the raging fire he made.

All ills of Mars's nature, flame and steel ;
The gasping charioteer beneath the wheel
Of his own car ; the ruin'd house that falls,
And intercepts her lord betwixt the walls ;
The whole division that to Mars pertains ;
All trades of death that deal in steel for gains,
Were there : the butcher, armorer, and smith,
Who forges sharpen'd falchions, or the scythe.
The scarlet conquest on a tow'r was plac'd,
With shouts and soldiers' acclamations grac'd ;
A pointed sword hung threat'ning o'er his head,
Sustain'd but by a slender twine of thread.

There saw I Mars's ides, the capitol,
The seer in vain foretelling Cæsar's fall ;
The last triumvirs, and the wars they move ;
And Antony, who lost the world for love.
These, and a thousand more, the fane adorn :
Their fates were painted ere the men were born,
All copied from the heav'ns, and ruling force
Of the red star, in his revolving course.

The form of Mars high on a chariot stood,
All sheath'd in arms, and gruffly looked the god :
Two geomantic figures were display'd
Above his head, a warrior and a maid ;
One when direct, and one when retrograde.

Tir'd with deformities of death, I haste
To the third temple of Diana chaste.

A sylvan scene with various greens was drawn,
Shades on the sides and on the midst a lawn :
The silver Cynthia, with her nymphs around,
Pursu'd the flying deer, the wood with horns
Calisto there stood manifest of shame, [resound ;
And, turn'd a bear, the northern star became ;
Her son was next, and, by peculiar grace,
In the cold circle held the second place ;
The stag Acteon in the stream had spied
The naked huntress, and for seeing died ;
His hounds, unknowing of his change, pursue
The chase, and their mistaken master slew.
Peneian Daphne too was there to see,
Apollo's love before, and now his tree ;
Th' adjoining fane th' assembled Greeks ex-
And hunting of the Caledonian beast. [press'd,
Cenides' valor, and his envied prize ;
The fatal pow'r of Atalanta's eyes ;
Diana's vengeance on the victor shown,
The murd'ress mother, and consuming son ;
The Volscian queen extended on the plain ;
The treason punish'd, and the traitor slain.
The rest were various huntings, well design'd,
And savage beasts destroy'd, of ev'ry kind.
The graceful goddess was array'd in green ;
About her feet were little beagles seen,
That watch'd, with upward eyes, the motions of their queen.

Her legs were buskin'd, and the left before,
In act to shoot ; a silver bow she bore,
And at her back a painted quiver wore.
She trod a waxing moon, that soon would wane,
And, drinking borrow'd light, be fill'd again ;
With downcast eyes, as seeming to survey
The dark dominions, her alternate sway.
Before her stood a woman in her throes,
And call'd Lucina's aid, her burden to disclose.

All these the painter drew with such command,
That Nature snatch'd the pencil from his hand,
Asham'd and angry that his art could feign
And mend the tortures of a mother's pain.
Theseus beheld the fanes of ev'ry god,
And thought his mighty cost was well bestow'd.
So princes now their poets should regard;
But few can write, and fewer can reward.
The theatre thus rais'd, the lists inclos'd,
And all with vast magnificence dispos'd,
We leave the monarch pleas'd, and haste to bring
The knights to combat, and their arms to sing.

BOOK III.

THE day approach'd when fortune should decide

Th' important enterprise, and give the bride;
For now the rivals round the world had sought,
And each his number, well appointed, brought.
The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by public voice;
That after, or before, were never known
Such chiefs, as each an army seem'd alone:
Beside the champions, all of high degree,
Who knighthood lov'd and deeds of chivalry,
Throng'd to the lists, and envied to behold
The names of others, not their own, enroll'd.
Nor seems it strange; for every noble knight
Who loves the fair, and is endued with might,
In such a quarrel would be proud to fight.
There breathes not scarce a man on British ground

(An isle for love and arms of old renown'd)
But would have sold his life to purchase fame,
To Palamon or Arcite sent his name;
And had the land selected of the best, [the rest.
Half had come hence, and let the world provide
A hundred knights with Palamon there came,
Approv'd in fight, and men of mighty name;
Their arms were sev'ral, as their nations were,
But furnish'd all alike with sword and spear.
Some wore coat-armor, imitating scale;
And next their skins were stubborn shirts of mail;
Some wore a breast-plate and a light jupon,
Their horses cloth'd with rich caparison;
Some for defence would leathern bucklers use
Of folded hides, and others shields of pruce;
One hung a pole-axe at his saddle bow,
And one a heavy mace to stun the foe;
One for his legs and knees provided well,
With jambeux arm'd, and double plates of steel;
This on his helmet wore a lady's glove,
And that a sleeve embroider'd by his love.
With Palamon, above the rest in place,
Lycurgus came, the surly king of Thrace;
Black was his beard, and manly was his face;
The balls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head,
And glar'd betwixt a yellow and a red:
He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair:
Big-bou'd and large of limbs, with sinews strong,
Broad-shoulder'd, and his arms were round and long.

Four milk-white bulls (the Thracian use of old)
Were yok'd to draw his car of burnish'd gold.
Upright he stood, and bore aloft his shield,
Conspicuous from afar, and overlook'd the field.
His surcoat was a bear-skin on his back;
His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven
His ample forehead bore a coronet [black.
With sparkling diamonds and with rubies set;
Ten brace, and more, of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair, [the bear:
A match for pards in flight, in grappling for
With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound,

And collars of the same their necks surround.
Thus through the field Lycurgus took his way;
His hundred knights attend in pomp and proud array.

To match this monarch, with strong Arcite
Emetrius, king of Inde, a mighty name, [came
On a bay courser, goodly to behold, [gold.
The trappings of his horse adorn'd with barb'rous
Not Mars bestrode a steed with greater grace:
His surcoat o'er his arms was cloth of Thrace,
Adorn'd with pearls, all orient, round, and great;

His saddle was of gold, with emeralds set.
His shoulders large a mantle did attire,
With rubies thick, and sparkling as the fire;
His amber-color'd locks in ringlets run, [sun.
With graceful negligence, and shone against the
His nose was aquiline, his eyes were blue,
Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin:
His awful presence did the crowd surprise,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,
So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day.
His age in nature's youthful prime appear'd,
And just began to bloom his yellow beard.
Whene'er he spoke, his voice was heard around,
Loud as a trumpet, with a silver sound.
A laurel wreath'd his temples, fresh and green;
And myrtle sprigs, the marks of love, were mix'd between.

Upon his fist he bore, for his delight,
An eagle well reclaim'd, and lily white.

His hundred knights attend him to the war,
All arm'd for battle, save their heads were bare.
Words and devices blaz'd on every shield,
And pleasing was the terror of the field.
For kings, and dukes, and barons, you might see,
Like sparkling stars, though diff'rent in degree,
All for th' increase of arms, and love of chivalry.
Before the king tame leopards led the way,
And troops of lions innocently play.

So Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And beasts in gambols frisk'd before the honest
In this array the war of either side [god.
Through Athens pass'd with military pride.
At prime, they enter'd on the Sunday morn;
Rich tap'stry spread the streets, and flow'rs the posts adorn.

The town was all a jubilee of feasts ;
 So Theseus will'd in honor of his guests ;
 Himself with open arms the king embrac'd,
 Then all the rest in their degrees were grac'd.
 No harbinger was needful for a night,
 For ev'ry house was proud to lodge the knight.

I pass the royal treat, nor must relate
 The gifts bestow'd, nor how the champions sat :
 Who first or last, or how the knights address'd
 Their vows, or who was fairest at the feast :
 Whose voice, whose graceful dance did most surprise ;

Soft am'rous sighs, and silent love of eyes.
 The rivals call my muse another way,
 To sing their vigils for th' ensuing day.
 'Twas ebbing darkness, past the noon of night ;
 And Phosphor on the confines of the light,
 Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring ;
 The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
 And, flick'ring on her nest, made short essays
 to sing :

When wakeful Palamon, preventing day,
 Took to the royal lists his early way,
 To Venus at her fane, in her own house to pray.
 There, falling on his knees, before her shrine,
 He thus implor'd with pray'rs her pow'r divine :
 Creator Venus, genial pow'r of love,
 The bliss of men below, and gods above !
 Beneath the sliding sun, thou runn'st thy race,
 Dost fairest shine, and best become thy place.
 For thee the winds their eastern blasts forbear,
 Thy mouth reveals the spring, and opens all the year.

Thee, goddess, thee the storms of winter fly,
 Earth smiles with flow'rs renewing, laughs the sky,
 And birds to lays of love their tuneful notes
 apply.

For thee the lion loaths the taste of blood,
 And, roaring, hunts his female through the
 wood ;

For thee the bulls re-bellow through the groves,
 And tempt the stream, and snuff their absent loves.

'Tis thine, whate'er is pleasant, good or fair ;
 All nature is thy province, life thy care :
 Thou mad'st the world, and dost the world repair.

Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron,
 Increase of Jove, companion of the sun ;
 If e'er Adonis touch'd thy tender heart,
 Have pity, Goddess, for thou know'st the smart.
 Alas ! I have not words to tell my grief ;

To vent my sorrow would be some relief ;
 Light suff'rings give us leisure to complain ;
 We groan, but cannot speak, in greater pain.
 O Goddess, tell thyself what I would say,
 Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray.
 So grant my suit, as I inforce my might,
 In love to be thy champion and thy knight ;
 A servant to thy sex, a slave to thee,
 A foe profess'd to barren chastity.

Nor ask I fame or honor of the field,
 Nor choose I more to vanquish than to yield :

In my divine Emilia make me blest,
 Let fate, or partial chance, dispose the rest :
 Find thou the manner, and the means prepare ;
 Possession, more than conquest, is my care.
 Mars is the warrior's god ; in him it lies,
 On whom he favors to confer the prize ;
 With smiling aspect you serenely move
 In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love.
 The fates but only spin the coarser clew,
 The finest of the wool is left for you.

Spare me but one small portion of the twine,
 And let the sisters cut below your line :
 The rest among the rubbish may they sweep,
 Or add it to the yarn of some old miser's heap.

But if you this ambitious pray'r deny
 (A wish, I grant, beyond mortality),
 Then let me sink beneath proud Arcite's arms,
 And I, once dead, let him possess her charms.

Thus ended he ; then with observance due
 The sacred incense on her altar threw :
 The curling smoke mounts heavy from the fires ;
 At length it catches flame, and in a blaze expires ;

At once the gracious Goddess gave the sign,
 Her statue shook, and trembled all the shrine :
 Pleas'd Palamon the tardy omen took ;
 For, since the flames pursued the trailing smoke,
 He knew his boon was granted ; but the day
 To distance driven, and joy adjourn'd with long delay.

Now morn with rosy light had streak'd the sky ;

Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily ;
 Address'd her early steps to Cynthia's fane,
 In state attended by her maiden train,
 Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
 Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire.
 The plenteous horns with pleasant mead they
 crown,

Nor wanted aught besides in honor of the moon.

Now while the temple smok'd with hollow'd steam

They wash'd the virgin in a living stream ;
 The secret ceremonies I conceal,
 Uncouth, perhaps unlawful, to reveal,
 But such they were as Pagan use requir'd,
 Perform'd by women when the men retir'd,
 Whose eyes profane their chaste mysterious rites
 Might turn to scandal, or obscene delights.
 Well-meaners think no harm ; but for the rest,
 Things sacred they pervert, and silence is the best.

Her shining hair, uncomb'd, was loosely spread ;
 A crown of mastless oak adorn'd her head :
 When to the shrine approach'd the spotless maid,
 Had kindling fires on either altar laid
 (The rites were such as were observ'd of old,
 By Statius in his Theban story told) ;
 Then kneeling with her hands across her breast,
 Thus lowly she preferr'd her chaste request :

O Goddess, hunter of the woodland green,
 To whom both heav'n, and earth, and seas, are seen ;

Queen of the nether skies, when half the year
Thy silver beams descend, and light the gloomy
sphere :

Goddess of maids, and conscious of our hearts ;
So keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,
When, hissing through the skies, the feather'd deaths were dealt ;

As I desire to live a virgin life,
Nor know the name of mother or of wife.
Thy votress from my tender years I am,
And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game.
Like death, thou know'st, I loath the nuptial
state,

And man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate,
A lowly servant, but a lofty mate ;
Where love is duty on the female side ;
On their's mere sensual gust, and sought with surly pride.

Now by thy triple shape, as thou art seen
In heav'n, earth, hell, and ev'ry-where a queen,
Grant this my first desire ; let discord cease,
And make betwixt the rivals lasting peace :
Quench their hot fire, or far from me remove
The flame, and turn it on some other love :
Or, if my frowning stars have so decreed,
That one must be rejected, one succeed,
Make him my lord, within whose faithful breast
Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best.

But, oh ! e'en that avert ! I choose it not,
But take it as the least unhappy lot,
A maid I am, and of thy virgin train ;
Oh let me still that spotless name retain !
Frequent the forests, thy chaste will obey,
And only make the beasts of chase my prey !

The flames ascend on either altar clear,
While thus the blameless maid address'd her pray'r :

When, lo ! the burning fire, that shone so bright,
Flew off, all sudden, with extinguish'd light,
And left one altar dark, a little space ; [blaze :
Which turn'd self-kindled, and renew'd the
The other victor flame a moment stood,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood ;
For ever lost, th' irrevocable light
Forsook the black'ning coals, and sunk to night :
At either end it whistled as it flew,
And, as the brands were green, so dropp'd the dew ;
Infected as it fell with sweat of sanguine hue.

The maid from that ill omen turn'd her eyes,
And with loud shrieks and clamors rent the skies,

Nor knew what signified the boding sign,
But found the pow'r's displeas'd, and fear'd the wrath divine.

Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light
Sprung through the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright.

The pow'r, behold ! the pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known ;
The rest, a huntress issuing from the wood,
Reclining on her cornel spear she stood ;
Then gracious thus began : Dismiss thy fear,
And Heaven's unchang'd decrees attentive hear :

More pow'rful Gods have torn thee from my side,

Unwilling to resign, and doom'd a bride :
The two contending knights are weigh'd above ;
One Mars protects, and one the Queen of Love :
But which the man, is in the Thund'rer's breast ;
This he pronounc'd, 'tis he who loves thee best.
The fire that once extinct, reviv'd again,
Foreshows the love allotted to remain :
Farewell ! she said, and vanish'd from the place ;
The sheaf of arrows shook, and rattled in the Aghast at this the royal virgin stood, [case.
Disclaim'd, and now no more a sister of the wood :

But to the parting Goddess thus she pray'd :
Propitious still be present to my aid,
Nor quite abandon your once favor'd maid.
Then sighing she return'd ; but smil'd betwixt,
With hopes and fears, and joys with sorrows
The next returning planetary hour [mixt.

Of Mars, who shar'd the heptarchy of pow'r,
His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent,
To adore with Pagan rites the pow'r armipotent :
Then prostrate low before his altar lay, [pray :
And rais'd his manly voice, and thus began to Strong God of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing North, and Hyperborean seas,
And Scythian colds, and Thracia's winter coast,
Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honor'd
most : [known ;

There most ; but ev'ry-where thy pow'r is
The fortune of the fight is all thy own :
Terror is thine, and wild amazement, flung
From out thy chariot, withers e'en the strong :
And disarray and shameful rout ensue,
And force is added to the fainting crew.

Acknowledg'd as thou art, accept my pray'r,
If aught I have achiev'd deserve thy care :
If to my utmost pow'r, with sword and shield,
I dar'd the death, unknowing how to yield,
And, falling in my rank, still kept the field :
Then let my arms prevail, by thee sustain'd,
That Emily by conquest may be gain'd.

Have pity on my pains ; nor those unknown
To Mars, which, when a lover, were his own.
Venus, the public care of all above,
Thy stubborn heart has soften'd into love :
Now by her blandishments and pow'rful charms,
When yielded she lay curling in thy arms,
E'en by thy shame, if shame it may be call'd,
When Vulcan had thee in his net enthrall'd ;
O envied ignominy, sweet disgrace,
When ev'ry God that saw thee wish'd thy place !
By those dear pleasures, aid my arms in fight,
And make me conquer in my patron's right :

For I am young, a novice in the trade,
The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade,
And want the soothing arts that catch the fair ;
But, caught myself, lie struggling in the snare :
And she I love, or laughs at all my pain,
Or knows her worth too well, and pays me with disdain :

For sure I am, unless I win in arms,
To stand excluded from Emily's charms :

Nor can my strength avail, unless by thee
Endued by force, I gain the victory;
Then for the fire which warm'd thy gen'rous
heart,

Pity thy subject's pains and equal smart:
So be the morrow's sweat and labor mine,
The palm and honor of the conquest thine:
Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
Immortal, be the business of my life;
And in thy fane, the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof my banner shall be hung;

Rank'd with my champion's buckler, and below,
With arms revers'd, th' achievements of my foe:
And while these limbs the vital spirit feeds,
While day to night, and night to day succeeds,
Thy smoking altar shall be fat with food
Of incense, and the grateful stream of blood;
Burnt off'rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temple shine.

The bush of yellow beard, this length of hair,
Which from my birth inviolate I bear,
Guiltless of steel and from the razor free,
Shall fall a plenteous crop, reserv'd for thee;
So may my arms with victory be blest:

I ask no more: let fate dispose the rest. [close

The champion ceas'd; there follow'd in the
A hollow groan: a murmuring wind arose;
The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung;
The bolted gates flew open at the blast;
The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast;
The flames were blown aside, yet shone they
bright,

Fann'd by the wind, and gave a ruffled light.

Then from the ground, a scent began to rise,
Sweet-smelling as accepted sacrifice:

This omen pleas'd, and as the flames aspire,
With odorous incense Arcite heaps the fire;
Nor wanted hymns to Mars, or heathen charms:
At length the nodding statue clash'd his arms,
And with a sullen sound and feeble cry
Half sunk, and half pronounc'd, the word of victory.

For this, with soul devout, he thank'd the God;
And, of success secure, return'd to his abode.

These vows thus granted rais'd a strife above
Betwixt the God of War and Queen of Love.
She granting first, had right of time to plead;
But he had granted too, nor would recede.

Jove was for Venus; but he fear'd his wife;
And seem'd unwilling to decide the strife;
Till Saturn from his leaden throne arose,
And found a way the diff'rence to compose:
Though sparing of his grace, to mischief bent,
He seldom does a good with good intent:

Wayward, but wise; by long experience taught,
To please both parties, for ill ends, he sought:
For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be outridden, though outrun:

By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:
Of him disposing in his own abode,
He sooth'd the Goddess, while he gull'd the God.

Cease, daughter, to complain and stint the strife;
Thy Palamon shall have this promis'd wife:
And Mars, the lord of conquest in the fight,
With palm and laurel shall adorn his knight.
Wide is my course, nor turn I to my place,
Till length of time, and move with tardy pace.
Man feels me, when I press th' ethereal plains;
My hand is heavy, and the wound remains.
Mine is the shipwreck, in a wat'ry sign;
And, in an earthy, the dark dungeon mine.
Cold shivering agues, melancholy care,
And bitter blasting winds, and poison'd air,
Are mine, and wilful death, resulting from despair.

The throttling quinsy 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatisms ascend to rack the joints:
When churls rebel against their native prince,
I arm their hands and furnish with pretence;
And, housing in the lion's hateful sign,
Bought senates, and deserting troops are mine.
Mine is the privy pois'ning; I command
Unkindly seasons and ungrateful land.

By me kings' palaces are push'd to ground,
And misers crush'd beneath their mines are
found.

'Twas I slew Samson, when the pillar'd hall
Fell down, and crush'd the many with the fall.
My looking is the fire of pestilence,
That sweeps at once the people and the prince.
Now sweep no more, but trust thy grandsire's art;
Mars shall be pleas'd, and thou perform thy part.
'Tis ill, though diff'rent your complexions are,
The family of Heav'n for men should war.
Th' expedient pleas'd, where neither lost his right;

Mars had the day, and Venus had the night.
The management they left to Chronos' care;
Now turn we to th' effect, and sing the war.

In Athens all was pleasure, mirth, and play,
All proper to the spring, and sprightly May;
Which ev'ry soul inspir'd with such delight,
'Twas jesting all the day, and love at night.
Heav'n smil'd, and gladdened was the heart of
man,

And Venus had the world as when it first began.
At length in sleep their bodies they compose,
And dreamt the future fight, and early rose.

Now scarce the dawning day began to spring,
As at a signal giv'n the streets with clamors ring:
At once the crowd arose; confus'd and high E'en from the Heav'n was heard a shouting cry;

For Mars was early up, and rous'd the sky.
The Gods came downward to behold the wars, Sharp'ning their sights, and leaning from their stars.

The neighing of the gen'rous horse was heard,
For battle by the busy groom prepar'd.
Rustling of harness, rattling of the shield,
Clattering of armor furnish'd for the field.
Crowds to the castle mounted up the street,
Batt'ring the pavement with their coursers' feet:
The greedy sight might there devour the gold
Of glittering arms, too dazzling to behold:

And polish'd steel that cast the view aside,
And crested morions, with their plummy pride.
Knights with a long retinue of their 'squires,
In gaudy liveries march, and quaint attires.
One lac'd the helm, another held the lance:
A third the shining buckler did advance.
The courser paw'd the ground with restless feet,
And snorting foam'd, and champ'd the golden bit.

The smiths and armorers on palfreys ride.
Files in their hands, and hammers at their side,
And nails for loosen'd spears, and thongs for shields provide.

The yeomen guard the streets in seemly bands;
And clowns come crowding on, with cudgels
in their hands.

The trumpets, next the gate, in order plac'd,
Attend the sign to sound the martial blast;
The palace-yard is fill'd with floating tides,
And the last comers bear the former to the sides.
The throng is in the midst: the common crew
Shut out, the hall admits the better few;
In knots they stand, or in a rank they walk,
Serious in aspect, earnest in their talk:
Faction, and favoring this or t'other side,
As their strong fancy or weak reason guide:
Their wagers back their wishes: numbers hold
With the fair freckled king, and beard of gold:
So vigorous are his eyes, such rays they cast,
So prominent his eagles's beak is plac'd.
But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend;
His double-biting axe and beaming spear,
Each asking a gigantic force to rear.

All spoke as partial favor mov'd the mind;
And, safe themselves, at others cost divin'd.

Wak'd by the cries, th' Athenian chief arose,
The knightly forms of combat to dispose;
And, passing through th' obsequious guards, he sat

Conspicuous on a throne, sublime in state;
There for the two contending knights he sent:
Arm'd cap-a-pie, with rev'rence low they bent.
He smil'd on both, and with superior look Alike their offer'd adoration took,
The people press on ev'ry side, to see
Their awful prince, and hear his high decree.
Then signing to their heralds with his hand,
They gave his orders from their lofty stand.
Silence is thrice enjoy'd; then thus aloud
The king at arms bespeaks the knights and list'ning crowd:

Our sov'reign lord has ponder'd in his mind
The means to spare the blood of gentle kind;
And of his grace and inborn clemency,
He modifies his first severe decree;
The keener edge of battle to rebate,
The troops for honor fighting, not for hate;
He wills not death should terminate their strife;
And wounds, if wounds ensue, be short of life:
But issues, ere the fight, his dread command,
That flings afar the poniards hand to hand,
Be banish'd from the field; that none shall dare
With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war;

But in fair combat fight with manly strength,
Nor push with biting point, but strike at length.
The tourney is allow'd but one career
Of the tough ash, with the sharp grinded spear:
But knights unhors'd may rise from off the plain,
And fight on foot their honor to regain;
Nor, if at mischief taken, on the ground
Be slain, but prisoners to the pillar bound,
At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,
Be freed, or, arm'd anew, the fight invade.
The chief of either side, bereft of life,
Or yielded to his foe, concludes the strife.
Thus dooms the lord: now valiant knights and
young,

Fight each his fill with swords and maces long.

The herald ends: the vaulted firmament
With loud acclaims and vast applause is rent:
Heaven guard a prince so gracious and so good,
So just and yet so provident of blood!
This was the gen'ral cry. The trumpets sound,
And warlike symphony is heard around.

The marching troops through Athens take their
way,

The great earl-martial orders their array.
The fair from high the passing pomp behold;
A rain of flow'rs is from the windows roll'd,
The casements are with golden tissue spread,
And horses' hoofs, for earth, or silken tapestry
tread:

The king goes midmost, and the rivals ride
In equal rank, and close his either side.
Next after them there rode the royal wife,
With Emily, the cause and the reward of strife:
The following cavalcade, by three and three,
Proceed by titles marshall'd in degree.

Thus through the southern gate they take their
And at the list arrive ere prime of day. [way,
There, parting from the king, the chiefs divide,
And, wheeling east and west, before their meiny ride. [high,

Th' Athenian monarch mounts his throne on
And after him the queen and Emily:
Next these, the kindred of the crown are grac'd
With nearer seats, and lords by ladies plac'd.
Scarce were they seated, when, with clamors loud,
In rush'd at once a rude promiscuous crowd:
The guards, and then each other overbear,
And in a moment throng the spacious theatre.
Now chang'd the jarring noise to whispers low,
As winds forsaking seas more softly blow;
When at the western gate, on which the car
Is plac'd aloft, that bears the God of war,
Proud Arcite ent'ring arm'd before his train,
Stops at the barrier, and divides the plain.
Red was his banner, and display'd abroad
The bloody colors of his patron God.

At that self moment enters Palamon
The gate of Venus, and the rising sun;
Wav'd by the wanton winds, his banner flies,
All maiden white, and shares the people's eyes.
From east to west, look all the world around,
Two troops so match'd were never to be found:
Such bodies built for strength, of equal age,
In stature siz'd; so proud an equipage:

The nicest eye could no distinction make
Where lay th' advantage, or what side to take.

Thus rang'd, the herald for the list proclaims
A silence, while they answer to their names :
For so the king decreed, to shun the care,
The fraud of musters false, the common bane of war.

The tale was just, and then the gates were clos'd,
And chief to chief, and troop to troop oppos'd.
The heralds last retir'd, and loudly cried,
The fortune of the field be fairly tried.

At this, the challenger with fierce defy
His trumpet sounds, the challeng'd makes reply :
With clangor rings the field, resounds the vaulted sky.

Their vizors clos'd, their lances in the rest,
Or at the helmet pointed, or the crest ;
They vanish from the barrier, speed the race,
And spurring see decrease the middle space.
A cloud of smoke envelops either host,
And all at once the combatants are lost :
Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen,
Coursers with coursers justling, men with men :
As lab'ring in eclipse, a while they stay,
Till the next blast of wind restores the day.
They look anew : the beauteous form of fight
Is chang'd, and war appears a grizly sight.
Two troops in fair array one moment show'd,
The next, a field with fallen bodies strew'd :
Not half the number in their seats are found ;
But men and steeds lie grov'ling on the ground.
The points of spears are struck within the shield,
The steeds without their riders scour the field.
The knights unhors'd on foot renew the fight ;
The glitt'ring falchions cast a gleaming light :
Hauberks and helms are hew'd with many a wound : [ground.

Out spins the streaming blood, and dyes the
The mighty maces with such haste descend,
They break the bones, and make the solid armor bend.

This thrusts amid the throng with furious force ;
Down goes at once the horseman and the horse :
That courser stumbles on the fallen steed,
And flound'ring throws the rider o'er his head :
One rolls along a foot-ball to his foes ;
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows :
This halting, this disabled with his wound,
In triumph led, is to the pillar bound ;
Where by the king's award he must abide :
There goes a captive led on t' other side.
By fits they cease ; and, leaning on the lance,
Take breath a while, and to new fight advance.

Full oft the rivals met, and neither spar'd
His utmost force, and each forgot to ward.
The head of this was to the saddle bent,
The other backward to the crupper sent :
Both were by turns unhors'd ; the jealous blows
Fall thick and heavy, when on foot they close.
So deep their falchions bite, that ev'ry stroke Pierc'd to the quick ; and equal wounds they gave and took.

Borne far asunder by the tides of men,
Like adamant and steel they meet again.

So when a tiger sucks the bullock's blood,
A famish'd lion issuing from the wood
Roars lordly fierce, and challenges the food.
Each claims possession, neither will obey,
But both their paws are fasten'd on the prey ;
They bite, they tear, and while in vain they strive,

The swains come arm'd between, and both to distance drive.

At length, as fate foredoom'd, and all things tend

By course of time to their appointed end,
So when the sun to west was far declin'd,
And both afresh in mortal battle join'd,
The strong Emetrius came in Arcite's aid,
And Palamon with odds was overlaid :
For, turning short, he struck with all his might
Full on the helmet of th' unwary knight.
Deep was the wound ; he stagger'd with the
blow,

And turn'd him to his unexpected foe :
Whom with such force he struck, he fell'd him
down,

And cleft the circle of his golden crown.
But Arcite's men, who now prevail'd in fight,
Twice ten at once surround the single knight :
O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the
ground

Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound ;
And king Lycurgus, while he fought in vain
His friend to free, was tumbled on the plain.

Who now laments but Palamon, compell'd
No more to try the fortune of the field !
And, worse than death, to view with hateful eyes
His rival's conquest, and renounce the prize !

The royal judge on his tribunal plac'd,
Who had beheld the fight from first to last,
Bade cease the wars : pronouncing from on
high,

Arcite of Thebes has won the beauteous Emily,
The sound of trumpets to the voice replied,
And round the royal lists the heralds cried,
Arcite of Thebes has won the beauteous bride.

The people rend the skies with vast applause ;
All own the chief, when fortune owns the cause.
Arcite is own'd e'en by the gods above,
And conqu'ring Mars insults the Queen of Love.
So laugh'd he, when the rightful Titan fail'd,
And Jove's usurping arms in heav'n prevail'd.
Laugh'd all the pow'rs who favor tyranny ;
And all the standing army of the sky.
But Venus with dejected eyes appears,
And, weeping on the lists, distils her tears ;
Her will refus'd, which grieves a woman most,
And, in her champion foil'd, the cause of love is lost.

Till Saturn said, Fair daughter, now be still,
The blust'ring fool has satisfied his will ;
His boon is giv'n ; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize ; th' arrears are yet to pay.
Thy hour is come ; and mine the care shall be
To please thy knight, and set thy promise free.

Now, while the heralds run the lists around,
And Arcite, Arcite, heav'n and earth resound,

A miracle (not less it could be call'd)
 Their joy with unexpected sorrow pall'd.
 The victor knight had laid his helm aside,
 Part for his ease, the greater part for pride :
 Bare-headed, popularly low he bow'd,
 And paid the salutations to the crowd :
 Then, spurring at full speed, ran headlong on Where Theseus sat on his imperial throne ;
 Furious he drove, and upward cast his eye,
 Where, next the queen, was plac'd his Emily ;
 Then, passing to the saddle-bow, he bent :
 A sweet regard the gracious virgin lent ;
 (For women, to the brave an easy prey,
 Still follow Fortune where she leads the way.)
 Just then, from earth sprung out a flashing fire,
 By Pluto sent, at Saturn's bad desire :
 The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
 And, bounding, o'er the pommel cast the knight :
 Forward he flew, and, pitching on his head,
 He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead.
 Black was his count'nance in a little space ;
 For all the blood was gather'd in his face.
 Help was at hand : they rear'd him from the
 ground,
 And from his cumb'rous arms his limbs unbound ; [breath :
 Then lanc'd a vein, and watch'd returning
 It came, but clogg'd with symptoms of his death.
 The saddle-bow the nobler parts had prest,
 All bruise'd and mortified his manly breast.
 Him, still entranc'd, and in a litter laid,
 They bore from field, and to his bed convey'd.
 At length he wak'd, and, with a feeble cry,
 The word he first pronounc'd was Emily.
 Mean time, the king, though inwardly he mourn'd,
 In pomp triumphant to the town return'd,
 Attended by the chiefs who fought the field (Now friendly mix'd, and in one troop compell'd),
 Compos'd his looks to counterfeited cheer,
 And bade them not for Arcite's life to fear.
 But that which gladdened all the warrior train,
 Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain.
 The surgeons soon despoil'd them of their arms,
 And some with salves they cure, and some with
 charms ;
 Foment the bruises, and the pains assuage,
 And heal their inward hurts with sov'reign draughts of sage.
 The king in person visits all around,
 Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound ;
 Honors the princely chiefs, rewards the rest,
 And holds for thrice three days a royal feast.
 None was disgrac'd ; for failing is no shame,
 And cowardice alone is loss of fame.
 The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown ;
 But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own.
 If crowns and palms the conqu'ring side adorn,
 The victor under better stars was born :
 The brave man seeks not popular applause,
 Nor, overpower'd with arms, deserts his cause ;

Unsham'd, tho' foil'd, he does the best he can ;
 Force is of brutes, but honor is of man.
 Thus Theseus smil'd on all with equal grace,
 And each was set according to his place.
 With ease were reconcil'd the diff'ring parts,
 For envy never dwells in noble hearts.
 At length, they took their leave, the time expir'd,
 Well pleas'd, and to their sev'ral homes retir'd.
 Meanwhile the health of Arcite still impairs ;
 From bad proceeds to worse, and mocks the leeches' cares :
 Swoln is his breast, his inward pains increase ;
 All means are us'd, and all without success.
 The clotted blood lies heavy on his heart,
 Corrupts, and there remains in spite of art :
 Nor breathing veins, nor cupping, will prevail ;
 All outward remedies and inward fail :
 The mould of nature's fabric is destroy'd ;
 Her vessels discompos'd, her virtue void :
 The bellows of his lungs begin to swell :
 All out of frame is ev'ry secret cell,
 Nor can the good receive, nor bad expel.
 Those breathing organs thus within oppress'd,
 With venom soon distend the sinews of his breast.
 Nought profits him to save abandon'd life,
 Nor vomit's upward aid, nor downward laxative.
 The midmost region batter'd and destroy'd,
 When nature cannot work, th' effect of art is void :
 For physic can but mend our crazy state,
 Patch an old building, not a new create.
 Arcite is doom'd to die in all his pride,
 Must leave his youth, and yield his beauteous
 bride,
 Gain'd hardly, against right, and unenjoy'd.
 When 'twas declar'd all hope of life was past,
 Conscience (that of all physic works the last)
 Caus'd him to send for Emily in haste.
 With her, at his desire, came Palamon ;
 Then, on his pillow rais'd, he thus begun :
 " No language can express the smallest part
 " Of what I feel, and suffer in my heart,
 " For you, whom best I love, and value most ;
 " But to your service I bequeath my ghost,
 " Which, from this mortal body when untied,
 " Unseen, unheard, shall hover at your side ;
 " Nor fright you waking, nor your sleep offend,
 " But wait officious, and your steps attend.
 " How I have lov'd, excuse my falt'ring tongue,
 " My spirit's feeble, and my pains are strong :
 " This I may say, I only grieve to die,
 " Because I lose my charming Emily :
 " To die, when Heav'n had put you in my
 pow'r !
 " Fate could not choose a more malicious hour !
 " What greater curse could envious fortune give,
 " Than just to die when I began to live ?
 " Vain men, how vanishing a bliss we crave,
 " Now warm in love, now with'ring in the " Never, O never more to see the sun ! [grave !
 " Still dark, in a damp vault, and still alone !
 " This fate is common : but I lose my breath,
 " Near bliss, and yet not bless'd before my death !

" Farewell; but take me dying in your arms,
 " 'Tis all I can enjoy of all your charms;
 " This hand I cannot but in death resign:
 " Ah! could I live! but while I live, 'tis mine.
 " I feel my end approach; and, thus embrac'd,
 " Am pleas'd to die; but hear me speak my last:
 " Ah, my sweet foe! for you, and you alone,
 " I broke my faith with injur'd Palamon.
 " But love the sense of right and wrong con-
   founds;
 " Strong love and proud ambition have no
   bounds:
 " And much I doubt, should Heav'n my life prolong,
 " I should return to justify my wrong:
 " For, while my former flames remain within,
 " Repentance is but want of pow'r to sin.
 " With mortal hatred I pursued his life;
 " Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife:
 " Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd;
 " Your beauty, and my impotence of mind,
 " And his concurrent flame, that blew my fire;
 " For still our kindred souls had one desire.
 " He had a moment's right in point of time;
 " Had I seen first, then his had been the crime.
 " Fate made it mine, and justified his right;
 " Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight,
 " For virtue, valor, and for noble blood,
 " Truth, honor, all that is compris'd in good;
 " So help me Heav'n, in all the world is none
 " So worthy to be lov'd as Palamon.
 " He loves you, too, with such a holy fire
 " As will not, cannot, but with life expire:
 " Our vow'd affections both have often tried,
 " Nor any love but yours could ours divide.
 " Then, by my love's inviolable band,
 " By my long suff'ring, and my short command,
 " If e'er you plight your vows when I am gone,
 " Have pity on the faithful Palamon."

This was his last; for death came on amain,
 And exercis'd below his iron reign;
 Then upward to the seat of life he goes:
 Sense fled before him; what he touch'd he froze.
 Yet could he not his closing eyes withdraw,
 Though less and less of Emily he saw:
 So, speechless, for a little space he lay,
 Then grasp'd the hand he held, and sigh'd his soul away.

But whither went his soul, let such relate
 Who search the secrets of the future state:
 Divines can say but what themselves believe;
 Strong proofs they have, but not demonstrative:
 For were all plain, then all sides must agree,
 And faith itself be lost in certainty.
 To live uprightly, then, is sure the best;
 To save ourselves, and not to damn the rest.
 The soul of Arcite went where heathens go,
 Who better live than we, though less they know.

In Palamon a lively grief appears;
 Silent he wept, asham'd to show his tears:
 Emilia shriek'd but once, and then, oppress'd
 With sorrow, sunk upon her lover's breast;
 Till Theseus in his arms convey'd with care,
 Far from so sad a sight, the swooning fair.

'Twere loss of time her sorrow to relate;
 Ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate,
 When just approaching to the nuptial state;
 But, like a low-hung cloud, it rains so fast,
 That all at once it falls, and cannot last.
 The face of things is chang'd, and Athens now,
 That laugh'd so late, becomes the scene of woe:
 Matrons and maids, both sexes, ev'ry state,
 With tears lament the knight's untimely fate:
 Nor greater grief in falling Troy was seen
 For Hector's death; but Hector was not then.
 Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair;
 The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tear.

Why wouldst thou go, with one consent they cry,
 When thou hadst gold enough, and Emily?

Theseus himself, who should have cheer'd the grief

Of others, wanted now the same relief.
 Old Egeus only could revive his son,
 Who various changes of the world had known;
 And strange vicissitudes of human fate,
 Still alt'ring, never in a steady state;
 Good after ill, and after pain delight;
 Alternate, like the scenes of day and night:
 Since ev'ry man who lives is born to die,
 And none can boast sincere felicity,
 With equal mind, what happens, let us bear,
 Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care.

Like pilgrims, to th' appointed place we tend;
 The world's an inn, and death the journey's end.
 E'en kings but play; and, when their part is done,

Some other, worse or better, mount the throne.
 With words like these the crowd was satisfied;
 And so they would have been had Theseus died.
 But he, their king, was lab'ring in his mind
 A fitting place for fun'ral pomps to find,
 Which were in honor of the dead design'd:
 And, after long debate, at last he found
 (As love itself had mark'd the spot of ground)
 That grove for ever green, that conscious land,
 Where he with Palamon fought hand to hand:
 That where he fed his amorous desires
 With soft complaints, and felt his hottest fires,
 There other flames might waste his earthly part,
 And burn his limbs, where love had burn'd his heart.

This once resolv'd, the peasants were enjoin'd
 Sere-wood, and firs, and dodder'd oaks to find.
 With sounding axes to the grove they go,
 Fell, split, and lay the fuel on a row,
 Vulcanian food: a bier is next prepar'd,
 On which the lifeless body should be rear'd,
 Cover'd with cloth of gold; on which was laid
 The corpse of Arcite, in like robes array'd.
 White gloves were on his hands, and on his head

A wreath of laurel, mix'd with myrtle, spread.
 A sword keen-edg'd within his right he held,
 The warlike emblem of the conquer'd field:
 Bare was his manly visage on the bier;
 Menac'd his count'nance; e'en in death severe.

Then to the palace-hall they bore the knight,
 To lie in solemn state, a public sight.
 Groans, cries, and howlings, fill the crowded
 place,
 And unaffected sorrow sat on ev'ry face.
 Sad Palamon above the rest appears,
 In sable garments, dew'd with gushing tears:
 His auburn locks on either shoulder flow'd,
 Which to the fun'ral of his friend he vow'd:
 But Emily, as chief, was next his side,
 A virgin-widow, and a mourning bride.
 And, that the princely obsequies might be
 Perform'd according to his high degree,
 The steed that bore him living to the fight,
 Was trapp'd with polish'd steel, all shining
 bright,
 And cover'd with th' achievements of the knight.
 The riders rode abreast; and one his shield,
 His lance of cornel-wood another held;
 The third his bow, and, glorious to behold,
 The costly quiver, all of burnish'd gold.
 The noblest of the Grecians next appear,
 And, weeping, on their shoulders bore the bier;
 With sober pace they march'd, and often staid,
 And thro' the master-street the corpse convey'd.
 The houses to their tops with black were spread,
 And e'en the pavements were with mourning hid.
 The right side of the pall old Egeus kept,
 And, on the left, the royal Theseus wept:
 Each bore a golden bowl of work divine,
 With honey fill'd, and milk, and mix'd with ruddy wine.
 Then Palamon, the kinsman of the slain,
 And after him appear'd th' illustrious train.
 To grace the pomp, came Emily the bright,
 With cover'd fire, the fun'ral pile to light.
 With high devotion was the service made,
 And all the rights of Pagan honor paid
 So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow,
 With vigor drawn, must send the shaft below.
 The bottom was full twenty fathom broad,
 With crackling straw beneath in due proportion strew'd.
 The fabric seem'd a wood of rising green,
 With sulphur and bitumen cast between,
 To feed the flames: the trees were unctuous fir,
 And mountain-ash, the mother of the spear:
 The mourner-yew and builder-oak were there:
 The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane,
 Hard box, and linden of a softer grain,
 And laurels, which the Gods for conqu'ring chiefs ordain.
 How they were rank'd shall rest untold by me,
 With nameless nymphs that liv'd in ev'ry tree:
 Nor how the dryads, or the woodland train,
 Disherited, ran howling o'er the plain:
 Nor how the birds to foreign seats repair'd,
 Or beasts, that bolted out, and saw the forest
 bar'd: [fright,
 Nor how the ground, now clear'd, with ghastly
 Beheld the sudden sun, a stranger to the light.
 The straw, as I first said, was laid below;
 Of chips and sere-wood was the second row;

The third of greens, and timber newly fell'd;
 The fourth high stage the fragrant odors held:
 And pearls, and precious stones, and rich array;
 In midst of which, embalm'd, his body lay.
 The service sung, the maid, with mourning eyes,
 The stubble fir'd; the smould'ring flames arise:
 This office done, she sunk upon the ground;
 But what she spoke, recover'd from her swoon,
 I want the wit in moving words to dress;
 But, by themselves, the tender sex may guess.
 While the devouring fire was burning fast,
 Rich jewels in the flame the wealthy cast;
 And some their shields, and some their lances
 threw,
 And gave their warrior's ghost a warrior's due.
 Full bowls of wine, of honey, milk, and blood,
 Were pour'd upon the pile of burning wood,
 And hissing flames receive, and, hungry, lick
 the food.
 Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around
 The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice resound;
 Hail, and farewell, they shouted thrice amain,
 Thrice facing to the left, and thrice they turn'd
 again:
 Still, as they turn'd, they beat their clatt'ring
 shields; [the fields.
 The women mix their cries; and clamor fills
 The warlike wakes continu'd all the night,
 And fun'ral games were play'd at new returning
 light.
 Who naked wrestled best, besmear'd with oil,
 Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil,
 I will not tell you, nor would you attend;
 But briefly haste to my long story's end.
 I pass the rest; the year was fully mourn'd,
 And Palamon long since to Thebes return'd:
 When, by the Grecians' general consent,
 At Athens Theseus held his parliament.
 Among the laws that pass'd, it was decreed,
 That conquer'd Thebes from bondage should be freed;
 Reserving homage to th' Athenian throne,
 To which the sovereign summon'd Palamon.
 Unknowing of the cause, he took his way,
 Mournful in mind, and still in black array.
 The monarch mounts the throne, and, plac'd
 on high,
 Commands into the court the beauteous Emily;
 So call'd, she came; the senate rose, and paid
 Becoming reverence to the royal maid.
 And first soft whispers thro' th' assembly went:
 With silent wonder then they watch'd th' event.
 All hush'd, the king arose with awful grace;
 Deep thought was in his breast, and counsel in his face:
 At length, he sigh'd; and, having first prepar'd
 Th' attentive audience, thus his will declar'd:
 The cause and spring of motion, from above,
 Hung down on earth the golden chain of love:
 Great was th' effect, and high was his intent,
 When peace among the jarring seeds he sent.
 Fire, flood, and earth, and air, by this were bound, [crown'd.
 And Love, the common link, the new creation

The chain still holds ; for, though the forms de-
Eternal matter never wears away : [cay,
The same first Mover certain bounds has plac'd,
How long those perishable forms shall last :
Nor can they last beyond the time assign'd
By that all-seeing and all-making mind :
Shorten their hours they may ; for will is free ;
But never pass th' appointed destiny.
So men oppress'd, when weary of their breath,
'Throw off their burden, and suborn their death.
Then, since those forms begin, and have their
end,

On some unalter'd cause they sure depend :
Parts of the whole are we ; but God the whole,
Who gives us life and animating soul :
For nature cannot from a part derive
That being, which the whole can only give :
He, perfect, stable ; but imperfect we,
Subject to change, and diff'rent in degree ;
Plants, beasts, and man ; and, as our organs are,
We more or less of his perfection share.
But by a long descent, th' ethereal fire
Corrupts ; and forms, the mortal part, expire :
As he withdraws his virtue, so they pass ;
And the same matter makes another mass.
'This law th' Omniscient Pow'r was pleas'd to give,

That ev'ry kind should by succession live :
That individuals die his will ordains ;
The propagated species still remains.
'The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by low degrees ;
'Three centuries he grows, and three he stays,
Supreme in state, and in three more decays ;
So wears the paving pebble in the street,
And towns and tow'rs their fatal periods meet :
So rivers, rapid once, now naked lie,
Forsaken of their springs, and leave their channels dry :

So man, at first a drop, dilates with heat,
Then, form'd, the little heart begins to beat ;
Secret he feeds unknowing in the cell ; [shell,
At length, for hatching ripe, he breaks the
And struggles into breath, and cries for aid ;
Then, helpless, in his mother's lap is laid.
He creeps, he walks, and, issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began :
Reckless of laws, affects to rule alone,
Anxious to reign, and restless on the throne :
First vegetive, then feels, and reasons last ;
Rich of three souls, and lives all three to waste.
Some thus : but thousands more in flow'r of
age :

For few arrive to run the latter stage.
Sunk in the first, in battle some are slain,
And others whelm'd beneath the stormy main.
What makes all this, but Jupiter the king,
At whose command we perish and we spring ?
Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,
'To make a virtue of necessity.
Take what he gives, since to rebel is vain ;
'The bad grows better, which we well sustain ;
And could we choose the time, and choose aright,
'Tis best to die, our honor at the height.

When we have done our ancestors no shame,
But serv'd our friends, and well secur'd our fame ;
Then should we wish our happy life to close,
And leave no more for fortune to dispose :
So should we make our death a glad relief
From future shame, from sickness, and from grief :

Enjoying, while we live, the present hour,
And dying in our excellence and flow'r : [run,
Then round our death-bed ev'ry friend should
And joyous of our conquest early won :
While the malicious world, with envious tears,
Should grudge our happy end, and wish it theirs.
Since then our Arcite is with honor dead,
Why should we mourn that he so soon is freed,
Or call untimely what the Gods decreed ?
With grief as just a friend may be deplor'd,
From a foul prison to free air restor'd.
Ought he to thank his kinsmen or his wife,
Could tears recal him into wretched life ?
'Their sorrow hurts themselves ; on him is lost ;
And, worse than both, offends his happy ghost.
What then remains, but, after past annoy,
To take the good vicissitude of joy ?
'To thank the gracious Gods for what they give ;
Possess our souls ; and, while we live, to live ?
Ordain we then two sorrows to combine,
And in one point th' extremes of grief to join ;
That thence resulting joy may be renew'd ;
As jarring notes in harmony conclude.

Then I propose, that Palamou shall be
In marriage join'd with beauteous Emily ;
For which already I have gain'd th' assent
Of my free people in full parliament.
Long love to her has borne the faithful knight,
And well deserv'd, had fortune done him right :
'Tis time to mend her fault ; since Emily,
By Arcite's death, from former vows is free :
If you, fair sister, ratify th' accord,
And take him for your husband and your lord,
'Tis no dishonor to confer your grace
On one descended from a royal race :
And, were he less, yet years of service past
From grateful souls exact reward at last.
Pity is Heaven's and yours : nor can she find
A throne so soft as in a woman's mind.
He said ; she blush'd ; and, as o'eraw'd by might,
Seem'd to give Theseus what she gave the knight.

Then, turning to the Theban, thus he said :
Small arguments are needful to persuade
Your temper to comply with my command ;
And, speaking thus, he gave Emilia's hand.
Smil'd Venus, to behold her own true knight
Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight ;
And bless'd with nuptial bliss the sweet laborious night.

Eros and Anteros on either side, [bride ;
One fir'd the bridegroom, and one warm'd the
And long-attending Hymen from above
Shower'd on the bed the whole Idalian grove.
All of a tenor was their after-life,
No day discolor'd with domestic strife ;

No jealousy, but mutual truth believ'd,
Secure repose, and kindness undeceiv'd.
Thus Heav'n, beyond the compass of his
thought,
Sent him the blessing he so dearly bought.
So may the Queen of Love long duty bless,
And all true lovers find the same success.

§ 27. Religio Laici. Dryden.

AN EPISTLE.

DIM as the borrow'd beams of moon and
stars
To lonely weary wand'ring travellers,
Is reason to the soul: and, as on high
Those rolling fires discover but the sky,
Nor light us here; so reason's glimm'ring ray
Was lent not to assure our doubtful way,
But guide us upward to a better day.
And as those nightly tapers disappear,
When day's bright lord ascends our hemisphere;
So pale grows reason at religion's sight;
So dies, and so dissolves in supernat'ral light.
Some few, whose lamp shone brighter, have been led
From cause to cause, to nature's secret head;
And found that one first principle must be:
But what, or who, that universal He;
Whether some soul encompassing this ball,
Unmade, unmov'd; yet making, moving all;
Or various atoms, interfering dance,
Leap'd into form, the noble work of chance;
Or this great all was from eternity;
Not e'en the Stagyrice himself could see,
And Epicurus guess'd as well as he;
As blindly grop'd they for a future state;
As rashly judg'd of providence and fate:
But least of all, could their endeavours find
What most concern'd the good of human kind:
For happiness was never to be found,
But vanish'd from them like enchanted ground.
One thought content the good to be enjoy'd:
This ev'ry little accident destroy'd:
The wiser madmen did for virtue toil;
A thorny, or at best a barren soil:
In pleasure some their glutton souls would steep; [deep;
But found their line too short, the well too
And leaky vessels which no bliss could keep.
Thus anxious thoughts in endless circles roll,
Without a centre where to fix the soul:
In this wild maze their vain endeavours end:
How can the less the greater comprehend?
Or finite reason reach Infinity?
For what could fathom God were more than He.
The Deist thinks he stands on firmer ground;
Cries εὐρηκα, the mighty secret's found:
God is that spring of good; supreme, and best;
We made to serve, and in that service blest.
If so, some rules of worship must be giv'n,
Distributed alike to all by Heav'n:
Else God were partial, and to some denied
The means his justice should for all provide.

This gen'ral worship is to praise and pray;
One part to borrow blessings, one to pay:
And when frail nature slides into offence,
The sacrifice for crimes is penitence.
Yet, since th' effects of Providence, we find,
Are variously dispens'd to human kind;
That vice triumphs, and virtue suffers here,
A brand that sov'reign justice cannot bear;
Our reason prompts us to a future state,
The last appeal from fortune and from fate;
Where God's all-righteous ways will be de-clar'd;
The bad meet punishment, the good reward.
Thus man by his own strength to Heav'n would soar;
And would not be oblig'd to God for more.
Vain wretched creature! how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from Heav'n, and of a nobler kind.
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not till faith sprung the light.
Hence all thy nat'ral worship takes the source;
'Tis revelation, what thou think'st discourse.
Else how com'st thou to see these truths so
clear,
Which so obscure to Heathens did appear?
Not Plato these, nor Aristotle found;
Nor he whose wisdom oracles renown'd.
Hast thou a wit so deep, or so sublime,
Or canst thou lower dive, or higher climb?
Canst thou by reason more of godhead know
Than Plutarch, Seneca, or Cicero?
Those giant wits in happier ages born,
When arms and arts did Greece and Rome
adorn,
Knew no such system; no such piles could raise
Of nat'ral worship built on prayer and praise,
To one sole God.
Nor did remorse to expiate sin prescribe;
But slew their fellow-creatures for a bribe:
The guiltless victim groan'd for their offence;
And cruelty and blood were penitence.
If sheep and oxen could atone for men,
Ah! at how cheap a rate the rich might sin!
And great oppressors might Heaven's wrath beguile,
By off'ring his own creatures for a spoil!
Dar'st thou, poor worm, offend Infinity?
And must the terms of peace be giv'n by thee?
Then thou art Justice in the last appeal;
Thy easy God instructs thee to rebel;
And, like a king, remote and weak, must take
What satisfaction thou art pleas'd to make.
But if there be a pow'r too just and strong
To wink at crimes, and bear unpanish'd wrong,
Look humbly upward, see his will disclose
The forfeit first, and then the fine impose;
A mulct thy poverty could never pay,
Had not Eternal Wisdom found the way,
And with celestial wealth supplied thy store;
His justice makes the fine, his mercy quits the score.

See God descending in thy human frame;
Th' offending suff'ring in th' offender's name;
All thy misdeeds to him imputed see,
And all his righteousness devolv'd on thee.

For, granting we have sinn'd, and that th' offence

Of man is made against Omnipotence,
Some price that bears proportion must be paid;
And infinite with infinite be weigh'd.

See then the Deist lost; remorse for vice,
Not paid; or, paid, inadequate in price:
What farther means can reason now direct,
Or what relief from human wit expect?

That shows us sick; and sadly are we sure
Still to be sick, till Heav'n reveal the cure:

If then Heaven's will must needs be understood,

Which must, if we want cure, and Heav'n be
Let all records of will reveal'd be shown;

With scripture all in equal balance thrown,
And our one sacred book will be that one.

Proof needs not here: for whether we com-
That impious idle superstitious ware

Of rites, lustrations, off'rings, which before,
In various ages, various countries bore,

With christian faith and virtues; we shall find
None ans'ring the great ends of human kind,

But this one rule of life, that shows us best
How God may be appeas'd, and mortals blest.

Whether from length of time its worth we
draw,

The word is scarce more ancient than the law;
Heaven's early care prescrib'd for ev'ry age;

First in the soul, and after in the page.

Or whether more abstractedly we look,

Or on the writers, or the written book,

Whence, but from Heav'n, could men unskill'd in arts,

In sev'ral ages born, in sev'ral parts,

Weave such agreeing truths? or how, or why,
Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie?

Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice,
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price.

If on the book itself we cast our view,

Concurrent heathens prove the story true;

The doctrine, miracles; which must convince,
For Heav'n in them appeals to human sense;

And, though they prove not, they confirm the
cause,

When what is taught agrees with nature's laws.

Then for the style, majestic and divine,

It speaks no less than God in ev'ry line;

Commanding words; whose force is still the same

As the first fiat that produc'd our frame.

All faiths beside or did by arms ascend,

Or, since indulg'd, has made mankind their
friend;

This only doctrine does our lusts oppose,

Unfed by nature's soil, in which it grows;

Cross to our int'rests, curbing sense and sin,

Oppress'd without, and undermin'd within;

It thrives through pain; its own tormentors tires;

And with a stubborn patience still aspires.

To what can reason such effects assign
Transcending nature, but to laws divine,
Which in that sacred volume are contain'd;
Sufficient, clear, and for that use ordain'd?

But stay: the Deist here will urge anew:

No supernat'ral worship can be true;

Because a gen'ral law is that alone

Which must to all, and ev'ry where, be known:

A style so large as not this book can claim,

Nor aught that bears reveal'd religion's name.

'Tis said, the sound of a Messiah's birth

Is gone through all the habitable earth;

But still that text must be confin'd alone

To what was then inhabited and known:

And what provisions could from thence accrue

To Indian souls, and worlds discover'd new?

In other parts it helps, that ages past,

The scriptures there were known, and were embrac'd,

Till sin spread once again the shades of night:

What's that to these, who never saw the light?

Of all objections this indeed is chief

To startle reason, stagger frail belief:

We grant, 'tis true, that Heav'n from human
sense

Has hid the secret paths of Providence:

But boundless wisdom, boundless mercy, may

Find, e'en for those bewilder'd souls, a way;

If from his nature foes may pity claim,

Much more may strangers who ne'er heard his
name:

And though no name be for salvation known,

But that of his eternal Son's alone;

Who knows how far transcending goodness can

Extend the merits of that Son to man?

Who knows what reasons may his mercy lead;

Or ignorance invincible may plead?

Not only charity bids hope the best,

But more the great apostle has express'd:

"That if the Gentiles, whom no law inspir'd,

By nature did what was by law requir'd,

They, who the written rule had never known,

Were to themselves both rule and law alone:

To nature's plain indictment they shall plead;

And by their conscience be condemn'd or freed."

Most righteous doom! because a rule reveal'd

Is none to those from whom it was conceal'd.

Then those who follow'd reason's dictates right,

Liv'd up, and lifted high their nat'ral light;

With Socrates may see their Maker's face,

While thousand rubric-martyrs want a place.

Nor does it balk my charity, to find

Th' Egyptian bishop of another mind;

For though his creed eternal truth contains,

'Tis hard for man to doom to endless pains

All who believ'd not all his zeal requir'd;

Unless he first could prove he was inspir'd.

Then let us either think he meant to say,

This faith, where publish'd, was the only way;

Or else conclude that, Arius to confute,

The good old man, too eager in dispute,

Flew high; and as his christian fury rose,

Damn'd all for heretics who durst oppose.

Thus far my charity this path has tried ;
 A much unskilful, but well-meaning guide :
 Yet what they are, e'en these crude thoughts were bred,
 By reading that which better thou hast read.
 Thy matchless author's work ; which thou my friend,
 By well translating, better dost commend:
 Those youthful hours, which of thy equals, most
 In toys have squander'd, or in vice have lost ;
 Those hours hast thou to nobler use employ'd,
 And the severe delights of truth enjoy'd.
 Witness this weighty book, in which appears
 The crabbed toil of many thoughtful years,
 Spent by thy author, in the sifting care
 Of rabbins' old sophisticated ware,
 From gold divine ; which he who well can sort,
 May afterwards make algebra a sport.
 A treasure, which if country curates buy,
 They Junius and Tremellius may defy ;
 Save pains in various readings and translations ;
 And without Hebrew, make most learn'd quotations.
 A work so full with various learning fraught,
 So nicely ponder'd, yet so strongly wrought,
 As nature's height and art's last hand requir'd,
 As much as man could compass, uninspir'd ;
 Where we may see what errors have been made
 Both in the copier's and translator's trade ;
 How Jewish, Popish int'rests have prevail'd,
 And where infallibility has fail'd.
 For some, who have his secret meaning
     guess'd,
 Have found our author not too much a priest :
 For fashion's sake, he seems to have recourse
 To pope, and councils, and tradition's force :
 But he that old traditions could subdue,
 Could not but find the weakness of the new ;
 If scripture, though deriv'd from heav'nly birth,
 Has been but carelessly preserv'd on earth ;
 If God's own people, who of God before Knew what we know, and had been promis'd
     more,
 In fuller terms of Heav'n's assisting care,
 And who did neither time nor study spare,
 To keep this book untainted, unperplex'd,
 Let in gross errors to corrupt the text,
 Omitted paragraphs, embroil'd the sense,
 With vain traditions stopt the gaping fence,
 Which ev'ry common hand pull'd up with ease ;
 What safety from such brush-wood-helps as these ?
 If written words from time are not secur'd,
 How can we think have oral sounds endur'd ?
 Which thus transmitted, if one mouth has fail'd,
 Immortal lyes on ages are entail'd :
 And that some such have been, is prov'd too
     plain,
 If we consider int'rest, church, and gain.
 O but, says one, tradition set aside,
 Where can we hope for an unerring guide ?
 For since th' original scripture has been lost,
 All copies disagreeing, maim'd the most ;

Or christian faith can have no certain ground,
 Or truth in church-tradition must be found.
 Such an omniscient church we wish indeed ;
 'Twere worth both Testaments ; cast in the creed :
 But if this mother be a guide so sure,
 As can all doubts resolve, and truth secure ;
 Then her infallibility, as well
 Where copies are corrupt or lame, can tell ;
 Restore lost canons with as little pains,
 As truly explicate what still remains :
 Which yet no council dare pretend to do,
 Unless, like Esdras, they could write it new :
 Strange confidence still to interpret true.
 Yet not be sure that all they have explain'd
 Is in the blest original contain'd.
 More safe, and much more modest, 'tis to say,
 God would not leave mankind without a way :
 And that the scriptures, though not ev'ry where
 Free from corruption, or entire, or clear,
 Are uncorrupt, sufficient, clear, entire,
 In all things which our needful faith require.
 If others in the same glass better see,
 'Tis for themselves they look, but not for me :
 For my salvation must its doom receive,
 Not from what others, but what I believe.
 Must all tradition then be set aside ?
 This to affirm, were ignorance and pride.
 Are there not many points, some needful sure
 To saving faith, that scripture leaves obscure ?
 Which ev'ry sect will wrest a sev'ral way ;
 For what one sect interprets, all sects may :
 We hold, and say we prove from scripture
     plain,
 That Christ is God ; the bold Socinian
 From the same scripture urges he's but man.
 Now what appeal can end th' important suit ?
 Both parts talk loudly, but the rule is mute.
 Shall I speak plain, and in a nation free,
 Assume an honest layman's liberty ?
 I think, according to my little skill,
 To my own mother-church submitting still,
 That many have been sav'd, and many may,
 Who never heard this question brought in play.
 Th' unletter'd Christian, who believes in gross,
 Plods on to Heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss ;
 For the strait gate would be made straiter yet,
 Were none admitted there but men of wit.
 The few by nature form'd, with learning fraught,
 Born to instruct, as others to be taught,
 Must study well the sacred page ; and see
 Which doctrine, this or that, does best agree
 With the whole tenor of the work divine,
 And plainliest points to Heav'n's reveal'd
     design :
 Which exposition flows from genuine sense,
 And which is forc'd by wit and eloquence.
 Not that tradition's parts are useless here ;
 When gen'ral, old, disint'rested, and clear :
 That ancient fathers thus expound the page,
 Gives truth the rev'rend majesty of age ;
 Confirms its force by 'biding ev'ry test ;
 For best authorities next rules are best.

And still the nearer to the spring we go,
 More limpid, more unsoil'd, the waters flow.
 Thus first traditions were a proof alone,
 Could we be certain, such they were, so known;
 But since some flaws in long descent may be,
 They make not truth, but probability.
 E'en Arius and Pelagius durst provoke
 To what the centuries preceding spoke.
 Such difference is there in an oft told tale:
 But truth by its own sinews will prevail.
 Tradition written therefore more commends
 Authority, than what from voice descends:
 And this, as perfect as its kind can be,
 Rolls down to us the sacred history;
 Which, from the universal church receiv'd,
 Is tried, and after for itself believ'd.

The partial Papists would infer from hence
 Their church, in last resort, should judge the sense.

But first they would assume, with wondrous art,
 Themselves to be the whole, who are but part
 Of that vast frame, the church; yet grant they were

The handers-down, can they from thence infer
 A right t' interpret? or would they alone,
 Who brought the present, claim it for their own?

The book's a common largess to mankind;
 Not more for them than ev'ry man design'd:
 The welcome news is in the letter found;
 The carrier's not commission'd to expound.
 It speaks itself, and what it does contain,
 In all things needful to be known, is plain.

In times o'ergrown with rust and ignorance,
 A gainful trade their clergy did advance;
 When want of learning kept the laymen low,
 And none but priests were authoriz'd to know:
 When what small knowledge was, in them did dwell;

And he a god who could but read and spell;
 The mother-church did mightily prevail;
 She parcel'd out the Bible by retail:
 But still expounded what she sold or gave,
 To keep it in her pow'r to damn or save.
 Scripture was scarce, and, as the market went,
 Poor laymen took salvation on content;
 As needy men take money good or bad:
 God's word they had not, but the priest's they had.

Yet whate'er false conveyances they made,
 The lawyer still was certain to be paid.
 In those dark times, they learn'd their knack so
 That by long use they grew infallible. [well,
 At last, a knowing age began t' inquire
 If they the book or that did them inspire:
 And, making narrower search, they found,
 though late, [estate:

That what they thought the priest's, was their
 Taught by the will produc'd, the written word,
 How long they had been cheated on record.
 Then ev'ry man who saw the title fair,
 Claim'd a child's part, and put in for a share;
 Consulted soberly his private good,
 And sav'd himself as cheap as e'er he could.

'Tis true, my friend, and far be flatt'ry hence,
 This good had full as bad a consequence:
 The book thus put in ev'ry vulgar hand,
 Which each presum'd he best could understand,

The common rule was made the common prey,
 And at the mercy of the rabble lay.
 The tender page with horny fists was gall'd;
 And he was gifted most that loudest bawl'd:
 The spirit gave the doctoral degree:
 And ev'ry member of a company
 Was of his trade and of the Bible free.
 Plain truths enough for needful use they found;
 But men would still be itching to expound:
 Each was ambitious of th' obscurest place,
 No measure ta'en from knowledge, all from grace.

Study and pains were now no more their care;
 Texts were explain'd by fasting and by pray'r:
 This was the fruit the private spirit brought;
 Occasion'd by great zeal and little thought;
 While crowds unlearn'd, with rude devotion
 warm,

About the sacred viands buz and swarm.
 The fly-blown text creates a crawling brood;
 And turns to maggots what was meant for food.
 A thousand daily sects rise up and die;
 A thousand more the perish'd race supply:
 So all we make of Heaven's discover'd will,
 Is not to have it, or to use it ill.

The danger's much the same; on sev'ral shelves
 If others wreck us, or we wreck ourselves.

What then remains, but, waving each extreme,
 The tides of ignorance and pride to stem?
 Neither so rich a treasure to forego;
 Nor proudly seek beyond our pow'r to know:
 Faith is not built on disquisitions vain;
 The things we must believe are few and plain.
 But since men will believe more than they need,

And ev'ry man will make himself a creed,
 In doubtful questions, 'tis the safest way
 To learn what unsuspected ancients say;
 For 'tis not likely we should higher soar
 In search of Heav'n than all the church before;
 Nor can we be deceiv'd, unless we see
 The scripture and the fathers disagree.
 If after all, they stand suspected still,
 For no man's faith depends upon his will;
 'Tis some relief, that points not clearly known,
 Without much hazard may be let alone;
 And, after hearing what our church can say,
 If still our reason runs another way,
 That private reason 'tis more just to curb,
 Than by disputes the public peace disturb;
 For points obscure are of small use to learn;
 But common quiet is mankind's concern.

Thus have I made my own opinions clear;
 Yet neither praise expect, nor censure fear;
 And this unpolish'd rugged verse I chose,
 As fittest for discourse, and nearest prose;
 For, while from sacred truth I do not swerve,
 Tom Sternhold's or Tom Shadwell's rhymes will serve.

§ 28. Mac Flecknoe. Dryden.

ALL human things are subject to decay,
 And when fate summons, monarchs must obey.
 This Flecknoe found, who like Augustus,
     young
 Was call'd to empire, and had govern'd long;
 In prose and verse was own'd without dispute,
 Through all the realms of Nonsense absolute.
 This aged prince, now flourishing in peace,
 And bless'd with issue of a large increase;
 Worn out with business, did at length debate
 To settle the succession of the state:
 And pond'ring which, of all his sons, was fit
 To reign, and wage immortal war with Wit;
 Cried, 'Tis resolv'd; for Nature pleads, that he Should only rule who most resembles me.
 Sh——, alone, my perfect image bears,
 Mature in dullness from his tender years;
 Sh——, alone, of all my sons, is he,
 Who stands confirm'd in full stupidity.
 The rest to some faint meaning make pretence;
 But Sh—— never deviates into sense.
 Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
 Strike through, and make a lucid interval;
 But Sh——'s genuine night admits no ray;
 His rising fogs prevail upon the day.
 Besides, his goodly fabric fills the eye,
 And seems design'd for thoughtless majesty;
 Thoughtless as monarch oaks that shade the
     plain,
 And, spread in solemn state, supinely reign.
 Heywood and Shirley were but types of thee,
 Thou last great prophet of Tautology.
 E'en I, a dunce of more renown than they,
 Was sent before but to prepare thy way;
 And coarsely clad in Norwich drugget, came
 To teach the nations in thy greater name.
 My warbling lute, the lute I whilom strung,
 When to king John of Portugal I sung,
 Was but the prelude of that glorious day,
 When thou on silver Thames didst cut thy
     way,
 With well-tim'd oars, before the royal barge,
 Swell'd with the pride of thy celestial charge;
 And, big with hymn, commander of an host,
 The like was ne'er in Epsom blankets toss'd.
 Methinks I see the new Arion sail,
 The lute still trembling underneath thy nail.
 At thy well-shapen'd thumb, from shore to shore
 The trebles squeak for fear, the basses roar:
 Echoes from Pissing-Alley Sh—— call,
 And Sh—— they resound from Aston-Hall.
 About thy boat the little fishes throng,
 As at the morning toast that floats along.
 Sometimes, as prince of thy harmonious band,
 Thou wield'st thy papers in thy threshing hand.
 St. Andre's feet ne'er kept more equal time,
 Not e'en the feet of thy own Psyche's rhyme:
 Though they in number as in sense excel;
 So just, so like Tautology they fell,
 That, pale with envy, Singleton forswore
 The lute and sword which he in triumph bore,
 And vow'd he ne'er would act Villerius more.

Here stopt the good old sire, and wept for joy,
 In silent raptures of the hopeful boy.
 All arguments, but most his plays, persuade,
 That for anointed dullness he was made.
 Close to the walls which fair Augusta bind
 (The fair Augusta, much to fears inclin'd)
 An ancient fabric, rais'd t' inform the sight,
 There stood of yore, and Barbican it hight:
 A watch-tow'r once: but now, so fate ordains,
 Of all the pile an empty name remains:
 From its old ruins brothel-houses rise,
 Scenes of lewd loves, and of polluted joys,
 Where their vast courts the mother-strumpets
     keep,
 And undisturb'd by watch, in silence sleep:
 Near these, a nursery erects its head, [bred:
 Where queens are form'd, and future heroes
 Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry,
 Where infant punks their tender voices try,
 And little Maximins the gods defy.
 Great Fletcher never treads the buskins here,
 Nor greater Jonson dares in socks appear;
 But gentle Simpkin just reception finds,
 Amidst this monument of vanish'd minds:
 Pure clinches the suburban Muse affords,
 And Panton waging harmless war with words.
 Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well known,
 Ambitiously design'd his Sh——'s throne:
 For ancient Decker prophesied, long since,
 That in this pile should reign a mighty prince,
 Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense:
 To whom true dullness should some Psyches owe,
 But worlds of Misers from his pen should flow;
 Humorists and Hypocrites it should produce,
 Whole Raymond families, and tribes of Bruce.
 Now empress Fame had publish'd the renown
 Of Sh——'s coronation through the town.
 Rous'd by report of Fame, the nations meet,
 From near Bun-hill and distant Watling-street;
 No Persian carpets spread th' imperial way,
 But scattered limbs of mangled poets lay:
 From dusty shops neglected authors come,
 Martyrs of pyes, and relics of the bum.
 Much Heywood, Shirley, Ogleby, there lay;
 But loads of Sh—— almost choak'd the way.
 Bilk'd stationers for yeomen stood prepar'd,
 And H——n was captain of the guard.
 The hoary prince in majesty appear'd,
 High on the throne of his own labors rear'd,
 At his right hand, our young Ascanius sat,
 Rome's other hope, and pillar of the state.
 His brows, thick fogs, instead of glories, grace,
 And lambent Dullness play'd around his face.
 As Hannibal did to the altars come,
 Sworn by his sire a mortal foe to Rome;
 So Sh—— swore, nor should his vow be vain,
 That he till death, true dullness would maintain,
 And, in his father's right and realm's defence,
 Ne'er to have peace with wit, nor truce with
     sense.
 The king himself the sacred unction made,
 As king by office, and as priest by trade

In his sinister hand, instead of ball,
He plac'd a mighty mug of potent ale;
Love's kingdom to his right he did convey,
At once his sceptre and his rule of sway;
Whose righteous lore the prince had practis'd
young,

And from whose loins recorded Psyche sprung;
His temples last with poppies were o'erspread,
That, nodding, seem'd to consecrate his head.
Just at the point of time, if fame not lie,
On his right hand twelve rev'rend owls did fly.
So Romulus, 'tis sung by Tiber's brook,
Presage of sway from twice six vultures took.
Th' admiring throng loud acclamations make,
And omens of his future empire take.

The sire then shook the honors of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed
Full on the filial dullness: long he stood,
Repelling from his breast the raging god;
At length burst out in this prophetic mood:

"Heav'n's bless my son, from Ireland let him reign

To far Barbadoes on the western main;
Of his dominion may no end be known,
And greater than his father's be his throne;
Beyond Love's kingdom let him stretch his pen."

He paus'd, and all the people cried, Amen.
Then thus continued he: "My son, advance
Still in new impudence, new ignorance.
Success let others teach; learn thou, from me,
Pangs without birth, and fruitless industry.

Let Virtuosos in five years be writ;
Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit.
Let gentle George in triumph tread the stage;
Make Dorimant betray, and Loveit rage;
Let Cully Cockwood, Fopling, charm the pit,
And, in their folly, show the writer's wit.
Yet still thy fools shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense.

Let 'em be all by thy own model made
Of dullness, and desire no foreign aid;
That they to future ages may be known,
Not copies drawn, but issue of my own.
Nay, let thy men of wit too be the same,
All full of thee, and diff'ring but in name.
But let no alien S—dl—y interpose,

To lard with wit thy hungry Epsom prose:
And when false flowers of Rhetoric thou wouldst
Trust Nature, do not labor to be dull: [cull,
But write thy best, and top; and, in each line,
Sir Formal's oratory will be thine:

Sir Formal, though unsought, attends thy quill,
And does thy Northern Dedications fill.
Nor let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,
By arrogating Jonson's hostile name.

Let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praise,
And uncle Ogleby thy envy raise.

Thou art my blood, where Jonson has no part;
What share have we in nature or in art?

Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand?

Where made he love in Prince Nicander's vein,
Or swept the dust in Psyche's humble strain?

Where sold he bargains, whip-stitch, kiss my arse;

Promis'd a play, and dwindled to a farce?
When did his muse from Fletcher scenes purloin,
As thou whole Eth'ridge dost transfuse to thine?
But so transfus'd, as oil and water flow;

His always floats above, thine sinks below.
This is thy province, this thy wondrous way,
New humors to invent for each new play;
This is that boasted bias of thy mind,
By which, one way, to dullness 'tis inclin'd;
Which make thy writings lean on one side still,
And in all changes, that way bends thy will.
Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.

A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ;
But sure thou 'rt but a kilderkin of wit.
Like mine, thy gentle numbers feebly creep;
Thy tragic Muse gives smiles; thy comic, sleep.
With whate'er gall thou sett'st thyself to write,
Thy inoffensive satires never bite.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies.
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen Iambics, but mild Anagram.

Leave writing plays, and choose for thy command
Some peaceful province in Acrostic land.

There thou mayst wings display, and altars raise,
And torture one poor word ten thousand ways;
Or, if thou wouldst thy diff'rent talents suit,
Set thy own songs, and sing them to thy lute.

He said; but his last words were scarcely heard;

For Bruce and Longvil had a trap prepar'd,
And down they sent the yet declaiming bard;
Sinking, he left his drugget robe behind,
Borne upwards by a subterranean wind.
The mantle fell to the young prophet's part,
With double portion of his father's art.

§ 29. Cymon and Iphigenia. Dryden.

Poeta loquitur.

OLD as I am, for ladies' love unfit,
The pow'r of beauty I remember yet, [my wit.
Which once inflam'd my soul, and still inspires
If love be folly, the severe divine
Has felt that folly, though he censures mine;
Pollutes the pleasures of a chaste embrace,
Acts what I write, and propagates in grace,
With riotous excess, a priestly race.
Suppose him free, and that I forge th' offence,
He show'd the way, perverting first my sense;
In malice witty, and with venom fraught,
He makes me speak the things I never thought.
Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal;
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well.
The world will think that what we loosely write,
Though now arrang'd, he reads with some delight;
Because he seems to chew the cud again,
When his broad comment makes the text too
plain;

And teaching more, in one explaining page,
Than all the double-meanings of the stage.

What needs he paraphrase on what we mean?
 We were at most but wanton ; he 's obscene.
 I not my fellows nor myself excuse :
 But love 's the subject of the comic Muse ;
 Nor can we write without it, nor would you
 A tale of only dry instruction view.
 Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
 But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind ;
 Awakes the sleepy vigor of the soul,
 And, brushing o'er, adds motion to the pool.
 Love, studious how to please, improves our parts
 With polish'd manners, and adorns with arts.
 Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
 The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime ;
 To lib'ral acts enlarg'd the narrow soul'd,
 Soften'd the fierce, and made the coward bold ;
 The world, when waste, he peopled with in-
 And warring nations reconcil'd in peace. [crease,
 Ormond, the first, and all the fair may find,
 In this one legend, to their fame design'd,
 When beauty fires the blood, how love exalts
 the mind. [court,

In that sweet isle where Venus keeps her
 And ev'ry Grace, and all the Loves, resort ;
 Where either sex is form'd of softer earth,
 And takes the bent of pleasure from their birth ;
 There liv'd a Cyprian lord, above the rest
 Wise, wealthy, with a num'rous issue blest :
 But, as no gift of fortune is sincere,
 Was only wanting in a worthy heir.
 His eldest born, a goodly youth to view,
 Excell'd the rest in shape and outward shew ;
 Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd,
 But of a heavy, dull, degen'rate mind.

His soul belied the features of his face ;
 Beauty was there, but beauty in disgrace :
 A clownish mien, a voice with rustic sound,
 And stupid eyes that ever lov'd the ground.
 He look'd like nature's error ; as the mind
 And body were not of a piece design'd, [join'd.
 But made for two, and by mistake in one were
 The ruling rod, the father's forming care,
 Were exercis'd in vain on wit's despair ;
 The more inform'd, the less he understood ;
 And deeper sunk by flound'ring in the mud.
 Now scorn'd of all, and grown the public shame,
 The people from Galesus chang'd his name,
 And Cymon call'd, which signifies a brute ;
 So well his name did with his nature suit.

His father, when he found his labor lost,
 And care employ'd that answer'd not the cost,
 Chose an ungrateful object to remove,
 And loath'd to see what nature made him love ;
 So to his country farm the fool confin'd :
 Rude work well suited to a rustic mind.
 Thus to the wilds the sturdy Cymon went,
 A 'squire among the swains, and pleas'd with banishment.

His corn and cattle were his only care,
 And his supreme delight a country fair.

It happen'd on a summer's holiday,
 That to the green-wood shade he took his way ;
 For Cymon shunn'd the church, and us'd not much to pray.

His quarter-staff, which he could ne'er forsake,
 Hung half before, and half behind his back.
 He trudg'd along, unknowing what he sought,
 And whistled as he went, for want of thought.

By chance conducted, or by thirst constrain'd,
 The deep recesses of the grove he gain'd ;
 Where, in a plain defended by the wood,
 Crept through the matted grass a crystal flood,
 By which an alabaster fountain stood :
 And on the margin of the fount was laid
 (Attended by her slaves) a sleeping maid :
 Like Dian and her nymphs, when tir'd with sport,

To rest by cool Eurotas they resort.
 The dame herself the goddess well express'd,
 Not more distinguish'd by her purple vest,
 Than by the charming features of her face,
 And e'en in slumber a superior grace :
 Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,
 Her body shaded with a slight cymarr ;
 Her bosom to the view was only bare,
 Where two beginning paps were scarcely spied,
 For yet their places were but signified :
 The fanning wind upon her bosom blows,
 To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose :
 The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose.

The fool of nature stood with stupid eyes,
 And gaping mouth that testified surprise,
 Fix'd on her face, nor could remove his sight,
 New as he was to love, and novice to delight :
 Long mute he stood, and, leaning on his staff,
 His wonder witness'd with an idiot laugh ;
 Then would have spoke, but by his glimm'ring
 sense,

First found his want of words, and fear'd offence ;
 Doubted for what he was he should be known,
 By his clown accent, and his country tone.
 Through the rude chaos thus the running night
 Shot the first ray that pierc'd the native night :
 Then day and darkness in the mass were mix'd,
 Till gather'd in a globe the beams were fix'd :
 Last shone the sun, who, radiant in his sphere,
 Illumin'd Heav'n and earth, and roll'd around
 So reason in this brutal soul began : [the year.
 Love made him first suspect he was a man ;
 Love made him doubt his broad barbarian sound ;
 By love his want of words and wit he found ;
 That sense of want prepar'd the future way
 To knowledge, and disclos'd the promise of a day.
 What not his father's care, nor tutor's art,
 Could plant with pains in his unpolish'd heart,
 The best instructor, love, at once inspir'd,
 As barren grounds to fruitfulness are fir'd :
 Love taught him shame ; and shame, with love
 Soon taught the sweet civilities of life ; [at strife,
 His gross material soul at once could find
 Somewhat in her excelling all her kind :
 Exciting a desire till then unknown ;
 Somewhat unfound, or found in her alone :
 This made the first impression on his mind,
 Above, but just above, the brutal kind.
 For beasts can like, but not distinguish too ;
 Nor their own liking by reflection know ;

Nor why they like or this or t'other face,
 Or judge of this or that peculiar grace;
 But love in gross, and stupidly admire,
 As flies allur'd by light, approach the fire.
 Thus our man-beast, advancing by degrees,
 First likes the whole, then sep'rates what he sees:
 On sev'ral parts a sev'ral praise bestows:
 The ruby lips, the well proportion'd nose,
 The snowy skin, and raven-glossy hair,
 The dimpled cheek, and forehead rising fair,
 And e'en in sleep itself, a smiling air.
 From thence his eyes descending view'd the rest,
 Her plump round arms, white hands, and heav-
 ing breast.

Long on the last he dwelt, though every part
 A pointed arrow sped to pierce his heart.

Thus in a trice a judge of beauty grown,
 (A judge erected from a country clown)
 He long'd to see her eyes, in slumber hid,
 And wish'd his own could pierce within the lid;
 He would have wak'd her, but restrain'd his thought, [taught,

And love new-born the first good manners
 And awful fear his ardent wish withstood,
 Nor durst disturb the goddess of the wood;
 For such she seem'd by her celestial face,
 Excelling all the rest of human race.

And things divine, by common sense he knew,
 Must be devoutly seen, at distant view:
 So checking his desire, with trembling heart,
 Gazing he stood, nor would nor could depart;
 Fix'd as a pilgrim wilder'd in his way,
 Who dares not stir by night, for fear to stray,
 But stands with awful eyes to watch the dawn of day.

At length awaking, Iphigene the fair
 (So was the beauty call'd who caus'd his care)
 Unclos'd her eyes, and double day reveal'd,
 While those of all her slaves in sleep were seal'd.

The slav'ring curden, propp'd upon his staff,
 Stood ready gaping, with a grinning laugh,
 To welcome her awake; nor durst begin
 To speak, but wisely kept the fool within.
 Then she: What makes you, Cymon, here
 alone?

(For Cymon's name was round the country
 Because descended of a noble race, [known,
 And for a soul ill sorted with his face).

But still the sot stood silent with surprise,
 With fixt regard on her new open'd eyes,
 And in his breast receiv'd th' envenom'd dart,
 A tickling pain that pleas'd amid the smart.
 But conscious of her form, with quick distrust,
 She saw his sparkling eyes, and fear'd his brutal
 This to prevent, she wak'd her sleepy crew, [lust:
 And, rising hasty, took a short adieu.

Then Cymon first his rustic voice essay'd,
 With proffer'd service to the parting maid,
 To see her safe; his hand she long denied,
 But took at length, asham'd of such a guide.
 So Cymon led her home, and leaving there,
 No more would to his country clowns repair;
 But sought his father's house with better mind,
 Refusing in the farm to be confin'd.

The father wonder'd at the son's return,
 And knew not whether to rejoice or mourn;
 But doubtfully receiv'd, expecting still
 To learn the secret causes of his alter'd will.
 Nor was he long delay'd: the first request
 He made, was like his brothers to be dress'd,
 And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest.

With ease his suit was granted by his sire,
 Distinguishing his heir by rich attire:
 His body thus adorn'd, he next design'd
 With lib'ral arts to cultivate the mind:
 He sought a tutor with his own accord,
 And studied lessons he before abhorr'd.

Thus the man-child advanc'd and learn'd so
 That in short time his equals he surpass'd; [fast,
 His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,
 His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd;
 In ev'ry exercise of all admir'd,
 He seem'd, nor only seem'd, but was, inspir'd:
 Inspir'd by love, whose business is to please;
 He rode, he fenc'd, he mov'd with graceful
 ease;

More fam'd for sense, for courtly carriage more,
 Than for his brutal folly known before.

What then of alter'd Cymon shall we say,
 But that the fire which chok'd in ashes lay,
 A load too heavy for his soul to move, [love?
 Was upward blown below, and brush'd away by
 Love made an active progress through his mind,
 The dusky parts he clear'd, the gross refin'd,
 The drowsy wak'd; and, as he went, impress'd
 The Maker's image on the human breast.

Thus was the man amended by desire: [fire,
 And though he lov'd perhaps with too much
 His father all his faults with reason scann'd,
 And lik'd an error of the better hand;
 Excus'd th' excess of passion in his mind,
 By flames too fierce, perhaps too much refin'd:
 So Cymon, since his sire indulg'd his will,
 Impetuous lov'd, and would be Cymon still;
 Galesus he disown'd, and chose to bear
 The name of fool, confirm'd, and bishop'd by the fair.

To Cipseus by his friends his suit he mov'd,
 Cipseus, the father of the fair he lov'd:
 But he was pre-engag'd by former ties,
 While Cymon was endeavoring to be wise:
 And Iphigene, oblig'd by former vows,
 Had giv'n her faith to wed a foreign spouse:
 Her sire and she to Rhodian Pasimond,
 Though both repenting, were by promise bound,
 Nor could retract; and thus, as fate decreed,
 Though better lov'd, he spoke too late to speed.

The doom was past, the ship already sent
 Did all his tardy diligence prevent:
 Sigh'd to herself the fair unhappy maid,
 While stormy Cymon thus in secret said:
 The time is come for Iphigene to find
 The miracle she wrought upon my mind: [love
 Her charms have made me man, her ravish'd
 In rank shall place me with the blest above.
 For mine by love, by force she shall be mine,
 Or death, if force should fail, shall finish my design.

Resolv'd he said ; and rigg'd with speedy care
A vessel strong, and well equipp'd for war.
The secret ship with chosen friends he stor'd ;
And, bent to die or conquer, went abroad.
Ambush'd he lay behind the Cyprian shore,
Waiting the sail that all his wishes bore ;
Nor long expected, for the following tide
Sent out the hostile ship and beauteous bride.

To Rhodes the rival bark directly steer'd,
When Cymon sudden at her back appear'd,
And stopt her flight ; then, standing on his prow,

In haughty terms he thus defied the foe :
Or strike your sails at summons, or prepare
To prove the last extremities of war.

Thus warn'd, the Rhodians for the fight provide,
Already were the vessels side by side ; [bride.
These obstinate to save, and those to seize the
But Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd,
And, arm'd with sword and shield, amid the press he pass'd.

Fierce was the fight ; but, hast'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover freed his way ;
Himself alone dispers'd the Rhodian crew,
The weak disdain'd, the valiant overthrew.
Cheap conquest for his following friends re-
main'd ;

He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.
His victory confess'd, the foes retreat,
And cast the weapons at the victor's feet,
Whom thus he cheer'd ; O Rhodian youth, I fought

For love alone, nor other booty sought ;
Your lives are safe ; your vessels I resign ;
Yours be your own, restoring what is mine ;
In Iphigene I claim my rightful due,
Robb'd by my rival, and detain'd by you.
Your Pasimond a lawless bargain drove ;
The parent could not sell the daughter's love :
Or, if he could, my love disdains the laws,
And, like a king, by conquest gains his cause ;
Where arms take place, all other pleas are vain ;
Love taught me force, and force shall love maintain ; [lease,

You, what by strength you could not keep, re-
And at an easy ransom buy your peace. [cord,

Fear on the conquer'd side soon sign'd th' ac-
And Iphigene to Cymon was restor'd :

While to his arms the blushing bride he took,
To seeming sadness she compos'd her look ;
As if by force subjected to his will,
Though pleas'd dissembling, and a woman still.
And (for she wept) he wip'd her falling tears,
And pray'd her to dismiss her empty fears ;
For yours I am, he said, and have deserv'd
Your love much better whom so long I serv'd,
Than he to whom your formal father tied
Your vows, and sold a slave, not sent a bride.

Thus while he spoke, he seiz'd the willing prey,
As Paris bore the Spartan spouse away.

Faintly she scream'd, and e'en her eyes confess'd
She rather would be thought, than was, distress'd.

Who now exults but Cymon in his mind ;
Vain hopes and empty joys of human kind,
Proud of the present, to the future blind !
Secure of fate, while Cymon ploughs the sea,
And steers to Candy with his conquer'd prey,
Scarce the third glass of measur'd hours was run,
When, like a fiery meteor, sunk the sun,
The promise of a storm ; the shifting gales
Forsake by fits, and fill the flagging sails ;
Hoarse murmurs of the main from far were heard,

And night came on, not by degrees prepar'd,
But all at once ; at once the winds arise,
The thunders roll, the fork lightning flies.
In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands :
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care,
And from the first they labor in despair.
The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides,
Forc'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,
Stunn'd with the diff'rent blows ; then shoots
amain,

Till, counterbuff'd, she stops, and sleeps again.
Not more aghast the proud archangel fell, [hell,
Plung'd from the height of heaven to deepest
Than stood the lover of his love possest,
Now curs'd the more, the more he had been
blest ;

More anxious for her danger than his own,
Death he defies, but would be lost alone.

Sad Iphigene to womanish complaints
Adds pious prayers, and wearies all the saints ;
E'en if she could, her love she would repent ;
But since she cannot, dreads the punishment :
Her forfeit faith, and Pasimond betray'd,
Are ever present, and her crime upbraid.
She blames herself, nor blames her lover less,
Augments her anger as her fears increase ;
From her own back the burden would remove,
And lays the load on his ungovern'd love,
Which interposing durst, in Heaven's despite,
Invade and violate another's right :
The pow'rs incens'd a while deferr'd his pain,
And made him master of his vows in vain :
But soon they punish'd his presumptuous pride ;
That for his daring enterprise she died,
Who rather not resisted than complied.

Then, impotent of mind, with alter'd sense
She hugg'd th' offender, and forgave th' offence ;
Sex to the last : meantime, with sails declin'd,
The wand'ring vessel drove before the wind ;
Toss'd and retoss'd, aloft, and then below,
Nor port they seek, nor certain course they know,
But every moment wait the coming blow.
Thus blindly driv'n, by breaking day they view'd
The lands before them, and their fears renew'd ;
The land was welcome, but the tempest bore
The threaten'd ship against a rocky shore.

A winding bay was near ; to this they bent,
And just escap'd ; their force already spent.
Secure from storms, and panting from the sea,
The land unknown at leisure they survey ;
And saw (but soon their sickly sight withdrew)
The rising tow'rs of Rhodes at distant view :

And curs'd the hostile shore of Pasimond, Sav'd from the seas, and shipwreck'd on the
ground.

The frighted sailors tried their strength in vain
To turn the stern, and tempt the stormy main:
But the stiff wind withstood the lab'ring oar,
And forc'd them forward on the fatal shore!
The crooked keel now bites the Rhodian strand,
And the ship moor'd constrains the crew to land.
Yet still they might be safe, because unknown;
But, as ill fortune seldom comes alone,
The vessel they dismiss'd was driv'n before,
Already shelter'd on their native shore;
Known each, they know, but each with change
of cheer;

The vanquish'd side exults, the victors fear:
Not them but theirs, made pris'ners ere they
fight,
Despairing conquest, and depriv'd of flight.

The country rings around with loud alarms,
And raw in fields the rude militia swarms;
Mouths without hands, maintain'd at vast expence,

In peace a charge, in war a weak defence:
Stout once a month they march, a blust'ring
band;

And ever, but in times of need, at hand;
This was the morn when, issuing on the guard,
Drawn up in rank and file they stood prepar'd
Of seeming arms to make a short essay,
Then hasten to be drunk, the business of the day. [knew

The cowards would have fled, but that they Themselves so many, and their foes so few:
But, crowding on, the last the first impel;
Till overborne with weight, the Cyprians fell.
Cymon enslav'd, who first the war began;
And Iphigene once more is lost and won.

Deep in a dungeon was the captive cast,
Depriv'd of day, and held in fetters fast;
His life was only spar'd at their request,
Whom taken he so nobly had releas'd;
But Iphigenia was the ladies' care,
Each in their turn address'd to treat the fair:
While Pasimond and his the nuptial feast prepare.

Her secret soul to Cymon was inclin'd,
But she must suffer what her fates assign'd;
So passive is the church of womankind.
What worse to Cymon could his fortune deal,
Roll'd to the lowest spoke of all her wheel?
It rested to dismiss the downward weight,
Or raise him upward to his former height:
The latter pleas'd; and love (concern'd the most)

Prepar'd th' amends for what by love he lost.

The sire of Pasimond had left a son,
Though younger, yet for courage early known,
Ormisda call'd, to whom, by promise tied,
A Rhodian beauty was the destin'd bride;
Cassandra was her name, above the rest
Renown'd for birth, with fortune amply blest.
Lysimachus, who rul'd the Rhodian state,
Was then by choice their annual magistrate;

He lov'd Cassandra too with equal fire,
But fortune had not favor'd his desire;
Cross'd by her friends, by her not disapprov'd,
Nor yet prefer'd, or like Ormisda lov'd;
So stood th' affair; some little hope remain'd,
That should his rival chance to lose, he gain'd.

Mean time young Pasimond his marriage
press'd,

Ordain'd the nuptial day, prepar'd the feast;
And frugally resolv'd (the charge to shun,
Which would be double should he wed alone)
To join his brother's bridal with his own.

Lysimachus, oppress'd with mortal grief,
Receiv'd the news, and studied quick relief:
The fatal day approach'd; if force were us'd,
The magistrate his public trust abus'd;
To justice liable, as law requir'd;
For, when his office ceas'd, his pow'r expir'd:
While pow'r remain'd, the means were in his hand,

By force to seize, and then forsake the land:
Betwixt extremes he knew not how to move;
A slave to fame, but more a slave to love:
Restraining others, yet himself not free,
Made impotent by pow'r, debas'd by dignity.
Both sides he weigh'd; but, after much debate,
The man prevail'd above the magistrate.

Love never fails to master what he finds,
But works a diff'rent way in diff'rent minds,
The fool enlightens, and the wise he blinds.
This youth proposing to possess and 'scape,
Began in murder, to conclude in rape:
Unprais'd by me, though Heav'n sometimes may bless

An impious act with undeserv'd success:
The great, it seems, are privileg'd alone
To punish all injustice but their own.
But here I stop, not daring to proceed,
Yet blush to flatter an unrighteous deed;
For crimes are but permitted, not decreed.

Resolv'd on force, his wit the prætor bent
To find the means that might secure th' event;
Nor long he labor'd, for his lucky thought
In captive Cymon found the friend he sought:
Th' example pleas'd; the cause and crime the
same;

An injur'd lover and a ravish'd dame.
How much he durst he knew by what he dar'd,
The less he had to lose, the less he car'd
To manage loathsome life when love was the reward.

This ponder'd well, and fix'd on his intent,
In depth of night he for the pris'ner sent;
In secret sent, the public view to shun;
Then, with a sober smile, he thus begun:
The pow'rs above, who bounteously bestow
Their gifts and graces on mankind below,
Yet prove our merit first, nor blindly give
To such as are not worthy to receive;
For valor and for virtue they provide
Their due reward, but first they must be tried:
These fruitful seeds within your mind they sow'd;

'Twas yours to improve the talent they bestow'd:

They gave you to be born of noble kind ;
 They gave you love to lighten up your mind,
 And purge the grosser parts ; they gave you care
 To please, and courage to deserve the fair.

Thus far they tried you, and by proof they found

The grain intrusted in a grateful ground ;
 But still the great experiment remain'd,
 They suffer'd you to lose the prize you gain'd,
 That you might learn the gift was theirs alone ;
 And, when restor'd, to them the blessing own.
 Restor'd it soon will be ; the means prepar'd,
 The difficulty smooth'd, the danger shar'd ;
 Be but yourself, the care to me resign,
 Then Iphigene is yours, Cassandra mine.
 Your rival Pasimond pursues your life ;
 Impatient to revenge his ravish'd wife.
 But yet not his, to-morrow is behind,
 And love our fortunes in one band has join'd :
 Two brothers are our foes ; Ormisda mine,
 As much declar'd as Pasimond is thine.
 To-morrow must their common vows be tied ;
 With love to friend, and fortune for our guide,
 Let both resolve to die, or each redeem a bride.

Right I have none, nor hast thou much to plead ;

'Tis force, when done, must justify the deed :
 Our task perform'd, we next prepare for flight,
 And let the losers talk in vain of right :
 We with the fair will sail before the wind ;
 If they are griev'd, I leave the laws behind.
 Speak thy resolves ; if now thy courage droop,
 Despair in prison, and abandon hope :
 But if thou dar'st in arms thy love regain
 (For liberty without thy love were vain)
 Then second my design to seize the prey,
 Or lead to second rape, for well thou know'st
 the way.

Said Cymon, overjoy'd, Do thou propose
 The means to fight, and only show thy foes :
 For from the first, when love had fir'd my
 mind,

Resolv'd I left the care of life behind.

To this the bold Lysimachus replied :
 Let Heav'n be neuter, and the sword decide ;
 The spousals are prepar'd, already play
 The minstrels, and provoke the tardy day :
 By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are
 dress'd ;

All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast,
 All but myself, the sole unbidden guest.
 Unbidden though I am, I will be there ;
 And, join'd by thee, intend to joy the fair.

Now hear the rest ; when day resigns the
 light,

And cheerful torches gild the jolly night,
 Be ready at my call ; my chosen few
 With arms administer'd shall aid thy crew.
 Then, ent'ring unexpected, will we seize
 Our destin'd prey, from men dissolv'd in ease,
 By wine disabled, unprepar'd for fight ;
 And, hastening to the seas, suborn our flight :
 The seas are ours, for I command the fort ;
 A ship well-mann'd expects us in the port :

If they, or if their friends, the prize contest,
 Death shall attend the man who dares resist.

It pleas'd : the pris'ner to his hold retir'd ;
 His troop with equal emulation fir'd,
 All fix'd to fight, and all their wanton work re-
 quir'd.

The sun arose ; the streets were throng'd around,
 The palace open'd, and the posts were crown'd.
 The double bridegroom at the door attends
 Th' expected spouse, and entertains the friends ;
 They meet, they lead to church, the priests invoke [smoke.

The pow'rs, and feed the flames with fragrant
 This done, they feast, and at the close of night,
 By kindled torches vary their delight ;
 These lead the lively dance, and those the brimming bowls invite. [sign'd,

Now at th' appointed place and hour as-
 With souls resolv'd, the ravishers were join'd :
 Three bands are form'd ; the first is sent before
 To favor the retreat, and guard the shore ;
 The second at the palace gate is plac'd,
 And up the lofty stairs ascend the last ;
 A peaceful troop they seem with shining vests,
 But coats of mail beneath secure their breasts.

Dauntless they enter, Cymon at their head,
 And find the feast renew'd, the table spread ;
 Sweet voices, mix'd with instrumental sounds,
 Ascend the vaulted roof, the vaulted roof rebounds : [hall,

When, like the harpies, rushing through the
 The sudden troop appears, the tables fall,
 Their smoking load is on the pavement thrown ;
 Each ravisher prepares to seize his own ;
 The brides, invaded with a rude embrace,
 Shriek out for aid, confusion fills the place.
 Quick to redeem the prey, their plighted lords
 Advance, the palace gleams with shiningswords.

But late is all defence, and succour vain ;
 The rape is made, the ravishers remain ;
 Two sturdy slaves were only sent before
 To bear the purchas'd prize in safety to the shore :

The troop retires, the lovers close the rear,
 With forward faces not confessing fear ;
 Backward they move, but scorn their pace to mend ; [scend.

Then seek the stairs, and with slow haste de-
 Fierce Pasimond, their passage to prevent,
 Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent ;
 The blade return'd unbath'd, and to the handle bent.

Stout Cymon soon remounts, and cleft in two
 His rival's head with one descending blow ;
 And as the next in rank Ormisda stood,
 He turn'd the point ; the sword, inur'd to blood,
 Bor'd his unguarded breast, which pour'd a purple flood.

With vow'd revenge, the gath'ring crowd pur-
 sues,

The ravishers turn head, the fight renews ;
 The hall is heap'd with corps ; the sprinkled gore [floor.

Besmears the walls, and floats the marble

Dispers'd at length, the drunken squadron flies;
The victors to their vessel bear the prize; [cries.
And hear behind loud groans and lamentable
The crew with merry shouts their anchors weigh,
Then ply their oars, and brush the buxom sea,
While troops of gather'd Rhodians crowd the key.

What should the people do when left alone?
The governor and government are gone:
The public wealth to foreign parts convey'd;
Some troops disbanded, and the rest unpaid.
Rhodes is the sov'reign of the sea no more;
Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store;
They neither could defend, nor can pursue,
But grinn'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view;
In vain with darts a distant war they try,
Short, and more short, the missive weapons fly.
Meanwhile the ravishers their crimes enjoy,
And flying sails and sweeping oars employ:
The cliffs of Rhodes in little space are lost;
Jove's isle they seek, nor Jove denies his coast.

In safety landed on the Candian shore,
With gen'rous wines their spirits they restore;
There Cymon with his Rhodian friends resides,
Both court and wed at once the willing brides.
A war ensues, the Cretans own their cause,
Stiff to defend their hospitable laws;
Both parties lose by turns, and neither wins,
Till peace propounded by a truce begins.
The kindred of the slain forgive the deed,
But a short exile must for show proceed:
The term expir'd, from Candia they remove;
And happy each at home enjoys his love.

§ 30. Theodore and Honoria.

A Translation from Boccace. Dryden.

Of all the cities in Romanian lands,
The chief, and most renown'd, Ravenna stands,
Adorn'd in ancient times with arms and arts,
And rich inhabitants with gen'rous hearts.
But Theodore the brave, above the rest,
With gifts of fortune and of nature blest,
The foremost place for wealth and honor held,
And all in feats of chivalry excell'd.

This noble youth to madness lov'd a dame
Of high degree; Honoria was her name;
Fair as the fairest, but of haughty mind,
And fiercer than became so soft a kind;
Proud of her birth (for equal she had none)
The rest she scorn'd, but hated him alone;
His gifts, his constant courtship, nothing gain'd;
For she, the more he lov'd, the more disdain'd.
He liv'd with all the pomp he could devise,
At tilts and tournaments obtain'd the prize:
But found no favor in his lady's eyes;
Relentless as a rock, the lofty maid
Turn'd all to poison that he did or said:
Nor prayers, nor tears, nor offer'd vows, could move; [strove

The work went backward: and the more he
To advance his suit, the farther from her love

Wearied, at length, and wanting remedy,
He doubted oft, and oft resolv'd to die:

But pride stood ready to prevent the blow,
For who would die to gratify a foe!
His gen'rous mind disdain'd so mean a fate!
That pass'd, his next endeavour was to hate.
But vainer that relief than all the rest,
The less he hop'd, with more desire possess'd;
Love stood the siege, and would not yield his breast.

Change was the next, but change deceiv'd his
care;

He sought a fairer, but found none so fair.
He would have worn her out by slow degrees,
As men by fasting starve th' untam'd disease;
But present love requir'd a present ease.
Looking he feeds alone his famish'd eyes,
Feeds ling'ring death; but looking not he dies.
Yet still he chose the longest way to fate,
Wasting at once his life, and his estate.

His friends beheld, and pity'd him in vain;
For what advice can ease a lover's pain?
Absence, the best expedient they could find,
Might save the fortune, if not cure the mind:
This means they long propos'd, but little gain'd;
Yet, after much pursuit, at length obtain'd.

Hard you may think it was to give consent,
But struggling with his own desires he went,
With large expense, and with a pompous train
Provided, as to visit France and Spain,
Or for some distant voyage o'er the main.
But love had clipp'd his wings and cut him short,

Confin'd within the purlieus of the court.
Three miles he went, nor farther could retreat;
His travels ended at his country-seat:

To Chassis' pleasing plains he took his way,
There pitch'd his tents, and there resolv'd to stay.

The spring was in the prime; the neighb'ring
grove

Supply'd with birds, the choristers of love;
Music unbought, that minister'd delight
To morning walks, and lull'd his cares by night:
There he discharg'd his friends; but not th' expense

Of frequent treats, and proud magnificence.
He liv'd as kings retire, though more at large
From public business, yet with equal charge;
With house and heart still open to receive;
As well content as love would give him leave:
He would have liv'd more free; but many a guest,

Who could forsake the friend, pursu'd the feast.

It happ'd one morning as his fancy led,
Before his usual hour he left his bed;
To walk within a lonely lawn that stood
On every side surrounded by a wood:
Alone, he walk'd to please his pensive mind,
And sought the deepest solitude to find:

'Twas in a grove of spreading pines he stray'd;
The winds within the quiv'ring branches play'd
And dancing trees a mournful music made.

The place itself was suiting to his care,
Uncouth and savage, as the cruel fair.
He wander'd on, unknowing where he went,
Lost in the wood, and all on love intent:

The day already half his race had run,
And summon'd him to due repast at noon;
But love could feel no hunger but his own.

While list'ning to the murm'ring leaves he stood,
More than a mile immers'd within the wood,
At once the wind was laid; the whisp'ring sound
Was dumb; a rising earthquake rock'd the ground;

With deeper brown the grove was overspread;
A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,
And his ears tingled, and his color fled:
Nature was in alarm; some danger nigh
Seem'd threaten'd, though unseen to mortal eye.
Unus'd to fear, he summon'd all his soul,
And stood collected in himself, and whole;
Not long: for soon a whirlwind rose around,
And from afar he heard a screaming sound,
As of a dame distress'd, who cried for aid,
And fill'd with loud laments the secret shade.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood
With briers and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish wood:

From thence the noise, which now approaching near,

With more distinguish'd notes invades his ear:
He rais'd his head, and saw a beauteous maid,
With hair dishevell'd, issuing through the shade,
Stripp'd of her clothes, and e'en those parts reveal'd,

Which modest nature keeps from sight conceal'd.
Her face, her hands, her naked limbs were torn,
With passing through the brakes, and prickly thorn,

Two mastiffs gaunt and grim her flight pursu'd,
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embu'd:
Oft they came up, and pinch'd her tender side;
Mercy, O mercy, Heaven! she ran, and cry'd:
When Heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again;

Then sprung she forth, they follow'd her amain.

Not far behind, a knight of swarthy face,
High on a coal-black steed pursu'd the chase;
With flashing flames his ardent eyes were fill'd,
And in his hand a naked sword he held:
He cheer'd the dogs to follow her who fled,
And vow'd revenge on her devoted head.

As Theodore was born of noble kind,
The brutal action rous'd his manly mind;
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid.
A saplin pine he wrench'd from out the ground,
The readiest weapon that his fury found.
Thus furnish'd for offence, he cross'd the way
Betwixt the graceless villain and his prey.

The knight came thund'ring on, but, from afar,

Thus, in imperious tone, forbad the war:
Cease, Theodore, to proffer vain relief,
Nor stop the vengeance of so just a grief;
But give me leave to seize my destin'd prey,
And let eternal justice take the way:

I but revenge my fate, disdain'd, betray'd,
And suff'ring death for this ungrateful maid.

He said, at once dismounting from the steed;
For now the hell-hounds, with superior speed,
Had reach'd the dame, and, fast'ning on her side,

The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd;
Stood Theodore surpris'd in deadly fright,
With chatt'ring teeth, and bristling hair upright;

Yet arm'd with inborn worth, Whate'er said he,
Thou art, who know'st me better than I thee,
Or prove thy rightful cause, or be defied.

The spectre, fiercely staring, thus reply'd:

Know, Theodore, thy ancestry I claim,

And Guido Cavalcanti was my name:

One common sire our fathers did beget,

My name and story some remember yet:

Thee, then a boy, within my arms I laid,

When for my sins I lov'd this haughty maid;

Not less ador'd in life, nor serv'd by me,

Than proud Honoria now is lov'd by thee.

What did I not her stubborn heart to gain?

But all my vows were answer'd with disdain:

She scorn'd my sorrows, and despis'd my pain.

Long time I dragg'd my days in fruitless care;

Then, loathing life, and plung'd in deep despair,

To finish my unhappy life, I fell

On this sharp sword, and now am damn'd in hell.

Short was her joy, for soon the insulting maid

By Heaven's decree in this cold grave was laid:

And as in unrepented sin she dy'd,

Doom'd to the same bad place, is punish'd for her pride;

Because she deem'd I well deserv'd to die,

And made a merit of her cruelty.

There, then, we met; both try'd, and both were cast,

And this irrevocable sentence pass'd;

That she, whom I so long pursu'd in vain,

Should suffer from my hands a ling'ring pain!

Renew'd to life, that she might daily die,

I daily doom'd to follow, she to fly:

No more a lover, but a mortal foe,

I seek her life (for love is none below):

As often as my dogs with better speed

Arrest her flight, is she to death decreed:

Then with this fatal sword, on which I dy'd,

I pierce her open back, or tender side,

And tear that harden'd heart from out her breast,

Which, with her entrails, makes my hungry hounds a feast.

Nor lies she long, but, as the fates ordain,

Springs up to life, and, fresh to second pain,

Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain.

This, vers'd in death, the infernal knight relates,

And then for proof fulfill'd the common fates;
Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,

And fed the hounds that help'd him to pursue.

Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will,

Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill.

And now the soul, expiring through the wound,

Had left the body breathless on the ground,

When thus the grisly spectre spoke again:
Behold the fruit of ill-rewarded pain:
As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemn'd by fate
To daily death; and ev'ry several place,
Conscious of her disdain and my disgrace,
Must witness her just punishment, and be
A scene of triumph and revenge to me!
As in this grove I took the last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,
As Friday saw me die, so she my prey
Becomes e'en here, on this revolving day.

Thus while he spoke, the virgin from the
ground

Upstart'd fresh, already clos'd the wound,
And unconcern'd for all she felt before,
Precipitates her flight along the shore:
The hell-hounds, as ungorg'd with flesh and blood,

Pursue their prey, and seek their wonted food:
The fiend remounts his courser, mends his pace,
And all the vision vanish'd from the place.
Long stood the noble youth oppress'd with awe,
And stupid at the wondrous things he saw,
Surpassing common faith, transgressing nature's law.

He would have been asleep, and wish'd to wake;
But dreams, he knew, no long impression make,

Though strong at first; if vision, to what end,
But such as must his future state portend?
His love the damsel, and himself the fiend.
But yet, reflecting that it could not be
From Heaven, which cannot impious acts decree,
Resolv'd within himself to shun the snare,
Which hell for his destruction did prepare;
And as his better genius should direct,
From an ill cause to draw a good effect.

Inspir'd from heaven, he homeward took his
way,

Nor pall'd his new design with long delay:
But of his train a trusty servant sent
To call his friends together at his tent.
They came, and, usual salutations paid,
With words premeditated, thus he said:
What you have often counsell'd, to remove
My vain pursuit of unregarded love,
By thrift my sinking fortune to repair,
Though late, yet is at last become my care:
My heart shall be my own; my vast expense
Reduc'd to bounds, by timely providence:
This only I require; invite for me
Honor, with her father's family,
Her friends and mine; the cause I shall display,
On Friday next; for that's the appointed day.
Well pleas'd were all his friends, the task was
light,

The father, mother, daughter, they invite;
Hardly the dame was drawn to this repast;
But yet resolv'd, because it was the last.
The day was come, the guests invited came,
And with the rest, th' inexorable dame:
A feast prepar'd with riotous expense,
Much cost, more care, and most magnificence,

The place ordain'd was in that haunted grove,
Where the revenging ghost pursu'd his love.
The tables in a proud pavilion spread,
With flow'rs below, and tissue overhead:
The rest in rank, Honor chief in place,
Was artfully contriv'd to set her face
To front the thicket, and behold the chase.
The feast was serv'd, the time so well forecast,
That just when the dessert and fruits were
plac'd,
The fiend's alarm began; the hollow sound
Sung in the leaves, the forest shook around,
Air blacken'd, roll'd the thunder, groan'd the
ground.

Nor long before the loud laments arise
Of one distress'd, and mastiffs' mingled cries;
And first the dame came rushing through the wood, <sup>[food]</sup>
And next the famish'd hounds that sought their
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood.

Last came the felon, on his sable steed,
Arm'd with his naked sword, and urg'd his dogs to speed.

She ran, and cry'd, her flight directly bent
(A guest unbidden) to the fatal tent,
The scene of death, and place design'd for punishment.

Loud was the noise, aghast was ev'ry guest,
The women shriek'd, the men forsook the feast;
The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid.
She rent the heav'n with loud laments, imploring aid.

The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their falchions brandish'd at the grisly sight;
High on his stirrups he provok'd the fight.
Then on the crowd he cast a furious look,
And wither'd all their strength before he spoke:
Back, on your lives; let be, said he, my prey,
And let my vengeance take the destin'd way:
Vain are your arms, and vainer your defence,
Against th' eternal doom of Providence:
Mine is th' ungrateful maid by heaven design'd,
Mercy she would not give, nor mercy shall she
find.

At this the former tale again he told,
With thund'ring tone, and dreadful to behold:
Sunk were the hearts with horror of the crime
Nor needed to be warn'd a second time,
But bore each other back: some knew the face,
And all had heard the much lamented case
Of him who fell for love, and this the fatal place.

And now th' infernal minister advanc'd,
Seiz'd the due victim, and with fury lanc'd
Her back, and piercing through her inmost
heart,

Drew backward, as before, th' offending part.
The reeking entrails next he tore away,
And to his meagre mastiffs made a prey.
The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue.

The fright was gen'ral ; but the female band
(A helpless train) in more confusion stand ;
With horror shudd'ring, on a heap they run,
Sick at the sight of hateful justice done ;
For conscience rung the alarm, and made the case
their own

So spread upon a lake, with upward eye,
A plump of fowl behold their foe on high ;
They close their trembling troop, and all attend
On whom the sowsing eagle will descend.

But most the proud Honoria fear'd the event,
And thought to her alone the vision sent.
Her guilt presents to her distracted mind
Heaven's justice, Theodore's revengeful kind,
And the same fate to the same sin assign'd :

Already sees herself the monster's prey,
And feels her heart and entrails torn away.
'Twas a mute scene of sorrow, mix'd with fear :
Still on the table lay th' unfinish'd cheer :
The knight and hungry mastiffs stood around,
The mangled dame lay breathless on the
ground ;

When on a sudden, re-inspir'd with breath,
Again she rose, again to suffer death ;
Nor staid the hell-hounds, nor the hunter staid,
But follow'd, as before, the flying maid :
Th' avenger took from earth th' avenging sword,
And mounting light as air his sable steed he spurr'd :

The clouds dispell'd, the sky resum'd the light,
And nature stood recover'd of her fright.
But fear, the last of ills, remain'd behind,
And horror heavy sat on ev'ry mind.

Nor Theodore encourag'd more the feast,
But sternly look'd, as hatching in his breast
Some deep designs ; which when Honoria
view'd,

The fresh impulse her former fright renew'd ;
She thought herself the trembling dame who fled,

And him the grisly ghost that spurr'd th' infernal
steed :

The more dismay'd, for when the guests withdrew,

Their courteous host, saluting all the crew,
Regardless pass'd her o'er ; nor grac'd with kind adieu.

That sting infix'd within her haughty mind,
The downfall of her empire she divin'd ;
And her proud heart with secret sorrow pin'd.
Home as they went, the sad discourse renew'd
Of the relentless dame to death pursu'd,
And of the sight obscene so lately view'd.

None durst arraign the righteous doom she bore,
E'en they who pity'd most, yet blam'd her more :
The parallel they needed not to name,
But in the dead they damn'd the living dame.

At ev'ry little noise she look'd behind,
For still the knight was present to her mind :
And anxious oft she started on the way,
And thought the horseman-ghost came thun-
d'ring for his prey.

Return'd, she took her bed with little rest,
But in soft slumbers dreamt the fun'ral feast :

Awak'd, she turn'd her side, and slept again ;
The same black vapors mounted in her brain,
And the same dreams return'd with double pain.

Now forc'd to wake, because afraid to sleep,
Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap,
She sprang from bed, distracted in her mind,
And fear'd, at ev'ry step, a twitching spright behind.

Darkling and desperate, with stagg'ring pace,
Of death afraid, and conscious of disgrace ;
Fear, pride, remorse, at once her heart assail'd,
Pride put remorse to flight, but fear prevail'd.
Friday, the fatal day, when next it came,
Her soul forethought the fiend would change his game,

And her pursue, or Theodore be slain,
And two ghosts join their packs to hunt her o'er the plain.

This dreadful image so possess'd her mind,
That, desperate any succour else to find,
She ceas'd all farther hope ; and now began
To make reflection on th' unhappy man.
Rich, brave, and young, who past expression
lov'd,

Proof to disdain, and not to be remov'd :
Of all the men respected and admir'd,
Of all the dames, except herself, desir'd :
Why not of her ? preferr'd above the rest,
By him with knightly deeds, and open love
profess'd ? [dress'd.

So had another been, where he his vows ad-
This quell'd her pride ; yet other doubts re-
main'd,

That, once disdaining, she might be disdain'd.
The fear was just, but greater fear prevail'd,
Fear of her life by hellish hounds assail'd :
He took a low'ring leave ; but who can tell
What outward hate might inward love conceal ?
Her sex's arts she knew ; and why not, then,
Might deep dissembling have a place in men ?
Here hope began to dawn ; resolv'd to try,
She fix'd on this her utmost remedy :
Death was behind, but hard it was to die.
'Twas time enough at last on death to call,
The precipice in sight : a shrub was all,
That kindly stood betwixt to break the fatal fall.

One maid she had, belov'd above the rest :
Secure of her, the secret she confess'd ;
And now the cheerful light her fears dispell'd,
She with no winding turns the truth conceal'd,
But put the woman off, and stood reveal'd :
With faults confess'd commission'd her to go,
If pity yet had place, and reconcile her foe :
The welcome message made, was soon receiv'd ;
'Twas to be wish'd, and hop'd, but scarce be-
Fate seem'd a fair occasion to present ; [liev'd ;
He knew the sex, and fear'd she might repent,
Should he delay the moment of consent.
There yet remain'd to gain her friends (a care
The modesty of maidens well might spare ;)
But she with such a zeal the cause embrac'd
(As women, where they will, are all in haste)
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overborne by fury of the tide ;

With full consent of all she chang'd her state;
Resistless in her love, as in her hate.
By her example warn'd, the rest beware;
More easy, less imperious, were the fair;
And that one hunting, which the devil design'd
For one fair female, lost him half the kind.

§ 31. The Rosciad. Churchill.

Roscius deceas'd, each high aspiring play'r
Push'd all his int'rest for the vacant chair.
The buskin'd heroes of the mimic stage
No longer whine in love, and rant in rage;
The monarch quits his throne, and condescends
Humbly to court the favor of his friends;
For pity's sake tells undeserv'd mishaps,
And, their applause to gain, recounts his claps.
Thus the victorious chiefs of ancient Rome,
To win the mob, a suppliant's form assume,
In pompous strain fight o'er the extinguish'd
war,

And show where honor bled in ev'ry scar.
But though bare merit might in Rome appear
The strongest plea for favor, 'tis not here:
We form our judgement in another way;
And they will best succeed, who best can pay;
Those who would gain the votes of British tribes,

Must add to force of merit force of bribes.

What can an actor give? in ev'ry age
Cash hath been rudely banish'd from the stage;
Monarchs themselves, to grief of ev'ry play'r,
Appear as often as their image there:
They can't, like candidate for other seat,
Pour seas of wine, and mountains raise of meat.
Wine! they could bribe you with the world as
soon,

And of roast beef, they only know the tune:
But what they have they give; could Clive do
more,
Though for each million he had brought home four?

Shuter keeps open house at Southwark fair,
And hopes the friends of humor will be there;
In Smithfield, Yates prepares the rival treat
For those who laughter love instead of meat;
Foote, at Old House, for even Foote will be,
In self-conceit, an actor, bribes with tea;
Which Wilkinson at second-hand receives,
And at the New, pours water on the leaves.

The town divided, each runs sev'ral ways,
As passion, humor, int'rest, party sways.
Things of no moment, color of the hair,
Shape of a leg, complexion brown or fair,
A dress well chosen, or a patch misplac'd,
Conciliate favor, or create distaste.

From galleries loud peals of laughter roll,
And thunder Shuter's praises—he's so droll.
Embox'd, the ladies must have something
smart,

Palmer! Oh! Palmer tops the janty part.
Seated in pit, the dwarf, with aching eyes,
Looks up, and vows that Barry's out of size;
Whilst to six feet the vig'rous stripling grown,
Declares that Garrick is another Coan.

When place of judgement is by whim supplied,
And our opinions have their rise in pride;

When, in discoursing on each mimic elf,
We praise and censure with an eye to self;
All must meet friends, and Ackman bids as fair
In such a court, as Garrick, for the chair.

At length agreed, all squabbles to decide,
By some one judge the cause was to be tried;
But this their squabbles did afresh renew,
Who should be judge in such a trial:—Who?

For Johnson some, but Johnson, it was fear'd,
Would be too grave; and Sterne too gay appear'd:

Others for Francklin voted; but 'twas known,
He sicken'd at all triumphs but his own:
For Colman many, but the peevish tongue
Of prudent Age found out that he was young:
For Murphy some few pilf'ring wits declar'd,
Whilst Folly clapp'd her hands, and Wisdom
star'd. [womb,

To mischief train'd, e'en from his mother's Grown old in fraud, though yet in manhood's
bloom,

Adopting arts, by which gay villains rise,
And reach the heights which honest men de-
spise;

Mute at the bar, and in the senate loud,
Dull 'mongst the dullest, proudest of the proud;
A pert, prim prater of the northern race,
Guilt in his heart, and famine in his face,
Stood forth—and thrice he wav'd his lily hand—
And thrice he twirl'd his eye—thrice strok'd his band—

“ At Friendship's call (thus oft with trait'rous aim,

Men void of faith usurp faith's sacred name)
At Friendship's call I come, by Murphy sent,
Who thus by me develops his intent.

But lest, transfus'd, the spirit should be lost,
That spirit which in storms of rhet'ric tost,
Bounces about, and flies like bottled beer,
In his own words his own intentions hear.

“ Thanks to my friends—But to vile fortunes
born,

No robes of fur these shoulders must adorn.
Vain your applause, no aid from thence I draw;
Vain all my wit, for what is wit in law?
Twice (curs'd remembrance!) twice I strove to gain

Admittance 'mongst the law-instructed train,
Who, in the Temple and Gray's Inn, prepare
For clients' wretched feet the legal snare:
Dead to those arts, which polish'd and refine,
Deaf to all worth, because that worth was mine,
Twice did those blockheads startle at my name,
And foul rejection gave me up to shame.

To law and lawyers then I badé adieu,
And plans of far more lib'ral note pursue.
Who will may be a judge—my kindling breast
Burns for that chair which Roscius once possess'd.

Here give your votes, your int'rest here exert,
And let success for once attend desert.”

With sleek appearance, and with ambling pace,
And, type of vacant head, with vacant face,
The Proteus Hill put in his modest plea,—
“Let favor speak for others, worth for me.”—
For who, like him, his various powers could call
Into so many shapes, and shine in all?
Who could so nobly grace the motley list,
Actor, inspector, doctor, botanist?
Knows any one so well—sure no one knows,—
At once to play, prescribe, compound, compose?
Who can—But Woodward came,—Hill slipp’d
away,

Melting, like ghosts, before the rising day.

* With that low cunning, which in fools sup-
And amply too, the place of being wise, [plies,
Which nature, kind, indulgent parent, gave
To qualify the blockhead for a knave;
With that smooth falsehood, whose appearance
charms,

And reason of each wholesome doubt disarms,
Which to the lowest depths of guile descends,
By vilest means pursues the vilest ends,
Wears friendship’s mask for purposes of spite,
Fawns in the day, and butchers in the night;
With that malignant envy, which turns pale,
And sickens, even if a friend prevail,
Which merit and success pursues with hate,
And damns the worth it cannot imitate;
With the cold caution of a coward’s spleen,
Which fears not guilt but always seeks a screen;
Which keeps this maxim ever in her view—
What’s basely done, should be done safely too;
With that dull, rooted, callous impudence,
Which dead to shame, and ev’ry nicer sense,
Ne’er blush’d, unless, in spreading Vice’s snares,
She blunder’d on some virtue unawares;
With all these blessings, which we seldom find
Lavish’d by Nature on one happy mind,
A motley figure, of the Fribble tribe, [scribe,
Which heart can scarce conceive, or pen de-
Came simp’ring on; to ascertain whose sex
Twelve sage impanell’d matrons would perplex:

Nor male, nor female; neither, and yet both;
Of neuter gender, though of Irish growth;
A six-foot suckling, mincing in its gait;
Affected, peevish, prim, and delicate;
Fearful it seem’d, though of athletic make,
Lest brutal breezes should too roughly shake
Its tender form, and savage motion spread,
O’er its pale cheeks the horrid manly red.

Much did it talk, in its own pretty phrase,
Of genius and of taste, of play’rs and plays;
Much too of writings, which itself had wrote,
Of special merit, though of little note;
For Fate, in a strange humor, had decreed
That what it wrote, none but itself should read:
Much too it chatter’d of dramatic laws,
Misjudging critics, and misplac’d applause;

Then, with a self-complacent jutting air,
It smil’d, it smirk’d, it wriggled to the chair;
And, with an awkward briskness, not its own,
Looking around, and perking on the throne,
Triumphant seem’d, when that strange savage
dame,

Known but to few, or only known by name,
Plain Common Sense appear’d, by Nature there
Appointed, with plain Truth to guard the chair.
The pageant saw, and blasted with her frown,
To its first state of nothing melted down.

Nor shall the muse (for even there the pride
Of this vain nothing shall be mortified), Nor shall the muse (should fate ordain her
rhymes,

Fond, pleasing thought! to live in after-times)
With such a trifler’s name her pages blot;
Known be the character, the thing forgot;
Let it, to disappoint each future aim,
Live without sex, and die without a name!

Cold-blooded critics, by enervate sires
Scarce hammer’d out, when nature’s feeble fires
Glimmer’d their last; whose sluggish blood,
half froze,
Creeps lab’ring through the veins; whose heart
ne’er glows

With fancy-kindled heat,—a servile race,
Who in mere want of fault, all merit place;
Who blind obedience pay to ancient schools,
Bigots to Greece, and slaves to musty rules;
With solemn consequence declar’d that none
Could judge that cause but Sophocles alone.
Dupes to their fancied excellence, the crowd,
Obsequious to the sacred dictate, bow’d.

When, from amidst the throng, a youth stood forth,

Unknown his person, not unknown his worth!
His look bespoke applause; alone he stood,
Alone he stemm’d the mighty critic flood.
He talk’d of ancients, as the man became
Who priz’d their own, but envy’d not their fame;
With noble rev’rence spoke of Greece and Rome,
And scorn’d to tear the laurel from the tomb.

“But more than just to other countries grown,
Must we turn base apostates to our own?
Where do these words of Greece and Rome excel,

That England may not please the ear as well?
What mighty magic’s in the place or air,
That all perfection needs must centre there?
In states, let strangers blindly be prefer’d;
In state of letters, merit should be heard.

Genius is of no country, her pure ray
Spreads all abroad, as gen’ral as the day;
Foe to restraint, from place to place she flies,
And may hereafter e’en in Holland rise.
May not (to give a pleasing fancy scope
And cheer a patriot heart with patriot hope),
May not some great extensive genius raise
The name of Britain ’bove Athenian praise;

* This severe character was intended for Mr. Fitzpatrick, a person who had rendered himself remarkable by his activity in the playhouse riots of 1763, relative to the taking half prices. He was the hero of Garrick’s Fribbleriad.

And, whilst brave thirst of fame his bosom warms,
Make England great in letters as in arms?
There may—there hath—and Shakspeare's muse aspires

Beyond the reach of Greece; with native fires
Mounting aloft, he wings his daring flight,
While Sophocles below stands trembling at his height.

Why should we then abroad for judges roam,
When abler judges we may find at home?
Happy in tragic and in comic pow'rs,
Have we not Shakspeare?—Is not Jonson ours?
For them, your nat'ral judges, Britons, vote;
They'll judge like Britons, who like Britons wrote."

He said, and conquer'd—Sense resum'd her
And disappointed pedants stalk'd away.
Shakspeare and Jonson, with deserv'd applause,
Joint judges were ordain'd to try the cause.
Meantime the stranger ev'ry voice employ'd,
To ask or tell his name—Who is it?—Lloyd.

Thus, when the aged friends of Job stood mute,

And, tamely prudent, gave up the dispute,
Elihu, with the decent warmth of youth,
Boldly stood forth the advocate of truth;
Confuted falsehood, and disabled pride,
Whilst baffled age stood snarling at his side.

The day of trial's fix'd, nor any fear
Lest day of trial should be put off here.
Causes but seldom for delay can call
In courts where forms are few, fees none at all.

The morning came; nor find I that the sun,
As he on other great events hath done,
Put on a brighter robe than what he wore
To go his journey in the day before.

Full in the centre of a spacious plain,
On plan entirely new, where nothing vain,
Nothing magnificent appear'd, but Art
With decent modesty perform'd her part,
Rose a tribunal: from no other court
It borrow'd ornament, or sought support:
No juries here were pack'd to kill or clear,
No bribes were taken, nor oaths broken here;
No gownsmen, partial to a client's cause,
To their own purpose turn'd the pliant laws.
Each judge was true and steady to his trust,
As Mansfield wise, and as old Foster* just.

In the first seat, in robes of various dyes,
A noble wildness flashing from his eyes,
Sat Shakspeare—in one hand a wand he
bore,

For mighty wonders fam'd in days of yore;
The other held a globe, which to his will Obedient turn'd, and own'd the master's skill:
Things of the noblest kind his genius drew,
And look'd through nature at a single view;
A loose he gave to his unbounded soul;
And taught new lands to rise, new seas to roll;
Call'd into being scenes unknown before,
And, passing nature's bounds, was something
more.

Next Jonson sat, in ancient learning train'd,
His rigid judgement fancy's flights restrain'd;
Correctly prun'd each wild luxuriant thought,
Mark'd out her course, nor spar'd a glorious
fault.

The book of man he read with nicest art,
And ransack'd all the secrets of the heart;
Exerted penetration's utmost force,
And trac'd each passion to its proper source;
Then strongly mark'd, in liveliest colors drew,
And brought each foible forth to public view.
The coxcomb felt a lash in ev'ry word,
And fools, hung out, their brother fools deterr'd.
His comic humor kept the world in awe,
And laughter frighten'd folly more than law.

But, hark! the trumpet sounds, the crowd
give way,

And the procession comes in just array.

Now should I, in some sweet poetic line,
Offer up incense at Apollo's shrine;
Invoke the muse to quit her calm abode,
And waken mem'ry with a sleeping ode.
For how should mortal man, in mortal verse,
Their titles, merits, or their names rehearse?
But give, kind Dullness, memory and rhyme,
We'll put off genius till another time. [slow,

First, Order came,—with solemn step, and
In measur'd time his feet were taught to go.
Behind, from time to time, he cast his eye,
Lest this should quit his place, that step awry.

Appearances to save his only care;
So things seem right no matter what they are.
In him his parents saw themselves renew'd,
Begotten by Sir Critic on Saint Prude.

Then came drum, trumpet, hautboy, fiddle,
flute;

Next snuffer, sweeper, shifter, soldier, mute;
Legions of angels all in white advance;
Furies, all fire, come forward in a dance;
Pantomime figures then are brought to view,
Fools hand in hand with fools go two by two.
Next came the treasurer of either house;
One with full purse, t' other with not a sous.
Behind, a groupe of figures awe create,
Set off with all th' impertinence of state;
By lace and feather consecrate to fame,
Expletive kings, and queens without a name.

Here Havard, all serene, in the same strains,
Loves, hates, and rages, triumphs, and com-
plains:

His easy vacant face proclaim'd a heart
Which could not feel emotions, nor impart.
With him came mighty Davies. On my life,
That Davies hath a very pretty wife:—
Statesman all over!—In plots famous grown!
He mouths a sentence, as curs mouth a bone.

Next Holland came.—With truly tragic stalk,
He creeps, he flies—a hero should not walk.
As if with heav'n he warr'd, his eager eyes
Planted their batteries against the skies;
Attitude, action, air, pause, start, sigh, groan,
He borrow'd, and made use of as his own.

* Sir Michael Foster, one of the Judges of the King's Bench.

By fortune thrown on any other stage,
He might, perhaps, have pleas'd an easy age;
But now appears a copy, and no more,
Of something better we have seen before:
The actor who would build a solid fame,
Must imitation's servile arts disclaim;
Act from himself, on his own bottom stand:
I hate e'en Garrick thus at second-hand.

Behind came King.—Bred up in modest lore;
Bashful and young he sought Hibernia's shore;
Hibernia, fam'd, 'bove ev'ry other grace,
For matchless intrepidity of face.

From her his features caught the gen'rous flame,
And bid defiance to all sense of shame.

Tutor'd by her all rivals to surpass, [brass.
'Mongst Drury's sons he comes, and shines in

Lo Yates!—Without the least finesse of art
He gets applause—I wish he'd get his part.
When hot impatience is in full career,
How vilely "Hark 'e, Hark 'e!" grates the ear!
When active fancy from the brain is sent,
And stands on tip-toe for some wish'd event,
I hate those careless blunders which recall
Suspended sense, and prove it fiction all.

In characters of low and vulgar mould,
Where Nature's coarsest features we behold,
Where, destitute of ev'ry decent grace,
Unmanner'd jests are blurted in your face,
There Yates with justice strict attention draws,
Acts truly from himself, and gains applause.

But when, to please himself or charm his wife,
He aims at something in politer life;
When, blindly thwarting nature's stubborn plan,
He treads the stage, by way of gentleman;
The clown, who no one touch of breeding knows, [clothes.

Looks like Tom Errand dress'd in Clincher's
Fond of his dress, fond of his person grown,
Laugh'd at by all, and to himself unknown,
From side to side he struts, he smiles, he prates,

And seems to wonder what's become of Yates.

Woodward, endow'd with various tricks of Great master in the science of grimace, [face,
From Ireland ventures, fav'rite of the town,
Lur'd by the pleasing prospect of renown;
A squeaking harlequin, made up of whim,
He twists, he twines, he tortures ev'ry limb,
Plays to the eye with a mere monkey's art,
And leaves to sense the conquest of the heart.
We laugh indeed, but, on reflection's birth,
We wonder at ourselves, and curse our mirth.
His walk of parts he fatally misplac'd,
And inclination fondly took for taste;
Hence hath the town so often seen display'd
Beau in burlesque, high life in masquerade.

But when bold wits, not such as patch up
Cold and correct, in these insipid days, [plays,
Some comic character, strong-featur'd, urge
To probability's extremest verge,
Where modest judgement her decree suspends,
And, for a time, nor censures nor commends,
Where critics can't determine on the spot,
Whether it is in nature found or not,

There Woodward safely shall his pow'rs exert,
Nor fail of favor where he shows desert.
Hence he in Bobadil such praises bore,
Such worthy praises, Kitley scarce had more.

By turns transform'd into all kinds of shapes,
Constant to none, Foote laughs, cries, struts,
and scrapes:

Now in the centre, now in van or rear,
The Proteus shifts, bawd, parson, auctioneer.
His strokes of humor, and his bursts of sport,
Are all contain'd in this one word, Distort.

Doth a man stutter, look a-squint, or halt?
Mimics draw humor out of nature's fault,
With personal defects their mirth adorn,
And hang misfortunes out to public scorn.
E'en I, whom nature cast in hideous mould,
Whom, having made, she trembled to behold,
Beneath the load of mimicry may groan,
And find that nature's errors are my own.

Shadows behind of Foote and Woodward
Wilkinson this, Obrien was that name. [came;
Strange to relate, but wonderfully true,
That even shadows have their shadows too!
With not a single comic pow'r endu'd,
The first a mere, mere mimic's mimic stood;
The last, by nature form'd to please, who shows,
In Jonson's Stephen, which way genius grows;
Self quite put off, affects, with too much art,
To put on Woodward in each mangled part;
Adopts his shrug, his wink, his stare; nay, more,
His voice, and croaks; for Woodward croak'd
before.

When a dull copier simple grace neglects,
And rests his imitation in defects,
We readily forgive; but such vile arts
Are double guilt in men of real parts.

By nature form'd in her perversest mood,
With no one requisite of art endu'd,
Next Jackson came.—Observe that settled glare,
Which better speaks a puppet than a player:
List to that voice—did ever Discord hear
Sounds so well fitted to her untun'd ear?
When, to enforce some very tender part,
The right-hand sleeps by instinct on the heart,
His soul, of every other thought bereft,
Is anxious only where to place the left;
He sobs and pants to soothe his weeping spouse,
To soothe his weeping mother turns and bows,
Awkward, embarrass'd, stiff, without the skill
Of moving gracefully, or standing still,
One leg, as if suspicious of his brother,
Desirous seems to run away from t' other.

Some errors, handed down from age to age,
Plead custom's force, and still possess the stage.
That's vile—should we a parent's faults adore,
And err, because our fathers err'd before?
If, inattentive to the author's mind,
Some actors made the jest they could not find,
If by low tricks they marr'd fair nature's mien,
And blurr'd the graces of the simple scene,
Shall we, if reason rightly is employ'd,
Not see their faults, or seeing not avoid?
When Falstaff stands detected in a lie,
Why, without meaning, rolls Love's glassy eye?

Why?—there's no cause—at least no cause we know—

It was the fashion twenty years ago:
Fashion, a word which knaves and fools may use
Their knavery and folly to excuse.

To copy beauties, forfeits all pretence
To fame—to copy faults, is want of sense.

Yet (though in some particulars he fails—
Some few particulars, where mode prevails)
If in these hallow'd times, when sober, sad,
All gentlemen are melancholy mad,
When 'tis not deem'd so great a crime by half
To violate a vestal, as to laugh,
Rude mirth may hope presumptuous to engage
An act of toleration for the stage,
All courtiers will, like reasonable creatures,
Suspend vain fashion, and unscrew their features;
Old Falstaff, play'd by Love, shall please once
And humor set the audience in a roar. [more,
Actors I've seen, and of no vulgar name,
Who, being from one part possessed of fame,
Whether they are to laugh, cry, whine, or bawl,
Still introduce that fav'rite part in all.

Here, Love, be cautious—ne'er be thou betray'd
To call in that wag Falstaff's dang'rous aid;
Like Goths of old, howe'er he seems a friend,
He'll seize that throne you wish him to defend.
In a peculiar mould by humor cast,
For Falstaff fram'd—himself, the first and last—
He stands aloof from all—maintains his state,
And scorns, like Scotsmen, to assimilate.
Vain all disguise—too plain we see the trick,
Though the knight wears the weeds of Dominic,
And Boniface, disgrac'd, betrays the smack,
In Anno Domini, of Falstaff's sack.

Arms cross'd, brows bent, eyes fix'd, feet
marching slow,

A band of malcontents with spleen o'erflow;
Wrapt in conceit's impenetrable fog, [bog,
Which pride, like Phœbus, draws from ev'ry
They curse the managers, and curse the town,
Whose partial favor keeps such merit down.

But if some man, more hardy than the rest,
Should dare attack these gnatlings in their nest;
At once they rise with impotence of rage,
Whet their small stings, and buzz about the stage.

" 'Tis breach of privilege!—Shall any dare
To arm satiric truth against a player?
Prescriptive rights we plead time out of mind;
Actors, unlash'd themselves, may lash man-
kind."

What! shall opinion then, of nature free
And lib'ral as the vagrant air, agree
To rust in chains like these, impos'd by things
Which, less than nothing, ape the pride of kings?
No—though half-poets with half-players join
To curse the freedom of each honest line;
Though rage and malice dim their faded cheek;
What the muse freely thinks she'll freely speak.
With just disdain of ev'ry paltry sneer,
Stranger alike to flattery and fear,
In purpose fix'd, and to herself a rule,
Public contempt shall wait the public fool,

Austin would always glisten in French silks,
Ackman would Norris be, and Packer Wilks.
For who, like Ackman, can with humor please?
Who can, like Packer, charm with sprightly
ease?

Higher than all the rest, see Bransby strut;
A mighty Gulliver in Lilliput!
Ludicrous Nature! which at once could show
A man so very high, so very low.

If I forget thee, Blakes, or if I say
Aught hurtful, may I never see thee play!
Let critics, with a supercilious air,
Decry thy various merit, and declare
Frenchmen are still at top;—but scorn that rage
Which, in attacking thee, attacks the age.
French follies, universally embrac'd,
At once provoke our mirth, and form our taste.

Long, from a nation ever hardly us'd,
At random censur'd, wantonly abus'd,
Have Britons drawn their sport, with partial view,
Form'd gen'ral notions from the rascal few;
Condemn'd a people, as for vices known,
Which, from their country banish'd, seek our own.

At length, howe'er, the slavish chain is broke,
And sense, awaken'd, scorns her ancient yoke:
Taught by thee, Moody, we now learn to raise Mirth from their foibles; from their virtues,
praise.

Next came the legion, which our Summer Bayes
From alleys, here and there, contriv'd to raise,
Flush'd with vast hopes, and certain to succeed
With wits who cannot write, and scarce can read.

Vet'rans no more support the rotten cause,
No more from Elliot's worth they reap applause;
Each on himself determines to rely,
Be Yates disbanded, and let Elliot fly.
Never did play'rs so well an author fit,
To nature dead, and foes declar'd to wit.
So loud each tongue, so empty was each head,
So much they talk'd, so very little said,
So wondrous dull, and yet so wondrous vain,
At once so willing, and unfit to reign,
That reason swore, nor would the oath recall,
Their mighty master's soul inform'd them all.

As one with various disappointments sad,
Whom dullness only kept from being mad,
Apart from all the rest great Murphy came—
Common to fools and wits, the rage of fame.
What, though the sons of nonsense hail him sire,
Auditor, author, manager, and squire,
His restless soul's ambition stops not there—
To make his triumphs perfect, dub him player.

In person tall, a figure form'd to please,
If symmetry could charm, depriv'd of ease:
When motionless he stands, we all approve:
What pity 'tis the thing was made to move!

His voice, in one dull, deep, unvaried sound,
Seems to break forth from caverns under ground.
From hollow chest the low sepulchral note
Unwilling heaves, and struggles in his throat.

Could authors butcher'd give an actor grace,
All must to him resign the foremost place,

When he attempts, in some one fav'rite part,
To ape the feelings of a manly heart,
His honest features the disguise defy,
And his face loudly gives his tongue the lie.

Still in extremes, he knows no happy mean,
Or raving mad, or stupidly serene.
In cold-wrought scenes the lifeless actor flags,
In passion, tears the passion into rags.
Can none remember?—Yes—I know all must—
When in the Moor he ground his teeth to dust,
When o'er the stage he folly's standard bore,
Whilst common sense stood trembling at the door.

How few are found with real talents bless'd !
Fewer with nature's gifts contented rest.
Man from his sphere eccentric starts astray ;
All hunt for fame, but most mistake the way.
Bred at St. Omer's to the shuffling trade,
The hopeful youth a jesuit might have made,
With various readings stor'd his empty skull,
Learn'd without sense, and venerably dull.
Or, at some banker's desk, like many more,
Content to tell that two and two make four,
His name had stood in city annals fair,
And prudent dullness mark'd him for a mayor.

What then could tempt thee, in a critic age,
Such blooming hopes to forfeit on a stage ?
Could it be worth thy wondrous waste of pains,
To publish to the world thy lack of brains ?
Or might not reason e'en to thee have shown
Thy greatest praise had been to live unknown ;
Yet let not vanity, like thine, despair :
Fortune makes folly her peculiar care.

A vacant throne high plac'd in Smithfield view,
To sacred dullness and her first-born due :
Thither with haste in happy hour repair,
Thy birth-right claim, nor fear a rival there.
Shuter himself shall own thy juster claim,
And venal Ledgers puff their Murphy's name,
Whilst Vaughan* or Dapper, call him which you will,

Shall blow the trumpet, and give out the bill.

There rule secure from critics and from sense,
Nor once shall genius rise to give offence ;
Eternal peace shall bless the happy shore,
And little factions break thy rest no more.

From Covent-Garden crowds promiscuous go,
Whom the muse knows not, nor desires to know,
Yet rans they seem'd, but knew of arms no more
Than if, till that time, arms they never bore :
Like Westminster militia train'd to fight,
They scarcely knew the left hand from the right.
Asham'd among such troops to show their head,
Their chiefs were scatter'd, and their heroes fled.

Sparks at his glass sat comfortably down
To sep'rate frown from smile, and smile from frown :

Smith, the genteel, the airy, and the smart,
Smith was just gone to school to say his part ;
Ross (a misfortune which we often meet)
Was fast asleep at dear Statira's feet ;
Statira, with her hero to agree,
Stood on her feet as fast asleep as he ;

Macklin, who largely deals in half-form'd sounds,
Who wantonly transgresses nature's bounds,
Whose acting's hard, affected, and constrain'd,
Whose features, as each other they disdain'd,
At variance set, inflexible and coarse,
Ne'er know the workings of united force,
Ne'er kindly soften to each other's aid,
Nor show the mingled pow'rs of light and shade ;
No longer for a thankless stage concern'd,
To worthier thoughts his mighty genius turn'd ;
Harangu'd, gave lectures, made each simple elf
Almost as good a speaker as himself ;
Whilst the whole town, mad with mistaken zeal,
An awkward rage for elocution feel ;
Dull cits and grave divines his praise proclaim,
And join with Sheridan's their Macklin's name :
Shuter, who never car'd a single pin
Whether he left out nonsense, or put in,
Who aim'd at wit, though, levell'd in the dark,
The random arrow seldom hit the mark ;
At Islington, all by the placid stream
Where City swains in lap of dullness dream ;
Where, quiet as her streams their strains do
flow,

That all the patron by the bards may know ;
Secret as night, with Rolt's experienc'd aid,
The plan of future operations laid,
Projected schemes the summer months to cheer,
And spin out happy folly through the year.

But think not, though these dastard-chiefs
are fled,

That Covent-Garden troops shall want a head :
Harlequin comes their chief!—See from afar
The hero seated in fantastic car !
Wedded to novelty, his only arms
Are wooden swords, wands, talismans, and
charms ;

On one side folly sits, by some call'd fun,
And on the other, his arch-patron, Lun.
Behind, for liberty a-thirst in vain,
Sense, helpless captive, drags the galling chain :
Six rude mis-shapen beasts the chariot draw,
Whom reason loaths, and nature never saw ;
Monsters with tails of ice, and heads of fire ;
Gorgons and hydras, and chimeras dire.
Each was bestrode by full as monstrous wight,
Giant, dwarf, genius, elf, hermaphrodite.
The town, as usual, met him in full cry ;
The town, as usual, knew no reason why.
But fashion so directs, and moderns raise
On fashion's mould'ring base their transient
praise.

Next, to the field a band of females draw
Their force ; for Britain owns no salique law :
Just to their worth, we female rites admit,
Nor bar their claim to empire or to wit.

First, giggling, plotting chambermaids arrive,
Hoydens and romps, led on by Gen'ral Clive.
In spite of outward blemishes, she shone
For humor fam'd, and humor all her own.
Easy, as if at home, the stage she trod,
Nor sought the critic's praise, nor fear'd his rod.

* A gentleman still living, who published, at this juncture, a Poem entitled "The Retort."

Original in spirit and in ease,
She pleas'd by hiding all attempts to please.
No comic actress ever yet could raise,
On humor's base, more merit or more praise.

With all the native vigor of sixteen,
Among the merry troop conspicuous seen,
See lively Pope advance in gig and trip,
Corinna, Cherry, Honeycomb, and Snip.
Not without art, but yet to nature true,
She charms the town with humor just, yet new.

Cheer'd by her promise, we the less deplore
The fatal time when Clive shall be no more.

Lo! Vincent comes—with simple grace ar-
ray'd,

She laughs at paltry arts, and scorns parade.
Nature through her is by reflection shown,
Whilst Gay once more knows Polly for his own.

Talk not to me of diffidence and fear—
I see it all, but must forgive it here.
Defects like these, which modest terrors cause,
From impudence itself extort applause.
Candor and reason still take virtue's part;
We love e'en foibles in so good a heart.

Let Tommy Arne, with usual pomp of style, (Whose chief, whose only merit's to compile,
Who, meanly pilfering here and there a bit,
Deals music out as Murphy deals out wit,)
Publish proposals, laws for taste prescribe,
And chant the praise of an Italian tribe:
Let him reverse kind nature's first decrees,
And teach e'en Brent a method not to please;
But never shall a truly British age
Bear a vile race of eunuchs on the stage.
The boasted work's call'd National in vain,
If one Italian voice pollutes the strain.
Where tyrants rule, and slaves with joy obey,
Let slavish minstrels pour th' enervate lay;
To Britons far more noble pleasures spring,
In native notes while Beard and Vincent sing.

Might figure give a title unto fame,
What rival should with Yates dispute her claim?
But justice may not partial trophies raise,
Nor sink the actress in the woman's praise.
Still hand in hand her words and actions go,
And the heart feels more than the features
show:

For, through the regions of that beauteous face,
We no variety of passions trace;
Dead to the soft emotions of the heart,
No kindred softness can those eyes impart;
The brow, still fix'd in sorrow's sullen frame,
Void of distinction, marks all parts the same.

What's a fine person, or a beauteous face,
Unless deportment gives them decent grace?
Bless'd with all other requisites to please,
Some want the striking elegance of ease;
The curious eye their awkward movement tires;
They seem like puppets led about by wires.
Others, like statues, in one posture still,
Give great ideas of the workman's skill;
Wond'ring, his art we praise the more we view,
And only grieve he gave not motion too.

Weak of themselves are what we beauties call;
It is the manner which gives strength to all.
This teaches ev'ry beauty to unite,
And bring them forward in the noblest light.
Happy in this, behold, amidst the throng,
With transient gleam of grace, Hart sweeps along.

If all the wonders of external grace,
A person finely turn'd, a mould of face,
Where, union rare, expression's lively force
With beauty's softest magic holds discourse,
Attract the eye; if feelings void of art
Rouse the quick passions, and inflame the heart;
If music, sweetly breathing from the tongue,
Captives the ear, Bride must not pass unsung.

When fear, which rank ill-nature calls con-
ceit,

By time and custom conquer'd, shall retreat;
When judgement, tutor'd by experience sage,
Shall shoot abroad, and gather strength from
age;

When heav'n in mercy shall the stage release
From the dull slumbers of a still-life piece;
When some stale flow'r, disgraceful to the walk,
Which long hath hung, though wither'd on the stalk,

[way,
Shall kindly drop, then Bride shall make her
And merit find a passage to the day;
Brought into action, she at once shall raise
Her own renown, and justify our praise.

Form'd for the tragic scene, to grace the stage
With rival excellence of love and rage,
Mistress of each soft art, with matchless skill
To turn and wind the passions as she will;
To melt the heart with sympathetic woe,
Awake the sigh and teach the tear to flow;
To put on phrensy's wild distracted glare,
And freeze the soul with horror and despair;
With just desert enroll'd in endless fame,
Conscious of worth superior, Cibber came.

When poor Alicia's madd'ning brains are rack'd,

And strongly imag'd griefs her mind distract;
Struck with her grief, I catch the madness too!
My brains turn round, the headless trunk I
view!

The roof cracks, shakes, and falls!—new horrors rise,

And reason buried in the ruin lies.

Nobly disdainful of each slavish art,
She makes her first attack upon the heart;
Pleas'd with her summons, it receives her laws,
And all is silence, sympathy, applause.

But when by fond ambition drawn aside,
Giddy with praise, and puff'd with female
pride,

She quits the tragic scene, and, in pretence
To comic merit, breaks down nature's fence;
I scarcely can believe my ears or eyes,
Or find out Cibber through the dark disguise.

Pritchard, by nature for the stage design'd,
In person graceful, and in sense refin'd;
Her heart as much as nature's friend became,
Her voice as free from blemish as her fame;

Who knows so well in majesty to please,
Attemper'd with the graceful charms of ease?

When Congreve's favor'd pantomime to grace,
She comes a captive queen of Moorish race;
When love, hate, jealousy, despair, and rage,
With wildest tumults in her breast engage;
Still equal to herself is Zara seen:
Her passions are the passions of a queen.

Where she to murder whets the timorous
Thane,
I feel ambition rush through ev'ry vein;
Persuasion hangs upon her daring tongue,
My heart grows flint, and ev'ry nerve's new strung.

In comedy—"Nay, there," cries critic,
"hold,
Pritchard's for comedy too fat and old.
Who can, with patience, bear the gray coquette,
Or force a laugh with over-grown Juliette?
Her speech, look, action, humor, all are just;
But then, her age and figure give disgust."

Are foibles, then, and graces of the mind,
In real life, to size or age confin'd?
Do spirits flow, and is good breeding plac'd
In any set circumference of waist?
As we grow old, doth affectation cease,
Or gives not age new vigor to caprice?
If in originals these things appear,
Why should we bar them in the copy here?
The nice punctilio-mongers of this age,
The grand minute reformers of the stage,
Slaves to propriety of ev'ry kind,
Some standard-measure for each part should
find,

Which when the best of actors shall exceed,
Let it devolve to one of smaller breed.
All actors too upon the back should bear
Certificate of birth—time, when—place, where;
For how can critics rightly fix their worth,
Unless they know the minute of their birth?
An audience too, deceiv'd, may find too late,
That they have clapp'd an actor out of date.

Figure, I own, at first may give offence,
And harshly strike the eye's too curious sense:
But when perfections of the mind break forth,
Humor's chaste sallies, judgement's solid worth;
When the pure genuine flame, by nature
taught,

Springs into sense, and ev'ry action's thought;
Before such merit all objections fly:

Pritchard's genteel, and Garrick's six feet high.
Oft have I, Pritchard, seen thy wondrous
skill,

Confess'd thee great, but find thee greater still.
That worth which shone in scatter'd rays before,
Collected now, breaks forth with double pow'r.
The Jealous Wife; on that thy trophies raise,
Inferior only to the author's praise.

From Dublin, fam'd in legions of romance
For mighty magic of th' enchanted lance,
With which her heroes arm'd, victorious prove,
And like a flood rush o'er the land of love,
Mossop and Barry came—names ne'er design'd
By fate in the same sentence to be join'd.

Rais'd by the breath of popular acclaim,
They mounted to the pinnacle of fame;
There the weak brain, made giddy with the height,

Spurr'd on the rival chiefs to mortal fight.
Thus sportive boys around some bason's brim
Behold the pipe-drawn bladders circling swim:
But if, from lungs more potent, there arise
Two bubbles of a more than common size,
Eager for honor they for fight prepare,
Bubble meets bubble, and both sink to air.

Mossop, attach'd to military plan,
Still kept his eye fix'd on his right-hand man.
Whilst the mouth measures words with seeming skill,

The right-hand labors, and the left lies still;
For he resolv'd on scripture grounds to go,
What the right doth, the left-hand shall not
know.

With studied impropriety of speech,
He soars beyond the hackney critic's reach;
To epithets allots emphatic state,
Whilst principals, ungrac'd, like lacqueys wait;
In ways first trodden by himself excels,
And stands alone in indeclinables;
Conjunction, preposition, adverb join,
To stamp new vigor on the nervous line:
In monosyllables his thunders roll—
He, she, it, and, we, ye, they, fright the soul.

In person taller than the common size,
Behold where Barry draws admiring eyes!
When lab'ring passions, in his bosom pent,
Convulsive rage, and struggling heave for vent,
Spectators, with imagin'd terrors warm,
Anxious expect the bursting of the storm:
But, all unfit in such a pile to dwell,
His voice comes forth like Echo from her cell;
To swell the tempest needful aid denies,
And all a-down the stage in feeble murmurs dies.

What man, like Barry, with such pains can
In elocution, action, character? [err
What man could give, if Barry was not here,
Such well-applauded tenderness to Lear?
Who else could speak so very, very fine,
That sense may kindly end with ev'ry line?

Some dozen lines before the ghost is there,
Behold him for the solemn scene prepare.
See how he frames his eyes, poises each limb,
Puts the whole body into proper trim.—
From whence we learn, with no great stretch of art,

Five lines hence comes a ghost, and, ha! a start.
When he appears most perfect, still we find Something which jars upon, and hurts the mind.

Whatever lights upon a part are thrown,
We see too plainly they are not his own.
No flame from nature ever yet he caught;
Nor knew a feeling which he was not taught:
He rais'd his trophies on the base of art,
And conn'd his passions, as he conn'd his part.

Quin, from afar lur'd by the scent of fame,
A stage Leviathan, put in his claim,

Pupil of Betterton and Booth. Alone,
Sullen he walk'd, and deem'd the chair his own.

For how should moderns, mushrooms of the day, [play?

Who ne'er those masters knew, know how to
Gray-bearded vet'rans, who, with partial tongue, Extol the times when they themselves were young;

Who, having lost all relish for the stage,
See not their own defects, but lash the age;
Receiv'd with joyful murmurs of applause
Their darling chief, and lin'd his fav'rite cause.

Far be it from the candid muse to tread
Insulting o'er the ashes of the dead,
But, just to living merit, she maintains,
And dares the test, whilst Garrick's genius
reigns;

Ancients in vain endeavour to excel,
Happily prais'd, if they could act as well.
But though prescription's force we disallow,
Nor to antiquity submissive bow;
Though we deny imaginary grace,
Founded on accidents of time and place;
Yet real worth of every growth shall bear
Due praise, nor must we, Quin, forget thee
there.

His words bore sterling weight, nervous and strong
In manly tides of sense they roll'd along.
Happy in art, he chiefly had pretence
To keep up numbers, yet not forfeit sense.
No actor ever greater heights could reach
In all the labor'd artifice of speech.

Speech! is that all?—And shall an actor
found
An universal fame on partial ground?
Parrots themselves speak properly by rote,
And in six months my dog shall howl by note.
I laugh at those, who, when the stage they
tread,
Neglect the heart, to compliment the head;
With strict propriety their care's confin'd
To weigh out words, while passion halts behind.
To syllable-dissectors they appeal,
Allow them accent, cadence,—fools may feel;
But, spite of all the criticising elves,
Those who would make us feel, must feel themselves.

His eyes, in gloomy socket taught to roll,
Proclaim'd the sullen habit of his soul.
Heavy and phlegmatic he trod the stage,
Too proud for tenderness, too dull for rage.
When Hector's lovely widow shines in tears,
Or Rowe's gay rake dependent virtue jeers,
With the same cast of features he is seen
To chide the libertine, and court the queen.
From the tame scene, which without passion
flows,

With just desert his reputation rose;
Nor less he pleas'd, when, on some surly plan,
He was, at once, the actor and the man.

In Brute he shone unequall'd: all agree
Garrick's not half so great a brute as he.

When Cato's labor'd scenes are brought to view,

With equal praise the actor labor'd too;
For still you'll find, trace passions to their root,
Small difference 'twixt the Stoic and the brute.

In fancied scenes, as in life's real plan,
He could not for a moment sink the man.
In whate'er cast his character was laid,
Self still, like oil, upon the surface play'd.
Nature, in spite of all his skill, crept in:
Horatio, Dorax, Falstaff,—still 'twas Quin.

Next follows Sheridan—a doubtful name,
As yet unsettled in the rank of fame;
This, fondly lavish in his praises grown,
Gives him all merit; that allows him none.
Between them both we'll steer the middle course,

Nor, loving praise, rob judgement of her force.
Just his conceptions, natural and great:
His feelings strong, his words enforc'd with weight.

Was speech-fam'd Quin himself to hear him speak,

Envy would drive the color from his cheek:
But step-dame nature, niggard of her grace,
Deny'd the social pow'rs of voice and face;
Fix'd in one frame of features, glare of eye,
Passions, like chaos, in confusion lie:
In vain the wonders of his skill are try'd;
To form distinctions nature hath deny'd.
His voice no touch of harmony admits,
Irregularly deep and shrill by fits:

The two extremes appear like man and wife,
Coupled together for the sake of strife.

His action's always strong, but sometimes such

That candor must declare he acts too much.
Why must impatience fall three paces back;
Why paces three return to the attack?
Why is the right-leg too forbid to stir,
Unless in motion semicircular?
Why must the hero with the nailer vie,
And hurl the close-clench'd fist at nose or eye?
In royal John, with Philip angry grown,
I thought he would have knock'd poor Davies
down.

Inhuman tyrant! was it not a shame,
To fright a king so harmless and so tame?
But, spite of all defects, his glories rise;
And art, by judgement form'd, with nature
vies;

Behold him sound the depth of Hubert's soul,
Whilst in his own contending passions roll;
View the whole scene, with critic judgement scan,

And then deny him merit if you can.
Where he falls short, 'tis nature's fault alone;
Where he succeeds, the merit's all his own.

Last Garrick came. Behind him throng a train

Of snarling critics, ignorant as vain.

One finds out,—“He's of stature somewhat
low,—

“Your hero always should be tall, you know.—

"True nat'ral greatness all consists in height."
Produce your voucher, critic.—"Serjeant Kite."

Another can't forgive the paltry arts
By which he makes his way to shallow hearts;
Mere pieces of finesse, traps for applause—

"Avaunt, unnatural start, affected pause."

For me, by nature form'd to judge with phlegm;

I can't acquit by wholesale, nor condemn.

The best things carried to excess are wrong:

The start may be too frequent, pause too long:

But only us'd in proper time and place,

Severest judgement must allow them grace.

If bunglers, form'd on imitation's plan,
Just in the way that monkeys mimic man,
Their copied scene with mangled arts disgrace,
And pause and start with the same vacant face;
We join the critic laugh; those tricks we
scorn,

Which spoil the scenes they mean them to adorn.

But when, from nature's pure and genuine source, [force;

These strokes of acting flow with gen'rous
When in the features all the soul's portray'd,
And passions, such as Garrick's, are display'd;
To me they seem from quickest feelings caught:
Each start is nature; and each pause is
thought.

When reason yields to passion's wild alarms,
And the whole state of man is up in arms;
What but a critic could condemn the player,
For pausing here, when cool sense pauses
there? [trace,

Whilst, working from the heart, the fire I
And mark it strongly flaming to the face;
Whilst, in each sound, I hear the very man;
I can't catch words, and pity those who can.

Let wits, like spiders, from the tortur'd brain
Fine-draw the critic web with curious pain;
The gods,—a kindness I with thanks must pay,—

Have form'd me of a coarser kind of clay;
Nor stung with envy, nor with spleen diseas'd,
A poor dull creature, still with nature pleas'd;
Hence to thy praises, Garrick, I agree,
And, pleas'd with nature, must be pleas'd with
thee.

Now might I tell, how silence reign'd throughout,

And deep attention hush'd the rabble rout:

How ev'ry claimant, tortur'd with desire,

Was pale as ashes, or as red as fire:

But, loose to fame, the Muse more simply acts,
Rejects all flourish, and relates mere facts.

The judges, as the several parties came,
With temper heard, with judgement weigh'd
each claim,

And, in their sentence happily agreed,

In name of both, great Shakspeare thus decreed:

"If manly sense; if nature link'd with art;
If thorough knowledge of the human heart;
If pow'rs of acting vast and unconfi'd;
If fewest faults with greatest beauties join'd;

If strong expression, and strange pow'rs which lie

Within the magic circle of the eye;

If feelings which few hearts like his can know,

And which no face so well as his can show;

Deserve the pref'rence;—Garrick, take the chair;

Nor quit it—till thou place an equal there."

§ 32. The Pleasures of Imagination. Akenside.

BOOK I.

WITH what attractive charms this goodly
frame

Of nature touches the consenting hearts
Of mortal men; and what the pleasing stores
Which beauteous imitation thence derives
To deck the poet's, or the painter's toil;
My verse unfolds. Attend, ye gentle pow'rs
Of musical delight! and, while I sing
Your gifts, your honors, dance around my strain.
Thou, smiling queen of ev'ry tuneful breast,
Indulgent Fancy! from the fruitful banks
Of Avon, whence thy rosy fingers cull
Fresh flowers and dew to sprinkle on the turf
Where Shakspeare lies, be present: and with thee

Let Fiction come, upon her vagrant wings
Wafting ten thousand colors through the air,
Which, by the glances of her magic eye,
She blends and shifts at will, through countless forms,

Her wild creation. Goddess of the lyre
Which rules the accents of the moving sphere,
Wilt thou, eternal Harmony! descend,
And join this festive train? for with thee comes
The guide, the guardian of their lovely sports,
Majestic Truth; and where Truth deigns to
Her sister Liberty will not be far. [come,
Be present, all ye Genii, who conduct
The wand'ring footsteps of the youthful bard,
New to your springs and shades; who touch his ear

With finer sounds; who heighten to his eye
The bloom of nature, and before him turn
The gayest, happiest attitude of things.

Oft have the laws of each poetic strain
The critic-verse employ'd; yet still unsung
Lay this prime subject, though importing most
A poet's name; for fruitless is th' attempt,
By dull obedience and by creeping toil
Obscure, to conquer the severe ascent
Of high Parnassus. Nature's kindling breath
Must fire the chosen genius; nature's hand
Must string his nerves, and imp his eagle wings,
Impatient of the painful steep, to soar
High as the summit, there to breathe at large
Ethereal air, with bards and sages old,
Immortal sons of praise. These flattering scenes
To this neglected labor court my song;
Yet not unconscious what a doubtful task
To paint the finest features of the mind,
And to most subtle and mysterious things
Give color, strength, and motion. But the love

Of nature and the muses bids explore,
Through secret paths erewhile untrod by man,
The fair poetic region, to detect
Untasted springs, to drink inspiring draughts,
And shade my temples with unfading flowers,
Cull'd from the laureate vale's profound recess,
Where never poet gain'd a wreath before.

From Heav'n my strains begin : from Heav'n descends

The flame of genius to the human breast,
And love and beauty, and poetic joy
And inspiration. Ere the radiant sun
Sprang from the east, or, 'mid the vault of night,
The moon suspended her serener lamp ;
Ere mountains, woods, or streams adorn'd the globe ;

Or Wisdom taught the sons of men her lore ;
Then liv'd the Almighty One. Then, deep retir'd
In his unfathom'd essence, view'd the forms,
The forms eternal of created things ;
The radiant sun, the moon's nocturnal lamp,
The mountains, woods, and streams, the rolling
globe,

And Wisdom's mien celestial. From the first
Of days, on them his love divine he fix'd,
His admiration ; till in time complete,
What he admir'd and lov'd, his vital smile
Unfolded into being. Hence the breath
Of life informing each organic frame,
Hence the green earth and wild resounding waves, [cold,

Hence light and shade alternate, warmth and
And clear autumnal skies and vernal showers,
And all the fair variety of things.

But not alike to every mortal eye
Is this great scene unveil'd. For since the claims
Of social life to different labors urge
The active powers of man, with wise intent
The hand of Nature on peculiar minds
Imprints a different bias, and to each
Decrees its province in the common toil.
To some she taught the fabric of the sphere,
The changeful moon, the circuit of the stars,
The golden zones of heaven ; to some she gave
To weigh the moment of eternal things,
Of time, and space, and fate's unbroken chain,
And will's quick impulse ; others by the hand
She led o'er vales and mountains, to explore
What healing virtue swells the tender veins
Of herbs and flowers ; or what the beams of morn
Draw forth, distilling from the clifted rind
In balmy tears. But some to higher hopes
Were destin'd ; some within a finer mould
She wrought, and temper'd with a purer flame.
To these the Sire omnipotent unfolds
The world's harmonious volume, there to read
The transcript of himself. On every part
They trace the bright impressions of his hand :
In earth, or air, the meadow's purple stores,
The moon's mild radiance, or the virgin's form
Blooming with rosy smiles, they see portray'd
That uncreated beauty which delights
The mind supreme. They also feel her charms ;
Enamour'd, they partake the eternal joy.

For as old Memnon's image, long renown'd
By fabling Nilus, to the quiv'ring touch
Of Titan's ray, with each repulsive string
Consenting, sounded through the warbling air
Unbidden strains ; e'en so did Nature's hand
To certain species of external things
Attune the finer organs of the mind ;
So the glad impulse of congenial powers,
Or of sweet sound, or fair proportion'd form,
The grace of motion, or the bloom of light,
Thrills through Imagination's tender frame,
From nerve to nerve : all naked and alive
They catch the spreading rays : till now the soul
At length discloses every tuneful spring
To that harmonious movement from without Responsive. Then the inexpressive strain
Diffuses its enchantment : Fancy dreams
Of sacred fountains and Elysian groves,
And vales of bliss : the intellectual Power
Bends from his awful throne a wondering ear,
And smiles : the passions, gently sooth'd away,
Sink to divine repose, and love and joy
Alone are waking ; love and joy, serene
As airs that fan the summer. O ! attend,
Whoe'er thou art, whom these delights can
Whose candid bosom the refining love [touch,
Of Nature warms, O ! listen to my song ;
And I will guide thee to her favorite walks,
And teach thy solitude her voice to hear,
And point her loveliest features to thy view.

Know then, whate'er of nature's pregnant stores,

Whate'er of mimic art's reflected forms,
With love and admiration thus inflame
The powers of fancy, her delighted sons
To three illustrious orders have referr'd ;
Three sister-graces, whom the painter's hand,
The poet's tongue confesses ; the sublime,
The wonderful, the fair. I see them dawn !
I see the radiant visions, where they rise,
More lovely than when Lucifer displays
His beaming forehead through the gates of morn,
To lead the train of Phœbus and the spring.

Say, why was man so eminently rais'd
Amid the vast creation ; why ordain'd
Through life and death to dart his piercing eye
With thoughts beyond the limit of his frame ;
But that the Omnipotent might send him forth
In sight of mortal and immortal powers,
As on a boundless theatre, to run
The great career of justice ; to exalt
His generous aim to all diviner deeds ;
To chase each partial purpose from his breast ;
And through the mists of passion and of sense,
And through the tossing tide of chance and pain,
To hold his course unfaltering, while the voice
Of truth and virtue, up the steep ascent
Of nature, calls him to his high reward,
Th' applauding smile of Heaven ? Else wherefore burns

In mortal bosoms this unquenched hope,
That breathes from day to day sublimer things,
And mocks possession ? wherefore darts the mind
With such resistless ardor, to embrace

Majestic forms; impatient to be free;
 Spurning the gross control of wilful might;
 Proud of the strong contention of her toils;
 Proud to be daring? Who, but rather turns
 To Heaven's broad fire his unconstrained view,
 Than to the glimmering of a waxen flame?
 Who that, from Alpine heights, his laboring eye
 Shoots round the wide horizon, to survey
 Nilus or Ganges rolling his bright wave
 Through mountains, plains, through empires
 black with shade,

And continents of sand; will turn his gaze
 To mark the windings of a scanty rill
 That murmurs at his feet? The high-born soul
 Disdains to rest her heaven-aspiring wing
 Beneath his native quarry. Tir'd of earth
 And this diurnal scene, she springs aloft
 Through fields of air; pursues the flying storm;
 Rides on the vollied lightning through the heavens; [blast,

Or, yok'd with whirlwinds and the northern Sweeps the long tract of day. Then high she soars

The blue profound, and hovering round the sun,
 Beholds him pouring the redundant stream
 Of light; beholds his unrelenting sway
 Bend the reluctant planets to absolve
 The fated rounds of time. Thence, far effus'd,
 She darts her swiftness up the long career
 Of devious comets; through its burning signs,
 Exulting measures the perennial wheel
 Of nature, and looks back on all the stars,
 Whose blended light, as with a milky zone,
 Invests the orient. Now amaz'd she views
 The empyreal waste, where happy spirits hold,
 Beyond this concave heaven, their calm abode;
 And fields of radiance, whose unfading light
 Has travell'd the profound six thousand years,
 Nor yet arrives in sight of mortal things.
 E'en on the barriers of the world, untir'd,
 She meditates the eternal depth below;
 Till, half recoiling, down the headlong steep
 She plunges; soon o'erwhelm'd and swallow'd up
 In that immense of being. There her hopes
 Rest at the fated goal. For from the birth
 Of mortal man, the sov'reign Maker said,
 That not in humble nor in brief delight,
 Not in the fading echoes of renown,
 Power's purple robes, nor pleasure's flowery lap,
 The soul should find enjoyment; but from these,
 Turning disdainful to an equal good, [view,
 Through all the ascent of things enlarge her
 'Till every bound at length should disappear,
 And infinite perfection close the scene.

Call now to mind what high capacious powers
 Lie folded up in man: how far beyond
 The praise of mortals may th' eternal growth
 Of nature to perfection half divine
 Expand the blooming soul! What pity then,
 Should sloth's unkindly fogs depress to earth
 Her tender blossom; choke the streams of life,
 And blast her spring! Far otherwise design'd
 Almighty wisdom; nature's happy cares
 The obedient heart far otherwise incline:

Witness the sprightly joy when aught unknown
 Strikes the quick sense, and wakes each active power

To brisker measures: witness the neglect
 Of all familiar prospects, though beheld
 With transport once; the fond attentive gaze
 Of young astonishment; the sober zeal
 Of age, commenting on prodigious things.
 For such the bounteous providence of Heaven,
 In every breast implanting this desire
 Of objects new and strange, to urge us on
 With unremitted labor to pursue
 Those sacred stores that wait the ripening soul,
 In Truth's exhaustless bosom. What need words
 To paint its power? For this the daring youth
 Breaks from his weeping mother's anxious arms,
 In foreign climes to rove; the pensive sage,
 Heedless of sleep, or midnight's harmful damp,
 Hangs o'er the sickly taper; and untir'd,
 The virgin follows, with enchanted step,
 The mazes of some wild and wondrous tale,
 From morn to eve, unmindful of her form,
 Unmindful of the happy dress that stole
 The wishes of the youth, when every maid
 With envy pin'd. Hence, finally, by night
 The village matron round the blazing hearth
 Suspends the infant audience with her tales,
 Breathing astonishment! of witching rhymes,
 And evil spirits; of the death-bed call
 Of him who robb'd the widow, and devour'd
 The orphan's portion; of unquiet souls,
 Risen from the grave to ease the heavy guilt
 Of deeds in life conceal'd; of shapes that walk
 At dead of night, and clank their chains, and wave

The torch of hell around the murderer's bed.
 At every solemn pause, the crowd recoil,
 Gazing on each other speechless, and congeal'd
 With shivering sighs; till, eager for the event,
 Around the beldam all erect they hang,
 Each trembling heart with grateful terrors
 quell'd.

But lo! disclos'd in all her smiling pomp,
 Where Beauty, onward moving, claims the verse
 Her charms inspire: the freely flowing verse,
 In thy immortal praise, O form divine,
 Smooths her mellifluent stream. Thee, Beauty,
 thee

The regal dome, and thy enlivening ray
 The mossy roofs adore: thou better sun!
 For ever beamest on the enchanted heart
 Love and harmonious wonder, and delight
 Poetic. Brightest progeny of heaven!
 How shall I trace thy features? where select
 The roseate hues to emulate thy bloom?
 Haste, then, my song, through nature's vast expanse,
 Haste, then, and gather all her comeliest wealth,
 Whate'er bright spoils the florid earth contains,
 Whate'er the waters, or the liquid air,
 To deck thy lovely labor. Wilt thou fly
 With laughing Autumn to the Atlantic isles,
 And range with him the Hesperian fields, and see
 Where'er his fingers touch the fruitful grove,

The branches shoot with gold; where'er his step
Marks the glad soil, the tender clusters grow
With purple ripeness, and invest each hill,
As with the blushes of an evening sky?
Or, wilt thou rather stoop thy vagrant plume,
Where, gliding through his daughter's honor'd
shades,

The smooth Penéus from his glassy flood
Reflects purpureal Tempe's pleasant scene?
Fair Tempe! haunt belov'd of sylvan powers,
Of nymphs and fauns; where, in the golden age,
They play'd in secret on the shady brink
With ancient Pan; while round their choral steps, [hand
Young hours and genial gales with constant Shower'd blossoms, odors; shower'd ambrosial dews,

And Spring's Elysian bloom. Her flowery store
To thee nor Tempe shall refuse: nor watch
Of winged Hydra guard Hesperian fruits
From thy free spoil. O! bear then, unprov'd,
Thy smiling treasures to the green recess
Where young Dione stays. With sweetest airs
Entice her forth to lend her angel form
For beauty's honor'd image. Hither turn
Thy grateful footsteps; hither, gentle maid,
Incline thy polish'd forehead; let her eyes
Effuse the mildness of their azure dawn;
And may the fanning breezes waft aside
Thy radiant locks, disclosing, as it bends
With airy softness from the marble neck,
The cheek fair blooming, and the rosy lip,
Where winning smiles and pleasure, sweet as
love,

With sanctity and wisdom, tempering blend
Their soft allurements. Then the pleasing force
Of nature, and her kind parental care, [youth,
Worthier I'd sing; then all the enamour'd
With each admiring virgin, to my lyre
Should throng attentive, while I point on high
Where Beauty's living image, like the morn,
That wakes in Zephyr's arms the blushing May,
Moves onward; or as Venus, when she stood
Effulgent on the pearly car, and smil'd,
Fresh from the deep, and conscious of her form,
To see the Tritons tune their vocal shells,
And each cœrulean sister of the flood
With loud acclaim attend her o'er the waves,
To seek the Idalian bower. Ye smiling band
Of youths and virgins, who through all the maze
Of young desire, with rival steps pursue
This charm of beauty; if the pleasing toil,
Can yield a moment's respite, hither turn
Your favorable ear, and trust my words.
I do not mean to wake the gloomy form
Of Superstition, dress'd in Wisdom's garb,
To damp your tender hopes; I do not mean
To bid the jealous thunderer fire the heavens,
Or shapes infernal rend the groaning earth,
To fright you from your joys; my cheerful song
With better omens calls you to the field,
Pleas'd with your generous ardor in the chase,
And warm like you. Then tell me, for ye know;
Does Beauty ever deign to dwell where Health

And active Use are strangers? Is her charm
Confess'd in aught, whose most peculiar ends
Are lame and fruitless? Or did Nature mean
This pleasing call the herald of a lie;
To hide the shame of discord and disease,
And catch with fair hypocrisy the heart
Of idle Faith? O no! with better cares
The indulgent mother, conscious how infirm
Her offspring tread the paths of good and ill;
By this illustrious image, in each kind
Still more illustrious where the object holds
Its native powers most perfect, she by this Illumes the headstrong impulse of desire,
And sanctifies his choice. The generous glebe,
Whose bosom smiles with verdure, the clear tract
Of streams delicious to the thirsty soul,
The bloom of nectar'd fruitage, ripe to sense,
And every charm of animated things,
Are only pledges of a state sincere,
The integrity and order of their frame,
When all is well within, and every end
Accomplish'd.—Thus was Beauty sent from
heav'n,

The lovely mistress of Truth and Good
In this dark world: for Truth and Good are one,
And Beauty dwells in them, and they in her,
With like participation. Wherefore, then,
O sons of earth! would ye dissolve the tie?
O wherefore, with a rash impetuous aim,
Seek ye those flowery joys with which the hand
Of lavish Fancy paints each flattering scene
Where Beauty seems to dwell, nor once inquire
Where is the sanction of eternal Truth,
Or where the seal of undecitful Good,
To save your search from folly! Wanting these,
Lo! Beauty withers in your void embrace;
And with the glittering of an idiot's toy
Did Fancy mock your vows. Nor let the gleam
Of youthful hope, that shines upon your hearts,
Be chill'd or clouded at this awful task,
To learn the lore of undecitful Good,
And Truth eternal. Though the poisonous
charms

Of baleful Superstition guide the feet
Of servile numbers, through a dreary way,
To their abode, through deserts, thorns, and mire,

And leave the wretched pilgrim all forlorn
To muse at last amidst the ghostly gloom
Of graves, and hoary vaults, and cloister'd cells,
To walk with spectres through the midnight
shade,

And to the screaming owl's accursed song
Attune the dreadful workings of his heart;
Yet be not ye dismay'd. A gentler star
Your lovely search illumines. From the grove
Where Wisdom talk'd with her Athenian sons,
Could my ambitious hand entwine a wreath
Of Plato's olive with the Mantuan bay,
Then should my powerful verse at once dispel
Those monkish horrors; then in light divine
Disclose the Elysian prospect, where the steps
Of those whom nature charms, through blooming walks,

Through fragrant mountains and poetic streams,
 Amid the train of sages, heroes, bards,
 Led by the winged genius and the choir
 Of laurell'd Science and Harmonious Art,
 Proceed exulting to the eternal shrine,
 Where Truth conspicuous with her sister-twins,
 The undivided partners of her sway,
 With Good and Beauty reigns. O let not us,
 Lull'd by luxurious Pleasure's languid strain,
 Or crouching to the frowns of bigot rage,
 O let us not a moment pause to join
 That godlike band. And if the gracious power
 Who first awaken'd my untutor'd song,
 Will to my invocation breathe anew
 The tuneful spirit; then through all our paths
 Ne'er shall the sound of this devoted lyre
 Be wanting; whether on the rosy mead,
 When summer smiles, to warn the melting heart
 Of Luxury's allurements; whether firm
 Against the torrent and the stubborn hill
 To urge bold Virtue's unremitted nerve,
 And wake the strong divinity of soul [struck
 That conquers chance and fate; or whether
 For sounds of triumph, to proclaim her toils
 Upon the lofty summit, round her brow
 To twine the wreath of incorruptive praise;
 To trace her hallow'd light through future
 worlds,

And bless Heaven's image in the heart of man.

Thus with a faithful aim have we presum'd,
 Adventurous, to delineate Nature's form;
 Whether in vast, majestic pomp array'd,
 Or drest for pleasing wonder, or serene
 In beauty's rosy smile. It now remains,
 Through various being's fair-proportion'd scale,
 To trace the rising lustre of her charms,
 From their first twilight, shining forth at length
 To full meridian splendor. Of degree
 The least and lowliest, in the effusive warmth
 Of colors mingling with a random blaze,
 Doth Beauty dwell. Then higher in the line
 And variation of determin'd shape,
 Where Truth's eternal measures mark the bound
 Of circle, cube, or sphere. The third ascent Unites this varied symmetry of parts
 With color's bland allurements; as the pearl
 Shines in the concave of its azure bed,
 And painted shells indent their speckled wreath;
 Then more attractive rise the blooming forms,
 Through which the breath of Nature has infus'd
 Her genial power, to draw with pregnant veins
 Nutritious moisture from the bounteous earth,
 In fruit and seed prolific: thus the flowers
 Their purple honors with the spring resume;
 And such the stately tree which autumn bends
 With blushing treasures. But more lovely still
 Is Nature's charm, where to the full consent
 Of complicated members, to the bloom
 Of color, and the vital change of growth,
 Life's holy flame and piercing sense are given,
 And active motion speaks the temper'd soul:
 So moves the bird of Juno; so the steed
 With rival ardor beats the dusty plain,
 And faithful dogs, with eager airs of joy,

Salute their fellows. Thus doth Beauty dwell
 There most conspicuous, e'en in outward shape,
 Where dawns the high expression of a mind;
 By steps conducting our enraptur'd search
 To that eternal origin, whose power,
 Through all the unbounded symmetry of things,
 Like rays effulging from the parent sun,
 This endless mixture of her charms diffus'd.
 Mind, Mind alone (bear witness, earth and heaven!)

The living fountains in itself contains
 Of beauteous and sublime: here hand in hand
 Sit paramount the graces; here enthron'd,
 Celestial Venus, with divinest airs,
 Invites the soul to never-fading joy.
 Look then abroad through nature, to the range
 Of planets, suns, and adamantine spheres
 Wheeling unshaken through the void immense;
 And speak, O man! does this capacious scene
 With half that kindling majesty dilate
 Thy strong conception, as when Brutus rose
 Refulgent from the stroke of Cæsar's fate,
 Amid the crowd of patriots; and his arm
 Aloft extending, like eternal Jove [aloud
 When guilt brings down the thunder, call'd
 On Tully's name, and shook his crimson steel,
 And bade the father of his country, hail!
 For lo! the tyrant prostrate on the dust,
 And Rome again is free! Is aught so fair
 In all the dewy landscapes of the spring,
 In the bright eye of Hesper or the morn,
 In Nature's fairest forms, is aught so fair
 As virtuous friendship? as the candid blush
 Of him who strives with fortune to be just?
 The graceful tear that streams for others' woes,
 Or the mild majesty of private life,
 Where Peace, with ever-blooming olive, crowns
 The gate; where Honor's liberal hands effuse
 Unenvied treasures, and the snowy wings
 Of Innocence and Love protect the scene?
 Once more search, undismay'd, the dark pro-
 found

Where Nature works in secret; view the beds
 Of mineral treasure, and the eternal vault
 That bounds the hoary ocean; trace the forms
 Of atoms moving with incessant change
 Their elemental round; behold the seeds
 Of being, and the energy of life
 Kindling the mass with ever-active flame;
 Then to the secrets of the working mind
 Attentive turn; from dim oblivion call
 Her fleet, ideal band; and bid them go! [hour
 Break through time's barrier, and o'ertake the
 That saw the heavens created; then declare
 If aught were found in those external scenes
 To move thy wonder now. For what are all
 The forms which brute, unconscious matter wears,

Greatness of bulk, or symmetry of parts?
 Not reaching to the heart, soon feeble grows
 The superficial impulse; dull their charms,
 And satiate soon, and pall the languid eye:
 Not so the moral species, nor the powers
 Of genius and design; the ambitious mind

There sees herself: by these congenial forms
 Touch'd and awaken'd, with intenser act
 She bends each nerve, and meditates well pleas'd
 Her features in the mirror. For of all
 Th' inhabitants of earth, to man alone
 Creative Wisdom gave to lift his eye
 To Truth's eternal measures; thence to frame
 The sacred laws of action and of will,
 Discerning justice from unequal deeds,
 And temperance from folly. But beyond
 This energy of truth, whose dictates bind
 Assenting reason, the benignant sire,
 To deck the honor'd paths of just and good,
 Has added bright Imagination's rays;
 Where Virtue, rising from the awful depth
 Of Truth's mysterious bosom, doth forsake
 The unadorn'd condition of her birth;
 And, dress'd by fancy in ten thousand hues,
 Assumes a various feature, to attract,
 With charms responsive to each gazer's eye,
 The hearts of men. Amid his rural walk,
 The ingenuous youth whom solitude inspires
 With purest wishes, from the pensive shade
 Beholds her moving, like a virgin-Muse
 That wakes her lyre to some indulgent theme
 Of harmony and wonder: while among
 The herd of servile minds, her strenuous form
 Indignant flashes on the patriot's eye,
 And through the rolls of memory appeals
 To ancient honor; or in act serene,
 Yet watchful, raises the majestic sword
 Of public power, from dark Ambition's reach
 To guard the sacred volume of the laws.

Genius of ancient Greece! whose faithful steps

Well pleas'd I follow through the sacred paths
 Of nature and of science; nurse divine
 Of all heroic deeds and fair desires!
 O! let the breath of thy extended praise
 Inspire my kindling bosom to the height
 Of this untemper'd theme. Nor be my thoughts
 Presumptuous counted, if, amid the calm
 That soothes this vernal evening into smiles,
 I steal impatient from the sordid haunts
 Of strife and low ambition, to attend
 Thy sacred presence in the sylvan shade,
 By their malignant footsteps ne'er profan'd.
 Descend, propitious! to my favor'd eye;
 Such in thy mien, thy warm, exalted air,
 As when the Persian tyrant, foil'd and stung
 With shame and desperation, gnash'd his teeth
 To see thee rend the pageants of his throne;
 And at the lightning of thy lifted spear
 Crouch'd like a slave. Bring all thy martial spoils,

Thy palms, thy laurels, thy triumphant songs,
 Thy smiling band of arts, thy godlike sires
 Of civil wisdom, thy heroic youth
 Warm from the schools of glory. Guide my way
 Through fair Lyceum's walk, the green retreats
 Of Academus, and the thymy vale,
 Where oft, enchanted with Socratic sounds,
 Ilissus pure devolv'd his tuneful stream
 In gentler murmurs. From the blooming store

Of these auspicious fields, may I unblam'd
 Transplant some living blossoms to adorn
 My native clime: while, far above the flight
 Of Fancy's plume aspiring, I unlock
 The springs of ancient wisdom; while I join Thy name, thrice honor'd! with the immortal
 praise

Of Nature; while to my compatriot youth
 I point the high example of thy sons,
 And tune to Attic themes the British lyre.

§ 33. Day: a Pastoral. Cunningham.

“———— carpe diem.” HOR.

MORNING.

IN the barn the tenant Cock,
 Close to Partlet perch'd on high,
 Briskly crows (the shepherd's clock!)
 Jocund that the morning's nigh.
 Swiftly from the mountain's brow,
 Shadows, nurs'd by night, retire:
 And the peeping sun-beam, now,
 Paints with gold the village spire.
 Philomel forsakes the thorn,
 Plaintive where she prates at night;
 And the Lark, to meet the morn,
 Soars beyond the shepherd's sight.
 From the low-roof'd cottage ridge,
 See the chatt'ring Swallow spring;
 Darting through the one-arch'd bridge,
 Quick she dips her dappled wing.
 Now the pine-tree's waving top
 Gently greets the morning gale:
 Kidlings now begin to crop
 Daisies, in the dewy dale.
 From the balmy sweets, uncloy'd,
 (Restless 'till her task be done,)
 Now the busy bee's employ'd,
 Sipping dew before the sun.
 Trickling through the crevic'd rock,
 Where the limpid stream distils,
 Sweet refreshment waits the flock
 When 'tis sun-drove from the hills.
 Colin, for the promis'd corn
 (Ere the harvest hopes are ripe)
 Anxious, hears the huntsman's horn,
 Boldly sounding down his pipe.
 Sweet,—O sweet, the warbling throng,
 On the white emblossom'd spray!
 Nature's universal song
 Echoes to the rising day.

NOON.

FERVID on the glitt'ring flood,
 Now the noon-tide radiance glows,
 Drooping o'er its infant bud,
 Not a dew-drop's left the rose.
 By the brook the shepherd dines;
 From the fierce meridian heat

Shelter'd by the branching pines,
Pendant o'er his grassy seat.
Now the flock forsakes the glade,
Where, uncheck'd, the sun-beams fall;
Sure to find a pleasing shade
By the ivy'd abbey wall.

Echo in her airy round,
Over river, rock and hill,
Cannot catch a single sound,
Save the clack of yonder mill.

Cattle court the zephyrs bland,
Where the streamlet wanders cool;
Or with languid silence stand
Midway in the marshy pool.

But from mountain, dell, or stream,
Not a flutt'ring zephyr springs;
Fearful lest the noon-tide beam
Scorch its soft, its silken wings.

Not a leaf has leave to stir,
Nature's lull'd, serene, and still;
Quiet e'en the shepherd's cur,
Sleeping on the heath-clad hill.

Languid is the landscape round,
'Till the fresh descending shower,
Grateful to the thirsty ground,
Raises ev'ry fainting flower.

Now the hill, the hedge, is green,
Now the warblers' throats in tune!
Blithsome is the verdant scene,
Brighten'd by the beams of Noon!

EVENING.

O'ER the heath the heifer strays
Free (the furrow'd task is done);
Now the village windows blaze,
Burnish'd by the setting sun.

Now he hides behind the hill,
Sinking from a golden sky;
Can the pencil's mimic skill
Copy the refulgent dye?

Trudging as the ploughmen go
(To the smoking hamlet bound),
Giant-like their shadows grow,
Lengthen'd o'er the level ground.

Where the rising forest spreads
Shelter for the lordly dome!
To their high-built airy beds
See the rooks returning home!

As the lark, with varied tune,
Carols to the evening loud;
Mark the mild resplendent moon
Breaking through a parted cloud!

Now the hermit-owllet peeps
From the barn, or twisted brake;
And the blue mist slowly creeps,
Curling on the silver lake.

As the trout, in speckled pride,
Playful on its bosom springs;

To the banks in ruffled tide
Verges in successive rings.

Tripping through the silken grass,
O'er the path-divided dale,
Mark the rose-complexion'd lass,
With her well-pois'd milking-pail.

Linnets, with unnumber'd notes,
And the cuckoo-bird with two,
Tuning sweet their mellow throats,
Bid the setting sun adieu.

§ 34. The Contemplatist: a Night Piece.
Cunningham.

"Nox erat ———
"Cum tacet omnis ager, pecudes, pictæque
"volucres."

THE Queen of Contemplation, Night,
Begins her balmy reign;
Advancing in their varied light
Her silver-vested train.

'Tis strange, the many marshall'd stars,
That ride yon sacred round,
Should keep among their rapid cars,
A silence so profound!

A kind, a philosophic calm
The cool creation wears!
And what day drank of dewy balm,
The gentle Night repairs.

Behind their leafy curtains hid,
The feather'd race how still!
How quiet now the gamesome kid,
That gambol'd round the hill!

The sweets, that, bending o'er their banks,
From sultry Day declin'd,
Revive in little velvet ranks,
And scent the western wind.

The Moon, preceded by the breeze
That bade the clouds retire,
Appears among the tufted trees,
A Phoenix next on fire.

But soft—the golden glow subsides!
Her chariot mounts on high!
And now, in silver'd pomp, she rides
Pale regent of the sky!

Where Time upon the wither'd tree
Hath carv'd the moral chair,
I sit from busy passions free,
And breathe the placid air.

The wither'd tree was once in prime;
Its branches brav'd the sky!
Thus, at the touch of ruthless Time,
Shall Youth and Vigor die.

I'm lifted to the blue expanse:
It glows serenely gay!
Come, Science, by my side advance,
We'll search the Milky Way.

Let us descend—The daring flight
Fatigues my feeble mind:

And science, in the maze of light,
Is impotent and blind.
What are those wild, those wand'ring fires,
That o'er the moorland ran?
Vapors.—How like the vague desires
That cheat the heart of man!
But there's a friendly guide!—a flame,
That, lambent o'er its bed,
Enlivens, with a gladsome beam,
The hermit's osier shed.
Among the russet shades of night,
It glances from afar!
And darts along the dusk; so bright,
It seems a silver star!
In coverts (where the few frequent)
If Virtue deigns to dwell,
'Tis thus the little lamp, Content,
Gives lustre to her cell.
How smooth that rapid river slides
Progressive to the deep!
The poppies, pendent o'er its sides,
Have charm'd the waves to sleep.
Pleasure's intoxicated sons!
Ye indolent! ye gay!
Reflect—for, as the river runs,
Life wings its trackless way.
That branching grove of dusky green
Conceals the azure sky;
Save where a starry space between
Relieves the darken'd eye.
Old Error, thus, with shades impure
Throws sacred Truth behind:
Yet, sometimes, through the deep obscure
She bursts upon the mind.
Sleep, and her sister Silence reign,
They lock the shepherd's fold!
But hark—I hear a lamb complain,
'Tis lost upon the wold!
To savage herds, that hunt for prey,
An unresisting prize!
For having trod a devious way,
The little rambler dies.
As luckless is the Virgin's lot,
Whom pleasure once misguides:
When hurried from the halcyon cot,
Where Innocence presides—
The passions, a relentless train!
To tear the victim, run:
She seeks the paths of peace in vain,
Is conquer'd—and undone.
How bright the little insects blaze,
Where willows shade the way;
As proud as if their painted rays
Could emulate the Day!
'Tis thus the pigmy sons of pow'r
Advance their vain parade!
Thus glitter in the darken'd hour,
And like the glow-worms fade!

The soft serenity of night
Ungentle clouds deform!
The silver host that shone so bright,
Is hid behind a storm!
The angry elements engage!
An oak (an ivied bower,)
Repels the rough wind's noisy rage,
And shields me from the shower.
The rancor, thus, of rushing fate
I've learnt to render vain:
For, whilst Integrity's her seat,
The soul will sit serene.
A raven, from some greedy vault,
Amidst that cloister'd gloom,
Bids me, and 'tis a solemn thought!
Reflect upon the tomb.
The tomb!—The consecrated dome!
The temple rais'd to Peace!
The port, that to its friendly home
Compels the human race!
Yon village, to the moral mind,
A solemn aspect wears;
Where sleep hath lull'd the labor'd hind,
And kill'd his daily cares:
'Tis but the church-yard of the Night;
An emblematic bed!
That offers to the mental sight
The temporary dead.
From hence, I'll penetrate in thought
The grave's unmeasur'd deep;
And, tutor'd hence, be timely taught
To meet my final sleep.
'Tis peace——(the little chaos past!)
The graceful moon restor'd!
A breeze succeeds the frightful blast,
That through the forest roar'd!
The Nightingale, a welcome guest!
Renews her gentle strains;
And Hope (just wand'ring from my breast)
Her wonted seat regains.
Yes——When yon lucid orb is dark,
And darting from on high;
My soul, a more celestial spark,
Shall keep her native sky.
Fann'd by the light, the lenient breeze,
My limbs refreshment find;
And moral rhapsodies, like these,
Give vigor to the mind.

§ 35. The Visions of Fancy. Langhorne.

ELEGY I.

CHILDREN of Fancy, whither are ye fled?
Where have you borne those hope-enliven'd hours,
That once with myrtle garlands bound my head,
That once bestrew'd my vernal path with flowers?

In yon fair vale, where blooms the beechen grove, [flowery plain,
 Where winds the slow wave through the
 To these fond arms you led the tyrant, Love,
 With Fear, and Hope, and Folly in his train.
 My lyre, that, left at careless distance, hung
 Light on some pale branch of the osier shade,
 To lays of amorous blandishment you strung,
 And e'er my sleep the lulling music play'd.
 "Rest, gentle youth! while on the quivering
 breeze
 Slides to thine ear this softly-breathing strain;
 Sounds that move smoother than the steps of
 ease,
 And pour oblivion in the ear of pain.
 In this fair vale eternal Spring shall smile,
 And Time unenyious crown the roseate hour;
 Eternal Joy shall every care beguile, [flower.
 Breathe in each gale, and bloom in every
 The silver stream, that down its crystal way
 Frequent has led thy musing steps along,
 Shall, still the same, its funny mazes play,
 And with its murmurs melodise thy song.
 Unfading green shall these fair groves adorn;
 Those living meads immortal flowers unfold:
 In rosy smiles shall rise each blushing morn,
 And every evening close in clouds of gold.
 The tender Loves that watch thy slumbering rest,
 And round thee flowers and balmy myrtles
 strew, [breast,
 Shall charm, through all approaching life, thy
 With joys for ever pure, for ever new.
 The genial power that speeds the golden dart,
 Each charm of tender passion shall inspire;
 With fond affection fill the mutual heart,
 And feed the flame of ever young Desire.
 Come, gentle Loves! your myrtle garlands bring;
 The smiling bower with cluster'd roses spread;
 Come, gentle airs! with incense-dropping wing
 The breathing sweets of vernal odor shed.
 Hark, as the strains of swelling music rise,
 How the notes vibrate on the fav'ring gale!
 Auspicious glories beam along the skies,
 And powers unseen the happy moments hail!
 Ecstatic hours! so every distant day,
 Like this, serene on downy wings shall move;
 Rise, crown'd with joys that triumph o'er decay,
 The faithful joys of fancy and of love."

ELEGY II.

AND were they vain, those soothing lays ye
 sung?
 Children of Fancy! yes, your song was vain;
 On each soft air though rapt Attention hung,
 And Silence listen'd on the sleeping plain.
 The strains yet vibrate on my ravish'd ear,
 And still to smile the mimic beauties seem,
 Though now the visionary scenes appear
 Like the faint traces of a vanish'd dream.

Mirror of life: the glories thus impart
 Of all that Youth, and Love, and Fancy frame,
 When painful Anguish speeds the piercing dart,
 Or Envy blasts the blooming flowers of Fame.
 Nurse of wild wishes, and of fond desires,
 The prophetess of Fortune, false and vain,
 To scenes where Peace in Ruin's arms expires,
 Fallacious Hope deludes her hapless train.
 Go, Syren, go—thy charms on others try;
 My beaten bark at length has reach'd the
 shore;
 Yet on the rock my dropping garments lie;
 And let me perish, if I trust thee more.
 Come, gentle Quiet! long-neglected maid!
 O come, and lead me to thy mossy cell;
 There, unregarded in the peaceful shade,
 With calm Repose and Silence let me dwell.
 Come, happier hours of sweet unanxious rest,
 When all the struggling passions shall subside;
 When Peace shall clasp me to her plummy breast,
 And smooth my silent minutes as they glide.
 But chief, thou goddess of the thoughtless eye,
 Whom never cares or passions discompose,
 O blest Insensibility, be nigh,
 And with thy soothing hand my weary eyelids
 close.
 Then shall the cares of love and glory cease,
 And all the fond anxieties of fame;
 Alike regardless, in the arms of Peace,
 If these extol, or those debase a name.
 In Lyttelton though all the Muses praise,
 His generous praise shall then delight no more,
 Nor the sweet magic of his tender lays Shall touch the bosom which it charm'd
 before.
 Nor then, though Malice, with insidious guise
 Of friendship, ope the unsuspecting breast;
 Nor then, though Envy broach her blackening
 lies,
 Shall these deprive me of a moment's rest,
 O state to be desir'd! when hostile rage
 Prevails in human more than savage haunts;
 When man with man eternal war will wage,
 And never yield that mercy which he wants:
 When dark design invades the cheerful hour,
 And draws the heart with social freedom
 warm,
 Its cares, its wishes, and its thoughts to pour,
 Smiling insidious with the hopes of harm.
 Vain man, to others' failings still severe,
 Yet not one foible in himself can find;
 Another's faults to Folly's eyes are clear,
 But to her own e'en Wisdom's self is blind.
 O let me still, from these low follies free,
 This sordid malice, and inglorious strife,
 Myself the subject of my censure be,
 And teach my heart to comment on my life.
 With thee, Philosophy, still let me dwell,
 My tutor'd mind from vulgar meanness save;

Bring Peace, bring Quiet to my humble cell,
And bid them lay the green turf on my grave.

ELEGY III.

BRIGHT o'er the green hills rose the morning ray,
The wood-lark's song resounded on the plain,
Fair nature felt the warm embrace of day,
And smil'd through all her animated reign.
When young Delight, of Hope and Fancy born,
His head on tufted wild-thyme half-reclin'd,
Caught the gay colors of the orient morn,
And thence of life this picture vain design'd:
"O born to thoughts, to pleasures more sublime
Than beings of inferior nature prove!
To triumph in the golden hours of Time,
And feel the charms of fancy and of love!
"High favor'd man! for him unfolding fair
In orient light this native landscape smiles;
For him sweet Hope disarms the hand of Care,
Exalts his pleasures, and his grief beguiles.
"Blows not a blossom on the breast of Spring,
Breathes not a gale along the bending mead,
Trills not a songster of the soaring wing,
But fragrance, health, and melody succeed.
"O let me still with simple nature live,
My lowly field-flowers on her altar lay,
Enjoy the blessings that she meant to give,
And calmly waste my inoffensive day!
"No titled name, no envy-teasing dome,
No glittering wealth my tutor'd wishes crave;
So Health and Peace be near my humble home,
A cool stream murmur, and a green tree wave.
"So may the sweet Euterpe not disdain
At eve's chaste hour her silver lyre to bring;
The muse of Pity wake her soothing strain,
And tune to sympathy the trembling string.
"Thus glide the pensive moments o'er the vale,
While floating shades of dusky night descend;
Not left untold the lover's tender tale,
Nor unenjoy'd the heart-enlarging friend.
"To love and friendship flow the social bowl!
To Attic wit and elegance of mind;
To all the native beauties of the soul,
The simple charms of truth, and sense refin'd!
"Then to explore whatever ancient sage
Studious from Nature's early volume drew,
To trace sweet Fiction through her golden age,
And mark how fair the sun-flower, Science, blew!
"Haply to catch some spark of eastern fire,
Hesperian fancy, or Aonian ease;
Some melting note from Sappho's tender lyre,
Some strain that Love and Phœbus taught to please.
"When waves the gray light o'er the mountain's head, [ray:
Then let me meet the morn's first beauteous
Carelessly wander from my sylvan shed,
And catch the sweet breath of the rising day:

"Nor seldom, loit'ring as I muse along,
Mark from what flower the breeze its sweetness bore;
Or listen to the labor-soothing song
Of bees that range the thymy uplands o'er.
"Slow let me climb the mountain's airy brow,
The green height gain'd, in museful rapture
Sleep to the murmur of the woods below, [lie,
Or look on Nature with a lover's eye.
"Delightful hours! O, thus for ever flow;
Led by fair fancy round the varied year:
So shall my breast with native raptures glow,
Nor feel one pang from folly, pride, or fear.
"Firm be my heart to Nature and to Truth,
Nor vainly wander from their dictates sage;
So joy shall triumph on the brows of youth,
So hope shall smooth the dreary paths of age.

ELEGY IV.

OH, yet, ye dear, deluding visions, stay!
Fond hopes, of Innocence and Fancy born!
For you I'll cast these waking thoughts away,
For one wild dream of life's romantic morn.
Ah, no! the sunshine o'er each object spread
By flattering Hope, the flowers that blew so
Like the gay gardens of Armida fled, [fair,
And vanish'd from the powerful rod of Care.
So the poor pilgrim, who, in rapturous thought
Plans his dear journey to Loretto's shrine,
Seems on his way by guardian seraphs brought,
Sees aiding angels favor his design.
Ambrosial blossoms, such of old as blew
By those fresh founts on Eden's happy plain,
And Sharon's roses all his passage strew:
So Fancy dreams; but Fancy's dreams are vain.
Wasted and weary on the mountain's side;
His way unknown, the hapless pilgrim lies,
Or takes some ruthless robber for his guide,
And prone beneath his cruel sabre dies.
Life's morning landscape gilt with orient light,
Where Hope and Joy and Fancy hold their
reign,
The grove's green wave, the blue stream sparkling bright, [wain;
The blithe hours dancing round Hyperion's
In radiant colors Youth's free hand portrays,
Then holds the flattering tablet to his eye;
Nor thinks how soon the vernal grove decays,
Nor sees the dark cloud gathering o'er the sky.
Hence Fancy, conquer'd by the dart of Pain,
And wandering far from her Platonic shade,
Mourns o'er the ruins of her transient reign,
Nor unrepining sees her visions fade.
Their parent banish'd, hence her children fly
The fairy race that fill'd her festive train:
Joy tears his wreath, and Hope inverts her eye,
And Folly wonders that her dream was vain.

§ 36. A Letter from Italy to the Right Honorable Charles Lord Halifax. In the year 1701.

Addison.

WHILE you, my Lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's public posts retire,
Nor longer, her ungrateful sons to please,
For their advantage sacrifice your ease;
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays,
Where the soft season and inviting clime
Conspire to trouble your repose with rhyme.

For wheresoe'er I turn my ravish'd eyes,
Gay gilded scenes and shining prospects rise;
Poetic fields encompass me around,
And still I seem to tread on classic ground;
For here the Muse so oft her harp has strung,
That not a mountain rears its head unsung;
Renown'd in verse each shady thicket grows,
And ev'ry stream in heavenly numbers flows.
How am I pleas'd to search the hills and woods
For rising springs and celebrated floods!
To view the Nar, tumultuous in his course,
And trace the smooth Clitumnus to his source,
To see the Mincio draw his wat'ry store
Through the long windings of a fruitful shore,
And hoary Albula's infected tide
O'er the warm bed of smoking sulphur glide.

Fir'd with a thousand raptures, I survey
Eridanus through flow'ry meadows stray,
The king of floods! that rolling o'er the plains,
The tow'ring Alps of half their moisture drains;
And, proudly swoln with a whole winter's snows,
Distributes wealth and plenty where he flows.

Sometimes misguided by the tuneful throng,
I look for streams immortaliz'd in song,
That lost in silence and oblivion lie
(Dumb are their fountains, and their channels
Yet run for ever by the Muse's skill, [dry,)
And in the smooth description murmur still.

Sometimes to gentle Tiber I retire,
And the fam'd river's empty shores admire,
That, destitute of strength, derives its course
From thrifty urns and an unfruitful source;
Yet, sung so often in poetic lays,
With scorn the Danube and the Nile surveys;
So high the deathless Muse exalts her theme!
Such was the Boyne, a poor inglorious stream
That in Hibernian vales obscurely stray'd,
And unobserv'd in wild meanders play'd,
Till, by your lines and Nassau's sword renown'd,
Its rising billows through the world resound;
Where'er the hero's godlike acts can pierce,
Or where the fame of an immortal verse.

Oh, could the Muse my ravish'd breast inspire
With warmth like yours, and raise an equal fire,
Unnumber'd beauties in my verse should shine,
And Virgil's Italy should yield to mine!
See how the golden groves around me smile,
That shun the coast of Britain's stormy isle,
Or, when transplanted and preserv'd with care,
Curse the cold clime, and starve in northern air.
Here kindly warmth their mountain juice ferments

To nobler tastes, and more exalted scents;

E'en the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom,
And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume.
Bear me, some God, to Baia's gentle seats;
Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats;
Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride;
Blossoms, and fruits, and flow'rs together rise,
And the whole year in gay confusion lies.

Immortal glories in my mind revive,
And in my soul a thousand passions strive,
When Rome's exalted beauties I descry
Magnificent in piles of ruin lie.
An amphitheatre's amazing height
Here fills my eye with terror and delight,
That on its public shows unpeopled Rome,
And held uncrowded nations in its womb;
Here pillars rough with sculpture pierce the skies;
And here the proud triumphal arches rise,
Where the old Romans' deathless acts display'd
Their base degen'rate progeny upbraid;
Whole rivers here forsake the fields below,
And, wond'ring at their height, through airy channels flow.

Still to new scenes my wand'ring Muse retires,
And the dumb show of breathing rocks admires;
Where the smooth chisel all its force has shown,
And soften'd into flesh the rugged stone.

In solemn silence, a majestic band,
Heroes, and gods, and Roman consuls, stand;
Stern tyrants, whom their cruelties renown,
And emperors, in Parian marble frown;
While the bright dames, to whom they humbly sued, [subdued.

Still show the charms that their proud hearts

Fain would I Raphael's godlike art rehearse,
And show th' immortal labors in my verse,
Where from the mingled strength of shade and
A new creation rises to my sight; [light,
Such heavenly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colors glow,
From theme to theme with secret pleasures tost,
Amidst the soft variety I'm lost.

Here pleasing airs my ravish'd soul confound
With circling notes and labyrinths of sound;
Here domes and temples rise in distant views,
And op'ning palaces invite my Muse.

How has kind Heaven adorn'd the happy land,
And scatter'd blessings with a wasteful hand!
But what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her blooming mountains, and her sunny shores,
With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,
The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,
While proud Oppression in her valleys reigns,
And Tyranny usurps her happy plains?

The poor inhabitant beholds in vain
The redd'ning orange and the swelling grain;
Joyless he sees the growing oils and wines,
And in the myrtle's fragrant shade repines;
Starves, in the midst of nature's bounty curst,
And in the loaded vineyard dies for thirst.
Oh Liberty, thou goddess heavenly bright,
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight!
Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign,
And smiling Plenty leads the wanton train;

Eas'd of her load, Subjection grows more light,
And Poverty looks cheerful in thy sight;
Thou mak'st the gloomy face of Nature gay,
Giv'st beauty to the Sun, and pleasure to the Day.

Thee, goddess, thee Britannia's isle adores;
How has she oft exhausted all her stores,
How oft, in fields of death, thy presence sought,
Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought!
On foreign mountains may the sun refine
The grape's soft juice, and mellow it to wine;
With citron groves adorn a distant soil,
And the fat olive swell with floods of oil;
We envy not the warmer clime, that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent skies;
Nor at the coarseness of our heaven repine,
Though o'er our heads the frozen Pleiads shine:
'Tis Liberty that crowns Britannia's isle,
And makes her barren rocks and her bleak mountains smile.

Others with tow'ring piles may please the sight,
And in their proud aspiring domes delight;
A nicer touch to the stretch'd canvas give,
Or teach their animated rocks to live;
'Tis Britain's care to watch o'er Europe's fate,
And hold in balance each contending state;
To threaten bold presumptuous kings with war,
And answer her afflicted neighbour's pray'r.
The Dane and Swede, rous'd up by fierce alarms,
Bless the wise conduct of her pious arms;
Soon as her fleets appear, their terrors cease,
And all the northern world lies hush'd in peace.

Th' ambitious Gaul beholds, with secret dread,
Her thunder aim'd at his aspiring head,
And fain her godlike sons would disunite
By foreign gold, or by domestic spite;
But strives in vain to conquer or divide,
Whom Nassau's arms defend and counsels guide.
Fir'd with the name which I so oft have found
The distant climes and different tongues resound,
I bridle in my struggling Muse with pain,
That longs to launch into a bolder strain.

But I've already troubled you too long,
Nor dare attempt a more advent'rous song.
My humble verse demands a softer theme,
A painted meadow, or a purling stream;
Unfit for heroes; whom immortal lays,
And lines like Virgil's or like yours, should praise.

WHILE crowds of princes your deserts pro-
claim,

Proud in their number to enrol your name;
While emperors to you commit their cause,
And Anna's praises crown the vast applause:
Accept, great leader, what the Muse recites,
That in ambitious verse attempts your fights.
Fir'd and transported with a theme so new,
Ten thousand wonders, op'ning to my view,
Shine forth at once; sieges and storms appear,
And wars and conquests fill the important year;
Rivers of blood I see, and hills of slain,
An Iliad rising out of one campaign.

The haughty Gaul beheld, with tow'ring pride,
His ancient bounds enlarg'd on ev'ry side;
Pyrene's lofty barriers were subdued,
And in the midst of his wide empire stood;
Ausonia's states, the victor to restrain,
Oppos'd their Alps and Apennines in vain,
Nor found themselves, with strength of rocks
immur'd,

Behind their everlasting hills secur'd;
The rising Danube its long race began, [ran;
And half its course through the new conquests
Amaz'd, and anxious for her sov'reigns' fates,
Germania trembled through a hundred states;
Great Leopold himself was seiz'd with fear;
He gaz'd around, but saw no succour near;
He gaz'd, and half abandon'd to despair
His hopes on Heaven, and confidence in pray'r.

To Britain's queen the nations turn their eyes;
On her resolves the western world relies;
Confiding still, amidst its dire alarms,
In Anna's councils, and in Churchill's arms.
Thrice happy Britain, from the kingdoms rent,
To sit the guardian of the continent!
That sees her bravest son advanc'd so high,
And flourishing so near her prince's eye;
Thy fav'rites grow not up by fortune's sport,
Or from the crimes or follies of a court;
On the firm basis of desert they rise,
From long-tried faith, and friendship's holy ties:
Their sovereign's well-distinguish'd smiles they share;

Her ornaments in peace, her strength in war;
The nation thanks them with a public voice;
By show'rs of blessings Heav'n approves their choice;

Envy itself is dumb, in wonder lost,
And factions strive who shall applaud them
most.

Soon as soft vernal breezes warm the sky;
Britannia's colors in the zephyrs fly;
Her chief already has his march begun,
Crossing the provinces himself had won,
Till the Moselle, appearing from afar,
Retards the progress of the moving war.
Delightful stream, had nature bid her fall
In distant climes far from the perjurd Gaul;
But now a purchase to the sword she lies,
Her harvests for uncertain owners rise.

Each vineyard doubtful of its master grows,
And to the victor's bowl each vintage flows.
The discontented shades of slaughter'd hosts
That wander'd on the banks, her heroes' ghosts,
Hop'd when they saw Britannia's arms appear,
The vengeance due to their great death was near.

Our godlike leader, ere the stream he pass'd,
The mighty scheme of all his labors cast.
Forming the wondrous year within his thought,
His bosom glow'd with battles yet unfought.
The long laborious march he first surveys,
And joins the distant Danube to the Maese;
Between whose floods such pathless forests grow,
Such mountains rise, so many rivers flow:
The toil looks lovely in the hero's eyes,
And danger serves but to enhance the prize.

Big with the fate of Europe, he renews
His dreadful course, and the proud foe pur-
sues!

Infected by the burning scorpion's heat
The sultry gales round his chaf'd temples beat,
Till on the borders of the Maine he finds
Defensive shadows, and refreshing winds.
Our British youth, with in-born freedom bold,
Unnumber'd scenes of servitude behold,
Nations of slaves, with tyranny debas'd.
(Their Maker's image more than half defac'd,)
Hourly instructed, as they urge their toil,
To prize their Queen, and love their native soil.

Still to the rising sun they take their way
Through clouds of dust, and gain upon the day.
When now the Neckar, on its friendly coast
With cooling streams revives the fainting host,
That cheerfully his labors past forgets,
The mid-night watches, and the noon-day heats.

O'er prostrate towns and palaces they pass
(Now cover'd o'er with woods, and hid in grass),
Breathing revenge; whilst anger and disdain
Fire ev'ry breast, and boil in ev'ry vein. [far
Here shatter'd walls, like broken rocks, from
Rise up in hideous view, the guilt of war;
Whilst here the vine o'er hills of ruins climbs,
Industrious to conceal great Bourbon's crimes.

At length the fame of England's hero drew
Eugenio to the glorious interview.

Great souls by instinct to each other turn,
Demand alliance, and in friendship burn;
A sudden friendship, while with stretch'd-out rays [blaze.

They meet each other, mingling blaze with Polish'd in courts, and harden'd in the field,
Renown'd for conquest, and in council skill'd,
Their courage dwells not in a troubl'd flood
Of mounting spirits, and fermenting blood;
Lodg'd in the soul, with virtue over-rul'd;
Inflam'd by reason, and by reason cool'd;
In hours of peace content to be unknown,
And only in the field of battle shown:
To souls like these, in mutual friendship join'd,
Heaven dares intrust the cause of human kind.

Britannia's graceful sons appear in arms,
Her harass'd troops the hero's presence warms;
Whilst the high hills and rivers all around
With thund'ring peals of British shouts resound:

Doubling their speed, they march with fresh delight,

Eager for glory, and require the fight. [sues,
So the staunch hound the trembling deer pur-
And smells his footsteps in the tainted dew,
The tedious track unrav'ling by degrees:
But when the scent comes warm in ev'ry breeze,
Fir'd at the near approach, he shoots away
On his full stretch, and bears upon his prey.

The march concludes, the various realms are
past;

Th' immortal Schellenberg appears at last:
Like hills th' aspiring ramparts rise on high,
Like valleys at their feet the trenches lie;
Batt'ries on batt'ries guard each fatal pass,
Threat'ning destruction; rows of hollow brass,
Tube behind tube, the dreadful entrance keep,
Whilst in their wombs ten thousand thunders
sleep. [sight,

Great Churchill owns, charm'd with the glorious
His march o'erpaid by such a promis'd fight.

The western sun now shot a feeble ray,
And faintly scatter'd the remains of day:
Ev'ning approach'd; but oh what hosts of foes
Were never to behold that ev'ning close!
Thick'ning their ranks, and wedg'd in firm array,
The close compacted Britons win their way;
In vain the cannon their throng'd war defac'd
With tracks of death, and laid the battle waste:
Still pressing forward to the fight, they broke
Through flames of sulphur and a night of smoke,
Till slaughter'd legions fill'd the trench below,
And bore their fierce avengers to the foe.

High on the works the mingling hosts engage,
The battle, kindled into ten-fold rage,
With show'rs of bullets, and with storms of fire,
Burns in full fury; heaps on heaps expire;
Nations with nations mix'd confus'dly die,
And lost in one promiscuous carnage lie.

How many gen'rous Britons meet their doom,
New to the field, and heroes in their bloom!
Th' illustrious youths, that left their native shore
To march where Britons never march'd before,
(Oh fatal love of fame! oh glorious heat,
Only destructive to the brave and great!)

After such toils o'ercome, such dangers past, Stretch'd on Bavarian ramparts, breathe their last. [pear,

But hold, my Muse, may no complaints ap-
Nor blot the day with an ungrateful tear:
While Marlbro' lives, Britannia's stars dispense
A friendly light, and shine in innocence:
Plunging through seas of blood his fiery steed
Where'er his friends retire, or foes succeed;
Those he supports, these drives to sudden flight;
And turns the various fortune of the fight.

Forbear, great man, renown'd in arms, forbear
To brave the thickest terrors of the war;
Nor hazard thus, confus'd in crowds of foes,
Britannia's safety, and the world's repose;
Let nations, anxious for thy life, abate
This scorn of danger, and contempt of fate:
Thou liv'st not for thyself, thy Queen demands
Conquest and peace from thy victorious hands;

Kingdoms and empires in thy fortune join,
And Europe's destiny depends on thine.

At length the long-disputed pass they gain,
By crowded armies fortified in vain;
The war breaks in, the fierce Bavarians yield,
And see their camp with British legions fill'd.
So Belgian mounds bear on their shatter'd sides
The sea's whole weight, increas'd with swelling
But if the rushing wave a passage finds, [tides;
Enrag'd by wat'ry moons, and warring winds,
The trembling peasant sees his country round
Cover'd with tempests, and in oceans drown'd.

The few surviving foes dispers'd in flight
(Refuse of swords and gleanings of a fight)
In ev'ry rustling wind the victor hear,
And Marlbo's form in ev'ry shadow fear,
Till the dark cope of night with kind embrace
Befriends the rout, and covers their disgrace.

To Donavert, with unresisted force,
The gay victorious army bends its course.
The growth of meadows, and the pride of fields,
Whatever spoils Bavaria's summer yields
(The Danube's great increase) Britannia shares,
The food of armies and support of wars:
With magazines of death, destructive balls,
And cannon doom'd to batter Landau's walls,
The victor finds each hidden cavern stor'd,
And turns their fury on their guilty lord.

Deluded prince! how is thy greatness cross'd,
And all the gaudy dream of empire lost,
That proudly set thee on a fancied throne,
And made imagin'ry realms thy own!
Thy troops, that now behind the Danube join,
Shall shortly seek for shelter from the Rhine,
Nor find it there! Surrounded with alarms,
Thou hop'st th' assistance of the Gallic arms!
The Gallic arms in safety shall advance,
And crowd thy standards with the pow'r of France,

While, to exalt thy doom, th' aspiring Gaul
Shares thy destruction, and adorns thy fall.

Unbounded courage and compassion join'd,
Temp'ring each other in the victor's mind,
Alternately proclaim him good and great,
And make the hero and the man complete.
Long did he strive th' obdurate foe to gain
By proffer'd grace, but long he strove in vain;
Till, fir'd at length, he thinks it vain to spare
His rising wrath, and gives a loose to war.
In vengeance rous'd, the soldier fills his hand
With sword and fire, and ravages the land;
A thousand villages to ashes turns,
In crackling flames a thousand harvests burns.
To the thick woods the woolly flocks retreat,
And mix'd with bellowing herds confus'dly bleat;
Their trembling lords the common shade par-
take,

And cries of infants sound in ev'ry brake:
The list'ning soldier fix'd in sorrow stands,
Loth to obey his leader's just commands;
The leader grieves, by gen'rous pity sway'd,
To see his just commands so well obey'd.

But now the trumpet, terrible from far,
In shriller clangors animates the war;

Confed'rate drums in fuller concert beat,
And echoing hills the loud alarm repeat:
Gallia's proud standards, to Bavaria's join'd,
Unfurl their gilded lilies in the wind;
The daring prince his blasted hopes renews,
And, while the thick embattled host he views
Stretch'd out in deep array and dreadful length,
His heart dilates, and glories in his strength,

The fatal day its mighty course began,
That the griev'd world had long desir'd in vain;
States that their new captivity bemoan'd,
Armies of martyrs that in exile groan'd,
Sighs from the depth of gloomy dungeons heard,
And pray'rs in bitterness of soul prefer'd,
Europe's loud cries, that Providence assail'd,
And Anna's ardent vows, at length prevail'd:
The day was come when Heav'n design'd to show

His care and conduct of the world below.

Behold in awful march and dread array
The long extended squadron shape their way!
Death, in approaching terrible, imparts
An anxious horror to the bravest hearts;
Yet do their beating breasts demand the strife,
And thirst of glory quells the love of life.
No vulgar fears can British minds control:
Heat of revenge and noble pride of soul
O'erlook'd the foe, advantag'd by his post,
Lessen his numbers, and contract his host;
Though fens and floods possess the middle space,
That unprovok'd they would have fear'd to pass,
Nor fens nor floods can stop Britannia's bands,
When her proud foe rang'd on their borders stands.

But oh, my muse, what numbers wilt thou find
To sing the furious troops in battle join'd!
Methinks I hear the drum's tumultuous sound
The victor's shouts and dying groans confound,
The dreadful burst of cannon rend the skies,
And all the thunder of the battle rise. [prov'd,
'Twas then great Marlbo's mighty soul was
That, in the shock of charging hosts unmov'd,
Amidst confusion, horror, and despair,
Examin'd all the dreadful scenes of war;
In peaceful thought the field of death survey'd,
To fainting squadrons sent the timely aid,
Inspir'd repuls'd battalions to engage,
And taught the doubtful battle where to rage.
So when an angel by divine command
With rising tempests shakes a guilty land,
Such as of late o'er pale Britannia pass'd,
Calm and serene he drives the furious blast;
And, pleas'd th' Almighty's orders to perform,
Rides in the whirlwind, and directs the storm.

But see the haughty household-troops advance!

The dread of Europe, and the pride of France;
The war's whole art each private soldier knows,
And with a general's love of conquest glows;
Proudly he marches on, and, void of fear,
Laughs at the shaking of the British spear;
Vain insolence! with native freedom brave,
The meanest Briton scorns the highest slave;
Contempt and fury fire their souls by turns,
Each nation's glory in each warrior burns;

Each fights, as in his arm th' important day
 And all the fate of his great monarch lay ;
 A thousand glorious actions, that might claim
 Triumphant laurels, and immortal fame,
 Confus'd in crowds of glorious actions lie,
 And troops of heroes undistinguish'd die.
 O Dormer, how can I behold thy fate,
 And not the wonders of thy youth relate !
 How can I see the gay, the brave, the young,
 Fall in the cloud of war, and lie unsung !
 In joys of conquest he resigns his breath,
 And, fill'd with England's glory, smiles in death.

The rout begins, the Gallic squadrons run,
 Compell'd in crowds to meet the fate they shun,
 Thousands of fiery steeds with wounds transfix'd,
 Floating in gore, with their dead masters mix'd,
 'Midst heaps of spears and standards driv'n
 around,

Lie in the Danube's bloody whirlpools drown'd.
 Troops of bold youths, born on the distant
 Soane,

Or sounding borders of the rapid Rhone,
 Or where the Seine her flow'ry fields divides,
 Or where the Loire through winding vineyards
 glides,

In heaps the rolling billows sweep away, [vey.
 And into Scythian seas their bloated corps con-
 From Blenheim's tow'rs, the Gaul with wild affright

Beholds the various havoc of the fight ;
 His waving banners, that so oft had stood
 Planted in fields of death and streams of blood,
 So wont the guarded enemy to reach,
 And rise triumphant in the fatal breach,
 Or pierce the broken foe's remotest lines,
 The hardy veteran with tears resigns.

Unfortunate Tallard ! Oh, who can name
 The pangs of rage, of sorrow, and of shame,
 That with mix'd tumult in thy bosom swell'd,
 When first thou saw'st thy bravest troops re-
 pell'd,

Thine only son pierc'd with a deadly wound,
 Chok'd in his blood, and gasping on the ground ;
 Thyself in bondage by the victor kept !

The chief, the father, and the captive wept.

An English Muse is touch'd with gen'rous woe,
 And in th' unhappy man forgets the foe !

Greatly distress'd, thy loud complaints forbear,
 Blame not the turns of fate, and chance of war ;
 Give thy brave foes their due, nor blush to own

The fatal field by such great leaders won,
 The field whence fam'd Eugenio bore away
 Only the second honors of the day. [fell,

With floods of gore that from the vanquish'd
 The marshes stagnate, and the rivers swell.

Mountains of slain lie heap'd upon the ground,
 Or 'midst the roarings of the Danube drown'd ;

Whole captive hosts the conqueror detains
 In painful bondage and inglorious chains ;

E'en those who 'scape the fetters and the sword,
 Nor seek the fortunes of a happier lord,

Their raging King dishonors, to complete
 Marlbro's great work, and finish the defeat.

From Memminghen's high domes, and Augs-burg's walls,

The distant battle drives th' insulting Gauls ;
 Freed by the terror of the victor's name,
 The rescued states his great protection claim ;
 Whilst Ulm th' approach of her deliverer waits,
 And longs to open her obsequious gates.

The hero's breast still swells with great designs,

In ev'ry thought the tow'ring genius shines :

If to the foe his dreadful course he bends,

O'er the wide continent his march extends ;

If sieges in his lab'ring thoughts are form'd,

Camps are assaulted, and an army storm'd ;

If to the fight his active soul is bent,

The fate of Europe turns on its event.

What distant land, what region, can afford

An action worthy his victorious sword ?

Where will he next the flying Gaul defeat,

To make the series of his toils complete ?

Where the swoln Rhine rushing with all its force

Divides the hostile nations in its course,

While each contracts its bounds, or wider grows,

Enlarg'd or straiten'd as the river flows,

On Gallia's side a mighty bulwark stands,

That all the wide extended plain commands ;

Twice, since the war was kindled, has it tried

The victor's rage, and twice has chang'd its side ;

As oft whole armies, with the prize o'erjoy'd,

Have the long summer on its walls employ'd.

Hither our mighty chief his arms directs,

Hence future triumphs from the war expects ;

And though the dog-star had its course begun,

Carries his arms still nearer to the sun :

Fix'd on the glorious action, he forgets

The change of seasons, and increase of heats ;

No toils are painful that can danger show,

No climes unlovely that contain a foe.

The roving Gaul, to his own bounds restrain'd,
 Learns to encamp within his native land :

But soon as the victorious host he spies,

From hill to hill, from stream to stream he flies,

Such dire impressions in his heart remain

Of Marlbro's sword, and Hochstet's fatal
 plain :

In vain Britannia's mighty chief besets

Their shady coverts and obscure retreats ;

They fly the conqueror's approaching fame,

That bears the force of armies in his name.

Austria's young monarch, whose imperial sway

Sceptres and thrones are destin'd to obey,

Whose boasted ancestry so high extends,

That in the Pagan gods his lineage ends,

Comes from afar, in gratitude to own

The great supporter of his father's throne :

What tides of glory to his bosom ran,

Clasp'd in the embraces of the godlike man !

How were his eyes with pleasing wonder fix'd

To see such fire with so much sweetness mix'd,

Such easy greatness, such a graceful port,

So turn'd and finish'd for the camp or court !

Achilles was thus form'd with ev'ry grace,
And Nireus shone but in the second place ;
Thus the great father of almighty Rome
(Divinely flush'd with an immortal bloom
That Cytherea's fragrant breath bestow'd)
In all the charms of his bright mother glow'd.

The royal youth, by Marlboro's presence
charm'd,
Taught by his counsels, by his actions warm'd,
On Landau with redoubled fury falls,
Discharges all his thunder on its walls ;
O'er mines and caves of death provokes the
fight,

And learns to conquer in the hero's sight.

The British chief for mighty toils renown'd,
Increas'd in titles, and with conquests crown'd,
To Belgian coasts his tedious march renews,
And the long windings of the Rhine pursues,
Clearing its borders from usurping foes,
And blest by rescued nations as he goes.

Treves fears no more, freed from its dire alarms ;
And Traerbach feels the terror of his arms :
Seated on rocks, her proud foundations shake,
While Marlboro presses to the bold attack,
Plants all his batt'ries, bids his cannon roar,
And shows how Landau might have fall'n before.

Scar'd at his near approach, great Louis fears
Vengeance reserv'd for his declining years,
Forgets his thirst of universal sway,
And scarce can teach his subjects to obey ;
His arms he finds on vain attempts employ'd,
Th' ambitious projects for his race destroy'd,
The works of ages sunk in one campaign,
And lives of millions sacrific'd in vain.

Such are th' effects of Anna's royal cares ;
By her, Britannia, great in foreign wars,
Ranges through nations, wheresoe'er disjoin'd,
Without the wonted aid of sea and wind :
By her th' unfetter'd Ister's states are free,
And taste the sweets of English liberty :
But who can tell the joys of those that lie
Beneath the constant influence of her eye !
Whilst in diffusive show'rs her bounties fall
Like Heav'n's indulgence, and descend on all,
Secure the happy, succour the distress'd,
Make ev'ry subject glad, and a whole people
blest.

Thus would I fain Britannia's wars rehearse,
In the smooth records of a faithful verse ;
That, if such numbers can o'er time prevail,
May tell posterity the wondrous tale.

When actions, unadorn'd, are faint and weak,
Cities and countries must be taught to speak ;
Gods may descend in fictions from the skies,
And rivers from their oozy beds arise ;
Fiction may deck the truth with spurious rays,
And round the hero cast a borrow'd blaze :
Marlboro's exploits appear divinely bright,
And proudly shine in their own native light ;
Rais'd of themselves, their genuine charms they boast ;

And those who paint them truest, praise them
most.

§ 38. An Allegory on Man. Parnell.

A THOUGHTFUL being, long and spare,
Our race of mortals call him Care,
(Were Homer living, well he knew
What name the gods have call'd him too ;)
With fine mechanic genius wrought,
And lov'd to work, though no one bought.
This being, by a model bred
In Jove's eternal sable head,
Contriv'd a shape impower'd to breathe,
And be the worldling here beneath.

The man rose staring, like a stake,
Wond'ring to see himself awake !
Then look'd so wise, before he knew
The business he was made to do,
That, pleas'd to see with what a grace
He gravely show'd his forward face,
Jove talk'd of breeding him on high,
An under-something of the sky.

But ere he gave the mighty nod,
Which ever binds a poet's god
(For which his curls ambrosial shake,
And mother Earth's obliged to quake),
He saw his mother Earth arise ;
She stood confess'd before his eyes ;
But not with what we read she wore ;
A castle for a crown before ;
Nor with long streets and longer roads
Dangling behind her, like commodores :
As yet with wreaths alone she dress'd,
And trail'd a landscape-painted vest.
Then thrice she rais'd, as Ovid said,
And thrice she bow'd her weighty head.

Her honors made—Great Jove, she cried,
This thing was fashion'd from my side :
His hands, his heart, his head are mine ;
Then what hast thou to call him thine ?

Nay, rather ask, the Monarch said,
What boots his hand, his heart, his head,
Were what I gave remov'd away ?
Thy part's an idle shape of clay.

Halves, more than halves ! cried honest Care,
Your pleas would make your titles fair ;
You claim the body, you the soul,
But I, who join'd them, claim the whole.

Thus with the gods debate began,
On such a trivial cause as man.
And can celestial tempers rage ?
Quoth Virgil, in a later age.

As thus they wrangled, Time came by (There's none that paint him such as I :
For what the fabling ancients sung,
Makes Saturn old when Time was young) :
As yet his winters had not shed
Their silver honors on his head :
He just had got his pinions free
From his old sire, Eternity.
A serpent girdled round he wore,
The tail within the mouth before ;
By which our almanacs are clear
That learned Egypt meant the year.
A staff he carried, where on high
A glass was fix'd to measure by,

As amber boxes made a show
For heads of canes an age ago.
His vest, for day and night, was pied;
A bending sickle arm'd his side;
And Spring's new months his trade adorn;
The other Seasons were unborn.

Known by the gods, as near he draws,
They make him umpire of the cause.
O'er a low trunk his arm he laid,
Where since his hours a dial made;
Then, leaning, heard the nice debate,
And thus pronounc'd the words of Fate:

Since body, from the parent Earth,
And soul from Jove receiv'd a birth,
Return they where they first began;
But, since their union makes the man,
Till Jove and Earth shall part these two,
To Care, who join'd them, man is due.

He said, and sprung with swift career
To trace a circle for the year;
Where ever since the Seasons wheel,
And tread on one another's heel.

'Tis well, said Jove; and, for consent,
Thund'ring he shook the firmament.
Our umpire Time shall have his way;
With Care I let the creature stay:
Let business vex him, av'rice blind,
Let doubt and knowledge rack his mind,
Let error act, opinion speak,
And want afflict, and sickness break,
And anger burn, dejection chill,
And joy distract, and sorrow kill;
Till, arm'd by Care, and taught to mow,
Time draws the long distracted blow;
And wasted man, whose quick decay
Comes hurrying on before his day,
Shall only find by this decree,
The soul flies sooner back to me.

§ 39. The Book-Worm. Parnell.

Come hither, boy, we'll hunt to-day
The Book-worm, rav'ning beast of prey!
Produc'd by parent Earth, at odds,
As Fame reports it, with the gods.
Him frantic hunger wildly drives
Against a thousand author's lives:
Through all the fields of wit he flies;
Dreadful his head with clust'ring eyes,
With horns without, and tusks within,
And scales to serve him for a skin.
Observe him nearly, lest he climb
To wound the bards of ancient time,
Or down the vale of Fancy go,
To tear some modern wretch below.
On ev'ry corner fix thine eye,
Or ten to one he slips thee by.
See where his teeth a passage eat:
We'll rouse him from the deep retreat.
But who the shelter's forc'd to give?
'Tis sacred Virgil, as I live;
From leaf to leaf, from song to song,
He draws the tadpole form along;

He mounts the gilded edge before;
He's up, he scuds the cover o'er;
He turns, he doubles, there he pass'd;
And here we have him, caught at last.

Insatiate brute, whose teeth abuse
The sweetest servants of the Muse!

(Nay, never offer to deny,
I took thee in the fact to fly.)
His roses nipt in ev'ry page,
My poor Anacreon mourns thy rage;
By thee my Ovid wounded lies;
By thee my Lesbia's sparrow dies;
Thy rabid teeth have half destroy'd
The work of love in Biddy Floyd;
They rent Belinda's locks away,
And spoil'd the Blouzelind of Gay,
For all, for ev'ry single deed,
Relentless justice bids thee bleed.

Then fall a victim to the Nine,
Myself the priest, my desk the shrine.

Bring Homer, Virgil, Tasso near,
To pile a sacred altar here:
Hold, boy, thy hand outruns thy wit,
You've reach'd the plays that Dennis writ:
You've reach'd me Philips' rustic strain;
Pray take your mortal bards again.

Come, bind the victim—there he lies,
And here between his num'rous eyes
This venerable dust I lay,
From manuscripts just swept away.

The goblet in my hand I take (For the libation's yet to make)
A health to poets all their days,
May they have bread, as well as praise;
Sense may they seek, and less engage
In papers fill'd with party rage:
But, if their riches spoil their vein,
Ye Muses, make them poor again.

Now bring the weapon, yonder blade,
With which my tuneful pens are made.
I strike the scales that arm thee round,
And twice and thrice I print the wound;
The sacred altar floats with red,
And now he dies, and now he's dead.

How like the son of Jove I stand,
This Hydra stretch'd beneath my hand!
Lay bare the monster's entrails here,
To see what dangers threat the year;
Ye gods! what sonnets on a wench!
What lean translations out of French!
'Tis plain this lobe is so unsound,
S—— prints before the months go round.

But hold—before I close the scene,
The sacred altar should be clean.
Oh, had I Shadwell's second bays,
Or, Tate, thy pert and humble lays!
(Ye pair, forgive me, when I vow
I never miss'd your works till now,)
I'd tear the leaves to wipe the shrine
(That only way you please the Nine);
But since I chance to want these two,
I'll make the songs of Dufey do.

Rent from the corpse, on yonder pin
I hang the scales that brac'd it in;

I hang my studious morning gown,
 And write my own inscription down :
 " This trophy from the Python won,
 " This robe in which the deed was done,
 " These, Parnell, glorying in the feat,
 " Hang on these shelves, the Muses' seat.
 " Here ignorance and hunger found
 " Large realms of wit to ravage round :
 " Here ignorance and hunger fell,
 " Two foes in one I sent to hell.
 " Ye poets, who my labors see,
 " Come share the triumph all with me !
 " Ye critics ! born to vex the Muse,
 " To mourn the grand ally you lose."

§ 40. *Ad Amicos.** R. West.

Yes, happy youths, on Camus' sedgy side,
 You feel each joy that friendship can divide ;
 Each realm of science and of art explore,
 And with the ancient blend the modern lore.
 Studious alone to learn whate'er may tend
 To raise the genius, or the heart to mend ;
 Now pleas'd along the cloister'd walk you rove,
 And trace the verdant mazes of the grove,
 Where social oft, and oft alone, you choose
 To catch the zephyr, and to court the Muse.
 Meantime at me (while all devoid of art
 These lines give back the image of my heart)—
 At me the pow'r, that comes or soon or late,
 Or aims, or seems to aim, the dart of fate ;
 From you, remote, methinks, alone I stand,
 Like some sad exile in a desert land :
 Around no friends their lenient care to join
 In mutual warmth, and mix their heart with mine.

Or real pains, or those which fancy raise,
 For ever blot the sunshine of my days ;
 To sickness still, and still to grief a prey,
 Health turns from me her rosy face away.

Just Heav'n ! what sin, ere life begins to bloom,

Devotes my head untimely to the tomb ?
 Did ere this hand against a brother's life
 Drug the dire bowl, or point the murd'rous
 knife ? [claim,
 Did e'er this tongue the slanderer's tale pro-
 Or madly violate my Maker's name ?
 Did e'er this heart betray a friend or foe,
 Or know a thought but all the world might
 know ?

As yet, just started from the lists of time,
 My growing years have scarcely told their prime ;
 Useless, as yet, through life I've idly run,
 No pleasures tasted, and few duties done.
 Ah who, ere autumn's mellowing suns appear,
 Would pluck the promise of the vernal year ;
 Or, ere the grapes their purple hue betray,
 Tear the crude cluster from the morning spray ?
 Stern power of Fate, whose ebon sceptre rules
 The Stygian desarts and Cimmerian pools,

Forbear, nor rashly smite my youthful heart,
 A victim yet unworthy of thy dart ;
 Ah, stay till age shall blast my withering face,
 Shake in my head, and falter in my pace ;
 Then aim the shaft, then meditate the blow,
 And to the dead my willing shade shall go.

How weak is Man to Reason's judging eye !
 Born in this moment, in the next we die ;
 Part mortal clay, and part ethereal fire,
 Too proud to creep, too humble to aspire,
 In vain our plans of happiness we raise,
 Pain is our lot, and patience is our praise ;
 Wealth, lineage, honors, conquest, or a throne,
 Are what the wise would fear to call their own.
 Health is at best a vain precarious thing,
 And fair-fac'd youth is ever on the wing ;
 'Tis like the stream beside whose wat'ry bed
 Some blooming plant exalts his flow'ry head ;
 Nurs'd by the wave the spreading branches rise,
 Shade all the ground, and flourish to the skies ;
 The waves the while beneath in secret flow,
 And undermine the hollow bank below :
 Wide and more wide the waters urge their way,
 Bare all the roots, and on their fibres prey ;
 Too late the plant bewails his foolish pride,
 And sinks, untimely, in the whelming tide.

But why repine ? Does life deserve my sigh ?
 Few will lament my loss whene'er I die.
 For those, the wretches I despise or hate,
 I neither envy nor regard their fate.
 For me, whene'er all-conqu'ring Death shall spread

His wings around my unrepining head,
 I care not : though this face be seen no more,
 The world will pass as cheerful as before ;
 Bright as before the day-star will appear,
 The fields as verdant, and the skies as clear ;
 Nor storms nor comets will my doom declare,
 Nor signs on earth, nor portents in the air ;
 Unknown and silent will depart my breath,
 Nor nature e'er take notice of my death.
 Yet some there are (ere spent my vital days)
 Within whose breasts my tomb I wish to raise.
 Lov'd in my life, lamented in my end,
 Their praise would crown me, as their precepts
 mend :

To them may these fond lines my name endear ;
 Not from the poet, but the friend sincere.

§ 41. An Address to Winter. Cowper.

OH Winter ! ruler of th' inverted year,
 Thy scatter'd hair with sleet like ashes fill'd,
 Thy breath congeal'd upon thy lips, thy cheeks
 Fring'd with a beard made white with other snows
 Than those of age ; thy forehead wrapt in clouds ;
 A leafless branch thy sceptre ; and thy throne
 A sliding car indebted to no wheels,
 But urg'd by storms along its slippery way ;

* Almost all Tibullus's Elegy is imitated in this little Piece, from whence his transition to Mr. Pope's letter is very artfully contriv'd, and bespeaks a degree of judgement much beyond Mr. West's years.

I love thee, all unlovely as thou seem'st,
 And dreaded as thou art. Thou hold'st the sun
 A pris'nér in the yet undawning east,
 Short'ning his journey between morn and noon,
 And hurrying him, impatient of his stay,
 Down to the rosy west: but kindly still Compensating his loss with added hours
 Of social converse and instructive ease,
 And gathering at short notice in one group
 The family dispers'd, and fixing thought,
 Not less dispers'd by day-light and its cares.
 I crown thee king of intimate delights,
 Fire-side enjoyments, home-born happiness,
 And all the comforts that the lowly roof
 Of undisturb'd retirement, and the hours
 Of long uninterrupted evening know.
 No rattling wheels stop short before these gates;
 No powder'd pert, proficient in the art
 Of sounding an alarm, assaults these doors
 Till the street rings. No stationary steeds, Cough their own knell, while heedless of the sound
 The silent circle fan themselves, and quake;
 But here the needle plies its busy task,
 The pattern grows, the well-depicted flow'r,
 Wrought patiently into the snowy lawn,
 Unfolds its bosom, buds, and leaves, and sprigs,
 And curling tendrils, gracefully dispos'd,
 Follow the nimble finger of the fair,
 A wreath that cannot fade, of flowers that blow
 With most success when all besides decay.
 The poet's or historian's page, by one
 Made vocal for th' amusement of the rest:
 The sprightly lyre, whose treasure of sweet
     sounds
 The touch from many a trembling chord shakes
 And the clear voice symphonious, yet distinct,
 And in the charming strife triumphant still,
 Beguile the night, and set a keener edge
 On female industry; the threaded steel
 Flies swiftly, and unfelt the task proceeds.
 The little volume clos'd, the customary rites
 Of the last meal commence. A Roman meal,
 Such as the mistress of the world once found
 Delicious, when her patriots of high note,
 Perhaps by moon-light, at their humble doors,
 And under an old oak's domestic shade,
 Enjoy'd, spare feast! a radish and an egg.
 Discourse ensues, not trivial, yet not dull,
 Nor such as with a frown forbids the play
 Of fancy, or proscribes the sound of mirth.
 Nor do we madly, like an impious world,
 Who deem religion phrenzy, and the God
 That made them an intruder on their joys,
 Start at his awful name, or deem his praise
 A jarring note. Themes of a graver tone
 Exciting oft our gratitude and love,
 While we retrace with memory's pointing
     wand,
 That calls the past to our exact review,
 The dangers we have 'scap'd, the broken snare,
 The disappointed foe, deliv'rance found
 Unlook'd for, life preserv'd and peace restor'd,
 Fruits of omnipotent eternal love.

Oh evenings worthy of the gods! exclaim'd
 The Sabine bard. Oh, evenings! I reply,
 More to be priz'd and coveted than yours,
 As more illumin'd and with nobler truths,
 That I, and mine, and those we love, enjoy.

§ 42. Liberty renders England preferable to other Nations, notwithstanding Taxes, &c.
 Cowper.

'Tis Liberty alone that gives the flow'r
 Of fleeting life its lustre and perfume,
 And we are weeds without it. All constraint,
 Except what wisdom lays on evil men,
 Is evil, hurts the faculties, impedes
 Their progress in the road of science, blinds
 The eye-sight of discovery, and begets
 In those that suffer it a sordid mind
 Bestial, a meagre intellect, unfit
 To be the tenant of man's noble form.
 Thee therefore, still, blame-worthy as thou art,
 With all thy loss of empire, and though squeez'd
 By public exigence till annual food
 Fails for the craving hunger of the state,
 Thee I account still happy, and the chief
 Among the nations, seeing thou art free!
 My native nook of earth! thy clime is rude,
 Replete with vapors, and disposes much
 All hearts to sadness, and none more than mine;
 Thine unadulterate manners are less soft
 And plausible than social life requires,
 And thou hast need of discipline and art
 To give thee what politer France receives
 From Nature's bounty—that humane address
 And sweetness, without which no pleasure is
 In converse, either starv'd by cold reserve,
 Or flush'd with fierce dispute, a senseless brawl;
 Yet, being free, I love thee: for the sake
 Of that one feature, can be well content,
 Disgrac'd as thou hast been, poor as thou art,
 To seek no sublunary rest beside.
 But, once enslav'd, farewell! I could endure
 Chains no where patiently; and chains at home,
 Where I am free by birthright, not at all.
 Then what were left of roughness in the grain
 Of British natures, wanting its excuse
 That it belongs to freemen, would disgust
 And shock me. I should then with double pain
 Feel all the rigor of thy fickle clime;
 And if I must bewail the blessing lost
 For which our Hampdens and our Sidneys bled,
 I would at least bewail it under skies
 Milder, among a people less austere,
 In scenes which having never known me free,
 Would not reproach me with the loss I felt.

§ 43. Description of a Poet. Cowper.

I know the mind that feels indeed the fire
 The Muse imparts, and can command the lyre,
 Acts with a force and kindles with a zeal,
 Whate'er the theme, that others never feel.
 If human woes her soft attention claim,
 A tender sympathy pervades the frame;

She pours a sensibility divine
 Along the nerve of ev'ry feeling line.
 But if a deed not tamely to be borne
 Fire indignation and a sense of scorn,
 The strings are swept with such a pow'r, so loud,
 The storm of music shakes the astonish'd crowd.
 So when remote futurity is brought
 Before the keen inquiry of her thought,
 A terrible sagacity informs
 The poet's heart; he looks to distant storms,
 He hears the thunder ere the tempest low'rs,
 And, arm'd with strength surpassing human pow'rs,
 Seizes events as yet unknown to man,
 And darts his soul into the dawning plan.
 Hence, in a Roman mouth, the graceful name
 Of Prophet and of Poet was the same;
 Hence British poets too the priesthood shar'd,
 And ev'ry hallow'd Druid was a bard.

§ 44. Love Elegies. By——.

ELEGY I.

'Tis night, dead night; and o'er the plain
 Darkness extends her ebon ray,
 While wide along the gloomy scene
 Deep silence holds her solemn sway.
 Throughout the earth no cheerful beam
 The melancholic eye surveys,
 Save where the worm's fantastic gleam
 The 'nighted traveller betrays.
 The savage race (so Heaven decrees)
 No longer through the forest rove;
 All nature rests, and not a breeze
 Disturbs the stillness of the grove.
 All nature rests; in Sleep's soft arms
 The village-swain forgets his care:
 Sleep, that the stings of sorrow charms,
 And heals all sadness but despair.
 Despair alone her pow'r denies;
 And, when the sun withdraws his rays,
 To the wild beach distracted flies,
 Or cheerless through the desert strays;
 Or, to the church-yard's horrors led,
 While fearful echoes burst around,
 On some cold stone he leans his head,
 Or throws his body on the ground:
 To some such drear and solemn scene,
 Some friendly pow'r direct my way,
 Where pale misfortune's haggard train,
 Sad luxury! delight to stray.
 Wrapp'd in the solitary gloom,
 Retir'd from life's fantastic crew,
 Resign'd I'll wait my final doom,
 And bid the busy world adieu.
 The world has now no joy for me,
 Nor can life now one pleasure boast;
 Since all my eyes desir'd to see,
 My wish, my hope, my all, is lost;

Since she, so form'd to please and bless,
 So wise, so innocent, so fair,
 Whose converse sweet made sorrow less,
 And brighten'd all the gloom of care—
 Since she is lost!—Ye pow'rs divine,
 What have I done, or thought, or said?
 O say, what horrid act of mine
 Has drawn this vengeance on my head!
 Why should Heaven favor Lycon's claim?
 Why are my heart's best wishes cross'd?
 What fairer deeds adorn his name?
 What nobler merit can he boast?
 What higher worth in him was found
 My true heart's service to outweigh?
 A senseless fop, a dull compound
 Of scarcely animated clay:
 He dress'd indeed, he danc'd with ease,
 And charm'd her by repeating o'er
 Unmeaning raptures in her praise,
 That twenty fools had told before:
 But I, alas! who thought all art
 My passion's force would meanly prove,
 Could only boast an honest heart,
 And claim'd no merit but my love.
 Have I not sat—ye conscious hours,
 Be witness—while my Stella sung
 From morn to eve, with all my pow'rs
 Rapt in th' enchantment of her tongue!
 Ye conscious hours that saw me stand
 Entranc'd in wonder and surprise,
 In silent rapture press her hand,
 With passion bursting from my eyes—
 Have I not lov'd? O earth and heaven!
 Where now is all my youthful boast;
 The dear exchange I hop'd was given
 For slighted fame and fortune lost?
 Where now the joys that once were mine?
 Where all my hopes of future bliss?
 Must I those joys, those hopes, resign?
 Is all her friendship come to this?
 Must then each woman faithless prove,
 And each fond lover be undone?
 Are vows no more? Almighty love,
 The sad remembrance let me shun!
 It will not be: my honest heart
 The dear sad image still retains;
 And, spite of reason, spite of art,
 The dreadful memory remains.
 Ye Pow'rs divine! whose wond'rous skill
 Deep in the womb of time can see,
 Behold, I bend me to your will,
 Nor dare arraign your high decree.
 Let her be blest with health, with ease,
 With all your bounty has in store;
 Let sorrow cloud my future days;
 Be Stella blest; I ask no more.
 But, lo! where high in yonder east
 The star of morning mounts apace!

Hence! let me fly the unwelcome guest,
And bid the Muse's labor cease.

ELEGY II.

WHEN, young, life's journey I began,
The glittering prospect charm'd my eyes,
I saw along the extended plan
Joy after joy successive rise;
And Fame her golden trumpet blew;
And Pow'r display'd her gorgeous charms;
And Wealth engag'd my wand'ring view;
And Pleasure woo'd me to her arms;
To each by turns my vows I paid,
As Folly led me to admire;
While Fancy magnified each shade,
And Hope increas'd each fond desire.
But soon I found 't was all a dream;
And learn'd the fond pursuit to shun,
Where few can reach their purpos'd aim,
And thousands daily are undone:
And Fame, I found, was empty air;
And Wealth had Terror for her guest;
And Pleasure's path was strewn with care;
And Pow'r was vanity at best.
Tir'd of the chace, I gave it o'er;
And, in a far sequester'd shade,
To Contemplation's sober pow'r
My youth's next services I paid.
There Health and Peace adorn'd the scene;
And oft, indulgent to my pray'r,
With mirthful eye and frolic mien,
The Muse would deign to visit there.
There would she oft delighted rove
The flow'r-enamell'd vale along;
Or wander with me through the grove,
And listen to the woodlark's song:
Or 'mid the forest's awful gloom,
Whilst wild amazement fill'd my eyes,
Recal past ages from the tomb,
And bid ideal worlds arise.
Thus in the Muse's favor blest,
One wish alone my soul could frame,
And Heaven bestow'd, to crown the rest,
A friend, and Thyrsis was his name:
For manly constancy, and truth,
And worth unconscious of a stain,
He bloom'd the flow'r of Britain's youth;
The boast and wonder of the plain.
Still with our years our friendship grew;
No cares did then my peace destroy;
Time brought new blessings as he flew,
And ev'ry hour was wing'd with joy.
But soon the blissful scene was lost,
Soon did the sad reverse appear:
Love came, like an untimely frost,
To blast the promise of my year.
I saw young Daphne's angel form,
(Fool that I was! I blest the smart,)

And while I gaz'd, nor thought of harm,
The dear infection seiz'd my heart.

She was, at least in Damon's eyes,
Made up of loveliness and grace;
Her heart a stranger to disguise,
Her mind as perfect as her face.

To hear her speak, to see her move
(Unhappy I, alas! the while),
Her voice was joy, her look was love,
And heaven was open'd in her smile!

She heard me breathe my amorous prayers,
She listen'd to the tender strain,
She heard my sighs, she saw my tears,
And seem'd at length to share my pain.

She said she lov'd—and I, poor youth!
(How soon, alas! can Hope persuade)
Thought all she said no more than truth;
And all my love was well repaid.

In joys unknown to courts or kings,
With her I sat the livelong day,
And said and look'd such tender things
As none beside can look or say!

How soon can Fortune shift the scene,
And all our earthly bliss destroy!
Care hovers round, and Grief's fell train
Still treads upon the heels of Joy.

My age's hope, my youth's best boast,
My soul's chief blessing and my pride,
In one sad moment all were lost,
And Daphne chang'd, and Thyrsis died!

Oh! who that heard her vows erewhile,
Could dream those vows were insincere!
Or who could think, that saw her smile,
That fraud could find admittance there!

Yet she was false—my heart will break!
Her fraud, her perjuries were such—
Some other tongue than mine must speak—
I have not power to say how much!

Ye swains, hence warn'd, avoid the bait;
O shun her paths, the trait'ress shun!
Her voice is death, her smile is fate;
Who hears or sees her is undone.

And when Death's hand shall close my eye,
(For soon, I know, the day will come,)
O cheer my spirit with a sigh,
And grave these lines upon my tomb:

THE EPITAPH.

CONSIGN'D to dust, beneath this stone,
In manhood's prime, is Damon laid;
Joyless he liv'd, and died unknown,
In bleak misfortune's barren shade.

Lov'd by the Muse, but lov'd in vain,
'Twas beauty drew his ruin on;
He saw young Daphne on the plain;
He lov'd, believ'd, and was undone!

His heart then sunk beneath the storm
(Sad meed of unexampled truth!)

And Sorrow, like an envious worm,
Devour'd the blossom of his youth.
Beneath this stone the youth is laid—
O greet his ashes with a tear!
May Heaven with blessings crown his shade,
And grant that peace he wanted here!

§ 45. An Essay on Poetry.* Buckingham.

OF all those arts in which the wise excel,
Nature's chief master-piece is writing well;
No writing lifts exalted man so high
As sacred and soul-moving Poesy:
No kind of work requires so nice a touch;
And, if well-finish'd, nothing shines so much.
But Heaven forbid we should be so profane,
To grace the vulgar with that noble name!
'Tis not a flash of fancy, which sometimes,
Dazzling our minds, sets off the slightest rhymes;
Bright as a blaze, but in a moment done;
True wit is everlasting, like the sun; [tir'd,
Which, though sometimes behind a cloud re-
Breaks out again, and is by all admir'd.
Number and rhyme, and that harmonious sound
Which not the nicest ear with harshness wound,
Are necessary, yet but vulgar arts;
And all in vain these superficial parts
Contribute to the structure of the whole,
Without a genius too, for that's the soul:
A spirit which inspires the work throughout,
As that of nature moves the world about;
A flame that glows amidst conception fit;
E'en something of divine, and more than wit;
Itself unseen, yet all things by it shown,
Describing all men, but describ'd by none.
Where dost thou dwell? what caverns of the brain
Can such a vast and mighty thing contain?
When I, at vacant hours, in vain thy absence mourn, [return,
Oh! where dost thou retire? and why dost thou
Sometimes with powerful charms to hurry me away, [day?
From pleasures of the night and business of the E'en now, too far transported, I am fain
To check thy course, and use the needful rein.
As all is dulness when the fancy's bad;
So, without judgement, fancy is but mad:
And judgement has a boundless influence
Not only in the choice of words, or sense,
But on the world, on manners, and on men;
Fancy is but the feather of the pen:
Reason is that substantial useful part
Which gains the head, while t' other wins the heart.

Here I shall all the various sorts of verse,
And the whole art of poetry, rehearse;
But who that task would after Horace do?
The best of masters and examples too!

Echoes at best, all we can say is vain;
Dull the design, and fruitless were the pain.
'Tis true, the ancients we may rob with ease;
But who with that mean shift himself can please,
Without an actor's pride? A player's art
Is above his who writes a borrow'd part.
Yet modern laws are made for latter faults,
And new absurdities inspire new thoughts.
What need has Satire then to live on theft,
When so much fresh occasion still is left?
Fertile our soil, and full of rankest weeds,
And monsters worse than ever Nilus breeds.
But hold—the fool shall have no cause to fear;
'Tis wit and sense that are the subject here:
Defects of witty men deserve a cure;
And those who are so, will e'en this endure.

First then of Songs which now so much
abound:

Without his song no fop is to be found;
A most offensive weapon, which he draws
On all he meets, against Apollo's laws:
Though nothing seems more easy, yet no part
Of poetry requires a nicer art:
For as in rows of richest pearl there lies
Many a blemish that escapes our eyes,
The least of which defects is plainly shown
In one small ring, and brings the value down—
So songs should be to just perfection wrought;
Yet where can one be seen without a fault?
Exact propriety of words and thought;
Expression easy, and the fancy high;
Yet that not seem to creep, nor this to fly:
No words transpos'd, but in such order all,
As wrought with care, yet seem by chance to fall.
Here as in all things else, is most unfit,
Bare ribaldry, that poor pretence to wit;
Such nauseous songs by a late author* made,
Call an unwilling censure on his shade.
Not that warm thoughts of the transporting joy
Can shock the chastest, or the nicest cloy;
But words obscene too gross to move desire,
Like heaps of fuel only choke the fire.
On other themes he well deserves our praise;
But palls that appetite he meant to raise.

Next, Elegy, of sweet but solemn voice,
And of a subject grave exacts the choice;
The praise of beauty, valor, wit, contains;
And there too oft despairing love complains:
In vain, alas! for who by wit is mov'd?
That Phoenix-she deserves to be belov'd;
But noisy nonsense, and such fops as vex
Mankind, take most with that fantastic sex.
This to the praise of those who better knew;
The many raise the value of the few.
But here (as all our sex too oft have tried)
Women have drawn my wand'ring thoughts aside.
Their greatest fault, who in this kind have writ,
Is not defect in words, or want of wit:

* The Essay on Satire, which was written by this noble author and Mr. Dryden, is printed among the Poems of the latter.

† The Earl of Rochester.—It may be observed, however, that many of the worst songs ascribed to this nobleman were spurious.

But should this Muse harmonious numbers
And ev'ry couplet be with fancy fill'd; [yield,
If yet a just coherence be not made
Between each thought; and the whole model laid
So right, that ev'ry line may higher rise,
Like goodly mountains, till they reach the skies;
Such trifles may perhaps of late have pass'd,
And may be liked a while, but never last:
'Tis epigram, 'tis point, 'tis what you will,
But not an Elegy, nor writ with skill,
No * Panegyric, nor a † Cooper's Hill.

A higher flight, and of a happier force,
Are Odes; the Muses' most unruly horse,
That bounds so fierce, the rider has no rest,
He foams at mouth, and moves like one pos-
The poet here must be indeed inspir'd, [sess'd.
With fury too as well as fancy fir'd.

Cowley might boast to have perform'd this part,
Had he with nature join'd the rules of art;
But sometimes diction mean, or verse ill-wrought,
Deadens, or clouds, his noble frame of thought.
Though all appear in heat and fury done,
The language still must soft and easy run.

These laws may sound a little too severe:
But judgement yields, and fancy governs here;
Which, though extravagant, this Muse allows,
And makes the work much easier than it shows,

Of all the ways that wisest men could find
To mend the age, and mortify mankind,
Satire well writ has most successful prov'd,
And cures, because the remedy is lov'd:
'Tis hard to write on such a subject more,
Without repeating things said oft before:
Some vulgar errors only we'll remove
That stain a beauty which we so much love.
Of chosen words some take not care enough,
And think they should be as the subject rough;
This poem must be more exactly made,
And sharpest thoughts in smoothest words con-
vey'd.

Some think, if sharp enough, they cannot fail,
As if their only business was to rail:
But human frailty nicely to unfold,
Distinguishes a satyr from a scold.

Rage you must hide, and prejudice lay down;
A satyr's smile is sharper than his frown:
So while you seem to slight some rival youth,
Malice itself may pass sometimes for truth.
The Laureat † here may justly claim our praise,
Crown'd by Mac Flecknoe § with immortal bays;
Yet once his Pegasus || has borne dead weight,
Rid by some lumpish minister of state.

Here rest, my Muse, suspend thy cares a while;
A more important task attends thy toil.
As some young eagle, that designs to fly
A long unwonted journey through the sky,
Weighs all the dangerous enterprise before,
O'er what wide lands and seas she is to soar;
Doubts her own strength so far, and justly fears
The lofty road of airy travellers;

But yet incited by some bold design,
That does her hopes beyond her fears incline,
Prunes ev'ry feather, views herself with care,
At last, resolv'd, she cleaves the yielding air;
Away she flies, so strong, so high, so fast,
She lessens to us, and is lost at last:

So (though too weak for such a weighty thing)
The Muse inspires a sharper note to sing.
And why should truth offend, when only told
To guide the ignorant, and warn the bold?
On, then, my Muse; advent'rously engage
To give instructions that concern the Stage.

The unities of action, time, and place,
Which, if observ'd, give plays so great a grace,
Are, though but little practis'd, too well known
To be taught here, where we pretend alone
From nicer faults to purge the present age,
Less obvious errors of the English stage.

First, then, Soliloquies had need be few,
Extremely short, and spoke in passion too.
Our lovers talking to themselves, for want
Of others, make the pit their confidant;
Nor is the matter mended yet, if thus
They trust a friend only to tell it us;
Th' occasion should as naturally fall,
As when Bellario confesses all ¶.

Figures of speech, which poets think so fine,
(Art's needless varnish to make nature shine)
All are but paint upon a beauteous face,
And in descriptions only claim a place;
But, to make rage declaim, and grief discourse,
From lovers in despair fine things to force,
Must needs succeed; for who can choose but pity
A dying hero miserably witty?

But oh! the Dialogues, where just and mock
Are held up like a rest at shuttle-cock;
Or else like bells eternally they chime;
They sigh in simile and die in rhyme.
What things are these who would be poets
thought,

By nature not inspir'd, nor learning taught?
Some wit they have, and therefore may deserve
A better course than this, by which they starve:
But to write plays! why, 'tis a bold pretence
To judgement, breeding, wit, and eloquence:
Nay more: for they must look within, to find
Those secret turns of nature in the mind.

Without this part in vain would be the whole,
And but a body all, without a soul:
All this united yet but makes a part
Of Dialogue, that great and pow'rful art,
Now almost lost, which the old Grecians knew,
From whom the Romans fainter copies drew,
Scarce comprehended since but by a few.

Plato and Lucian are the best remains
Of all the wonders which this art contains;
Yet to ourselves we justice must allow,
Shakspeare and Fletcher are the wonders now:
Consider then, and read them o'er and o'er;
Go see them play'd, then read them as before;

§ A famous satirical
¶ In Philaster, a play of

For though in many things they grossly fail,
 Over our passions still they so prevail,
 That our own grief by theirs is rock'd asleep;
 The dull are forc'd to feel, the wise to weep.
 Their beauties imitate, avoid their faults:
 First, on a plot employ thy careful thoughts;
 Turn it, with time, a thousand sev'ral ways;
 This oft, alone, has given success to plays.
 Reject that vulgar error (which appears
 So fair) of making perfect characters;
 There's no such thing in nature, and you'll draw
 A faultless monster—which the world ne'er saw.
 Some faults must be, that his misfortunes drew,
 But such as may deserve compassion too.
 Besides the main design compos'd with art,
 Each moving scene must be a plot apart;
 Contrive each little turn, mark ev'ry place,
 As painters first chalk out the future face:
 Yet be not fondly your own slave for this,
 But change hereafter what appears amiss.

Think not so much where shining thoughts
 to place,

As what a man would say in such a case:
 Neither in comedy will this suffice,
 The player too must be before your eyes;
 And, though 'tis drudgery to stoop so low,
 To him you must your secret meaning show.
 Expose no single fop, but lay the load
 More equally, and spread the folly broad;
 Mere coxcombs are too obvious: oft we see
 A fool derided by as bad as he:
 Hawks fly at nobler game; in this low way,
 A very owl may prove a bird of prey.
 Small poets thus will one poor fop devour:
 But to collect, like bees, from ev'ry flow'r,
 Ingredients to compose that precious juice
 Which serves the world for pleasure and for use,
 In spite of faction—this would favor get;
 But Falstaff* stands inimitable yet.
 Another fault which often may befall,
 Is, when the wit of some great poet shall
 So overflow, that is, be none at all,
 That e'en his fools speak sense, as if possest,
 And each by inspiration breaks his jest.
 If once the justness of each part be lost,
 Well may we laugh, but at the poet's cost.
 That silly thing men call sheer-wit avoid,
 With which our age so nauseously is cloy'd:
 Humor is all; wit should be only brought
 To turn agreeably some proper thought.

But since the poets we of late have known
 Shine in no dress so much as in their own,
 The better, by example, to convince,
 Cast but a view on this wrong side of sense.

First, a soliloquy is calmly made,
 Where ev'ry reason is exactly weigh'd;
 Which once perform'd, most opportunely comes
 Some hero frighted at the noise of drums;
 For her sweet sake, whom at first sight he loves,
 And all in metaphor his passion proves;
 But some sad accident, though yet unknown,
 Parting this pair, to leave the swain alone:

He straight grows jealous, though we know not
 Then, to oblige his rival, needs will die: [why:
 But first he makes a speech, wherein he tells
 The absent nymph how much his flame excels;
 And yet bequeaths her generously now
 To that lov'd rival whom he does not know!
 Who straight appears; but who can fate with-
 Too late, alas! to hold his hasty hand, [stand?
 That just has given himself the cruel stroke!
 At which his very rival's heart is broke:
 He, more to his new friend than mistress kind,
 Most sadly mourns at being left behind;
 Of such a death prefers the pleasing charms
 To love, and living in a lady's arms.
 What shameful and what monstrous things are these!

And then they rail at those they cannot please:
 Conclude us only partial to the dead,
 And grudge the sign of old Ben Jonson's head;
 When the intrinsic value of the stage
 Can scarce be judg'd but by a following age:
 For dances, flutes, Italian songs, and rhyme
 Many keep up sinking nonsense for a time;
 But that must fail, which now so much o'er-rules,
 And sense no longer will submit to fools.

By painful steps at last we labor up
 Parnassus' hill, on whose bright airy top
 The epic poets so divinely show,
 And with just pride behold the rest below.
 Heroic poems have a just pretence
 To be the utmost stretch of human sense;
 A work of such inestimable worth, [forth!
 There are but two the world has yet brought
 Homer and Virgil!—with what sacred awe
 Do those mere sounds the world's attention draw!
 Just as a changeling seems below the rest
 Of men, or rather is a two-legg'd beast;
 So these gigantic souls, amaz'd, we find
 As much above the rest of human kind!
 Nature's whole strength united! endless fame,
 And universal shouts, attend their name!
 Read Homer once, and you can read no more,
 For all books else appear so mean, so poor,
 Verse will seem prose; but still persist to read,
 And Homer will be all the books you need.
 Had Bossu never writ, the world had still Like Indians view'd this wondrous piece of skill;

As something of divine the work admir'd,
 Not hop'd to be instructed, but inspir'd:
 But he, disclosing sacred mysteries,
 Has shown where all the mighty magic lies;
 Describ'd the seeds, and in what order sown,
 That have to such a vast proportion grown.
 Sure from some angel he the secret knew,
 Who through this labyrinth has lent the clew.
 But what, alas! avails it poor mankind
 To see this promis'd land, yet stay behind?
 The way is shown, but who has strength to go?
 Who can all sciences profoundly know?
 Whose fancy flies beyond weak reason's sight,
 And yet has judgement to direct it right?

* The matchless character of Shakspeare.

Whose just discernment, Virgil-like, is such,
Never to say too little or too much?
Let such a man begin without delay;
But he must do beyond what I can say;
Must above Tasso's lofty flight prevail,
Succeed where Spenser and e'en Milton fail.

BOOK I.

THE ARGUMENT.

The subject proposed. Address to his Royal Highness the Prince. The origin of hunting. The rude and unpolished manners of the first hunters. Beasts at first hunted for food and sacrifice. The grant made by God to man of the beasts, &c. The regular manner of hunting first brought into this island by the Normans. The best hounds and best horses bred here. The advantage of this exercise to us, as islanders. Address to gentlemen of estates. Situation of the kennel, and its several courts. The diversion and employment of hounds in the kennel. The different sorts of hounds for each different chace. Description of a perfect hound. Of sizing and sorting of hounds; the middle-sized hound recommended. Of the large deep-mouthed hound for hunting the stag and otter. Of the lime-hound; their use on the borders of England and Scotland. A physical account of scents. Of good and bad scenting days. A short admonition to my brethren of the couples.

THE Chace I sing, hounds, and their various breed,

And no less various use. O thou, great Prince!
Whom Cambria's tow'ring hills proclaim their lord,

Deign thou to hear my bold instructive song.
While grateful citizens, with pompous show,
Rear the triumphal arch, rich with th' exploits
Of thy illustrious house; while virgins pave
Thy way with flow'rs, and as the Royal Youth
Passing they view, admire, and sigh in vain;
While crowded theatres, too fondly proud
Of their exotic minstrels and shrill pipes,
The price of manhood, hail thee with a song,
And airs soft warbling; my hoarse-sounding horn
Invites thee to the Chace, the sport of kings;
Image of war without its guilt. The Muse
Aloft on wing shall soar, conduct with care
Thy foaming courser o'er the steepy rock,
Or on the river bank receive thee safe,
Light-bounding o'er the wave from shore to shore.
Be thou our great protector, gracious Youth:
And if, in future times, some envious prince,
Careless of right, and guileful, should invade
Thy Britain's commerce, or should strive in vain
To wrest the balance from thy equal hand,
Thy hunter-train, in cheerful green array'd
(A band undaunted, and inur'd to toils),
Shall compass thee around, die at thy feet,

Or hew thy passage through th' embattled foe,
And clear thy way to fame: inspir'd by thee,
The nobler chace of glory shall pursue
Through fire, and smoke, and blood, and fields of death.

Nature, in her productions slow, aspires
By just degrees to reach perfection's height;
So mimic Art works leisurely, till Time
Improve the piece, or wise Experience give
The proper finishing. When Nimrod bold,
That mighty hunter! first made war on beasts,
And stain'd the woodland green with purple dye,
New and unpolish'd was the huntsman's art;
No stated rule, his wanton will his guide.
With clubs and stones, rude implements of war!
He arm'd his savage bands, a multitude
Untrain'd: of twining osiers form'd, they pitch
Their artless toils, then range the desert hills,
And scour the plains below: the trembling herd
Start at th' unusual sound, and clam'rous shout
Unheard before; surpris'd, alas! to find [lord,
Man now their foe, whom erst they deem'd their
But mild and gentle, and by whom as yet
Secure they graz'd. Death stretches o'er the plain Wide wasting, and grim Slaughter, red with blood:

Urg'd on by hunger keen, they wound, they kill;
Their rage licentious knows no bound; at last,
Encumber'd with their spoils, joyful they bear
Upon their shoulders broad the bleeding prey.
Part on their altars smokes, a sacrifice [hand
To that all-gracious Pow'r whose bounteous
Supports his wide creation; what remains,
On living coals they broil, inelegant
Of taste, nor skill'd as yet in nicer arts
Of pamper'd luxury. Devotion pure,
And strong necessity, thus first began
The chace of beasts; tho' bloody was the deed,
Yet without guilt: for the green herb alone
Unequal to sustain man's lab'ring race,
Now ev'ry moving thing that liv'd on earth
Was granted him for food*. So just is Heav'n,
To give us in proportion to our wants.

Or chance or industry in after times
Some few improvements made, but short as yet
Of due perfection. In this isle remote
Our painted ancestors were slow to learn:
To arms devote, in the politer arts
Nor skill'd nor studious; till from Neustria's
Victorious William to more decent rules [coasts
Subdued our Saxon fathers, taught to speak
The proper dialect, with horn and voice
To cheer the busy hound, whose well-known cry
His list'ning peers approve with joint acclaim.
From him successive huntsmen learn'd to join
In bloody social leagues the multitude
Dispers'd, to size, to sort their various tribes;
To rear, feed, hunt, and discipline the pack.

Hail, happy Britain: highly favor'd isle,
And Heaven's peculiar care! to thee 'tis given
To train the sprightly steed, more fleet than those Begot by winds, or the celestial breed

* Gen. chap. ix. ver. 3.

That bore the great Pelides through the press
Of heroes arm'd, and broke their crowded ranks,
Which proudly neighing, with the sun begins,
Cheerful his course, and, ere his beams decline,
Has measured half thy surface unfatigued.
In thee alone, fair land of Liberty!
Is bred the perfect hound, in scent and speed
As yet unrivall'd, while in other climes
Their virtue fails, a weak degen'rate race.
In vain malignant steams and winter fogs
Load the dull air, and hover round our coasts;
The huntsman, ever gay, robust, and bold,
Defies the noxious vapor, and confides
In this delightful exercise to raise
His drooping head, and cheer his heart with joy.

Ye vigorous youths! by smiling Fortune blest
With large demesnes, hereditary wealth,
Heap'd copious by your wise forefathers' care,
Hear and attend! while I the means reveal
To enjoy these pleasures, for the weak too strong,
Too costly for the poor: to rein the steed
Swift stretching o'er the plain, to cheer the pack
Op'ning in concerts of harmonious joy,
But breathing death. What, though the gripe se-
Of brazen-fisted Time, and slow Disease [vere
Creeping through ev'ry vein, and nerve unstrung,
Afflict my shatter'd frame, undaunted still,
Fix'd as a mountain-ash that braves the bolts
Of angry Jove, though blasted, yet unfallen;
Still can my soul in Fancy's mirror view
Deeds glorious once, recal the joyous scene
In all its splendors deck'd, o'er the full bowl
Recount my triumphs past, urge others on
With hand and voice, and point the winding way;
Pleas'd with that social sweet garrulity,
The poor disbanded veteran's sole delight.

First let the kennel be the huntsman's care,
Upon some little eminence erect,
And fronting to the ruddy lawn; its courts
On either hand wide op'ning to receive
The sun's all-cheering beams, when mild he shines,

And gilds the mountain tops: for much the pack (Rous'd from their dark alcoves) delight to stretch

And bask in his invigorating ray.
Warn'd by the streaming light, and merry lark,
Forth rush the jolly clan; with tuneful throats
They carol loud, and in grand chorus join'd
Salute the new-born day: for not alone
The vegetable world, but men and brutes
Own his reviving influence, and joy
At his approach. Fountain of light! if chance
Some envious cloud veil thy refulgent brow,
In vain the Muses' aid; untouch'd, unstrung,
Lies my mute harp, and thy desponding bard
Sits darkly musing o'er the unfinish'd lay.

Let no Corinthian pillars prop the dome;
A vain expense, on charitable deeds
Better dispos'd, to clothe the tatter'd wretch
Who shrinks beneath the blast, to feed the poor
Pinch'd with afflictive want. For use, not state,
Gracefully plain, let each apartment rise.
O'er all let cleanliness preside, no scraps

Bestrew the pavement, and no half-pick'd bones
To kindle fierce debate, or to disgust
That nicer sense on which the sportsman's hope
And all its future triumphs must depend.

Soon as the growling pack with eager joy
Have lapp'd their smoking viands, morn or eve,
From the full cistern lead the ductile streams,
To wash thy court well pav'd nor spare thy pains;
For much to health will cleanliness avail.
Seek'st thou for hounds to climb the rocky steep,
And brush th' entangled covert, whose nice scent
O'er greasy fallows and frequented roads
Can pick the dubious way? Banish far off
Each noisome stench; let no offensive smell
Invade thy wide inclosure, but admit
The nitrous air and purifying breeze.

Water and shade no less demand thy care.
In a large square th' adjacent field inclose;
There plant, in equal ranks, the spreading elm
Or fragrant lime; most happy thy design,
If at the bottom of thy spacious court
A large canal, fed by the crystal brook,
From its transparent bosom shall reflect
Thy downward structure and inverted grove.
Here, when the sun's too potent gleams annoy
The crowded kennel; and the drooping pack,
Restless and faint, loll their unmoisten'd
tongues,

And drop their feeble tails; to cooler shades
Lead forth the panting tribes: soon shalt thou
find

The cordial breeze their fainting hearts revive:
Tumultuous soon they plunge into the stream,
There lave their reeking sides; with greedy joy
Gulp down the flying wave; this way and that
From shore to shore they swim, while clamor
loud

And wild uproar torment the troubled flood:
Then on the sunny bank they roll and stretch
Their dripping limbs, or else in wanton rings
Coursing around, pursuing and pursued,
The merry multitude disporting play.

But here with watchful and observant eye
Attend their frolics, which too often end
In bloody broils and death. High o'er thy head
Wave thy resounding whip, and with a voice
Fierce menacing o'er-rule the stern debate,
And quench their kindling rage: for oft, in sport
Began, combat ensues: growling they snarl,
Then, on their haunches rear'd, rampant they seize

Each other's throats; with teeth and claws in gore Besmear'd, they wound, they tear till on the
ground

Panting, half dead, the conquer'd champion lies:
